A NEW REUNION

In my last column I announced an initiative to build an endowment to support alumni programs. I am pleased to report that we are making good progress toward our $1 million goal. The enthusiastic and generous response from so many alumni is very gratifying. This important support will afford us flexibility and the opportunity to try new approaches to some of our best programs, among them class reunions.

Thanks to feedback from you, our alumni, and the advice of our Alumni Relations Campus Council and Alumni Association Board of Directors Campus Events Committee, we took a long look at our class reunion system and decided to make some changes.

So, with Reunion 2000, we will keep what worked so well for many years while modifying timing and program schedules to keep up with the changing needs, lifestyles, and interests of our ever-expanding alumni population.

Classes from the 1920s, 1930s, 1940s, and 1950s will continue to celebrate their reunions during our traditional Reunion Weekend. For example, June 2 to 4, 2000, the classes of 1925, 1930, 1935, 1940, 1945, 1950, and 1955 will be invited to return to campus.

Now here's the twist. Classes from the 1960s, 1970s, 1980s, and 1990s will be invited to return to campus in the fall during Homecoming Weekend. For the past two years we have welcomed back our classes from the 1980s and 1990s during Homecoming Weekend and received a great response.

So to welcome a new century, we bring you this new Reunion schedule:

- Reunion Weekend, June 2 to 4, 2000:* 1925, 75th reunion; 1930, 70th reunion; 1935, 65th reunion; 1940, 60th reunion; 1945, 55th reunion; 1950, 50th reunion; and 1955, 45th reunion.

- Homecoming Weekend, fall of 2000:* 1960, 40th reunion; 1970, 30th reunion; 1975, 25th reunion; 1980, 20th reunion; and 1990, 10th reunion.

You may have noticed that we are scaling back on celebrating some anniversaries, particularly the 5th and 15th. That's because we've found that our most recent graduates stay connected with Syracuse University and each other outside a class reunion framework. So we will start class reunions with the 10th anniversary and that class will next meet at its 20th reunion.

In addition, the 35th class reunion will be discontinued, as we find the majority of our alumni prefer to return to campus for such major anniversaries as the 40th and 50th.

We also are supplementing our class reunion programs with a series of smaller, more focused special reunions. We encourage those of you who were in a student organization to consider such an event. We are pleased to work with a variety of alumni groups, including cheerleaders and Greek letter organizations, to welcome back their members for special celebrations.

As with anything new, we expect to go through a trial-and-error phase. This new approach is in response to your ideas, requests, and feedback. We ask your patience and—most important—your participation.

REUNION PAST

Alumni have been returning to campus for class reunions for almost 125 years. In fact, the first such gathering was June 22, 1875. For many years the 50th reunion class marched in Commencement.

In addition, with Reunion 2000 will come the ability to get specific class information and weekend schedules, and register online. We urge you to visit our web site, <http://www.syracuse.edu/alumni>. We hope you take advantage of this service.

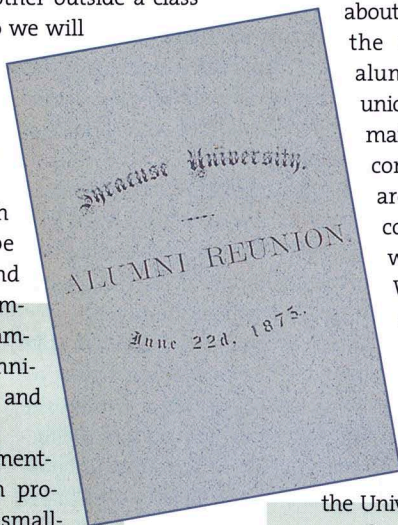

How else will we communicate about your class reunion? Every issue of Syracuse University Magazine will include announcements about dates, classes participating, and how to access more information. I suggest you refer to our pages for the latest information as a matter of routine.

Traditionally, we share news with you about your class reunion through the mail. Every year 25,000 alumni celebrate a class reunion. This means sending bulk mailings at high cost. We will continue to use the mail, but are trying to develop more cost-efficient and effective ways of communicating. We need you to actively seek out reunion information, referring to the magazine and our web site.

SU is an exciting and vibrant place; as alumni, you are a vital part of the University community. We are eager to welcome you back to campus anytime but hope you will join classmates to celebrate important anniversaries.

