Trinity's Web Archiving
Policy:

Coates Library Web Archiving Policy

Coates Library's Special Collections and Archives is responsible for identifying and preserving the historical record of the university for future scholarship. In accordance with this mission, we gather web content about university activities using Archive-It.

Coverage:

Our focus is on documenting official and affiliated Trinity University websites including university administrative units, academic departments, student organizations, and university publications and events. This includes both webpages as well as social networking sites. Most sites will be crawled on a semi-annual or annual basis.

We do not ordinarily archive faculty or student personal webpages, but please contact us if you would like us to crawl your website. Also, if you are a member of a Trinity University office or student organization that does not have "trinity.edu" in the URL of your website, please let us know by emailing archives@trinity.edu.

Preservation and Access:

Coates Library has partnered with Archive-It in order to capture and preserve our campus web presence. Information on Archive-It's storage and preservation practices can be found <https://webarchive.jira.com/wiki/display/ARIH/Archive-It+Storage+and+Preservation+Policy>.

Archived websites are available for public viewing at <https://archive-it.org/home/trinityuniversity> and will be hosted by Archive-It in perpetuity. In the future we will also be adding information on our archived websites to Archon and the library catalog.

Copyright:

It is the sole responsibility of the user to determine the copyright status of any material in the archives before publication. If reproducing content from the web archive, we strongly suggest users identify the copyright holders of that material and contact them directly. Please contact us at archives@trinity.edu if you have any questions.

Case Study: Archiving Student Organizations

“Despite the importance of such organizational records to the mission of academic archives, they present many persistent difficulties for archival management. These stem from several conditions common to their existence. Student and faculty organizations, by their very nature, operate largely outside the administrative framework of the institution... Moreover, the mechanisms an archivist might normally use to solicit institutional records and arrange for regular transfers will only be marginally effective for these groups...their membership, leadership, program scope, and even their very existence are constantly changing. The fact that many of these organizations may become defunct before the archivist first learns of their existence makes difficult not only the acquisition of their records, but also their proper description.” –William Maher, The Management of College and University Archives, p. 234-235 (1992)

Thread #4

How does she crawl
sites so they look the way they do on the live web

AND

stay within her data
budget?

Test Crawls

- Depending on how much data you have to archive, good idea to run test crawls
- These crawls tell you how much data you will archive, but do not count that data against your subscription
- We ran test crawls to see how much data we would likely crawl

Adjusting Crawl Parameters

- Great idea for social media sites
- Without it, might capture poor quality or too much web
- Archive-It provides suggested parameters for social media sites including Facebook, Youtube, Twitter, Vimeo

Thread #5

How does she integrate archived
sites into a finding aid?

Does she need to
add a link for all 170 sites?

Thirty years ago columnist Lewis Lapham made the following observation:

There no longer exists a theater of ideas in which artists or philosophers can perform the acts of the intellectual or moral imagination. In nineteenth-century England Charles Darwin could expect On The Origin of Species to be read by Charles Dickens as well as by Disraeli and the vicar in the shires who collected flies and water beetles. Dickens and Disraeli and the vicar could assume that Mr. Darwin might chance to read their own observations. But in the United States in 1979 what novelist can expect his work to be read by a biochemist, a Presidential candidate, or a director of corporations; what physicist can expect his work to be noticed, much less understood, in the New York literary salons? ("A Juggernaut of Words," Harper's Magazine, June 1979: pp. 12-13).

Conditions have hardly improved three decades later. Now in the supposed "Information Age" six out of ten American households do not purchase a single book and one-half of American adults do not read one. Forty-three years ago in 1965 when the Gallup Organization asked young people if they read a daily newspaper, 67 percent said yes; in 2006, according to the NORC General Social Survey, only 11 percent of those 18-24 answered affirmatively. And yet "they" say we are saturated with informational overload!

I am most interested in the potential of this cyberspace medium to inform and to generate discourse, to enhance information literacy, and to truly be a "theater of ideas." This site features commentary, data analyses (hey, we've become a "factoid" culture), occasional essays, as well as the requisite links, put together for courses taught by myself and my colleagues. Additions and updates are made daily. If you do give feedback on one of the message pads scattered across these pages and wish a reply, please include your e-mail address.

And now for some sites to stimulate the sociological imagination (or, at a minimum, prepare one for Sociology Jeopardy).

Adjust/Update Schedule

- Ideas:
 - Every other year have students check our list for new sites
 - Prioritize organizations with no known site for re-checking
 - I'll also add sites as they become known through campus listservs and word of mouth

Additional Digital Collections at Trinity University

Historic Images Archive

The historic images in the collection range in date throughout the University's first 100 years and are divided into 4 subject categories (based on the University's geographic location): the Tehuacana Images (1869-1902), the Waxahachie Images (1902-1942), the Woodlawn: San Antonio Images (1910-1952), and the Skyline Campus: San Antonio Images (mid 1950s-present).

Theatre Arts Images Archive

Trinity's outstanding Drama Program has continued to preserve and collect Images of theatrical productions from the last 50 years of its history.

Digital Trinitonian

The digitized version of the campus newspaper. Available dates include some issues from 1919-1943 and 1959-present.

Digital Mirage

The digitized version of the yearbook of Trinity University. Available years include 1912-1916, 1919-1942, 1944-1976, 1980 to present.

Digital Commons @ Trinity

The Digital Commons is a growing collection of scholarly and other materials produced by Trinity University faculty, students, and staff. Trinity's faculty passed an open access policy taking effect in 2010; consequently, many of their journal articles and other publications will be added to the Digital Commons and be freely available to researchers and educators throughout the world.

Web Archiving @ Trinity

We are in the process of archiving Trinity's web presence including administrative units, academic departments, student organizations, and university publications and events. We will crawl most sites on an annual or semi-annual basis in order to capture Trinity's web presence for future scholarship. More information about our web archiving policy can be found under the Policies and Procedures tab.

Future Outreach Ideas

- Reach out to campus through University Librarian to
 - Advertise service
 - Solicit potential sites for crawling
 - Suggest potential uses to users
 - Classes
 - Historical Info for Clubs
 - Solicit suggestions for further outreach
- Reach out through our Special Collections blog and newsletter
- Create and share video tutorial on searching our archived sites
