"WE'RE WITH YOU"

This simple phrase sums up our view that the mission of Alumni Relations is to be continually involved with alumni. We want to ensure that no matter the distance of years or miles, you look back fondly on your life at Syracuse and remain connected to the University—availing yourself of our resources and services, and knowing that a vigorous University will be there in the future.

To accomplish that, we are embarking on a campaign to raise $1 million to endow alumni relations programming. We are pleased to join many other prestigious colleges and universities that reach out to their alumni, thanks to funds provided by donors.

This is quite different from SU's Commitment to Learning campaign, which supports students, faculty, technology, and future programming. This fund will endow programs coordinated through our office that extend concrete benefits to you, our very important alumni, who once called Syracuse home.

The funds will be used for programs and events that benefit people from the time they come to campus as students to their years as alumni. We will support such things as a University Speakers Series that brings SU's prominent faculty members and coaches to local communities, technology to keep alumni linked to the University, club activities, alumni parent receptions, and Homecoming and Reunion events.

What do you want from SU? More services from the home office? Better communication about what's available? Support for your local alumni club? A more interactive link with the University? Whatever it is, all alumni will benefit from an alma mater that's more responsive to their needs.

The University has already demonstrated its commitment to alumni relations with its partnership in funding construction of the Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center, our beautiful headquarters for on-campus alumni events. A committee of our Alumni Association Board of Directors has already taken an important step (see next story).

We will fund this endowment within the next two years, so we can give you the services you fully deserve. For if you would like to know more, please contact us. "We're with you." Won't you be with us?

ALUMNI BOARD RAISES FUNDS FOR ENDOWMENT

Mike Somich '73 of Chicago, president of the Alumni Association Board of Directors, is proud of the work of the board's ad hoc fund-raising committee. "In very short order just a few people raised $30,000, and we expect that giving to continue," he says. "That's quite remarkable."

The committee, composed of current and former members of the board, is working closely with the Office of Alumni Relations to raise an endowment to support alumni programming. The first task was to identify a project to fund. Recognizing the important role alumni can play in recruiting students, the board voted to fund a $100,000 endowment for new student outreach.

The Office of Alumni Relations will use this fund for such student programs as the annual New Student Send-Offs hosted by alumni clubs throughout the country. Those events bring incoming students, both first-year and transfer students, together with alumni and current students at a picnic or barbecue. Send-offs dramatically demonstrate to new students the continuing commitment of alumni to the University.

Somich, a partner in the accounting firm of Deloitte & Touche, is confident the ad hoc committee will reach its $100,000 goal. "We've agreed there will be 100 percent participation," he says. "Now is the time to show our leadership for the effort to raise the $1 million endowment."

This endowment for the Office of Alumni Relations is earmarked for a variety of programs. "We want to implement alumni-oriented programs, presentations, services, and events at the Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center and in other communities nationally and internationally," he says. "We find that people willingly take on time and financial commitments because they love the University. We all benefited from attending Syracuse University and we want to provide the same opportunities for students today."

Serving on the ad hoc committee along with Somich are Wendy Cohen '70 of Plantation, Florida; Shelly Lotman Fisher '80 of Villanova, Pennsylvania; Debbie Fritsche '74 of Woodlands, Texas; Dan Kaseman '80 of Hamilton, Virginia; and Phebe Novakovic '53 of Villanova, Pennsylvania.

At Commencement, three generations celebrated the graduation of Paige Deborah Wilson '99. On hand were grandmother Jane Kydd Taylor Gretter '40, left, and mother Deborah Kydd Wilson '69.

The Delta Queen, an authentic paddle-wheel steamboat built in 1890, is the only one of its kind still in use. SU travelers found it very comfortable, and were intrigued by stories of a ghost on board. Mary Green, who founded the steamboat line with her husband and was herself a captain, died on board at the age of 81.

TRAVELS WITH SU

For Andrea Latchem, the thrill was seeing history come alive. "While cruising the Mississippi on the Delta Queen I learned so much about the Civil War and that wonderful river," says SU's executive director of development for planned giving.

