Spoofy Spooks Haunt Hallowed Halls as Hallowe'en Nears

Why blame Mr. Schultz when Nov. 1 sees your 12' by 12' plate glass window thoroughly soaped and your over-loaded garbage can leaning against the only door onto the wall to wall carpet? All he did was to bring to life Pumpkin the Great. The real meaning of All Hallows' Eve dates back much farther than candy-begging brats and teen-age destruction.

Halloween means hallowed or holy evening and precedes all Saints' Day on Nov. 1. This is a religious holiday and Catholic churches hold special masses. This particular day is set aside for all saints not lucky enough to have their very own day! Chrysostom, a father of the Greek Church who died in 407, refers to an Antiochan custom of commemorating martyrs on the Sunday following Pentecost. The precise date of Nov. 1 is supposed to have been fixed by Gregory III, who was Pope from 731 to 741, in dedicating an oratory in St. Peter's to All Saints.

Such Christian holy days as All Hallows' Eve, Easter, and Christmas have pagan backgrounds and this is what encourages the traditional noise making on Oct. 31. It is associated in the popular imagination with the supernatural influences, and is clearly a relic of pagan times.

In the north of England, Halloween is known as Nutcrack Night. In Scotland such ceremonies were regarded as highly superstitious. Popular belief had children born on Halloween the ability of perceiving and holding conversation with supernatural beings.

In the Old Celtic calendar the year began on Nov. 1, so that the last evening of October was 'old-year's night', the night of all the witches, which the Church transformed into the Eve of All Saints.

In the middle of the 19th Century it was believed that All Hallows' Eve was the night set apart for a universal walking abroad of spirits. In 1883 Harper's Magazine printed "Halloween is the carnival time of disembodied spirits."

The word hallow means to incite with shouts and treat with reverence or awe. From this, the noisy tradition of visiting with the intent to excite as combined with thoughts for the saints can be understood easily.

Here at UPS the Halloween spirit prevails in dorms, as plain room 204 becomes a gaily decorated door with colored pumpkins, witches and ghosts; meanwhile pumpkins are carved and the Halloween spirit is the theme for many a function. Many collegiates have not outgrown the spirit of trick or treat, so UPS'ers are encouraged to stock up on goodies before the supply runs out!

Campaign Idea Now Materializes

The Public Affairs Forum Committee, a newly organized co-curricular activity on campus, is the fulfillment of a suggestion first proposed by Bill Ramseyer in his campaign speech as ASB Presidential candidate last spring. The committee, chaired by Tom Spring is planning a three-day forum to be held on April 13-15. "Election 1964: An Analysis of What Happened" has been chosen for the topic of this forum.

Several prominent speakers have been proposed, with hopes that they will provide a scholarly rather than political view on the election. These prospective speakers, being not directly involved with the election's political activity, will have the actual facts on it without all of the usual "ax-grinding."

With hopes of making the Public Affairs Forum an annual affair, the committee is increasing its membership to 10 or 11 students. The schedule for the forum has not been decided yet, but it will include a major address by one of the guest speakers, individual group discussions, and a panel discussion on the featured topic by all the guest speakers.

This program is being partially financed through an allocation from the ASB treasury and President R. Franklin Thompson's special fund for unscheduled guest speakers. The forum will be open to all students of UPS and other colleges, but will not be open to the public, according to present plans.

Committee member John Pierce remarked that the organization of the Public Affairs Forum "shows a very mature step forward on the part of the UPS student government." Chairman Spring added, "This displays a step toward increased activity in the academic field by the student government, while it has previously supported mostly social activities."

MUN To Choose Members Today

UPS's Model United Nations group will be adding new members to its delegation this week, according to Dr. Earl Krushke, group advisor. A preliminary current events test will be given today at noon in room 203 in Jones, with interviews scheduled for next Monday.

This spring the UPS delegation will represent the country El Salvador at the regional session of MUN. The session will be held at Claremont College, Claremont, California and will draw delegates from most of the Western states.

William E. Miller Speaks Today in UPS Auditorium

Representative William Miller, Republican candidate for the vice-presidency is scheduled to make a whistle stop speech on the UPS campus today. Miller will speak at 11:45 a.m. in Jones Hall auditorium.

The vice-presidential hopeful arrived at Tacoma Industrial Airport at 11:00 a.m. Following his brief stopover on the UPS campus, he will attend a $25 a plate Republican luncheon at the Towers restaurant in Tacoma.

In the last weeks of the campaign, Goldwater and Miller are emphasizing the need for more morality in Washington, referring to the Bobby Baker and the Walter Jenkins cases. They are stressing the idea that national security is being threatened.

Latest election polls show Johnson leading Goldwater 60 percent to 34 percent with 6 percent of the sampling undecided.

(For an analysis of the issues and the candidates, see Dr. Earl Krushke's article on page 5.

Six Internships To Be Awarded

During the coming year six $200 internships will be made available in all major areas of study to UPS students interested in college teaching. The teaching assistantships will be granted on the basis of proven achievement, not need.

The program is partially underwritten by the Ford Foundation program, "Cooperative Program of Education for College University Teaching" which is being administered in the Pacific Northwest by the University of Washington. UPS is one of the 13 cooperating schools in this program.

The participants will be assigned to one, or possibly more than one, staff member in the respective major areas and work closely with the faculty member or members in basically non-routine duties. The purpose is to provide for the student an introduction to the day to day responsibilities and duties of a college teacher in class preparation, class presentations, research or writing, or any activity associated with the teaching responsibilities.

Another part of this program will involve a conference at the U of W on Nov. 12-13 on college teaching. Ten students and two faculty members from each of the cooperating schools will be attending with all expenses paid.

Junior and senior students interested in college teaching as a career who are interested in obtaining an internship or attending the conference should contact Professor Robert Sprenger in the chemistry department.

GOP vice presidential nominee William Miller will speak in Jones Hall at 11:45 a.m. today.

'Bald Soprano' To Be Presented

The Campus Playcrafters will present Eugene Ionesco's play, The Bald Soprano, and Tennessee Williams' play, "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," on Friday, Nov. 6 and Saturday, Nov. 7 at 8 p.m. in the lounge of the Student Union Building.

The Bald Soprano is set in a middle-class English home where words, time and logic become meaningless. Twenty-seven Wagons Full of Cotton is a striking story of a naive Southern girl who becomes involved with a vital young stranger, although married to a man twice her age. Both plays will be presented in arena theatre style.

The actors, under the direction of Dr. Wilbur Baisinger and Martha Pearl Jones, are in the advanced acting class. Admission is complimentary.

Mock Ballot Run Today

A mock election is being run today by Student Christian Council for all UPS students. Balloting will be conducted up to 8 p.m. tonight at the west entrance of the Student Center.

The sample or preview ballot will include both the national Republican and Democratic tickets. Washington residents may also indicate their choices in the state gubernatorial and senate races.

The Trail urges all students to vote in the mock election today. All eligible students are also urged to vote in the Tuesday's election.

Editorial Comment:

Greeks Sustain 'Social Image'

NOTE: This is the first in a series of editorials concerning the Greek system on the UPS campus. These editorials will attempt to make the student, both greek and independent, aware of some of the situations which arise on a campus where the greek system exists; and hopefully they will suggest solutions that could strengthen communications and understanding between the various segments of the University.

As most students are aware, the greek system as it exists on the UPS campus is constantly being criticized, and unfortunately, a good portion of this criticism is justifiable or at least understandable. Non-greeks judge the greek system on the basis of the image that the greeks create and on the UPS campus this image is almost completely social.

Sororities and fraternities are viewed as being only social in nature, and completely devoid of any cultural or intellectual activity. This "social image" is sustained because the only activities non-greeks hear about are the "functions"—i.e., coffee hours, exchanges, and dances of the "good time was had by all" nature. Meetings are pictured as being (and unfortunately sometimes are) of no more value than to plan the next social function and re-hash inter-sorority problems.

True, some groups are taking steps to combat this "social image" by inviting lecturers and professors to speak to their groups, but this side of sorority and fraternity life is never publicized. Thus, the image remains.

One way to combat this problem of "social image," (that is, if the greeks wish to combat it), would be to invite other groups and individuals to hear the speakers. Hopefully, those invited would be both greek and independent. Advance articles on the speakers could be written for the TRAIL and run as news stories rather than simply social tidbits.

articles on the Speakers could be written for the TRAIL and The TRAIL unfortunately must take partial blame for the somewhat distorted image of the UPS greek. The Greek and Social column which ran all last year and this fall only reinforced this image which should have and, we believe, must be put into its proper perspective.

