Smoking halo, MLK Jr. Day revisited at LUCC meeting

by Andy Dolan
News Editor

A special LUCC general council meeting was held Tuesday in order to discuss the "Smoking Halo" legislation and to revisit the issue of observing Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Day on campus. It was also mentioned that Brokaw Hall will no longer be used for student housing, effective next year.

Several weeks ago, LUCC voted to recognize MLK Jr. Day on campus by recommending to the faculty committee that no classes be held on that holiday.

The national holiday is observed on the third Monday in January, and would replace Dean's Day, which is scheduled for the first Monday of eighth week, rather than creating an additional day off of classes.

LUCC President Cole DeLaney wished to discuss the decision further after some faculty members asked if having no class on MLK Jr. Day was the only way to recognize the holiday.

DeLaney asked the council if they felt that other methods, such as ceremonies or events, could constitute sufficient recognition for the holiday, or if having the day off was absolutely necessary.

Some are concerned that having a day off classes during third week rather than eighth week would be less beneficial to students since workloads are generally heavier near the end of the term.

After discussing the new issue, the council came to the consensus that having the day off was the best way to observe the holiday and that the day should replace Dean's Day despite concerns of academic efficacy. DeLaney said that he would relay this decision to the curriculum board on Thursday.

The proposed "Smoking Halo" legislation was also discussed briefly at the meeting.

The legislation seeks to add the following language to the smoking prohibitions clause of the LU bylaws: "There will be a smoke-free zone of at least 25 feet around the entrances of all smoke-free residences, including Kohler Hall."

The legislation aims to eliminate smoke around entrances of the residence halls because it reportedly bothers some residents and can be potentially dangerous for those with allergies to cigarette smoke.

The issue will be discussed in

Fair Trade Coffee debuts at LU

by Emily DeRosier
For The Lawrentian

Lawrence became one of the first colleges in the Midwest to offer "triple-certified" coffee this Tuesday when it debuted at the Underground coffeehouse to a crowd that event organizers say exceeded their hopes.

Steve Rogness, a member of Lawrence environmental group Greenfire and an organizer of Tuesday's event, explained that since the World Trade Organization was established in 1997, the coffee market has expanded substantially, and prices have been driven down to a point that barely keeps coffee farmers out of poverty.

Higher market supply without a change in demand leads to lower prices, which consequently make it more difficult for coffee farmers to subsist.

"Triple-certified" indicates that the coffee has Fair Trade certification, that it is certified organic, and that the coffee is shade-grown.

According to Rogness, Fair Trade is a trading partnership that seeks equity in international trade. Organic and shade-grown agriculture encourage environmental protection. Shade-grown means the beans are grown beneath the rainforest canopy.

Rogness also stated that growing beans in the shade avoids the alternative of "slash-and-burn" agriculture, which destroys irreplaceable rainforest ecosystems.

Rogness addressed concerns some hold that the Sara Lee coffee will benefit from Lawrence students' purchases.

"Steps like this are extremely important for Lawrence. Students often complain that they feel isolated from the world, or similarly, that they lack the ability to make living choices at Lawrence that will have a positive impact," said Rogness. "Options like triple-certified coffee offer students the opportunity to live intentionally, and to make decisions in their daily lives that will positively affect the world.

"Events like the Fair Trade coffee kick-off are meant to show students that they are not isolated from world events, as many feel they are here at Lawrence. We all have the power to change things for the better."

Greenfire representatives noted that this is only the beginning of changes their organization hopes to make on campus. Rogness noted that Yale University's equivalent to LUCC just passed a resolution requesting that the administration work toward making all campus dining facilities Fair Trade compliant, and mentioned that Greenfire may urge Lawrence to head in that direction as well.

Tropos and Ariel face funding crunch, publication perils

by Jonathon Isaacson
News Editor

Campus-wide budget cuts have effected two Lawrence University student publications. Both Ariel, the school's yearbook, and Tropos, a literary and arts publication, are working with budgets less than what the student groups determined was necessary for production costs.

Lawrence University's yearbook has a long tradition of publication. For over a century, Ariel has been chronicling people and events at Lawrence. Ariel editor-in-chief Justine Reimnitz says this year's yearbook will not be as elaborate or creative as she would like. "We had to make lots of sacrifices," she says. One example Reimnitz gave was that the 2003 yearbook, including the cover, will be printed in monochrome to save on printing costs.