It was that and more for Louis '51 and Gini Bantle of Palm Beach, Florida. "We belly-laughed for 10 days," Gini proclaims. "The people were marvelous, a cross-section of folks from across the country. When I came home, I had withdrawal symptoms for two weeks."

The adventure the Bantles and Latchem shared began in New Orleans, where SU alumni and friends stayed in the deluxe Royal Sonesta Hotel in the French Quarter. Travelers visited the Old Ursuline Convent and the Confederate Museum, while still finding plenty of time to explore the city on their own and experience the blend of Spanish, French, African, and Creole cultures.

Then the SU group boarded the elegantly furnished Delta Queen, an authentic paddle-wheel steamboat built in 1890. Among the 150 passengers they found congenial groups from universities in Iowa, Nebraska, and Massachusetts.

"My husband and I had promised each other that someday we'd take a trip on the Delta Queen," says Helen Layton Stauderman '59 of Wilton, Connecticut. She and husband Al '58 decided this was the perfect opportunity. "It's not a cruise in the accepted sense of the word," she says. "The boat was small enough so you could meet many people, but large enough so you weren't stumbling over each other. You could join in activities or simply sit in a rocking chair and watch the river flow by."

Bob and Dona Harris Dales '46 of Santa Fe, New Mexico, particularly enjoyed the stops at Oak Alley Plantation, Natchez, and Baton Rouge. "I'm interested in architecture and we saw absolutely fabulous antebellum houses," Dona says. "You approach Oak Alley on a quarter-mile avenue under 250-year-old oak trees. In Natchez we visited the Octagon House, another beautiful mansion." She also was intrigued by walking on the battlefield in Vicksburg, Mississippi.

Travelers spent an entire day at Shiloh, Tennessee, where their guide, dressed in Civil War uniform, was one of a group that re-enacts battle scenes. "That added a great dimension to what we were hearing," Latchem says. At their final stop in Mem-

SU alumni and friends aboard the Delta Queen learned a great deal about the Civil War, and also had time to enjoy cruising on the Mississippi River.

CATCHING UP WITH ALUMNI INFORMATION

For the most up-to-date information about the Office of Alumni Relations, coming events, and other matters of interest, visit our web site or give us a call.

Our web site can be found at <http://www.syracuse.edu/alumni/whatsnew.html>.

There is always someone here during business hours to take your call.

phis, the Staudermans were thrilled to hear a talk by historian and award-winning author Shelby Foote, best known for his three-volume The Civil War: A Narrative, one of the most comprehensive military histories covering both the Confederate and Union armies. "If you're interested in the Civil War, he's a benchmark," Helen says. "His style is charming. He answers questions at great length, but you don't care, because it's all fascinating."

Latchem agrees, saying she most enjoyed learning many historical facts. "I also loved the mix of visiting with people, having time to relax, and watching the sun set from the deck of the boat," she says. "It was a wonderful experience."

CALLING ALL SOUTH FLORIDA ALUMNI

The Office of Alumni Relations is looking for alumni in South Florida to get involved with the new South Florida Alumni Council. This is your chance to help plan the alumni activities that take place in this part of the state.

A committee of the National Alumni Association Board of Directors established alumni councils in certain parts of the country to bring representation of all alumni groups in the area into one organization. The South Florida area was one of the first to be organized and now includes alumni club members, Orange Pack supporters, specialty clubs members, and alumni representatives working for the Office of Admissions.

A year later, the results are encouraging. "Our alumni council in South Florida is moving in the right direction," says Scott

alumni News & Notes

Setek, associate director of alumni relations.

He points to the fact that South Florida is broken up into Broward, Dade, and Palm Beach counties. "We have many retired alumni in those areas who are seasonal residents," Setek says. "We have representation from each of the counties on our council, which improves communication and lets people know when events are being planned."

The first event sponsored by the council was a presentation to help high school students and their parents prepare for the college application and admissions process. Susan E. Donovan, associate dean and director of admissions, moderated a panel discussion that included a high school guidance counselor, a parent of a current SU student, and two high school students who had just completed the application process.

The South Florida Council would love to hear from you if you have ideas or would like to get involved. Please call the Office of Alumni Relations for more information.