Next week we will discuss the participation by greeks and independents in social and cultural all-school activities.

Birch Society:

Birchers Display Characteristics Typical of Ultra-Conservative Groups

NOTE: The TRAIL feels that UPS students should be informed about major trends in America; thus, the second in a series of articles about one of the most widely known of the conservative groups—The John Birch Society.

The following are five characteristics of the Birch society as illustrated in Bell's book, The Radical Right:

(1) Its image of world events and American politics is wholly conspiratorial.

Each year since 1958, Welch and his "board of experts" have published a "score board" rating all the nations of the world according to the "present degree of Communist influence and control over the economic and political affairs" of the country. In 1958, the United States was rated as 30-40 per cent under Communist control; in 1959, the United States went up to 30-60 per cent; and in 1960, the figure climber to 40-60 per cent. (At that pace we will reach the 80-100 per cent mark in 1964.)

It is worth noting that Eisenhower and his administration draw the strongest venom in Welch's book, The politician. For Welch, the Eisenhower administration was a betrayal that could only have had Communists at its source. Welch states unequivocally: "There is only one possible word to describe (Eisenhower's) purpose and actions. That word is treason."

(2) The Birchers impugn the integrity and patriotism of those at the head of the major social and economic groups of the nation.

Welch has stated that the National Council of Churches of Christ is Communist-minded and he further declares that the American Medical Association has been "took" and can no longer be depended upon for support in the fight against Socialism; so too with the United States Chamber of Commerce. The leadership of our universities, corporations, foundations, communications media—all are riddled with Communists, or "Comsymps" (a word Welch coined to avoid having to say whether a given person was a real party member or only a sympathizer).

(3) The Birchers are convinced that the Communists have gone so far in penetrating American politics that there is little hope in the existing political system.

Welch has warned his followers that even Goldwater—the most "Americanist" figure around in politics at the moment—is "still a politician" and therefore not to be relied upon. According to Welch, the nation received "the exact Communist line . . . from Jack Kennedy's speeches, as quickly and faithfully as from the "Worker" or the "National Guardian" . . ."

(4) Most of the Birch Society's positive program consists of advocating the repeal of things or the removal of the nation from something or somewhere.

A partial list of the things that the Society describes as wicked, Communist, and dangerous includes: U.S. membership in the United Nations, the International Labor Organization, the World Health Organization, the International Trade Organization, UNICEF (The United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund); membership in GATT (the General Agreement on Trades and Tariffs); reciprocal trade agreements; the "useless and costly" NATO; "so-called defense spending"; all foreign aid; diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union and all other Communist nations; the National Labor Relations Act; social security; the graduated income tax; the Rural Electrification Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the T.V.A.; government wage and price controls; "forced integration"; "deliberately fraudulent" U.S. government bonds; the Federal Reserve System; urban renewal; fluoridation; metro government; the corporate-dividend tax; the "mental-health racket"; federal aid to housing; and all programs "regimenting" farmers.

(5) The Birch Society advocates both "direct action" and "dirty tactics" to "break the grip of the Communist conspiracy."

The local programs include infiltration of community organizations such as the P.T.A. ("to take them away from the Communists"); harassment of "pro-Communist" speakers at church meetings, political gatherings, and public forums; letters and telephone calls to local public officials, leading citizens, and newspapers who support what the Society opposes or oppose the Society directly; monthly telephone calls to the local public library to make sure it has copies of the five right-wing books recommended by Welch every month.

Next week the future of the Society will be discussed.

Editor's Note: The editors of the TRAIL are willing to print any guest editorials which they consider to have merit. The views in these guest editorials, however, do not necessarily state the views of the TRAIL and its staff.

Letters From Mississippi

Our "Project Leader" Charles McLaurin was beaten on the 11th of June in Columbus Miss. Not only was he beaten but four others along with him for failing to respond to the term "nigger" when asked by the "Mississippi State Patrol" whether they were "niggers" or Nigras."

Two were beaten for over ten minutes. All were scheduled to be sentenced to the county farm for terms up to 20 years . . . no offense had ever been committed. When a call came to the judge collect, he refused to pay it and asked them if they knew who was calling. In unison all five said it was their attorney, even though none had ever heard the name before. This caused some concern for the judge and police, who thought no one knew the five were even picked up; and so they huddled in the proverbial "back-room" and finally let four go and fined the other $28. Just one incident of the "justice" in Mississippi. Verifax the letter if you want to and have Mr. Gross give his class a short lesson in "writing your congressman and senator." After that, have them send money, food, and supplies of any sort . . . We have no money for the project but believe it or not, good is being done and the cause is just . . . just about the only cause in America at the present time.

Dennis Flannigan

I'm staying with a Mrs. McCledon . . . can't understand the people down here too well so her name could be something else — she is a nice lady. If anyone up there could just meet the people, their wages are $3 per day . . . they keep $2.50 . . . and all those who have us in their homes tread the line between poverty, loss of a job, and physical violence; still no effort is spared, their homes are our homes, their food is our food, and we can do so little to repay.

A meeting is going on right now, the weekly Friday night mass meeting. This one gathers all those from the county in a singing handclapping session . . . you know that "old time religion" stirs even callous old me, no one will ever tell me that the people down here aren't strengthened by God. I'm back behind the meeting house manning the telephone . . . New York Times is expected in tomorrow for a large two page story (we are the absolute center of press activity . . . still don't know why) . . . and can just hear the singing and still I'm moved.

Well more than enough I doth imagine, see you soon . . . err . . . later.

NEWS AND VIEWS

By Dennis Hale

Loggerburgers, Time Magazine and de Gaulle

"The sharp rythm of shoes striking concrete filtered through the milieu of protoplasmic fog. The brick background transformed the apparition into a "9" man, outlining the snap-brimmed, slim-banded sere hat and olive-grey rain coat. Near the entrance he stopped for a full two seconds before depressing the tarnished copper handle of the tudor-gothic door, which had been restrained seven weeks earlier in the waning weeks of summer. Inside the building he filed past the 47 stalls, beneath the 31 glowing lights to the fountain. As the wall clock clicked to 11:17 a.m. he uttered, "one Loggerburger, please."

Thus might begin a Time news story recreating the first purchase of a Loggerburger by Dr. Shelmidine last Thursday morning. Before mentioning the all-significant fact of the Loggerburger purchase, Time would drag the reader through two paragraphs of trivia, quaint facts and narrative description. After finally mentioning the central facts the magazine would evaluate and summarize to their own liking. A week-old newspaper item has been enlivened but not enriched. The multiple reasons for the Loggerburger purchase and repercussions from it remain untold as they were in the earlier newspaper release.

"There are 00 Trees in Russia: The Function of Facts in News-magazines." by Otto Friedrich in Harper's Magazine of October, describes this sort of news coverage. Friedrich explains that newspapers recognize the elusiveness of political facts, placing the critical items first followed by minor details. This is not true of the newsmagazines—Time, Newsweek and U.S. News & World Report—which have "developed a fetish about absolute accuracy on the most inconsequential facts."

The newsmagazine dramatizes the news to make it entertaining and logical. Stories read like Steinbeck short stories, beginning calmly, building to a climax and smoothing out in the end. The magazines attempt to add perspective and depth to reporting, an impossible task when dealing with fresh, week-old events.

What are the purposes of this superficial reporting? By saturating their stories with dozens of lesser facts, a knowledge of greater facts is implied. If Time knows how many prunes de Gaulle eats on Halloween, it must also know why de Gaulle opposed Britain's entry into the Common Market. Another reason for this "inundation of a minutiae" is to make Time appear omniscient—geographically, economically and politically. They are always waiting on the spot. But these minor facts have been discovered by researchers in the New York office, called "checkers," not by reporters. Lastly, newsmagazines may slant the news to their liking by discriminately inserting minor facts. When Time mentions that Henry Cabot Lodge carries a "Snub-nosed .38-cal. Smith & Wesson revolver" in his shoulder holster while on the job in Saigon it is not just to emphasize that Time knows everything worth knowing about the ambassador. They are saying that he is "tough and aggressive" and would make a good Republican candidate.

C. B. LOWDOWN

By John Pierce

As a quick glance at Central Board will show, if they are ever glanced at, again little decisive action was taken. Perhaps the most important thing discussed was why nothing of importance is ever discussed.

Indeed, it is very important to find some real reason for Central Board to exist. It now continues only through custom and has no functions that are uniquely its own. If student government does not find some means to involve more students, it will not exist for more than ten years.