I welcome your thoughts and ideas about class reunions or our other alumni programs. You can always reach me at eorourke@syr.edu or 1-800-SUALUMS.

TRAVELS WITH SU

If you've only visited London and think you've "done England," guess again. SU travelers visiting the quaint villages of England's Cotswolds region last summer discovered a whole new country.

"The Cotswolds are what people have in mind when they think of 'olde' England—rolling hills, stone walls, and thatched roofs," says English professor Patricia Moody, who hosted the trip. "This is where you see the countryside and how people really live."

It was familiar ground for Moody, who taught in SU's London program and traveled in the Cotswolds many times; however, this was the first time she explored the area in depth.

The group's home base was the four-star Cheltenham Park Hotel, a classical Georgian structure in the village of Cheltenham set amid rolling parkland and beside a picturesque lake. From there the group took day trips to ancient villages like Bourton-on-the-Water and Stow-on-the-Wold and journeyed to Ross-on-Wye with its spectacular view of the Wye Valley.

"Visiting Tintern Abbey in the Wye Valley was special for me because of its literary associations," says Moody. "It was where William Wordsworth wrote his famous poem Lines Composed a Few Miles Above Tintern Abbey."

Enjoying their visit to Tintern Abbey are, from left, Margaret Ridall Davis '59, her sister Eleanor Slocum, and Paul '57 and Eileen Eberenz Bell '57.

A private tour of Blenheim Palace, Winston Churchill's ancestral home, was particularly meaningful for Eric and Janet Clarke Thresh '53 of Syracuse. "Lord Charles Spencer-Churchill was our host and couldn't have been more charming," she says. "He talked about his life there and what it meant to be Churchill's second son. He happily posed for a picture with anyone who wanted one. It was an exceptional experience."

Cyndy and Stanton "Tony" Hall '61 of Shelburne, Vermont, had a different perspective. "We went specifically to hike and climb in the Cotswolds," he says. "We were the group's star hikers, completing 20-odd miles over one afternoon and some shorter trips on other days."

Hall speaks enthusiastically about the tour guides. "It was a pleasure to ask questions and get detailed, erudite answers," he says.

Liz and William H. Steckel '48 of Syracuse agree. "The guides were extremely knowledgeable," William says. "They picked the most interesting places to go and knew everything about them."

Joining SU travelers were alumni groups from Notre Dame and UCLA. During the weeklong tour, they also explored Gloucestershire with its magnificent cathedral, Oxford, the village of Broadway, and Sudeley Castle and its lush gardens. In Chipping Camden they explored what some historians call "the most beautiful village left in England."

The trip provided a special moment for Ruth and Olney G. Smith '42 of Santa Clara, California. "Olney's ancestors come from England and we showed the guide a book about a monk named Olney who lived on an island in the middle of the Severn River," Ruth says. "Later when we crossed the river, the guide loudly proclaimed that we were passing by Olney Island."

Moody says that for her the high point of the trip was being with SU alumni. "People took care of one another."

CLUBS LEND A HAND

Alumni clubs across the country enable ASU graduates to get together to share common interests, network, and enjoy social occasions. Many also provide crucial contributions to the ongoing life of the University by giving scholarships to SU students.

The Western New York Alumni Club, for instance, established the Fred Machemer Sr. Scholarship Fund in the late 1980s in memory of a former member. "Every year we give the scholarship to a local student who has financial need," says club president Penny Handel Wilson '63. "It's an important way to connect with young people at the University who may return to live here."

The Long Island Alumni Club awards two $500 scholarships yearly. "The scholarships are given to students entering their senior year," says Barbara Cappabianca '94, president. "They go to students with the highest GPAs from Suffolk and Nassau counties."

Cappabianca says the 80-member club raises funds at monthly events throughout the year. "The largest function is our scholarship dinner in October, where we honor two outstanding Long Island alumni," she says.

Scholarship recipients learn of the awards during the summer before their senior year and usually attend the club's New Student Send-Off. "We want students to know the club exists for them once they graduate and see how alumni continue to participate in University activities," Cappabianca says. "It's wonderful to have the scholarship winners talk to entering students, who learn that SU alumni give back to our school."

