

International Legal Developments Year in Review: 2010

WILLIAM B.T. MOCK, JR.* AND MARK E. WOJCIK

This issue of The International Lawyer marks the fifteenth year that the American Bar Association Section of International Law has published an annual survey of significant developments in international and foreign law. The articles in this volume, as in previous years, are submitted by various committees of the section and represent tremendous contributions of time and talent from hundreds of individuals. The authors and editors hope to provide you with a handy, one-volume resource that covers the most significant developments during the past year, including developments ranging from international litigation, international arbitration, and international courts to a wide variety of public international law, comparative law, and human rights law issues. Together with past volumes, this issue provides you a continuous record of enormous practical and scholarly value.

Because of the size of this enormous undertaking, none of our committees had enough room to describe fully all of the important developments during the past year. The committees were asked to produce work under strict word count limits of 7,000 words (including footnotes), summarizing significant developments in only a few words. The omission of a certain event from a committee's report should not be construed to mean that a particular event last year was unimportant. The section imposes such a severe word count restriction because of rising production costs to print and mail this issue, to reduce the time necessary to edit and produce this issue, and to ensure that you would still be able to lift up the final printed issue when it arrived at your office. We want the issue to be one that you stick in your briefcase rather than stick on your shelf.

Our work as co-editors of this project was facilitated by a small army of deputy editors, committee editors, and law student editors. The committee editors, appointed by each committee, worked directly with the authors and spent many hours coordinating the articles for timely submission. They are thanked directly in each article, but we thank all of them again here for their contributions and assistance.

The twenty-three deputy editors did the first edits after articles were submitted for publication. They spent long hours under short deadlines to review the articles and prepare them for publication. They volunteered their expertise in legal writing and editing,

* Professor of Law, The John Marshall Law School, Chicago, Illinois.

 Professor of Law, The John Marshall Law School, Chicago, Illinois.

as well as immense experience in international law subjects. Here are the names of the deputy editors who helped produce this year's international law year in review.

Prof. David W. Austin (California Western School of Law)

Prof. Brooke Bowman (Stetson University College of Law)

Prof. Cindy Buys (Southern Illinois University School of Law)

Prof. Juli V. Campagna (Hofstra University School of Law)

Prof. Kim D. Chanbonpin (The John Marshall Law School–Chicago)

Prof. Cara L. Cunningham (University of Detroit Mercy School of Law)

Prof. Gianmario Demuro (University of Cagliari, Italy)

Prof. William V. Dunlap (Quinnipiac University School of Law)

Prof. Sharon E. Foster (University of Arkansas–Fayetteville, Leflar Law Center)

Prof. Frank Gulino (Hofstra University School of Law)

Prof. Kimberly Holst (Arizona State University School of Law)

Prof. Jennifer B. Horn (Texas Tech University School of Law)

Prof. Linda M. Keller (Thomas Jefferson School of Law)

Prof. Nadia E. Nedzel (Southern University Law Center)

Prof. Anthony Niedwiecki (The John Marshall Law School–Chicago)

Prof. Ann L. Nowak (Touro Law Center)

Prof. Jason Palmer (Stetson University College of Law)

Prof. Lauren Redman (University of Lucerne Faculty of Law, Switzerland)

Prof. Ellen Saideman (Roger Williams University School of Law)

Prof. Kathryn Thompson (Roger Williams University School of Law)

Prof. John B. Thornton (Northwestern University School of Law)

Prof. Christine M. Venter (Notre Dame Law School)

Prof. Gregory Voss (Toulouse Business School Group, France)

In addition to those named, we wish to thank all of the authors who contributed to the submissions in this issue. Without them, there simply would not have been an issue.

Finally, we thank the students and professional staff at Southern Methodist University Dedman School of Law who worked on The International Lawyer. Under the leadership of managing editor Tiffany Cravey and supervising faculty member Beverly Duréus, the SMU team transformed dozens of separate articles into a cohesive volume, consistent in format and citation and ready for final publication. Their hard work, long hours, and consistent dedication to this project cannot be overstated.

This volume represents contributions from hundreds of persons around the world. We hope that you find it to be useful and interesting.