The Annual Leadership Conference was held at Alderbrook Inn this last weekend. If the long-contemplated idea that comfort and pleasure produce a thinking man is true, a host of thoughts should have been generated at Alderbrook. Some of these, especially concerning foreign students at UPS, will hopefully soon take form on campus.

A few notes: Of 24 committees or departments on the Central Board agenda, half had no report; there was no "new business" at Central Board; Never-Never Land was found at Alderbrook; and, real education is using "choice" not chance.

Math Dept. Plans Course Changes

This fall a subtle change has taken place in the mathematics department. Math 112, Analytic Geometry and Calculus was dropped from the curriculum; and Math 121, Mathematical Analysis was added. This is only a minor part of a major change in the mathematics field.

The change began to influence UPS four years ago when a course named Basic Concepts of Mathematics was added. This course acknowledged the "new mathematics." The "new mathematics" puts emphasis on "the logic of mathematics rather than the manipulation of mathematics," explains Edward Goman, chairman of the mathematics department.

The three semester course of calculus is being replaced by four semesters of mathematical analysis, the study of calculus, differential and linear equations, and vector analysis. Math minors will be required to take the four rather than three semester course. At the end of this year the remaining calculus courses and the pre-engineering courses will be deleted. Plans for the future call for a course in complex variables to replace the existing courses in differential equations, vector analysis, and advanced mathematical theory.

Press Conclave Draws Editors

The highlight of the Northwest Collegiate Press Conference, held at the University of Washington last weekend was the formulating of the Pacific Student Press. This will be a press service between Northwestern colleges and universities.

Discussion at the two-day conclave centered on policy and project issues pertaining to journalists. Deb Das, Daily staff member, was featured speaker at the Saturday luncheon. He spoke on the international student movement, giving the history behind it and relating its importance to young American journalists.

Charter members of the Pacific Student Press are: Skagit Valley College, Pacific Lutheran University, University of British Columbia, Seattle Pacific College, Highline College, Western Washington State College, University of Puget Sound, Seattle University and the University of Washington.

Trail staff members who attended were: Cheryl Hulk, editor; Rich Mulkey, associate editor; Georgia Buell, news editor.

All you can get on TV now is a lot of politicians talking themselves red, white and blue in the face.

Lindley Travels to Baghdad To Assume New Duties

The distinction of being the first Fulbright lecturer in journalism at Baghdad goes to a UPS professor William F. Lindley. Lindley was appointed to this position by the State Department and is on leave of absence from his duties for this academic year. Before his appointment, Lindley was assistant professor in journalism and directed public information here.

Lindley was accompanied by his wife and four children to Iraq where he will teach university students newswriting, conduct and advanced class for working newspapermen of the city, and conduct a seminar for government public relations officers. He will be working under officials of the College of Arts and Letters, who agreed with his appointment.

Lindley graduated from the University of Oregon, receiving his Bachelor's and Master's degrees in journalism there. Besides his position at UPS, Lindley has worked on the staffs of the Eugene Register Guard, the Salt Lake Tribune, the Spokane Spokesman-Review, the Yakima Herald and Republic, and for the Associated Press in Portland and Olympia.

Opera Co. Selects UPS Grad

Roald Reitan, a 1952 graduate of UPS, is now with the West Berlin Opera Company.

Reitan, a Tacoma boy all his life, is an alum of Franklin school and Stadium high school. He studied with Ivan Rasmussen at UPS and received his B.A. degree in 1952. He then went on to study with Sam Margolis in New York. He received his M.A. degree in painting and sculpturing at Columbia University.

Ronald Reitan, 1952 UPS grad, has been honored as a recent addition to the West Berlin Opera Company.

Between 1952 and 1958, Reitan worked for his education degree, because he felt that opera did not "hold enough promise" for him. However, in 1957, he made his debut with Boston's Arthur Fielder and the San Francisco Symphony. He was the featured baritone and sang in "Andrea Chenier," "Masked Ball," and "Pagliacci." In 1958 he made a successful tour of Europe.

While working for his education degree in 1958-59 and studying music with Ivan Rasmussen, Reitan decided to audition for the New York Metropolitan Opera Company, "just for the fun of it."

On January 11, 1959, Reitan was judged a top performer in the regional opera auditions at the University of Washington. He won the F. K. Weyerhaeuser $300 top prize and a chance to travel to New York for the finals.

In the fall of 1959, Reitan won a contract for one year with the New York Metropolitan Opera Company with an option for two more years. Reitan was the object of 2,000 singers in the United States and Canada and one of the 15 finalists. He made his debut with the Met as a gypsy in "Il Trovatore," in 1960.

Reitan took a break from the Met in 1961 to take the leading baritone position in the "Break of Day," a television opera presented on Easter Sunday, 1961. He sang the role of Malchos, a Roman soldier, stationed in Jerusalem at the time of the crucifixion.

In 1961, he began his second season with the Met with roles in the following operas: "La Boheme," "Madame Butterfly," "Carman," "Alceste," "Reguleto," "Des Rheingold," "Lorengrin," and "Arabella."

After finishing his third season with the Met in 1962, Reitan came west and sang with the Western Opera Company. He sang the role of Figaro in "The Barber of Seville" in 1963. As he received a three-year contract with the West Berlin Opera Company, Reitan left the United States in July, 1964, to keep this contract.

The West Berlin Opera Company presents 60 operas in a 10-month season, most of which are sung in German. Reitan will sing UPS students now have the opportunity to help the slow, the average and the gifted students in the Tacoma Public Schools by participating in the Undergraduate Tutoring Program, according to Nancy Cannella, chairman of the project.

Mr. Alexander Sergienko, administrative assistant and coordinator of the Tacoma Public Schools, will discuss the aims and requirement of this program at a meeting to be held this Tuesday at noon in room 1 of Jones. Students interested in the program should plan to attend this meeting, according to Miss Cannella. She also stressed the fact that the program is not limited to educational majors.

For more information about the Undergraduate Tutoring Program, see the education bulletin board in the basement of Jones.

Proctor Theater

Ed Note: Each Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday the Proctor Theatre, located on 2611 North Proctor, features a film from their "Distinguished Film" collection. Most of these films cannot be seen in a regular theater, but are made available to UPS students for only 75 cents. Show time is 8 p.m. In the following paragraphs we present a brief synopsis of each of the films to be shown at the Proctor Theatre in the next two weeks.

On Nov. 23-4 the Swedish film, "The Doll" will be featured. The movie is a study of the degeneration of a man's mind. A lonely man, without anyone to love, sees himself falling in love with a store-window mannequin. His mind endows her with the loveliness of a real woman. His lonely room becomes a citadel of love, but his dream becomes a nightmare as he clings to the edge of sanity. This drama is shown in its uncut version.

On Nov. 9-10-11 two films, an American film "Hallelujah the Hills" and a French film "Zazi", will be featured.

"Hallelujah the Hill" is an unusual comedy about two young men who are rejected by the object of their adoration. They organize the first surrealistic camping trip in world history, and before they are finished, sober old Vermont turns into a landscape by Salvador Dali.

"Zazi" is the story of an 11 year old girl who comes to Paris with her mother, who is in Paris to meet her lover. The girl literally turns Paris upside down.

in "Sosi Fan Tutte," "Ariadne Auf Naxos," "Frau Ohne Schatten," "Palestring," "Don Carlos," and "Fidelio."

Blue-eyed, blond Reitan, who loves to garden and to do chores around the house as well as sing, will make his home in Germany for the next three years with his wife, Beverly, and their two sons, Hunter Brandt, and Roald Amundsen.

A local drive-in showed one of the worst movies ever made, and the customers loved every minute of it.

Guest Editorialist Comments On UPS Fraternity System

By Layne Alexander

UPS has a unique greek system because of the relatively high percentage of students who are greek. Accompanying this system are unique problems. I define a greek system as a group of associations characterized by benevolent interaction and high ideals. This discussion of greeks and their ideals will be limited to the eight fraternities at UPS, for I feel that the sororities have different problems and goals.

One situation that arises under the UPS greek system is that the rushee in formal rush faces the question of "Which bid should I accept?" more often than "What will I do if I don't receive a bid?" A major factor determining which bid to accept is the campus prestige of the respective houses. The prestige of a fraternity on campus puts the fraternities on a highly competitive basis.

At UPS this rivalry is very keen, even to the point of greeks voting for an independent candidate in school elections rather than have a member of a rival house win the office. Little thought is given to who is the best candidate for the University as a whole, but which candidate is best for the house prestige is strongly considered.