Originally, Reimnitz envisioned a different end product, commenting: "I would love to be able to include 48 pages of color." For the budget to accomplish what Reimnitz wishes, Ariel funding would require a substantial increase. Budget constraints are one of two problems for the production of the school's yearbook; the other is understaffing, which Reimnitz says is the larger problem.

Reimnitz also cited the apathetic attitude she feels many Lawrentians hold towards the yearbook as problematic. Reimnitz acknowledges that some yearbooks have been "a waste of paper," but Reimnitz says she is trying her best to put out a quality yearbook. Reimnitz said that the yearbook organization has received scathing emails that end with the statement, "Make it better."

She says she replies politely, including a suggestion that they could help to make it better by getting involved.

Lack of involvement has been a problem at Tropos in the recent past, but editors hope it won't be a problem this year. "Tropos is planning this year to produce one major publication at the end of the year called Tropos 2003," John Gale and Emilie Walgenbach, co-editors, wrote in an e-mail. Tropos has not appeared on campus the past two years for financial reasons and lack of content.

Gale and Walgenbach described getting submissions as, "a small uphill battle," that has contributed to the lack of Tropos magazines for the past two years.

While they hope to receive enough submissions to put together a publication, they stated that publication will be limited by a tight budget and outdated technology. In their e-mail, the editors commented, "Tropos is about $3,000 short of reaching the print cost estimated from previous years."

While Gale and Walgenbach are confident that they can cut costs enough to publish, the problem of working on six-year-old computers remains. With these computers, they say, "We cannot see ourselves publishing a high quality magazine for much longer."

According to Reimnitz, student publications serve an important function on campus. She thinks that people should get involved with student publications and stresses the need for writers, photographers, and graphic designers, if the standards of the Lawrence community are to be met.

Scholarship competition receives an overhaul

by Ceilidh Mar
Staff Writer

For most Lawrence students the Lawrence University Scholarship Competition brings up memories of letters of recommendation, stressing over GPAs, and a surfeit of essays. Today's applicant has a different set of hurdles to jump.

The scholarship competition is used in awarding many scholarships, including three main competitive merit scholarships: the Trustee Scholarship ($40,000 over four years), the Presidential Scholarship ($30,000 over four years), and the Alumni Scholarship ($20,000 over four years).

These highly competitive scholarships require a minimum GPA of 3.75 and test scores of 28 ACT composite or 1240 combined SAT, along with recommendations and extra-curricular activities. But instead of the previously required essays, Lawrence has implemented a new format that includes an on-campus interview.

This change is part of the ongoing search for the best system of awarding the scholarships. For the past five years Lawrence has been changing aspects of the application process, mainly in an attempt to determine whether the decisions for the awards should be based solely on the information presented in the application materials or on some form of on-campus competition.

This year's scholarship competition utilizes a competitive interview with an interview team, eliminating the essay section of the application. The teams will consist of a faculty member, a current scholarship winner, and either a Lawrence graduate or an administrative staff member.

The new system started in mid-January with the first eight interviews, but most of the interviews will be held during the two upcoming Scholarship Competition weekends (Feb. 7-8 and 21-22).

These weekends are also set up to coincide with the on-campus conservatory auditions. This will make it easier for prospective students who plan on participating in both the competition and the auditions.

At the same time as these events, the admissions department will be planning receptions, parent-to-parent panels, and activities for the prospective students. If the competition goes well it could become a yearly event, involving both current students and the prospective students.

Admissions is looking for students to overnight host the Fridays of the competitions. Anyone interested should contact the admissions office at x6500.

Career Corner

sponsored by the Career Center

Where can you go with a liberal arts degree? What options are out there for Lawrence graduates? The Career Corner tells the stories of some alumni who have found answers to these questions and proves that, yes, there is a job out there for you.

This time last year, Timothy Burnside was shuffling through her midterms. This year, she is shuffling through the archives at the National Museum of American History in the Smithsonian Institute, Washington D.C.

Burnside graduated with a major in English, a minor in history, and what she calls an "undeclared minor in music." Always active in both the college and conservatory, Burnside is particularly excited about her role today: "I get to combine the three things I love into one with this position every day." Burnside works with music archives, documenting the Doc Cheatham collection.