The American Church in Paris was the meeting place for Dixie Dragon Klingaman '57, G'59 and Fred Gramann '72. Gramann, director of music at the church, hosted a handbell choir from Swarthmore, Pennsylvania, under Klingaman's direction. Among the works performed was music by Gramann, a well-known composer and director of handbell music.

EGGERS AWARD WINNERS

Last Reunion weekend, four alumni received the Melvin A. Eggers Senior Alumni Award for Outstanding Service. The award was established by former Chancellor William Pearson Tolley to honor Chancellor Melvin A. Eggers and recognize significant achievements by alumni.

Barbara Nicholson Conklin '44 of Naples, Florida, and Flat Rock, North Carolina, has held leadership positions in the Central New York Alumni Club, Naples Alumni Club, and Central New York Girl Scout Council, as well as chaired several reunion committees for the Class of 1944. She received an Outstanding Alumni Award in 1988. She and her husband have been longtime supporters of conservation and have held leadership positions in The Conservancy, a group devoted to conserving the biodiversity, environmental quality, and resources of Southwest Florida's ecosystems.

William P. Conklin '44 retired after a 44-year career in advertising and banking. He began his career in advertising in Syracuse and later entered banking, becoming a director of Flagship National Bank of Naples. In addition to involvement with The Conservancy, he has served on the boards of two similar Florida conservatories. In the 1950s, he chaired SU's first Phonathon committee.

Richard J. Fay '44, a limited partner in the New York City investment banking firm Goldman, Sachs & Co., served as national chair of the Annual Giving Program at the onset of the University's Second Century Campaign. He is a past member of the School of Architecture advisory committee and is currently an honorary member of the SU Board of Trustees. A member of the Chancellor's Council, he has supported the Richard J. and Joann Olson Fay Scholarship.

Dorothy Golub Spira '28 of Schenectady, New York, was honored posthumously. She had a diverse career ranging from operating her own studio for dramatics to teaching language communication arts for the city school system in Schenectady. She created the Dorothy Golub Spira Scholarship in Speech Communication, and was a member of the Society of Fellows.

VOLUNTEER WORKSHOP

Interested in volunteering to help at various alumni programs? Hesitating because you don't know exactly what's involved? Your questions are about to be answered.

On Saturday, October 2, the Office of Alumni Relations will hold a one-day workshop. You'll meet with University staff members and fellow classmates to find out all the closely guarded secrets of working with alumni (hint: smiling is terrific, but there's more to it). When you finish, you'll be prepared to help at various alumni events, where we promise you'll have a wonderful time.

For more information, contact Elaine Cardone.

DEAN'S OUTSTANDING ALUMNI AWARDS

Seven alumni received Dean's Outstanding Alumni Awards during Reunion weekend for the many contributions they've made to their colleges and fields.

- College of Arts and Sciences: Reneé Schine Crown '50 of Wilmette, Illinois, civic leader, philanthropist, and SU trustee; and Jay L. Halio '50 of Newark, Delaware, teacher and scholar.

- School of Education: C. Joy Hathaway '96 of Liverpool, New York, special education teacher.

- College for Human Development: Tiane (T.C.) Benson '74 of Washington, D.C., vice president of marketing and development for the National Trust for Historic Preservation; and Margaret Harrington '94 of Watertown, New York, author and lecturer.

- College of Nursing: Patricia Paul Hernandez '57, G'67 of Albany, New York, nursing consultant for the New York State Health Department. Young Careerist Award: Mona Bahouth G'95 of Baltimore, adult nurse practitioner at Johns Hopkins Medical Center. Honorary Alumnus Awards: Robert '49 (School of Management) and Dorothy McCaffrey of Boston; and Grace N. Harris of Jensen Beach, Florida, retired nurse.

- School of Social Work: Ann Stahl Badger G'69 of Liverpool, New York, retired deputy commissioner of the Onondaga County Department of Mental Health.

HOMECOMING '99: OCTOBER 29-31

Think of hillsides bursting with incredible fall colors. Imagine the tangy scent of fresh apple cider. Picture the fun of returning to campus on a bustling, glorious fall weekend. Then remember Homecoming '99 and make plans to be part of it.