Another circumstance which I consider a direct result of the intense fraternity rivalry is the low state of school spirit. The fraternities are more concerned with how impressive their members are than how impressive is the University. In short, the greeks at UPS tend to place the individual fraternity above the University and the greek system as a whole. The greeks have lost sight of their high ideals.

The National Interfraternity Conference states as the first two points in the Fraternity Criteria:

1. The objectives and activities of the fraternity should be in entire accord with the aims and purposes of the institution at which it has chapters;
- II. The primary loyalty and responsibility of a student in his relations with his institution are to the institution . . .

Perhaps the fraternities on this campus are not truly part of a greek system. Prestige over purpose is the UPS greek way. I feel that our eight fraternities are only highly competitive individual organizations with little in common except the greek alphabet.

Prof. Added to Soc. Dept.

By Rich Mulkey

A new addition to the sociology department has been made this year in the person of Ronald Parton. Parton came to the UPS campus a few weeks before registration and has since undertaken to imbue the avid masses of sociology students with great enlightenment by teaching four classes. He teaches Introduction to Anthropology, Historical Sociology, Contemporary Sociological Theory and Population and Sociology.

Parton is very well traveled, having been born in Colorado but raised in New Plymouth, Idaho. He attended a junior college in Iowa and received his bachelor's degree from Idaho State University. He continued his graduate work at the University of Idaho where he received his master's degree in sociology.

Before arriving on the UPS campus Parton taught Introductory Sociology at the University of Missouri, where he also did some of his graduate work. Parton jokingly stated that he has been a graduate student for ten years.

The new professor said he is on the UPS campus because of a desire to come to the west coast and to a small college. Parton is now making his home with his wife in Lakewood. He has no children and asked what he does in his spare time, he replied, "What spare time?" Asked his opinions of UPS, Parton stated, "I find the small class atmosphere advantageous where the small class atmosphere exists."

Newest member of the Sociology Department is Ronald Parton from the University of Missouri.

Campaign 1964—Some Observations

By Dr. Earl R. Krushke
Dept. of Political Science

It was the late Dr. Albert Einstein who once asserted that it is more difficult to understand politics than it is to understand physics. Notwithstanding the scientific advances which have been made in recent years in the analysis of human behavior, Professor Einstein's statement remains a basically accurate description of political reality. And, it might be added, his statement appears particularly relevant when one attempts to analyze the current presidential campaign.

And yet, it is not impossible to sketch the broad outlines of this campaign. We can approach the subject from several perspectives.

Let us look first at the major personalities involved. President Lyndon B. Johnson is recognized as one of the most consummate politicians ever to occupy the White House. Indeed, the mere fact that he now resides at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue gives him a distinct advantage over his opponent. For

Mr. Johnson has been both "on the job" as head of state and government, and on the political hustings, as well. In his favor are the enormous majesty and distinction of the office of President, and the concomitant immense power to influence large groups of voters because the president is "always" in the public eye — which means that, in a sense, he is "always" campaigning as well. In addition to these factors which work in his favor, Mr. Johnson also has an enviable record of performance with the Congress. During his brief tenure as President, Mr. Johnson has managed to get Congress to approve a $10 billion tax cut; the most advanced civil rights law in a century; an anti-poverty bill; an extension of the food stamp program; cotton-wheat price supports; a federal pay raise; aid for transit systems in our urban centers; an extension of housing aid; quotas on meat imports; an interests equalization tax; and a wilderness preservation bill. In addition, Mr. Johnson has been instrumental in motivating the Senate to pass a medicare bill; to pass an aid program for the Appalachian area; to grant area redevelopment funds; and to pass a presidential disability law. This is a record of accomplishment which any President could present to the people of the country with considerable pride.

There are several other factors which are working to the advantage of Mr. Johnson. The economy of the nation is an all-time high. There is no major war. The people are, in a manner of speaking, fat. He has a four to three voter registration advantage around the country. He knows, moreover, that "get out the vote" campaigns tend to favor Democrats — because those persons who do not generally vote come from the groups which are underprivileged socially and economically, and who, when sufficiently motivated, tend to support Democratic candidates. He has the image of being a "safe" candidate as opposed to the "dangerous" image which his opponent allegedly projects. His campaign themes have been "peace, prosperity, and progress" coupled with efforts to build the "great society." His view of the future is essentially optimistic as opposed to the essentially pessimistic view of his opponent. Mr. Johnson, finally, has tended to de-emphasize party in an attempt to attract the broadest cross-section of voters. He has stated, for example, that "... the needs of all cannot be met by a business party, or a labor party; not by a war party or a peace party; not by a Southern party or a Northern party."

Mr. Johnson also has the ability to drive home a campaign theme identifying his position. Indeed, it has been said that he has an "instinct" for self-dramatization. He possesses great knowledge of political infighting and is an expert at developing a whirlwind finish. He has received the endorsement of the CIO-AFL, and an almost unprecedented number of businessmen (among them several members of the Eisenhower cabinet and such an illustrious figure as Henry Ford II) have lent him the support of their names—and very likely their wealth. In addition Mr. Johnson has an equally unprecedented number of newspaper endorsements for a Democrat. It is a well-known fact that, editorially, newspapers have, by a huge majority, tended to support Republican presidential candidates. The following figures attest graphically to that fact.

PER CENT OF NEWSPAPER SUPPORT FOR PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES, 1932 to 1960*

Year	Republican	Democratic
1932	55.5%	38.7%
1936	60.4	34.5
1940	66.3	20.1
1944	60.1	22.0
1948	65.2	15.4
1952	67.3	14.5
1956	59.0	17.0
1960	54.0	15.0

*Figures do not equal 100% because some newspapers remained independent or did not reply.

In the present campaign year, however, we find a significant shift in newspaper endorsements. Editor and Publisher, the trade journal of the newspaper profession, has indicated that President Johnson, as of Oct. 23rd, had the support of 398 of the nation's daily newspapers, as compared to 335 for the Republican nominee. Those newspapers supporting the President have a combined circulation of 26,188,555; those for his opponent a combined circulation of 7,592,617. In addition, it should be noted that 360 newspapers with a circulation of some 12,000,000 remained undecided or independent. The findings reported were based on ballots sent by Editor and Publisher to 1,754 daily newspapers.

Finally, in this assessment of Mr. Johnson's advantages, the name of his running mate, Senator Hubert Humphrey, also looms large.

Mr. Humphrey is attractive, well-known, and highly articulate. Mr. Johnson is using Senator Humphrey's vigorous style to bring the Democratic message to the people. On balance, it must be stated that Mr. Humphrey's presence on the Democratic ticket substantially aids, and only slightly hinders, Democratic prospects on Nov. 3rd.

There are, of course, several liabilities with which Mr. Johnson must cope. He is, first of all, responsible constitutionally for the policies of the government, particularly in foreign affairs. The people may correctly hold him responsible for the direction in which the nation is moving (whether he technically is responsible or not). Mr. Johnson labors under the shadow of suspicion regarding the manner in which he won his initial senatorial campaign in Texas; there appears to be some question in the minds of many concerning the manner in which he acquired his personal wealth and over the operations of the Johnson television interests in Texas. He suffers to some extent from a "wheeler-dealer" image, and from his associations with men like Robert Baker and Walter Jenkins. Moreover, it is still too early to comment upon the possible impact of recent events in the world — the removal of Mr. Khrushchev in the Soviet Union, the detonation of a first nuclear device by Communist China, and the transition from Conservative to Labour Government in the United Kingdom—on the Johnson campaign.

In total, however, Mr. Johnson appears to have most of the support required in this campaign for a substantial victory in November. He should do well in the East, there is evidence that he has succeeded in keeping the so-called southern revolt at least within bounds, and that he is picking up considerable support in the Midwest and in the West from laborers, farmers, and moderates—Democrats, Republicans, and "Independents" alike.