Besides her work, Burnside is excited about living in Washington D.C. "I live on 16th, so basically you follow it into the city, keep going, and it ends at the White House." She walks by the F.B.I. building every day on the way to work, she says, and also gets "to see so much happening, so many people from around the world. It is amazing."

"I wouldn't be interested had I not had the opportunity to take advantage of a strong conservatory and college," says Burnside. "For instance, with very important figures. Wynton Marsalis came, I got to hear him play, hear him talk. When I stumbled on a letter from him to Doc Cheatham in the collection, that gave it special meaning for me."

To become an archivist, Burnside recommends visiting archives in the area. She says she felt "very prepared" going into her job, and she advises that others who are interested get some experience ahead of time: "They are very, very useful places. It is good to become familiar with knowing how to handle different materials—letters, photographs, vinyls, there is a different way to deal with all of it...it is nicer to be able to get into the field and not have to ask questions every ten seconds."

Burnside is considering getting a masters from a school like the University of Maryland, who has an archive program. In the meantime, she is enjoying life in the "real world" and hopes to stay with the Smithsonian museums.

Past reflections from LU abroad

Students from the Lawrence community have been going abroad for decades. Fantastic, wonderful, and all-around charming Lawrence students have recorded their experiences for The Lawrentian through the years. Here, then, are various accounts of Laurentians long-graduated, and their time spent away from the infamous "Lawrence Bubble."

Student Sees Vietnam War As A Tragic 'Way of Life'

(Saturday, October 16, 1965 Volume 90-No. 4)

The following was excerpted from a longer article that appeared in The Lawrentian, and was written by Elmira Kendricks, who visited Vietnam with a group of students and religious leaders in an effort to seek a peaceful resolution to the armed conflict going on while they were there.

Perhaps the most influential thing that we learned in our visit to South Vietnam is that the war is real. Twenty-five years of war is too long. The consequences of this long period of war have touched each village, each family, and each person in Vietnam. War has become the normal way of life for the nation.

Small children in areas controlled by the Vietcong now learn how to set land mines to blow up South Vietnamese government troops. Families of South Vietnamese soldiers live in the foxholes with the soldiers, and during battle in the camp areas a wife must divide her energies between watching her children and loading ammunition clips for her husband.

Saigon's new lullaby is the sound of distant "harassment" mortar fire combined with rock and roll music that spills out from the new crop of bars and nightclubs that cater to the U.S. soldiers. During the day, Saigon's normally heavy traffic is now complicated and halted by movement of troops and equipment through the city battle zones.

Student Describes Study, Travel in Israel

(Saturday, January 15, 1966 . . . Volume 85 - Number 12)

Pete Rabinowitz spent six months studying Hebrew language and culture with a group of British and American college students, an experience that was recorded by Lawrentian staff member Bonnie Bryant, and parts of which appear below.

Pete said that probably the most startling thing about the country is that it is not particularly religious. The percent of Orthodox Jews is surprisingly low.

Yet when the Sabbath begins on Friday evening, the entire country closes up shop, the buses stop running, construction is ceased, and ships wait in harbors with perishables to be unloaded.

One Saturday, he was riding a bicycle through Jerusalem and suddenly he found himself being stoned for his actions. Except for an occasional flying rock, Pete described the city as being "a dead-end town than Appleton." In summation on the topic of religion he says that "if there is any religion at all it is nationalism."

The people of Israel are driven by a great desire to become economically independent. This is an incredibly difficult problem because of the large numbers of people coming in and the small amount of natural resources.

Pere says that "The land is ripe for something to be done, and as you are working you get the feeling of building a country."

Lawrentian in Central America: Missing for Two Months, Our Man Checks In

(Friday, November 15, 1985 - XCXI - NO. 7)

After neglecting to furnish any notification as to his whereabouts, Lawrentian staff member C.J. Laing finally checked in from South America, where he studied with the first group of Associated Colleges of the Midwest Students to go to Costa Rica. The following is part of what he had to say.

"As I sit down in a filthy, run-down barrack-type room, the torrential rainfall pounding the thin tin roof, my thoughts travel back to Lawrence. Not really. What I'm really thinking about is the angry Lawrentian editor who has not yet received one article from his foreign correspondent in Costa Rica. But next week he can expect the first in a series of reports entitled: "CONTRA FOR A DAY: The Last Extermination Terminator Ninja Dragon Rescue Mission III." (Video to follow shortly.)