The Rochester Alumni Club has the largest scholarship program in the country, according to club president Eric Leinberg '84. "We award $1,000 scholarships to 5 to 10 students entering their senior year," he says. "We obtain a list of top students from our area and interview them during Christmas break. In the spring we find out their eligibility for financial aid and make our decisions."

Sam Brundage '48 has been Rochester's scholarship chair for 32 years. "In addition to raising money through our alumni events, our members contribute generously to the scholarship fund—we raise $3,000 to $4,000

Other alumni clubs giving scholarships are the Baltimore Alumni Club and the Southern California Alumni Club. For more information on setting up awards, contact Scott Setek in the Office of Alumni Relations.

Mindy Cohen Stockfield '93

When Mindy Cohen Stockfield says she works with a bunch of characters, she means it literally. As director of online marketing for the Cartoon Network, a division of Turner/Time Warner Inc., Stockfield says she is "fortunate to work in an environment surrounded by the likes of Scooby-Doo, Pebbles and Bamm Bamm, and Tom and Jerry."

A 1993 graduate of the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications advertising program, Stockfield aims to gain maximum exposure for CartoonNetwork.com, the network's newly launched web site. She develops contests and promotions to encourage new users to visit the site and increase the frequency of return visits. "Last year, we hid Furbys—the most popular toy of the holiday season—throughout the web site, inviting people to browse the site for a chance to win one," she says. "We gave away more than 500."

To further increase traffic to the site, Stockfield is developing relationships with other Turner and Time Warner brands. "Whether we're running CartoonNetwork.com TV spots on other Turner networks, bartering ads on CNN.com, or working with Warner Bros. Consumer Products to print the URL on all branded merchandise, the goal is to increase awareness and build recognition for our brand among web users," Stockfield says.

Stockfield also develops revenue sources for CartoonNetwork.com, including securing advertising sponsorships for selected content areas on the web site. "This is a real balancing act," she says. "Finding the right sponsor to match each target audience can be a challenge."

Before joining the Cartoon Network in 1998, Stockfield worked at Disney Online in Los Angeles, managing online marketing for Disney products on the web. "I worked with some of the most brilliant people in the industry while I was there," she says. "It was a really great opportunity."

She credits Syracuse University, especially personal advice from faculty and highly relevant internships, with guiding her to success in the field of online marketing. "SU opened numerous doors for me," she says. "My decision to walk through those doors and take advantage of opportunities has given me a sense of control, strength, and fulfillment, and the confidence that I can accomplish anything I set my heart on."

sharon Stalknecht BuMann '84

after people finish admiring Sharon Stalknecht BuMann's latest sculpture, she just lets it melt.

BuMann creates the life-sized butter sculptures at the New York State Fair and other festivals around the country. She crafted this year's display, "Midnight Snacking"—which shows a child raiding the refrigerator—in 100 hours and used about 900 pounds of butter (enough for 16,000 slices of toast). It was displayed on a turntable in a refrigerated glass unit in the Dairy Building.

"My goal is to have spectators watch the turntable go around at least twice, so they notice all the details," she says. "I add subtle touches. This year there was a kitten snacking on milk that a little girl had spilled while drinking from a milk bottle, and the remains of a Thanksgiving turkey in the refrigerator. My sculpture tells a story and I put in nostalgia for older viewers and something like a pair of Nikes for younger ones."

After receiving a degree in sculpture from the College of Visual and Performing Arts, BuMann traveled across the country to study with other sculptors. She then returned home to Central Square, New York, and applied for public commissions. In 1989 she won a competition to design the Jerry Rescue Memorial in Syracuse's downtown Clinton Square. Her massive sculpture in bronze, granite, brick, and concrete commemorates the rescue of a runaway slave who had been apprehended under the Fugitive Slave Law, and led to other commissions.

In 1996 the American Dairy Association first chose her to create the fair's butter sculpture. The association holds a yearly competition among New York State residents to choose the theme BuMann must bring to life.

In addition to this seasonal task, BuMann does other commissions, restorations, and pattern work for commercial concrete companies. She works in casting resins, porcelain, terra-cotta, concrete, and cast bronze. Her works adorn hospitals, houses of worship, and office buildings across the country. "I had a call from a zoo that wants a sculpture children can sit on," she says. "The great thing about my profession is that I never know what kind of job will come my way."

martin Bandier⁶²

When Martin Bandier meets a recording artist like Rod Stewart, he doesn't say hello. He sings a little tune in the performer's ear.