The game against the Boston College Eagles promises to be a battle worthy of Coach Paul Pasqualoni's Orangemen. Just as absorbing will be the panoply of activities planned just for you, from visiting your home college to joining a festive parade.

This year the Syracuse University Student Alumni Association (SUSA) is taking over some of the duties formerly carried out by the Traditions Commission, a student organization that's been shorthanded in recent years. One of those pleasant obligations is organizing the Friday evening parade and bonfire, a rite looked forward to by generations of alumni who participated in similar events as students. SUSA, a student volunteer organization sponsored by the Office of Alumni Relations, serves as a link between students and the University's alumni.

Homecoming also marks Reunion for the classes of 1984, 1989, and 1994, and class committees are planning a full schedule of activities.

Lisa Vabolis '84, a senior investment accounting officer at PNC Bank in Wilmington, Delaware, can't wait for the event. She's helping organize activities for her class. "Homecoming is definitely a draw for my class," she says. "It's a way to relive your days at Syracuse. So many of us share memories of the good times we had at school. I belong to the Philadelphia Alumni Club, and when we get together we talk about the things we did at the University. People like to remember. It's a very strong bond."

For Julie Loveland Comanici '89 of Syracuse, the attraction is getting together with friends. A stay-at-home mother with four children, Comanici says: "I've kept in touch with my sorority sisters from Alpha Phi, but Reunion at Homecoming will allow me to see others I knew and liked at school. People enjoy coming back to the places they knew as students. My sorority house and Marshall Street are big attractions."

Lansing Dimon '94 of Mexico, New York, is working on Reunion plans for his class. Dimon, band director at Mexico High School, fondly remembers his experiences in Marching Band and the Sour Citrus Society Pep Band. "Reunion allows us to see where we've gone in the past five years," he says. "By coming back to campus, you redefine the experience you had at SU and reflect on it."

If your class is scheduled for Reunion during Homecoming, plan to join us. If not, just come back and enjoy all the things Syracuse has to offer.

Homecoming '99 promises to be one of the best ever, as alumni join with students to celebrate Syracuse.

NEW ALUMNI ASSOCIATION MEMBERS

Nine individuals have been elected to terms of varying lengths on the Syracuse University Alumni Association Board of Directors.

Judge Joanne Fogel Alper '72 of Arlington, Virginia (1999-2001), belongs to the Society of Fellows and established the Muriel S. Alper Award.

Ellen Baker Baltz '73 of Center Valley, Pennsylvania (1999-2002), is active in her community and a former executive director of Pennsylvania Stage.

Thomas A. Johnson '75 of Syracuse (1999-2001), a regional club representative to the board, is director of administrative services at the Syracuse Community Health Center and past president of the local chapter of Friends of Syracuse.

Major Miguel A. Sapp '82, G'88, G'89 of Washington, D.C. (1999-2002), an attorney with the U.S. Department of Agriculture and a U.S. Army Reserve officer, is active in Coming Back Together reunions.

Roberta Chamberlain Schofield '57, G'77 of Cazenovia, New York, will serve on the Athletic Policy Board (1999-2001). She is executive director of the Salvation Army and on the School of Social Work Board of Visitors.

Ellen Ruby Silverstone '65 of Milford, Pennsylvania, and New York City (1999-2002) is past president of SHARE, a cancer support group, and involved in New York City alumni activities.

Three outstanding alumni received the George Arents Pioneer Medal, the highest honor bestowed on SU alumni, at Reunion. Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw, far left, congratulates University of North Carolina president Molly Corbett Broad '62, cartoonist Bradley Anderson '51, and social work practitioner Bernie Wohl '51.

Shereth Landrum Smallwood '64 of Ponte Vedra Beach, Florida (1999-2002), is vice president of Merrill Lynch, a member of the Society of Fellows, and on SU's National Campaign Council.

Barry Weiss '83 of Syracuse (1999-2001), a regional club representative, is administrative officer for the Onondaga County District Attorney's Office and received SU's 1992 Young Alumni Award.