Yes, the room described above does exist, and I am residing in it for six days. I am living on a large farm in the northeastern part of

I Got My Name From Rock and Roll Cool like me

It happens all the time: someone comes up to me and goes, "Brad (or Dude), how do I get cool like you?" And naturally I reply, "Dude (or Miss), you can't possibly be as cool as me. But I can help you be more cool than you are right now."

With that I hand them a pamphlet, which contains the following content:

So, you want to be a cool person. Well, I can only help your coolness factor in the area of music. Why? Because, compared to stylish dress and good conversation skills, music is both the easiest form of coolness and the most superficial.

First go out and buy the entire Radiohead catalog, minus the singles. Yes, buy Pablo Honey (the one with "Creep" on it); it will come in handy when you need to talk about how anyone can play guitar (trust me, that is a joke only to the truly cool).

Also, you need two copies of Kid A. One is the normal version and the other is the limited edition one that is like a children's storybook. For Amnesiac you only need the limited edition one that is like an old library book. Have you noticed that limited addition equals coolness?

Well, so do import copies. Imports are just like normal CD's except they come from far-off lands like Germany and England. In fact, sometimes you can just own an import copy of a band to be cool.

Now, The Strokes are too popular to be cool, but if you own the import copy of their album (yeah, the one with the leather glove covering a bare butt) you avoid being trendy and become cool.

Also, you need to find bands with weird names like Super Furry Animals, Gorkys Zygotc Mynci, Shalabi Effect, or any other name that is more than three words or contains at least one symbol (Prince does not count). Now, you don't have to like these bands, just reference them a lot and say that you like them.

Next on the coolness list: become a musician. No, not a violin player; I mean a person with a guitar or piano (a computer works, too). Now, write songs.

It doesn't matter if they are good or not, just write them. Then either perform them in a coffeehouse or, better yet, buy a four-track recorder and record them. Make tapes for your friends. This will make them think that you are really cool and that you are really talented no matter how bad your music is. (See? I told you the songs didn't need to be good).

After that, you need to start voicing your opinions about music. If you work at a place

No opposition between security and freedom

by Eric Lanser
Letter to the Editor

According to Benjamin Franklin, "Those willing to give up a little liberty for a little security deserve neither security nor liberty."

What they don't know is that they will get neither. Freedom and security are not opposing interests, but different aspects of the same relationship: the proper relationship between civilized men.

Freedom does not mean "freedom from the facts of reality." No such freedom is possible. Such a freedom would require the freedom of man's consciousness from reality. Or rather, the freedom to have one's wishes rule reality.

However, A is A; reality won't conform to wishes. It is man's consciousness that must submit to reality. In the words of Francis Bacon, "Nature, to be commanded, must be obeyed."

In a political context, freedom means freedom from other people. This does not mean that one needs to be isolated on a desert island in order to be free. Your interactions with your grocer, professor, or friends are not a detriment to your freedom.

In these situations you are free to deal with people on your terms, by your consent and by theirs - if they are willing to offer it. The only way to violate such consent is to interact with them or their property by physical force.

Stealing the grocer's produce, changing your professor's grade book or plagiarizing his work, and sneaking away your friend's video game are all instances of force. They are examples of acting without consent, of violating individual freedom - of using force, even if no violence is involved.

Buying a product from a grocer, learning from a professor, and discussing philosophy with a friend do not hinder one's freedom because you and they are free not to trade, not to communicate, and not to converse.

Security means safety from force. It means that one's freedom from force be protected. When and if someone violates your freedom, the government retaliates against those who initiated force.

Security means freedom not to interact with the thief next door, the marauding army across the border, nihilistic terrorists who care only for destruction, or arbitrary police power. It means that one's person and property are secure from the initiation of force.

Freedom and security, then, are intimately related. Either is meaningless without the other. "Complete freedom" in a state of anarchy is no freedom at all. The biggest gang is "free" to force you to do their bidding.

"Complete security" in a totalitarian state is no security at all. You are not secure from the initiation of physical force by secret police that will make you do their bidding.

Security is necessary for freedom and freedom is necessary for security. Each simply addresses a different aspect of the same relationship: the voluntary relationship of man to other men.

