Fond Memories

AS SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY ALUMNI, we are fortunate to have fond memories of our years together on campus and the many unforgettable traditions that connect us to our alma mater. For every generation of SU students, some old traditions end and new ones begin, changing to meet the needs of our society and campus environment.

Gone are the days of the Colgate University football rivalry, parades with elaborate floats, and cars backed up along Greek Row as city residents motored up to the Hill to view the ice sculpture competition. Yet other traditions—such as listening to the Crouse College chimes on the Quad, welcoming the first snowfall with a snowball fight in Walnut Park, heading to the Varsity after a victorious football game to upend the banner of the vanquished opponent, or celebrating at the Commencement Eve Dinner Dance—live on and unite us all.

What is your most cherished SU tradition? Please e-mail us at sualumni@syr.edu and share your story. We will post some of your reflections on the alumni web site at www.syracuse.edu/alumni and periodically include one in this section of Syracuse University Magazine.

I look forward to hearing from you and learning more about the exciting traditions that helped build our wonderful University.

A Family Tradition

This is the first in a series of stories about multigenerational SU families.

Liza Dalrymple '83 feels virtually no separation between Syracuse University and her family, which boasts three generations of SU alumni—1900 to 1983.

Dalrymple's grandfather, Hermon Horatio Downey—believed to be the first person from his hometown of Akron, New York to attend college—chose Syracuse University for his studies. He graduated with a bachelor's degree in 1900 and began a family tradition. "Twelve people in my family followed my grandfather's lead and attended SU," Dalrymple says.

Downey, a Methodist minister who taught poetry at SU, had one child, Vivian, who graduated from SU in 1922. After his first wife died, Downey and his second wife, Mary Wyckoff, had three children, all of whom graduated from SU: Beverly earned a bachelor's degree in 1944 and a master's degree in 1945; Joanne's undergraduate degree was conferred in 1948; and Bradford graduated in 1949.

Hermon Downey's extended family also followed him to SU. His nephews, Hermon and Wilfred Swift, earned SU degrees in the 1920s. Another nephew, Paul William Downey, attended the University, but left to fight in World War I. Unfortunately he contracted influenza and died on his way home from the war.

On a brighter note, romance blossomed at Syracuse University for two of Downey's children. Bradford Downey met his wife, Gertrude Roney '50, on the Hill. Joanne Downey and Stanley Dalrymple '52 met at SU and were married in a Hendricks Chapel ceremony performed by Hermon Downey the day before he retired.

The Dalrymples' daughters, Mary Jo Dalrymple Riley '80, the first woman to receive a crew scholarship to SU, and her sister Liza Dalrymple '83, pledged Alpha Gamma Delta and were roommates in the same sorority house they had visited as children. "After my grandfather, Hermon Downey, died, my grandmother, Mary Wyckoff Downey, was Alpha Gamma Delta's house mother from 1958 until 1976," Liza Dalrymple says. "When we visited her, we went to the sorority house. Every year, 30 members of our family had Thanksgiving dinner at the house and stayed the weekend. It's like I grew up on campus. It's home to me."

As the latest generation of Downey's family comes of age, Liza Dalrymple looks to them to carry on the family tradition at Syracuse. "We hope my sister's daughter decides to go to SU," she says. "That would be great."

Cuban Sights

From the streets of Havana to Hemingway's estate in San Francisco De Paula, Lee Anthon '56 was finally able to explore the historic sights and culture of Cuba. Under a bright blue Caribbean sky in mid-February, she joined a group of SU alumni and friends on a six-day trip to Cuba, sponsored by the Syracuse University Alumni Association. "I had an opportunity to visit Cuba three years ago, but my passport expired, and I had to cancel my trip," Anthon says. "I figured I would go to Cuba eventually—I just didn't think I'd be able to go so soon after that."

Not many Americans have been as fortunate as Anthon. Because Cuba is a communist country, the U.S. government has placed restrictions on Americans spending travel money there. However, a cultural or educational tour, such as the SU alumni tour, is exempt from those restrictions.