Mr. Goldwater, on the other hand, is pursuing a campaign with a much different character. His campaign themes involve foreign policy (a generalized assertion that the United States has been conducting its foreign relations incorrectly over much of the world); the "civil rights" issue (which he tends to identify with mobs in the streets and an inability on the part of some to recognize their proper station in society); social legislation in general (which, he states from time to time, is basically wrong because from his perspective people tend to remain impoverished or unsuccessful because they do not have the will power to become economically independent and/or successful); problems of morality in government (which, he implies, is a particularly "Democratic" problem); "softness on communism" (an issue which seems to be a hold-over from a decade ago); unilateral disarmament (a term seldom defined very specifically); "appeasement" (a generalized assertion that the West, and the United States in particular, are losing the cold war due to our willingness to compromise in the face of Soviet and Chinese Communist intransigence); and our ebbing military strength (although he himself has advocated the elimination of the military draft). His campaign, in other words, tends to challenge the basic consensus of American society, the points over which there has been substantial agreement among Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives alike for at least 25 years. Mr. Goldwater also suffers from the image that he is impetuous — that he would, for example, drop the bomb at the slightest provocation. While this image is no doubt grossly distorted, his efforts to remove it do not seem to have been very successful. His party is seriously split, and during an election year this can be an enormously devastating problem.

Mr. Goldwater has still other problems: his refusal to denounce the so-called "extremist" groups which have become so vociferous in recent years; the fact that he has made several contradictory statements on such topics as the United Nations, social security, TVA, and nuclear weapons control; and the fact that he can at this juncture make only promises about what he might do if he were president, and cannot perform to prove his abilities.

Mr. Goldwater's personal attacks on the President do not seem to have had the intended impact, and he does not appear to be capturing the anti-civil rights Democrats. The so-called white "backlash" may have been substantially curtailed by what President Johnson has termed a "frontlash" — a term which, like its opposite, virtually defies definition. Racial angers appear to have slackened considerably. And, in those very states which Mr. Goldwater has indicated he must win if he is to be the next president—California, Ohio, Illinois, and Texas — evidence points toward a decline of support for his candidacy. All would very likely be carried by Mr. Johnson if the election were held now.

Mr. Goldwater's choice for his vice-presidential running mate — William E. Miller from New York — must also be considered in this assessment.

Congressman Miller is not very well known outside his home state, he is a less colorful man than Mr. Humphrey, and evidence indicates that the people find him less attractive than Mr. Humphrey as a candidate. Mr. Miller is an articulate speaker and a politician of great ability. He comes from a strategic state. He is widely respected by his colleagues. But it is difficult to assess whether his presence on the Republican ticket enhances or detracts from the possibility of a Republican victory on Nov. 3rd.

The Republicans do have several assets working in their favor. First, there is a considerable well of conservatism in the United States which could potentially be tapped by Mr. Goldwater. Second, there is no question about the fact that the Republican organization behind Mr. Goldwater is strong to the very grass roots. Third, Mr. Goldwater is a personable man who possesses great charm and a distinguished appearance. He may, in fact, be described as possessing a kind of charisma. Fourth, the fact that Mr. Goldwater has assumed the role of the lone and unafraid "voice in the wilderness" gives him the image of being firm and courageous. Fifth, he has a fundamentally impressive television manner and projects a very good image to the viewer. Sixth, he is, beyond doubt, an articulate speaker who can develop a case and a cause when the circumstances are right. Finally, Mr. Goldwater need not at this time take a fundamental responsibility for the platform on which he runs—or, indeed, on the issues which he raises—for he is not in office and is thus technically not accountable to the people in the same way in which a President is accountable.

THE ISSUES

The original purpose of the Goldwater candidacy presumably was to present the voters with a choice between conservatism and liberalism. Yet it seems evident that this purpose has not been achieved, or, at least, that the question of liberalism versus conservatism is no longer a vital issue. For it is evident that not only are the voters in this campaign not particularly interested in basic questions of economic and political philosophy (which is what liberalism and conservatism are all about anyway), but that they do not plan to vote for either candidate because they are either "liberals" or "conservatives." Rather, they plan to vote for Mr. Goldwater because they are against such vaguely defined issues as Negro rights, so-called government "give-aways," "medicare," the cutting of taxes during prosperity, the Baker-Jenkins controversy, the "war on poverty," and the "communist conspiracy." These matters are hardly matters stemming from a philosophical conservatism — or if they are, surely they have not been clearly identified as basic tenets of conservative doctrine in the context of the present campaign.

THE CONSERVATIVE

For conservatism, in the true sense of that term, is that great philosophical system developed by Edmund Burke, and, to a lesser extent, by the 18th and 19th century theorists De Maistre, De Bonald and Von Haller. Or, in a specifically contemporary sense, it is that system so aptly described by Russell Kirk in his book The Conservative Mind.

Conservatives believe in the preservation of the ancient moral traditions of humanity, respect for the wisdom of their ancestors, and are dubious of wholesale alterations in society. They believe that a divine intent rules society, and that political problems are basically religious and moral problems. Theirs is the conviction that civilized society requires orders and classes and that the only equality is a moral equality. Society, conservatives maintain, requires leadership, and if natural distinctions among men are removed the society will decay and crumble. They maintain that property and freedom are inseparably connected and that economic levelling does not constitute economic progress. The conservative insists that man must put a control upon his will and his appetite, for he believes that man is governed more by emotion than by reason. The conservative philosophy might rather accurately be described as the idea of "making haste slowly" — or, in more philosophical terms, as a description of the state as a divinely ordained moral essence, a spiritual union of the dead, the living, and those yet unborn.

THE LIBERAL

The liberal view of things is substantially different. The liberal believes first of all in rational empiricism — in man's ability to reason and in the applicability of reason to the solution of man's problems. He refuses to believe, as does the dogmatist, that mankind has arrived at the end of its quest for truth and knowledge, but that knowledge is a continuing quest for the best evidence available under the circumstances. The liberal emphasizes the fundamental importance of the individual — no, because of the individual's class, or his attainments, or his wealth, etc., but because of his fundamental humanity. The roots of this concept are deep in the Judeo-Christian heritage and in Stoic doctrine. The liberal believes in a fundamentally instrumental theory of the state — that is, that the state is a mechanism which should be used to achieve higher objectives, that the state is to maintain peace and order so that men can pursue their higher objectives within a context of law which provides basic freedoms for all. The liberal believes in the notion of voluntarism — the creation of small, voluntary groups to accomplish ends within a framework of law, and that the functioning of such groups constitutes part of the lifeblood of a free society. The liberal also believes in the "law behind the law" — that is, in the notion that the law is not alone the product of the state, but that law in fact precedes the state, and hence the state exists to preserve the basic rights of individuals. The liberal emphasizes means, recognizing that ends lead no existence apart from means. The liberal believes in the value of discussion and consent — in the idea that the truth will win out in the free marketplace of ideas. Finally, the liberal believes in the basic equality of all human beings, not in the sense that they are identical, but that in basic respects — before God, before the law, and in terms of their general ability to reason — men are equal. The liberal view is basically that as developed by John Locke and John Stuart Mill.

This, then, was to have been the central issue of this presidential campaign — the emphasis on the difference between the liberal and conservative approach to the creation of public policy. Yet it is, to say the least, difficult to detect any consistent effort on the part of Mr. Goldwater (and, for that matter, on the part of Mr. Johnson as well) to speak to this central issue. Phrased in a somewhat different manner, the central issue in this campaign was to have been this: "Has the direction which the United States has taken in the last 30 years been the correct one to meet the needs of an increasingly complex society and world? Or has it been a betrayal of the best in the American heritage?" Each of us is now in a rather good position to decide whether the candidates have given answers to these fundamental questions. For we find, if we are honest with ourselves, that these basic issues have frequently become lost in a campaign which has sometimes degenerated into an exchange of personal epithets having nothing whatsoever to do with the issues before the nation. It is always most distasteful to a student of politics to observe that the office of President of the United States — an office carrying with it enormous dignity and prestige — is so often sought in such an undignified manner. But then, in politics, as in love and war, virtually all methods have become fair. We have, indeed, come a long way since Aristotle.

At this writing, only a few days remain before the election. Most evidence at this time indicates that President Johnson is enjoying a substantial lead over his opponent, and that he will win a substantial victory on Nov. 3rd. But to predict when one has only crude evidence is always dangerous. The American voter is often a bewildering creature: on the one hand we know he is a creature of habit, but on the other we know he is politically fickle. Hence, the outcome on Tuesday will depend upon both the rational and the non-rational habits of the American voter. More than that probably cannot be said with certainty—or, indeed, with safety.

Campus Issues Discussed At Leadership Conference

By Karl Ullis

About 65 students, faculty, and administration met this weekend at Alderbrook to discuss the issues vital to students and to the life of a University. Discussions were held in an informal seminar type of atmosphere. The following is a synopsis of the discussions:

EFFECTIVENESS OF PRESENT STUDENT GOVERNMENT

I. Central Board

1. The purpose of Central Board is to act as the main decision-making group of student government. All major organizations are represented, but the opinion of the majority is lacking. In the future each living group may be required to send representatives to CB.