Properly construed, security and freedom are never opposed, in either theory or practice. The requirement of freedom and security is the same: rule of law. This means that the power of the government, the power to use legal force, is restricted to retaliation against those who initiate its use.

Such retaliation must be delimited by objective laws in order to keep individual police officers or would-be tyrants from using the coercive power of the government to violate individuals' freedoms and hamper their security.

For instance, police must have a reason to search your property or to arrest you. This is the basis for the legal principle of "probable cause" and the necessity of search warrants.

However, this is no impediment to security. It would be a waste of time for officials to arrest someone without any reason for doing so. Police power, under such a system, is not arbitrarily used but subject to objective laws and standards of evidence.

These principles apply to every imaginable area of the supposed conflict between security and freedom. Surveillance of e-mails should require a warrant or at least probable cause. No one should be made to report to the INS or any other government agency without proper evidence linking one to a crime.

The government has the unique responsibility of administering the use of force. Its use must be constrained to retaliation according to objective principles of law. Only under such circumstances are security and freedom possible.

Cell phones are for cool people

by Mike Lee
Guest Columnist

When I was taking dinner the other day at the grill, I noticed a lot of people seem to have cell phones.

Not only that, but they use them. I mean, it's not like junior high, when I had a pager but it was only for looks; people actually are making the most of their investment in these handheld icons of popularity.

While I was sitting there, waiting for my food (by myself), I couldn't help but feel insignificant; it was like nobody wanted to talk to me. I had been observing another girl talking on the phone while she was ordering and then after she had received her food as well.

How much more important could you be? I mean rather than be able to devote her attention to the cashier for a minute, she had to talk to someone on her cell phone. The call was so urgent that it was necessary for her to be rude to the cashier!

This isn't the only place people are cool either. When I was driving to the store the other day, I saw a man talking on his phone in his car; he had to have been important.

Not only was he dressed in a business suit, but he was in the middle of a very important phone call - so important that he was willing to jeopardize not only his life but the lives of others as he drove down the street.

But what really impressed me was that he could not even pull over and talk on his phone. He had people he had to talk to as well as places he had to go.

Now I have class a lot, and I keep busy, but I am not so important that I need to be talking to someone on the phone in every second of my spare time.

Then again, I don't have any friends. I do have one friend, Steve Rodriguez. He has a cell phone. He is cool. I rest my case.

"How much more important could you be?"

Cell phones are for orphan-killers

by Peter Gillette
Editorials Editor

Every time you use a cell phone, a piece of you dies. You become a tool.

Maybe you're okay with being a tool. You are not alone. I heard that in Asia and Europe even more people have cell phones. Therefore, people in Asia and Europe are tools. I'm not sure about Oceania.

Every time you sit in the grill talking about your personal life and what so and so did whenever or when you play solitaire on your phone even though you already have a palm pilot, every time you text message (or leave your instant messenger on overnight, for that matter. Who died and made you so important?)...

A piece of yourself disappears, since you are so easy to get a hold of.

Let's say it's Friday night. You are at Perkins. You're supposed to go to a party, a guy says, and you forgot. But before you leave Perkins, the waitress comes to ask you if you wanted dessert.

You are on the phone to me. The waitress waits. And waits. And waits. You are at table five. A starving, runaway orphan child sits at table six. Because you talk to me when you should be conducting a perfectly normal business transaction, a piece of that orphan dies.

Because you let a piece of you die and him die, you are a homicidal tool.

Because you check your messages before each class, you're deluded. What could you possibly do about such a message while you are in your class? I know you. Trust me, you aren't that important.

Mr. Lee ought to remember that no one owning a cell phone is worth his friendship. People who use cell phones and spend 95% of their time on the LU campus are morons.

You pay 30 bucks a month for a carcinogenic piece of plastic. You make me sick. Get out of my sight and go to Radio Shack, you loser: they're called walkie talkies.

"Trust me, you aren't that important."

New SOUP programming shows promise with big names

SOUP has long been the target of grippers across campus. We hope, though, that those who were quick to criticize SOUP will also be the first to thank them for landing Ben Folds for a concert April 8.

After a great deal of surveying, SOUP discovered that many students would prefer a "big name" over a bevy of college-circuit folk musicians.