SU tour host Gary Livent, senior director of external relations in the Maxwell School, says

there were plenty of opportunities during the trip to stroll the streets of Havana and interact with Cuban citizens. "We found the Cuban people to be quite friendly," says Livent. "We didn't pick up any anti-American feelings at all, and no animosity was directed toward us."

Group members, including SU Board of Trustees Chairman Joseph Lampe '53, G'55 and his wife Shawn, attended a lecture presented by U.S. State Department representatives, who discussed America's political relationship with Cuba. Each morning the group attended lectures on Cuban culture, covering such topics as art, agriculture, and architecture. "The lectures gave us background information so we could appreciate and understand what we were going to see later on that day," Livent says. "Following the lecture on architecture, we toured buildings in Havana dating back to the 17th century."

For Anthon, one of the trip's highlights was a visit to the Colon Cemetery, which holds the remains of great figures in Cuban history. She was impressed with the cemetery's decorative marble and tombstones and fascinated by the stories of the people buried there. "It is the most beautiful cemetery," says Anthon, who is already planning another trip to Cuba. "The trip was fantastic and really worthwhile. I'm glad I had the opportunity to go."

Sorkin's Success

AARON SORKIN, a 1983 graduate of the Department of Drama in the College of Visual and Performing Arts, received the George Arents Pioneer Medal, Syracuse University's highest alumni honor. Chancellor Kenneth A. Shaw, Mary Ann Shaw, and the SU Alumni Association presented the award to Sorkin last fall at an event held at the Museum of Television and Radio in Beverly Hills, California, in recognition of his accomplishments in the field of dramatic writing. Sorkin is the creator, writer, and executive producer of the Emmy Award-winning NBC drama The West Wing. His playwriting and screenwriting credits include A Few Good Men, Malice, and The American President.

Orange Friendly

The Office of Alumni Relations held a contest to name SU's pregame events—and the winner is: "Orange Friendly." The office is now in the process of selecting a location to hold the Orange Friendly events two hours before kickoff of every home football game next season. All Orange Pack members, SU alumni, patrons, and friends are encouraged to stop by. Don't forget Homecoming Weekend, October 4-6, 2002.

Orange Friendzies are also planned for five of SU's away football games—Brigham Young, Auburn, Temple, Central Florida, and Boston College. All Orange Friendly events will be co-sponsored by Orange Pack and the Office of Alumni Relations. Event details will be posted on the alumni relations web site (www.syracuse.edu/alumni) as soon as they are available.

Way Down South

Imagine you are 18 years old and about to leave family, friends, and warm Atlanta winters behind to travel 1,000 miles north to attend Syracuse University. Starting to get cold feet? That's when Rick Stockfield '92, G'94 and the SU Alumni Club of Atlanta come to the rescue.

Stockfield and his wife, Mindy '93, resurrected the former SU Alumni Club of Georgia to bring together alumni who can help break the ice and ease the transition for incoming freshmen from the Atlanta area. The group, now called the SU Alumni Club of Atlanta, sponsors a send-off party in the home of an alumnus every August to prepare rookie students for the SU experience. "There's a comfort factor in the program," says Mindy Stockfield. "Incoming freshmen meet with SU alumni and current students to swap stories. It's run as a question-and-answer session, and people offer honest responses."

In addition to the annual send-off party, the club gathers at a local brewery to cheer on the Orangemen during televised football and basketball games; brings in campus speakers to address some of the 2,000 Atlanta-area alumni

As its slogan suggests, the club invites all Atlanta-area alumni to "Come Share in Something Familiar" and reconnect with a vibrant part of their past. For more information, visit www.suacoa.com.

Orr Honored

Louis Orr '80, former SU basketball star and assistant coach and current head basketball coach at Seton Hall University, was honored with the Syracuse University New York City Sports Hall of Fame Award. The award was presented to Orr by Joseph Lampe '53, G'55, chair of SU's Board of Trustees, at an event held at the New York Athletic Club in Manhattan. More than 300 SU alumni were welcomed to the event by former SU quarterback Don McPherson '87. The master of ceremonies for the evening was sportscaster Ian Eagle '90.