Robert B. Woodruff '73 of Berkeley Heights, New Jersey (1999-2002), a partner with the law firm Rand, Algeier, Tosti & Woodruff, supports SU academics and athletics, and is active in the Varsity Club.

and public affairs activities.

"Our two major goals are to increase the visibility of Syracuse University in New York, and to expand financial support for the University," Walsh says.

"One of the things we're doing is integrating SU's colleges into the institutions in New York City to create valuable synergies," he says. "Such efforts might involve arranging collaborations between city businesses and organizations and the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications or the School of Management"

In addition, his team is encouraging activities at Lubin House that add to the cultural life of the city, such as the Milton Avery exhibition (see Quad Angles, page 4), and renovating the gallery.

"We also want to call attention to the accomplishments of our notable alumni in the metropolitan area, who are at the top of every industry and profession," Walsh says. "We have a tremendous network of Syracuse University people and we're proud of them."

NEW YORK CITY FOCUS

With almost 27,000 alumni, metropolitan New York has become the focus of greater outreach by the University, according to Lansing G. Baker, senior vice president for University Relations.

"The Greater New York area is one of our most important," Baker says. "With Lubin House newly renovated, we want to reach out to our alumni and friends and get them involved. We want them to know about the changes that have taken place on campus and the energy that's been created, to say nothing of how important we think they are."

The man charged with that responsibility is the development office's Tom Walsh G'84. As assistant vice president for development and public affairs/New York, Walsh now heads a team that integrates campus and New York-based development, alumni,

We asked for SU license plate pictures, and did we get them! Thanks for your enthusiastic response. The plates above are from Barbara Nicholson Conklin '44 of Naples, Florida; and Judy Popky '92 of Atlanta.

MANY THANKS
Three alumni club presidents recently completed their terms of office. We thank them for their continuing commitment.

John Couri '63

John Couri knows what satisfaction is: It's seeing the beaming faces of disadvantaged children enjoying summer camp for the first time in their lives.

That's why Couri decided to retire from his multimillion-dollar business in 1994, and why some years earlier he and wife Elaine began the Couri Foundation, an organization that funds the camp and three other charitable programs.

Now in its 10th year, Camp Skylodge in Maine offers week-long summer adventures to girls and boys ages 10 to 12. "I can't begin to tell you how much satisfaction I get when I see those happy kids," he says proudly.

The foundation also supports the Giving Tree, which provides a winter weekend at Skylodge to 18 needy youngsters who would otherwise have no Christmas celebration; a senior center in Bangor, Maine; and a program that offers 20 outstanding M.B.A. students (half of them from SU) special classes and interactions with prominent guest speakers.

Couri left Duty Free International (DFI)—a company he founded in 1972 and built into a $600 million corporation—to spend more time managing the Ridgefield, Connecticut-based foundation. "I realized the only way to change my life was to retire," he says. "In life you must give back to society, and this is our way of doing that."

An economics major, Couri got his brainstorm for DFI on a business trip, when he realized there was no duty free shop in his airline terminal. "My college roommate, Carl Reimerdes '63, and I landed two duty free concessions at JFK International Airport," he says. "The first day we did $300 in business. The first month we did more than $30,000."

DFI eventually grew to encompass four divisions serving airports, diplomats, U.S. borders, and in-flight sales. The company went public in 1989 and was sold in 1997. Couri still serves as a consultant and sits on the board. He received SU's George Arents Pioneer Medal in 1993 and serves on the University's Board of Trustees.

But it's working with the children that pleases him most now. "Life doesn't get any better than that," he says.

maria Schneider '88

psst! Want to know what's going to be hot in women's fashions this fall? Think beads and glitz. Keep your eye peeled for the influence of junior styles in large sizes. Look for special millennium shops at major retailers.

That inside information is straight from Mara Schneider, sales manager for Reference Point, a women's clothing company dealing primarily in imported sweaters and knits. Schneider travels the country, working with retailers at stores to plan how their sales floors will look—the colors, the themes, the very attitudes they want to project each season.

"I sell to store buyers, coming up with products that fit into their sales plans," she explains. "The greatest challenge is staying one step ahead of a store's own development and design people. We must have something that gives them a reason to buy from us." Most of Schneider's work is with department stores like Sears, Roebuck and Co. and JC Penney.