Not wasting time, the Big Event committee set to work under cloak of secrecy and started polling students on their favorite "big event." The overwhelming choice was Ben Folds, one of the most engaging performers on today's circuit.

And so, SOUP hitched their wagons and LUCC funding to a star, and managed to land him.

To grab a spot on a multi-platinum artist's schedule barely two months in advance requires discretion, tenacity, financial commitment, and skilled planning. That Folds comes to LU immediately following tours of Asia and Australia speaks to a major campus-planning coup, for our benefit.

Beyond thanking SOUP, students ought to be vigilant about buying tickets for the Folds concert as soon as they become available. Even if you are not a Folds fan, rest assured the concert will catch your fancy in some sense.

Also, if the student body fails to buy tickets promptly or at all, the event will become merely a mecca for Midwest Folds fans.

To pack the chapel to the rafters with Lawrentians would send a message to SOUP: "Thanks, and keep it up."

This year, however, SOUP not only brought us Folds but also Lewis Black. Black was a big event in his own right; that our small campus should be lucky enough to receive two big events is a credit to smart planning and hard work.

Appreciate Ben Folds, thank SOUP, and grab your tickets as soon as they become available. It doesn't get much bigger than him.

LU locks betray mixed midterm messages

by Courtney McNamara

After reading Peter Gillette's column detailing the "schedule" of a typical student during reading period last fall, I did what any self-respecting Lawrence student would do: felt really guilty for a few minutes, and then proceeded to complete as little work as humanly possible for the rest of the weekend.

However, I would like to issue a charge to my fellow Lawrentian regarding the upcoming midterm reading period: feel guilty no longer! Why, you ask? Because the Residence Life department and campus security have declared reading period an official vacation!

This might seem to directly conflict the brightly-colored memo you may receive in your mailbox from Dean Gajewski and the rest of the Academic Services department, but I assure you that it's true. If we were supposed to stay on campus during reading period, do homework, and meet with our advisors as that memo would lead you to believe, why would they lock us out of the dorms?

LU res. halls are only locked 24 hours a day on two distinct occasions: during Celebrate or Octoberfest, or on official campus holidays such as Thanksgiving and Spring Break, the purpose being either to keep townies or students out, respectively.

Therefore, I propose to you that either we should consider reading period a time when the safety and security of student property is at risk from invading townies (in which case you should leave campus anyway), or we are entitled to view it as an official break during which we are supposed, even required, to leave campus.

As the latter option seems both more plausible and beneficial to me personally, I'm inclined to assume that "reading period" is merely a code word for "holiday during which any studying is absolutely forbidden by the command of Amy Uecke and Lawrence security."

Until the front doors to all of the dorms on campus remain unlocked during reading period, I will treat these short few days in the way that Residence Life and campus security continue to endorse—as a much-needed vacation. Hey, I hear Northwest Airlines is having an airfare sale...

'Fight' for our right to party

by Robin Humbert
Guest Columnist

Many students on campus are very upset over strict drinking or partying guidelines the administration have instated, claiming that we are responsible students and can handle less rigid restrictions. Such restrictions include the Delta Tau Delta fraternity being put on an extra term of probation, the necessity of a "party permit" when hosting more than a small number of friends at a gathering, pesky RLA's and noise violations, and the ever so popular Code of Student Responsibility (as given in the Student Handbook).

These restrictions may seem outlandish, and students are willing to argue with anyone who will listen to diminish part or all of constraints given by the administration. However, complaining will not work. That is why some concerned students have taken action. They write articles in popular campus newspapers, consult with administration members in meetings, and lastly, but most importantly as it seems to be the most popular choice of protest, is to blatantly break the rules given.

Within the past few weekends, some students have chosen to be martyrs, and defy the administration. There was a fire alarm pulled in Sage Hall two weekends ago, along with a physical fight involving a Lawrence student and an Appletonian. The incidents were not isolated, as a student found it righteous to throw a chair from the student union over the footbridge this past weekend. In addition, every year there are many students who resist alcohol awareness, by being rushed to the hospital for alcohol poisoning.

These protesters' activism may be well intended; but unfortunately, in reality they do not exemplify responsible, caring, individuals to the Appleton community or our administration.