2. Most of CB's time is spent with mechanics — the "dissemination of money" and reports from departments.

There is no discussion concerning the direction and the goals of student government and ways of building a greater university. There is no set policy of CB. An outside committee should be set up to evaluate and analyze the workings of CB. They could meet with CB every month to give results. The Trail could take a more effective position in analyzing CB.

3. If a department gives "No Report" this probably means that they are not doing anything or are "Non-existent." Departments should not be afraid to approach CB for discussion and help with internal problems.

4. Explanations of recommendations and committee action should be distributed before the meeting and be posted on the bulletin board. This would overcome the lack of information problem and add to the efficiency of CB.

5. Living group conflict exists between members of CB and as a result choices for heads of committees and departments are not based on qualification. In order to erase some of their differences CB should get together for dinners or retreats so that they really can get to know each other and discuss the common goals of the student government and the university.

STUDENT PARTICIPATION IN FACULTY-ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIVITIES

I. Student Opinion

1. Much contrary to the majority of student views the administration considers student opinion seriously and gives it great weight in their planning and scheduling. The problem is the determination of the majority opinion. Central Board is no longer effective in expressing the views of the majority since it so bogged with just the mechanics of student government. Central Board needs reorganization so that it can function as a center where opinion can be collected and brought into focus. Special "opinion seeking committees" should be appointed to do research in this problem.

2. It is important that students know that the faculty-administration is interested in their opinion and that they can participate to build a greater university.

A student committee should conduct an investigation into the bookstore and its organization.

II. Schedule planning.

1. All students were in favor of having the first semester end before Christmas vacation. Different school-year systems were suggested as substitutes for the present. They were: the 4-1-4 plan, tri-semester program, and the quarter system.

2. Test schedules: A test schedule for the regular school period should be worked out. This schedule would eliminate having three tests in one day and then not having one for three weeks. The proposed plan was to have all 10 o'clock classes have their tests only on Mondays, all 11 o'clock classes only on Tuesdays, etc. Another alternative was to require all professors to turn in a test schedule for each semester. The social calendar could be compiled from an analysis of a composite of the test schedules. This system would eliminate the scheduling of Homecoming, etc., on a week when there are too many tests.

III. Rules.

1. The present rules committee is not functioning effectively since they do not have real contact with student opinion. Only by the voicing of opinion can students remove obsolete and ineffective rules.

STUDENT AFFAIRS

I. All School Functions

1. It seems that all-school spirit is at a low because the Greek and Independent systems hamper all-school participation. This is to be expected since the Greek system is expanding so rapidly. To achieve greater all-school togetherness the Greek and Independent organizations will have to cut down on their functions to allow more time for all-school functions. In this way students can expand beyond their "autonomous" groups and meet more people. Many Greek and Independent groups have not stressed the all-school aspect of university life. Interfraternity council, and Panhellenic and Student Affairs Committee should investigate this problem. Perhaps a limit of the total number of Greek and Independent functions should be set.

- All school or CB debates should be initiated. An arts festival consisting of UPS students could be looked into.
- Songfest is a good all-school function. The fun aspect of the fest should be stressed and the "academic singing" should be eliminated.
- Homecoming should include an academics part since many alums return to UPS because of the "University Spirit" and look forward to the meeting of old profs and the exchange of ideas. The value of having Homecoming displays was seriously questioned.

III. The Class

- The Freshman class is probably the closest class. Organization of Sophomore, Junior and Senior Councils was suggested. A project could be set for each class so that they can strive for a common goal. Class picnics might be helpful.
- Since a class structure really doesn't exist why try to create an artificial one. School unity should come before class unity.

IV Leadership Conference

- Invitations should be on a sign-up sheet basis.
- Group dynamics could be incorporated into future conferences.
- The Spring Leadership Conference should function as a workshop for new and old officers and CB members. In this way the good ideas and projects of the old officers and CB members would not be lost. Five-hundred dollars is a relatively small amount of money to be spent for two conferences that trains future leaders to handle a $55,000 budget.

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT AT UPS

I. Organizations

- The present program of international organizations is not adequate since there is no co-ordinating body that brings the individual organizations together. The solution is to set up an International Organizations Board. This board could come under the auspices of the National People to People Organization. The board would consist of representatives from each international organization on campus. The International Organizations Board would be represented at CB as a department or non-voting member.

UPS Uniques

By DAVY JONES

Jeannette A. Brandelier, a 19 year old from Geneva, Switzerland, is the first girl to be featured in this column which is dedicated solely to the foreign students at UPS.

Miss Brandelier, who was born in the capitol of Switzerland and has lived there throughout her life, said, "Geneva is very compact in size in comparison to the United States, due to its lack of space. The present price of land is $75 per square meter."

Jeannette, who graduated from a five year high school program last June, stated, "The subjects are all compulsory except for physical education, which nobody has time to take. The students must study very hard; consequently there are no extra-curricular activities. Only a few students graduate because many change to a vocation school at the age of 15 and a good percentage of those who continue in the regular high school do not finish."

The brunette Swiss lass then commented, "But then in the American high schools there are students who do nothing. They do not care about their academic ventures. At UPS, however, the scholastic attitude is much better."

Swiss Society

Jeannette said that the attitude toward society life is much more informal here than in Geneva. A white shirt, tie and a rigid back are always present, even for casual occasions.

The Swiss people speak at least one of the following four language, Jeannette went on. Sixty-nine per cent speak German, 25 per cent speak French, five percent speak Italian and about four per cent speak Romanche, depending upon the geographical location.

Asked about what the Swiss do in their leisure time, Jeannette said that for the most part they do a lot of skiing on the nearby mountains. She stated that she herself enjoyed bowling, swimming, snow skiing, and water skiing although the latter is very expensive in Switzerland.

Jeannette said she usually traveled to France to purchase her clothes and bought a wide variety of dresses to avoid the chance of duplication among her friends. She said the Swiss are very conscious of this. The border offers no resistance to the travelers for the most part as the authorities simply ask if one has something to declare.

The student in Geneva is usually able to secure a job of some sort upon reaching the age of 18. Post Office work and tutoring are the two main jobs for the younger generation, according to Jeannette.

In August Jeannette began her long journey by flying to Paris. She then traveled by train to Le Havre, where she boarded a ship and sailed with 1200 other students to New York via a short stop in England. In New York she spent a day at the World's Fair and visited Greenwich village.

Jeannette Brandelier, foreign student, likes the social informality of the United States.

"When I first arrived in the United States, I could understand only the first word and the last word. In between was Poof! English is much easier to comprehend than the American language because of its lack of slang terms" Jeannette continued.

Campus Seems Large

On the UPS campus, "which is huge for me," Miss Brandelier is presently auditing US History, American Literature, Anatomy of Jazz and English Composition. She may take a few courses next semester for a grade. The Geneva girl helps to correct French papers and attends a Spanish class at Stadium High School. "I read and drive at night, then it is time to go to bed," commented the girl from the land of the Alps. Next July Jeannette will return to Geneva and attend one of the universities there.

Jeannette feels that she will never be able to stay away from Geneva for very long. She commented "I cannot forget my friends. I am not enough in the life here." She also said that "this year of travel and revelation is not just to fill my head with knowledge but rather to see things and to satisfy my curiosity." One of the main reasons for this experience is to improve her ability in speaking and understanding English, which, in turn, will help her in her selected life work, she concluded.

Perdue Heads New Bureau

Professor Paul C. Perdue has recently been named UPS Placement Director. Office space has been made available for the new operation in a recently completed area of the Music Building.

The placement office is currently handling all on-campus and off-campus part-time employment. Efforts are being made to influence Tacoma employers to fill their employment needs through the Placement Office. Here, part-time job applicants are referred to available positions in accordance with their abilities, experience and their available time and class scheduling.

Another service provided by the bureau will be to help seniors find employment after graduation. The office will also schedule interviews with outstanding employers for seniors and graduates. These may be participated in by those students who have completed registration for career employment with the office prior to the interview dates. Such interview dates will be announced through notices in The Tattler, The Trail and notices on the bulletin boards.

A recent company interviewer visiting the Placement Office stated that probably the average student who took full advantage of the opportunities offered by an office such as this would benefit monetarily by an amount somewhat in excess of $100,000 during his working career — when compared with a student who might ignore such an opportunity.

The present location of the Placement Office is in rooms 301-303 of the Music Building.

Library Adopts L.C. System

The Library publications are now being classified according to the Library of Congress system, according to Desmond Taylor, librarian. The Dewey Decimal classification system will be reclassified on a gradual basis, though the cards representing the new accessions show L.C.