Sandra Townes G'76

AT AGE 8, SANDRA TOWNES already knew she wanted to pursue a legal career and made frequent trips to a corner store in Spartanburg, South Carolina, hoping to bump into the lawyer whose office was above the shop. That lawyer, Matthew J. Perry, proved to be a positive influence on Townes—he became the first African American federal district court judge in South Carolina and remains her mentor today. “It never occurred to me that he was the only African American lawyer in my community,” Townes says. “I just thought, ‘Hey, I might like to do that,’ and I never changed my mind.”

She fueled her interest in law throughout childhood by reading true-crime novels and learning what the lawyer-authors would identify as the case's key legal issues. After completing undergraduate work at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, North Carolina, she became a wife and mother and taught high school English for six years. Still intrigued by the legal world, she enrolled in SU's College of Law and graduated in 1976. She then served as an assistant district attorney in Onondaga County for 10 years, followed by 11 years as a Syracuse City Court judge.

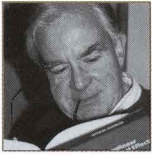

Townes continued in her mentor's footsteps by breaking glass ceilings for African Americans in the legal profession. In November 1999, Townes, a Republican, became the first African American and second woman elected to the New York State Supreme Court 5th Judicial District bench. In March 2001, she chalked up another first when New York Governor George Pataki appointed her to serve on one of the state's four appellate courts, making Townes the first African American woman in the state to do so.

Today, Townes, a former member of the SU Alumni Association Board of Directors, splits her time between Brooklyn and Syracuse. She spends three to four days a week on the appellate bench, and the remaining time in Syracuse, catching up with her two children, both SU students, and researching legal decisions in her downtown office. Although a hectic schedule forced her to step down from the many community boards on which she served, she remains an active member of the College of Law's Board of Visitors and speaks with youths in the community whenever possible. “I have an obligation to interact with young people and let them know that the things they want to happen can happen if they really work at it,” she says. “I'm doing what I've always wanted to do in life.”

Jack Milton '51

SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY TRUSTEE Jack Milton always wanted to be an engineer—until he collided with calculus. With thoughts of working in his father's construction machinery business one day, he eagerly enrolled in SU's administrative engineering program. But after wrestling with advanced mathematics the first semester of his sophomore year, he realized he was not cut out to be an engineer. "It was the business part of the administrative engineering curriculum I liked," Milton says. "I transferred to the School of Management and have been happy ever after."

After graduating from college and serving as a sergeant in the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Milton joined his father's business as a salesman. When his father died unexpectedly in 1956, Milton sold his interest in the family business and became manager for Perkins Machinery Company. He then became co-owner of Jordan-Milton Machinery Company, which is based in New Hampshire and Vermont and has expanded into Maine. In 1990 he became chairman and CEO of Southworth-Milton Machinery, a privately owned heavy equipment dealer located in Massachusetts with contracts in New England and eastern New York. Now semi-retired, he has turned the day-to-day business operations over to his son. "I'm delighted to have more time for sailing," Milton says.

In addition to receiving a business education at SU, Milton met his wife, Laura Hanhausen Milton '51, at a Hendricks Chapel convocation on their first day of school. Their daughter Stacey graduated from SU in 1975. The Milton family's devotion to Syracuse doesn't stop there. Jack's office is filled with SU memorabilia. Along with his trustee duties, he serves on the School of Management's corporate advisory board, and over the years the Miltons have generously supported SU. Most notably, they provided a major gift for the construction of the new School of Management building and a gift to establish the Laura H. Milton Freshman Lecture in the College of Arts and Sciences. "We believe we should support the University that has given us so much," says Milton, who received the 2001 Jonathan J. Holtz Alumnus of the Year Award from the School of Management. "I'm proud to be associated with Syracuse." —Christine Yackel

William Clotworthy '48

F. SCOTT FITZGERALD ONCE SAID, "There are no second acts in American life," but he never met William Clotworthy. Act One was pretty impressive. After completing a bachelor's degree at SU, the drama major headed for New York City, which was abuzz at the time over a promising new gadget called television. Clotworthy found a job with powerhouse ad agency BBD&O, producing commercials for the TV shows of such stars as Bing Crosby and Groucho Marx, and contributing stories to drama series. Working in both New York and Hollywood, he rose to the position of manager of BBD&O's television production services.