In Stewart's case Bandier sang Reason to Believe, which Stewart later turned into a top hit. That meant money in Bandier's pocket as chairman and CEO of EMI Music Publishing, a little-heralded but very profitable player in the glamorous recording industry. If you want to use Star Dust as background music in your next film or TV commercial, be prepared to pay big bucks to Bandier. He and music publishers like him own song lyrics and music they either purchase from performers or acquire by buying song libraries.

Bandier, who studied political science at SU, was introduced to the business while working as a lawyer at a New York City firm. "I was one of the few associates in the firm with long hair," he recalls. "A partner asked me if I knew anything about music. He never looked at my face, only at my hair. Working on that case introduced me to the music publishing business and I knew it was the field I wanted to be in."

Eventually Bandier established what became a succession of music publishing companies and partnerships, acquiring major song collections and cultivating recording artists along the way. In 1989 his company became part of Thorn EMI, and four years later he assumed the top job.

What distinguishes Bandier in the field is his aggressive approach to marketing, a realm traditionally left to record companies. "I've always felt we were partners with the record companies," he says. "Since we both earn money from the performance of the song on radio, television, and film, I consider marketing a way of protecting the big investment we make in the artists we deal with."

Bandier, who recently became a member of the SU Board of Trustees, clearly loves his business. "It's inventive, creative, and always changing," he says "There are new sounds, new genres of music, new players. Music never stops growing."

Williams continues that tradition today as artistic director of the Boston Orchestra and Chorale, a group her husband founded and conducted until his death in 1986. The group, which performs four times a year, has 30 musicians and 18 chorale singers. "We research, perform, and preserve black classical music, the authentic a cappella singing of Negro spirituals, gospel music, blues, and jazz," Williams says. "We emphasize black classical music because the other areas take care of themselves."

Pianist Williams used to perform, but today limits herself to researching black classical music and lecturing at area colleges, universities, and public schools.

Williams says most people are not aware of the long history of black classical music. "In the 1700s an escaped slave in Philadelphia formed a classical marching band that performed throughout Europe," she says. "As far back as 1830, 33 years before the Emancipation Proclamation, there was a symphony orchestra of more than 100 free Negroes."

When Williams completed her schooling at SU, she became a home missionary for the Philadelphia Conference of the United Methodist Church. She later returned home to Dayton, Ohio, to work in a community center and then taught at Wilberforce University before journeying to the University of Vienna to research music history and literature. After coming back to the United States, she married Earl Williams, a conductor who had founded the Boston Orchestra and Chorale in 1967.

Williams, who returns to SU from Boston for Coming Back Together and other reunions, also steadfastly devotes herself to the Audrey Lee Williams Piano Studio. "I've maintained my studio, mainly in the black community, to expose as many people as possible to classical music," she says. "I teach children, teenagers, college students, and all ages of adults. I keep my prices affordable because I believe so strongly in what I do. Music belongs to everyone."

Eileen Collins '78

It's been a busy year for Air Force Col. Eileen Collins. During a September visit to Central New York, she made an appearance at the New York State Fair, stopped by the SU campus to visit with Chancellor Shaw, and swung by Hancock International Airport in North Syracuse for a renaming ceremony of the main highway leading into the airport as Colonel Eileen Collins Boulevard.

All this attention and plenty more came on the heels of Collins's historic space flight two months earlier, when she became the first woman to command a space shuttle. Before this flight, she twice served as a shuttle co-pilot.

Collins commanded the space shuttle Columbia during its July 1999 mission to deploy the $1.5 billion Chandra X-Ray Observatory, the world's most powerful X-ray telescope, into space. Chandra is now on a five-year journey to search for signs of black holes and to study galaxies and quasars.

The shuttle flight was not without incident. Launch photos revealed a hydrogen leak during liftoff that could have forced an emergency landing. Columbia reached orbit safely, however, and completed its five-day, 1.8 million mile mission without further difficulty.

Collins, who also became the first woman to land a spacecraft of any kind, described the experience as "really just a tremendous feeling."

"There is a little bit of pressure when you're the first woman who lands the orbiter," she told reporters after her night landing at Cape Canaveral, Florida. "I really enjoyed the mission. It's been absolutely super."