The essential difference between Dewey and L.C. is that the former was originated as a philosophical classification of knowledge, whereas the latter was designed as a practical classification for books themselves, Taylor said. Some of the virtues of L.C., according to a report of the Librarian of Congress, are that the topics are logical subdivisions of general subjects and the classification is expressive and uncomplicated.

Leadership Conference (Con't.)

II Students

1. Get the international students into the public spotlight early in the year by: introducing them at Freshman Orientation; having a section of the Logger Ledger and the Log Book devoted to them; having a picture gallery of the international students so that others can find out who they are; listing their country and local address; wearing of a pin such as the United Nations pin.
2. Have an International Student Week with a complete Trail devoted to them and international affairs. A section of the Tamanawas should have photos of the international students and activities of the different international groups.
3. Rotate the international student among the Greek and Independent living groups so that they can meet more people and learn more about each individual group. The different living groups should invite the student for dinner discussions and talks and if they have room as house guests.
4. UPS students should display a warmer attitude towards the international student. They should take the initial steps in meeting him.
5. All clubs should invite and encourage international students to participate in their activities.

ACADEMICS AT UPS

I. Honors.

1. Many students have a "confused view" of the Honors Program. They are not clear as to its organization and goals. Many do not understand what honors courses are and how grades are given. A clarification of the system should be presented.
2. The "Honors Abroad" program will begin at the University of Vienna the second semester of 1966. "Honors Abroad" is not restricted to just honors students. This program could expand to having several units dispersed around the world at the same time.

II Professors

Most students felt that it was not up to them to "screen" professors. It was agreed that they can function in an indirect way to "weed out" the drones. Since it is the student who pays for the lectures he should demand quality instruction. A professor should be judged on the criteria of quality of lectureship and instruction and not on research done or degrees held.

III Academic Functions

1. Many students come to UPS with the thought that they will find an academic atmosphere here. They are many times disappointed and state this as a reason for leaving UPS. An academic atmosphere is the extra-class exchange of ideas among students. This exchange is not necessarily related directly to course studies. A "beatnik atmosphere" is not necessarily an academic atmosphere.
2. The "seven day campus" program should include besides social functions "academic functions." Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic should sponsor various "academic parties" that may help to keep students on the campus during the weekends. This type of joint project might help to break up the isolated "autonomous" groups on campus and incite greater inter-Greek exchange of ideas.
3. UPS should look into the buying of a permanent retreat. It could be used by students as a place to get away from campus to study, seminar, or wait for the creative moment. A part of the Harstene Island property could be put to this use.

IV. Academic Recognition.

1. A part of an academic atmosphere is academic recognition. Much of the time only the immediate department is aware of a student's exceptional scholarship. The awards he may receive are kept within the department. A university's prestige comes from its academic achievements. The Trail and Tamanawas should work closer with the departments to give recognition to exceptional scholarship.
2. The faculty needs more recognition for their academic achievements. They also need recognition for the time they spend outside of class with student groups and clubs.
3. There are many faculty members on this campus who do lot for students and the university. Then there are those who don't give a darn. As a result, a few carry the ball for many others. This is detrimental to the academic atmosphere and to the university spirit.

Savages to Invade Logger Territory This Saturday

The Loggers meet the Eastern Washington Savages this Saturday for their last appearance at John S. Baker Memorial Stadium during the 1964 football season. Last year's games against Eastern bring back mixed emotions. For the fans who saw the first of a series of two games against the Savages remember Tony Gonsalves of the Loggers take an Eastern Washington kickoff and run it back 84 yards for a touchdown. Gonsalves scored twice more in the afternoon to give UPS a 21-13 victory. The second game with the Savages spelled disaster for the Loggers, though, as Heinrick's men took a 4-4 record with them into the game only to return having it read 4-5. With UPS leading Eastern Washington 14-7 with less than five minutes to go in the game, and the season, the Savages drove to the four-yard line from where they went in to score to end the year. Th final score read Eastern 16, UPS 14.

With All-Conference Halfback Mel Stanton returning to lead the Eastern attack, the Savages appear to have much more depth than the Loggers. Street and Smith's National football magazine picked Eastern to finish the '64 season third or above in the conference, and the way it looks now Eastern will place in the upper division. When Eastern invades the UPS campus this Saturday, look for a hotly contested game, as the Loggers will need this game to stay off the cellar of the league, and the Savages must win to stay in competition for the top spot with Whitworth. This is one year Eastern will be coming to town with a team capable of doing something about their 4-15-2 record against the University of Puget Sound.

Kappa Sigs Roll Up Victories

This week's intramural football action saw the powerful Kappa Sigs play to a tie in their game with the Phi Deltis 25-25. This gives the K Sigs a 5-0-1 record. While the K Sigs still retain the number one spot, the Sigma Nus, who took a game from the Betas by forfeit and later in the week tied New Hall 0-0, are running a close second with a record of 5-1 and 2.

In other games this week, the SAEs came alive to win from the Theta Chis 26-13 and Todd Hall 31-6. The Sig Alphas have been having some trouble getting started this season but, "Better late than never." Also, the Phi Deltis played to a 31-0 win over the Theta Chis.

This week's standings show the Kappa Sigs in first followed by the Sigma Nus. The third spot Sigma Chis preceed the Phi Deltis. New Dorm holds the fifth position and the SAEs retain sixth. The remaining three are: the Theta Chis, the Betas and Todd Hall.

One week remains . . . the Big Question, "Will the K Sigs maintain their lead?" One last word. Go out and cheer for the team of your choice.

A wrestler is one of nature's unique phenomenon. For no apparent reason an average individual will practice for weeks on barbaric rituals so that in one brief encounter with the enemy he may completely distort the anatomy of his opponent. Doug Titus is one of nature's mutations from the normal. Having the body build of an Olympian god, Doug completely denies that an over-developed muscular system is the only asset needed for wrestling. A definite skill is needed also, if one hopes to become accomplished in the art of body bruising. Doug demonstrated this to me by executing a "Boston Crab" which nearly vaporized my spinal cord. So amazed was I at the skill involved in these maneuvers aimed at the destruction of my spinal cord, that I asked if I might turn out in wrestling practice. Doug was so jubilant at hearing this he rushed me right to the Fieldhouse for my first workout. My first task was to lift 100 lbs. several times to get warmed up for later duties. But being unable to even tie my tennis shoe laces I decided to forget my shoes and the weights, and take a cigarette break. While performing my ritual of lung dusting, I had the opportunity to observe the art of wrestling. While watching two individuals grapple for an advantage, I realized the beauty of the contest. There was truly a sense of grace in their movements, as body strained against body. The ever-flowing communication between mind and body was apparent by their trained reactions. In every movement an aspect of beauty in nature was revealed, and the agony in one's face as he was thrown to the mat gave me a little insight into what life is all about.

When a lion attacks its prey, one shudders with expectation. As horrible as it is watching a spark of life being snuffed out, the spectator cannot take his eyes off the spectacle. So it was with me as I watched the wrestlers. I searched their eyes for an explanation. Was it man's everlasting attempt to dominate other men, or an attempt to conquer himself? Their eyes told all, but it is a language known only to a few. Thus I left the practice in a state of stupefication. Not knowing what to think or what I had really observed, I simply walked in a daze. The plight of a wrestler is a strange one, and can only be known to those who participate in the art of wrestling.

This year's graduating Loggers are Harlan Patterson 70, Steve Maddocks 11, Tom Stewart 26, Wayne Fisk 65, Peter Buechel 61 and Tom Rawlings 74.

Six seniors will make their last home appearance of college football this Saturday. The six are Harlan Patterson, Pete Buechel, Wayne Fisk, Tom Rawlings, Kent Chisman, and Steve Maddocks. All six have expressed their desire to go out of Logger football history with outstanding performances this Saturday against Eastern. Let us as students give our support to these stalwarts of football, and a victory against the Savages this Saturday.

Wildcats Ramble Past Injury Ridden Loggers 28-7

After three quarters of close football, Central Washington State College exploded for two fourth quarter touchdowns to down the University of Puget Sound Loggers 28-7 last Saturday before 5,000 wind-blown fans.

It was the fifth straight loss for UPS, and the fourth in league play. With a record of one victory and five defeats, a losing season is assured the Loggers, their second in a row. This loss also marks the longest UPS losing streak since 1941.