In 1979, he left the agency for NBC to take a job that, as he put it, "most people believe didn't exist." As director of program standards, he was the network's chief East Coast censor, wielding the power of the dreaded blue pencil over such series as Saturday Night Live, Late Night with David Letterman, and Friday Night Videos.

Act Two began with his "retirement" in 1991. Resisting the temptations of whittling and horse-shoes, Clotworthy instead established himself as a leading expert on the history of U.S. presidential libraries and visitor sites. When asked if he had at least a passing interest in history earlier in life, Clotworthy replied, "Back in my student days, I was just interested in passing history!"

Clotworthy had only hoped to do some freelance magazine writing after retiring. But an assignment on presidential history hooked him on the subject and led to his first book, Homes and Libraries of the Presidents: An Interpretive Guide (1995), part of the McDonald and Woodward "Guide to the American Landscape" series. It describes more than 100 such places for general readers.

In his next effort, Presidential Sites: A Directory of Places Associated With Presidents of the United States (1998), he widened his scope, surveying approximately 1,000 presidential sites, including battlefields, churches, cemeteries, and workplaces. A third book, In the Footsteps of George Washington, was released in 2001. His recent fame as a historian and lecturer notwithstanding, Clotworthy has not completely forgotten about his pitched battles with loose-lipped television producers. Among his growing list of titles is Saturday Night Live: Equal Opportunity Offender, an unabashed memoir by the censor-turned-author who still goes by the e-mail handle of "Dr. No."

And who is his favorite president? "Well, I've been married, widowed, remarried, widowed, and remarried again, raising 8 children in the combination of families," he says. "Because of that, I relate to and most admire President John Tyler, who fathered 15 children by his 2 wives. Where he found the time and energy to serve as president of the United States, I'll never know."

Felix "Brandon" Lloyd '98

AFTER GRADUATING WITH DUAL DEGREES in African American studies and television-radio-film, Felix "Brandon" Lloyd had every intention of going to graduate school to study creative writing. But a twist of fate worthy of a feel-good Hollywood movie altered his career path altogether.

The summer after graduation, Lloyd was teaching drama at a youth recreation center in his hometown of Washington, D.C., when officials from the SEED School, a new, all-residential charter school, approached him about becoming a live-in residential advisor. When Lloyd went in to discuss the position, they must have liked what they saw. "In the process of doing my interview, they asked me out of the blue if I wanted to be a social studies teacher," he recalls.

So with virtually no teaching experience, Lloyd joined the charter school's teaching staff. Three years later, he's an award-winning instructor, teaching history and civics to 7th- through 10th-graders in classes that average just 14 students.

A Washington Post article on D.C. charter schools portrayed Lloyd as a no-nonsense, inspirational figure in the classroom. In June 2001, Lloyd received a Teacher of the Year award from the D.C. Public Charter School Resource Center. "I thought I would teach one year," he says, "then I got into it and found out not only that I enjoyed it a great deal, but I was good at it. There was still a long way to go, but I was intrigued with the profession and have stuck with it."

Time permitting, Lloyd also nurtures his screenwriting aspirations. He's working with another SU graduate on a short film—based on a screenplay he wrote while at Syracuse—and hopes it will evolve into a full-length feature. A novel, based on the same screenplay, is also in the works.

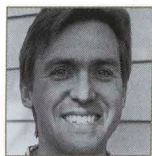

Though he didn't study education, Lloyd, who was both a Remembrance Scholar and a Syracuse University Scholar, sees a clear crossover between his activities at SU—acting and writing—and his current job. "All those things come into play," he says. "Any good teacher is an actor to some extent."