Schneider focused on her career early, studying retailing in the College for Human Development and doing a co-op at Saks Fifth Avenue.

After graduation she worked in sales for evening wear designer Victor Costa and at Outlander. It was there she began working with special sizes, a skill that brought her to I.B. Diffusion, running its special size division. Four years ago, she moved to Reference Point.

"I have far more responsibility now," she says.

"My job demands a combination of creative and business skills, because I work so closely with designers, colorists, and trend forecasters. My greatest strength is my ease in working with the buyers."

Schneider keeps in close contact with the University, heading the Retailing Alumni Club and organizing panels for retailing students in the city. There she brings them together with alumni who work in all aspects of the business, from retail to wholesale. She's also served as a visiting lecturer on campus, teaching students about product development.

"The University showed me my strengths and how to use them best," Schneider says. "I grew up at Syracuse."

carol Nellis<sup>84</sup>

Social workers may find themselves playing many roles throughout their careers: working with students in schools, counseling patients in hospitals, comforting victims of crime or natural disasters. But for sheer variety, it's hard to beat Carol Nellis's job—she's one of three licensed clinical social workers employed by the U.S. Secret Service. "Because of the nature of its work, which is very stressful, the Secret Service has social workers to provide short-term counseling, crisis intervention after traumatic incidents, and information and referral for employees," says Nellis, who has been with the service since 1991.

The Secret Service has 2,300 agents and more than 1,000 Uniformed Division officers protecting the president, vice president, former presidents, and visiting dignitaries. As an agency of the U.S. Treasury Department, it also investigates such crimes as counterfeiting and computer and telecommunications fraud.

Nellis has done crisis debriefing for Secret Service employees involved in such events as the 1994 Los Angeles earthquake and the World Trade Center and Oklahoma City bombings. She also coordinates training for the service's peer support program, which pairs employees who have been involved in traumatic incidents with others who have had similar experiences.

One challenge of her work is being able to provide resources anywhere in the country on a 24-hour basis. "We usually travel on short notice—you find out about an incident one day and you're gone the next," she says. "After six of our employees were killed in the Oklahoma City bombing, we spent six days there, helping the families cope with grief."

Nellis, who earned a bachelor's degree in social work at SU, chose the field because it provided the opportunity to work in many areas. After earning a master's degree in social work from Catholic University in Washington, D.C., she worked at Bethesda Naval Hospital in Maryland before being recruited by the Secret Service. "I enjoy the variety," she says, "and I like using my skills with a population that really wants to work on whatever issues are brought forward. The organization cares about its people, and when a traumatic life event occurs, it provides a lot of support."

Daniel G. Cantone '78 (A&S/NEW) founded Cantone Law Firm and is on the faculty in the ABA-approved legal assistant program at Syracuse University.

John Lobon '73

John Lobon was glad he was wearing a good suit when his boss at the Connecticut Development Authority (CDA) summoned him and explained that they had to leave for the capital, where then-Governor Lowell Weicker would name Lobon head of URBANK. Weicker had promised a group of urban bankers he'd fill the position by 11 a.m.; so Lobon gulped, straightened his tie, and set off to see the governor.

CDA is a public agency that serves as the state's financing arm. "I work with banks to help small businesses access capital, firms that banks would normally not help," Lobon says.

Under Lobon, who's officially senior vice president of CDA in Rocky Hill, URBANK has had dramatic success. Originally funded with $5 million, to date it has helped more than 330 small businesses, one-third of them minority- or woman-owned, receive $25 million in loans. Begun in just 5 Connecticut cities, URBANK has expanded into 18 more locales.

Lobon never expected to parlay a bachelor's degree in history into a career in banking, but after graduating from SU he entered a training program in banking and fell in love with the business. "It's all about people," he says. He attended a two-year banking program at Williams College and worked at two banks before joining CDA in 1984, working with the department of economic development until he was tapped for URBANK.

Lobon was a star defensive end at SU. He is also remembered as one of a group of nine African American football players who boycotted the team in 1970 over racial grievances with the athletic department.