The wind seemed to baffle the Loggers early in the first half, but not so with Central. A one-yard plunge good for six points climaxed a 23-yard drive early in the first quarter by Central and put the Loggers in the hole from the start. Then, halfway in the second quarter, two completed passes from Central's quarterback Butch Hill to ends Byron Johnson and Mickey O'Neill capped a 64-yard drive to make the score 14-0. Things seemingly brightened up for the Loggers after this as they drove 58 yards to within the Wildcats' 10-yard stripe. There Central's stout defense stalled the drive, and took over on downs. But lady luck showed her hand to UPS as CWSC halfback Jack Curtright fumbled the ball, and tackle Norm Strom recovered it for the Loggers. The next play from scrimmage saw Logger quarterback Bruce Orness scoring on a six-yard sprint around right end. The score read 14-7 in favor of Central when the first half ended.

The third period was a scoreless 15 minutes with each team showing good defensive strength. The fourth quarter action spelled disaster for the Loggers when a pass from Butch Hill to Byron Johnson was deflected. The deep receiver for the Wildcats grabbed the pigskin though, and the play resulted in a 35-yard gain. This set up Central's third score as Hill smashed his way through the Loggers defense from one yard out to make the score 21-7. Central's final tally came late in the game when, going 63 yards in seven plays, the Wildcats' fullback Larry Smith finished the drive with a two-yard run over right guard for the final seven points.

Coach Heinrick said Saturday's game showed definite improvement over the previous games, and expressed optimism concerning the final UPS home game against the Eastern Washington Savages this Saturday.

Angle Flight

Fifty UPS coeds are currently being rushed for membership in Angel Flight, the feminine counterpart of Arnold Air Society. Candidates will attend party functions and be chosen by an elimination process, somewhat like sorority rush.

Candidates for Angel Flight are judged on poise, appearance, personality, and interest. Most candidates are freshmen but sophomores and juniors are also eligible. New members are selected by present Angel Flighters and members of the Arnold Air Society, the ROTC upperclassman honorary. Rush chairmen are Ann Martin and Carolyn Corothers.

Semester Abroad Program in Offing

The University of Puget Sound will inaugurate a Semester Abroad Program in Vienna, Austria, in the second semester of the 1965-1966 school year.

Under the Honors Program of the University, U.P.S. Abroad is open to students in the Honors curriculum and to any other qualified student. To be eligible to participate, a student must be in his Junior or Senior year, must be in good academic standing and should have some background in the German language.

Exported Campus

The overseas semester is planned primarily as an "Exported Campus" program in which members of our own faculty will accompany students to Vienna and will conduct classes there. In addition, there will be opportunity in the program for classes in a Viennese University or Akademie and opportunity for Special Studies in the field of interest of the individual student.

The curriculum will be centered in the broad cultural areas with emphasis on European civilization and travel pertinent to course content where practical. For the initial semester of the program, Spring-1966, the University has selected Dr. Warren Tomlinson of the language department and Dr. John Magee of the religion and philosophy departments to direct the semester abroad program.

Expenses

The cost of the semester abroad will be the normal tuition, room and board, plus an additional amount (primarily for transportation) not to exceed $800.

Further information will be made available to students and parents as intention to enroll in the program is indicated.

Students planning to participate should examine the requirements in their major to ascertain how the work of the semester abroad will fit into their degree plan. They should also arrange for an interview with Professor Robert Albertson, director of the honors program, as well as with their major professors, as soon as possible.

Sneaky Pledges Skunk Actives

Sneaking out of classrooms,
Running in the halls,
Dashing out of doorways,
Secret telephone calls.

Why are they screaming in the library? It is 3 o'clock in the morning, so why are those boys doing push-ups on the lawn? Have the goblins invaded? Are the freshmen more crazy than usual? Don't worry, it's only that time of year again and the pledges are sneaking. Those sheets in the windows? That's only an active's way of punishing a successful pledge. The girls with the unmatched shoes can probably find their mates at one of the fraternity houses and we will forgive you this once for not putting up your hair. We know you lost your rollers.

Those with a bewildered look will be happy to know that a sneak is just the way the sorority and fraternity let off a little steam. The object is for all the pledges to get off campus by 5 p.m. and to stay hidden until 9:30 or 10 p.m. A few simple rules make the game more exciting. All the pledges must be in a group and the sneak is unsuccessful if even one person doesn't make it. The pledges sneak with their pledge trainer and phone in numerous "helpful clues" to the actives. A 10 mile radius doesn't sound like much room, but there are hundreds of places to hide a group of 20 or more if you look.

Alpha Phis began the "sneak season" before anyone else had even begun to think about it. The girls spent the evening in the Sherman Elementary School.

Oct. 12 was a popular night for sneaking as the Tri-Deltas, Sigma Nus, Thetas and SAEs will testify. The Tri-Delta and Sigma Nu pledges spent the evening together on Wollochot Bay. Despite a fearful beginning, their joint sneak was successful. If you happened to notice the bedroom set up on the Sigma Chi's lawn you will be glad to know that the Theta's pledge trainer is a very forgiving person and she and her pledges accomplished their goal. The SAE pledges and actives are not too sure whether their sneak was successful or not. The pledges feel that a 9:50 p.m. discovery is considered a successful sneak but the actives don't agree.

Pardon My Opinion

What do you think Goldwater's chances are of upsetting Johnson in the election?

Diane Garland, sophomore, Tacoma:

I think people will vote for Johnson as opposed to Goldwater because they want rationality used as a basis for solving the country's problems rather than emotion.

Dan York, junior, Seattle:

I think Goldwater will be a surprise and get a lot more votes than people give him credit for right now.

Suzy Christel, freshman, Tacoma:

I don't think Goldwater has a chance against Johnson because he is too radical and outspoken. He has many excellent ideas, but he doesn't relate them to the people in a manner that the people will accept.

Derrol Sater, junior, Tacoma:

I don't think he has a chance. I think Johnson has shown his administrative ability in time of crisis and I think the people are behind him.

Karen Redal, sophomore, Tacoma:

I don't think his chances are very great right now but you can never tell. The impossible can always happen.

Mike Coile, sophomore, Tacoma:

I'm just glad I'm not voting this year. I don't think they're very good; I wonder how he likes the taste of his mint-flavored foot powder?!

The main story in this issue described in eloquent detail a CPS victory over the Willamette Bearcats of the previous week. On the field which was wet and soggy, the Logers skunked the favored Salem team by a score of 80. "Fumbles kept the CPS team from running up a larger score."

Another big story of this paper of four decades ago was the account of a bag rush. "Goals were marked at other ends (of the athletic field), 36 yards apart, and the crowd formed a long line on each side. The sophomore and the freshmen teams, each composed of 11 men, stood at their respective goals awaiting the combat. In the center of the field was a bag of generous size and weight which was to be carried to the goal of the opposing team."

The freshmen won the contest.

The TRAIL reported that the work on a new gymnasium was within three weeks of completion. A gymnasium was to occupy the ground floor, the first floor and part of the second and third floors and would contain locker rooms, showers, and a small 10-12 student dormitory.

Same old story—"If you see some freshmen acting queerly from now on, do not be alarmed. He is only being initiated by the fraternity to which he is pledged. Girls, don't think that some nice man whom you have condescended to smile upon is trying to throw you over if he does not reply to your kind remarks; it's a cruel world, say the Frosh pledges when they can't talk to the fair members of the student body, but such is the life of a pledge."

* The advertisements included: Pollyanna Cafe—fried chicken Sunday dinner for $.75; Stone & Fisher Company — "The season's favorite in New York — the sport dress of gaily striped flannel, long sleeved, severely tailored, with plain color pipings and insets and the favored buttons of color. Agreeably priced from $12.95 to $18.95." * Hopper-Kelley Special Dance Hits included "I Wonder What's Become of Sally" (Fox Trot); "Susquenhanna Home" (Fox Trot); and by Bennie Krueger's Orchestra, "Go Your Way and I'll Go Mine" (Fox Trot); "Follow the Swallow" (Fox Trot); and "Not Now, Not Yet, But Soon."

On Oct. 19 the Pi Phis, Phi Deltas, Sigma Chis and Gamma Phis took the big step. The Pi Phi and Phi Delt pledges spent the evening together at the University Place Booster Club. Rumor has it that the Pi Phis ended the evening back at the dorm in the showers. (Cool fun). The Sigma Chis spent the night squeezed into the back of a truck. A few close calls made the success that much better for them. The Gamma Phis made a valiant effort, but they didn't quite make it.

For those pledges who have not as yet made the big move, there are at least 95 places yet to hide!