Joan Wilcox '55

JOAN WILCOX HAS A THIRST FOR KNOWLEDGE and adventure. In the years following her graduation from SU with a bachelor's degree in journalism and political science, she raised a family, earned three advanced degrees, worked on Wall Street, founded a financial guaranty company, served as a town commissioner, and learned how to fly a plane. "I have always wanted to fly," says Wilcox, who obtained her pilot's license in 1990. "It's a tremendous privilege to be up there and see things from a different perspective."

Wilcox's plans for graduate school and a professional career were initially put on hold when she married and started a family. "In those days, you didn't work when you had small children," says Wilcox, who has four daughters. "I kept in touch with my friends who were active in their professions and realized I needed to go back to school and to work." That she did—completing both a master's degree in urban planning (1970) and a doctorate in public finance (1976) from New York University while working as a consultant and raising her first two daughters.

Wilcox served as a consultant for the New York City Finance Administration and then the New York State special deputy comptroller before moving on to Wall Street. She worked on Wall Street for more than a decade, first as a head of municipal research and then going over to the "buy" side of the market. Among her accomplishments, she helped found AMBAC Indemnity (formerly American Municipal Bond Assurance Company) in 1984. She ran AMBAC's credit evaluation, pricing, and industry relations for seven years before leaving to "retire" to Florida. A decade later, she returned to college—this time to study law at Nova Southeastern University, where she earned a degree in 2001. "My husband [Marshall Wilcox] was totally marvelous," Wilcox says. "He was supportive through it all."

She is now regional counsel in Stuart, Florida, for a public-interest law firm. "I represent clients who are motivated by public interest rather than ones who hope for personal gain," she says. "The cases involve the American Everglades, growth management, and wetlands preservation."

In her spare time, she gardens and works with local charities. Although she has always enjoyed trying new things, Wilcox plans to stick with her current profession. "I'm not getting any more degrees," she says. "I have been blessed because I'm doing something I really enjoy."

Jonas Kronkaitis G'69

NINE-YEAR-OLD JONAS KRONKAITIS and his family fled their native Lithuania during World War II to avoid the clash of German and Russian armies. After 9 years in labor and refugee camps, they arrived in America, where Kronkaitis went on to serve 27 years in the U.S. Army before retiring as a colonel in 1985.

But his life came full circle in 1997 when he returned to his newly independent homeland to help resurrect a military left in ruins by nearly five decades of Soviet rule. "I never imagined in my time that Lithuania would become free," says Kronkaitis, who received an M.B.A. degree from SU. "I never imagined I'd be here wearing this uniform."

Kronkaitis is major general and commander of the Lithuanian Armed Forces. He brought his Western vision—and just a few suitcases—to this former Soviet Republic with the intention of lending some advice and then returning to the United States. Once in the capital city of Vilnius, however, he quickly ascended to vice minister of national defense, and was appointed to head the military in 1999. With the country seeking membership in NATO, Kronkaitis's job became clear: to create, equip, train, and structure an armed force capable of defending Lithuania and assuming a role in the NATO alliance. "The first year I worked 7 days a week, 12 hours a day," says the Vietnam veteran. "We had to write laws, regulations, and rules."

Kronkaitis instituted a 10-year plan to rid the Lithuanian military of its Soviet past and installed a new philosophy that prioritized soldier over officer. "When I first came, we had meetings with senior Soviet officers," says the soft-spoken general. "They always talked about the officers. One day I lost my temper and was yelling at them and calling them nothing but selfish. I said, 'I can't believe that in all this time none of you has talked about doing something for the soldiers!' And then we put soldiers as our number-one priority."

Security is serious business in this Baltic nation, which saw one-third of its population murdered by German and Russian occupations in the 1940s. Now under the leadership of this American-trained veteran, Lithuanians feel more secure about their country's future. He is viewed as a savior by many of Lithuania's 3.5 million citizens, who often greet him with thanks and hugs. "Everything is very emotional," says Kronkaitis, who plans to retire with his wife to Virginia after Lithuania enters NATO in 2003. "To Lithuanians, I symbolize freedom, democracy, and someone who will not compromise the values they believe in."