He acknowledges that efforts of the Office of Program Development and attending Coming Back Together reunions did much to heal his rift with SU. "I'm not bitter," he says. "It was a learning experience for us all." One of his proudest moments came in 1998, when he spoke at an SU celebration of John Robert Greene's book The Eggers Years.

"Now I'm at peace with myself," he says. "Syracuse University is a part of my soul."

warren Kimble<sub>57</sub>

When people ask Warren Kimble how long it takes to paint a picture, he tells them 45 years. "I want them to know this didn't just happen," he says. Kimble is proud that his paintings reflect his age and experience.

After graduating from SU's College of Visual and Performing Arts with a degree in fine arts, he spent several years treading the ad agency mill. Then he went back to school—as a teacher in elementary, junior high, and high schools. After that he taught at Castleton State College, leaving 13 years later to pursue his love of painting full time.

Kimble began working with folk art just eight years ago. His whimsical style reflects the serenity of his home in Brandon, Vermont, and is influenced, he says, by "crafts, country things, and the look and feel of English animal portraiture."

His art boasts a cult-like following in places as far away from the green hills of Vermont as South Korea and Japan. Tom Cruise, Steven Spielberg, and Michael J. Fox collect Kimble originals. His prints, notecards, and calendars—produced by Wild Apple graphics—are available in many galleries, museums, and stores, including the Louvre and the SU Bookstore. His work can also be seen on his web site, www.warrenkimble.com.

With 2.5 million prints published, Kimble has been billed as "America's most popular contemporary folk artist." Now a line of country furniture bears his name, produced by Lexington Furniture Industries. Because he's known throughout the world, people who visit his public gallery in Brandon may be surprised by his warmth and accessibility. "I need people," he says. "Maybe it's because I taught so long."

Literally and figuratively, Kimble is a cheerleader for SU. "I would not be where I am today if it weren't for Syracuse," he says. President of his class in 1957 and an avid member of the cheerleading squad, Kimble still supports SU cheerleading. He recently helped develop the Alumni Cheerleaders Reunion Committee, and will be leading the cheers again when he returns to campus in October for Homecoming 1999.

Chris Cypert '92

hat was the best job in the world last year? How about being inside the shooting of George Lucas's blockbuster film, The Phantom Menace.

That's where you would have found Chris Cypert, the project's still image coordinator, a job that never existed before in the film industry. "I was in charge of all the still images produced on the film," he explains. "Three full-time photographers took 1,000 photos a day, and four others input information into a massive database. By production's end, we'd taken over 125,000. I had to make sure it all ran smoothly."

Typically the images are only used for publicity, but for this film they were used for postproduction special effects, continuity, and documentary books and films.

Cypert says the database contained comprehensive information on every image taken, from the names and positions of characters in the frame to the races of various aliens.

"By the end of the film, the team and I knew more about the film than anyone else alive," he recalls. "The costume department knew all the costumes, the props department knew the props, the creature makers knew the aliens, but we knew all of it. For example, sometimes people who had done concept drawings of a certain creature didn't know its name, and the people who had made the physical costume didn't know it either, so we kept digging until we identified it. Every set, actor, alien, prop, costume, vehicle, and crew member was photographed and identified."

At SU, Cypert studied photography in the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, served as assistant photo editor on the Daily Orange, and shot for United Press International. After graduation, he was a photographer for Reuters in London and then graphic design and digital imaging advisor for the British arm of Hearst Publishing. A friend told him Lucasfilm THX was looking for someone with both computer and photography experience and he was off, working on the film in London, Italy, and Tunisia.

After the film wrapped, he went to Singapore as a digital imaging consultant for a fashion magazine and to pursue his real career, fashion photography. Today he's based there and in London, where he keeps in close touch with the SU

London Centre, arranging for photography students to visit magazine editors and sometimes helping students secure internships.

"The Phantom Menace was a once-in-a-lifetime job," he admits. "The best part was simply being involved in something so historic. The worst was working extremely hard under incredible pressure. We'd be totally exhausted at the end of a 15-hour day but it didn't matter. It was Star Wars."