I say, keep fighting! I want to have fun, and the defiant students are the ones who know how to produce an enjoyable charismatic atmosphere. However, as fun loving as these students are, their bold tactics of breaking the rules and then begging the administration for more freedom, while claiming to not be the rabble-rousers, seems to be a failed attempt. A different approach may to lay low for a while, and really show how mature we as a student body really are.

Joseph McCarthy: man behind the myth

by Danielle Dahlke
Staff Writer

Joseph McCarthy, famous for his role in the Red Scare of the 1950s, is more than a name etched in American history textbooks. This man, as many people in the community know, was a native of the Fox Valley.

Although the former senator is remembered for adding "McCarthyism" to the English language, few people are aware of how humble his beginning was during the early half of the last century.

The first McCarthy - Joseph's Irish grandfather, Stephen Patrick - settled in Grand Chute a decade after the first homestead was built in the city of Appleton. (For those unfamiliar with the area, Grand Chute is where Wal-Mart and the Fox River Mall are located).

Joe's father, after his marriage, built his own farm and eight-room clapboard house on what is now referred to as McCarthy Road. There, the McCarthys raised cows, horses, and chickens, and also grew corn, hay, barley, oats, and cabbage.

On Nov. 15, 1908, Joe was born, the fifth child of Tim and Bridget McCarthy. Under care of a stern and rigid father, he grew up learning all the fundamentals of farming. His parents, also advocates of a good education, sent him to Underhill School, a one-room schoolhouse, which he attended until eighth grade.

After losing interest in education, Joseph made an attempt at entrepreneurship. With $65, he fenced off an edge of his family's property and started his own chicken farm.

Beginning by selling cases of eggs to local stores, McCarthy soon became successful and drove as far as Chicago to market his poultry. He owned 2,000 hens and 10,000 broilers (young chicken) at his business's peak. His photo graced the pages of poultry magazines, and he emerged as an authority in disease, marketing, and feed.

At age 17, Joe came down with a serious case of influenza and was forced to stay in bed for days. Left in the hands of careless neighbor boys, his chicken farm was swept by disease, and a large percentage of his stock was lost. After the disheartening event, he lacked the enthusiasm to rebuild, and sought other career options. As for his social life, McCarthy was a man of contradictions. Although he regularly attended community functions such as square dances with the other McCarthy children, he is remembered as being nervous in the company of the opposite sex. No "ladies man," McCarthy was frequently referred to as shy, awkward, ugly, and introverted.

Ironically, he has also been labeled a handsome, hyperactive, outgoing, daredevil, and extroverted. He went so far as to drive his brother's motorcycle into a corner at the age of 13 and broke an ankle in the process.

Whether he was truly popular or not, we may never know. Nonetheless, his social standing wasn't a hindrance in his finding a career.

McCarthy eventually became manager of a grocery store, and decided to go back to school after realizing the lack of opportunity in such a position. He entered high school as part of an accelerated program while continuing to work. After graduation, he held various other menial jobs, and was eventually accepted into Marquette University of Milwaukee.

After receiving a degree in law, McCarthy ran for senate in 1945. Soon after, he began giving his infamous communist-hunting speeches. He claimed to possess the names of 205 communists that were members of the State Department, and he held hearings on television with a nationwide audience.

In the 1950's, McCarthy emerged as one of the most controversial and ultimately feared men in Washington, D.C. At the time, he was labeled by reporters as "the worst senator ever," and "historical half-truths" became known as McCarthyism.

After his political downfall, McCarthy led an obscure life until his death on May 2, 1957, at the Naval Medical Center in Bethesda, Md. A week later, services were held at St. Mary's Catholic church here in Appleton. He was buried on a bluff overlooking the Fox River.

Lindert: Be cool like Brad with a stereo, put your music on and let people know that it is your music (this does not mean the stuff you recorded, but if it is you get extra cool points).

A prime place for this is a coffeehouse, because cool people hang out there and will agree with you. Also, people who want to be cool hang out there too, and to be cool they will pretend that they know what you are talking about.

But it doesn't matter, because it's only a coffeehouse. To be truly cool you must up the exposure a notch.

The next step to being totally cool is getting on the radio. Now people who aren't in the same city as you can find out how cool your music is and by association how cool you are.

On the radio you can talk about how cool the bands are and how cool you are for listening to Sigur Ros and The Velvet Underground. (See how cool I was? I just dropped some band names).

And finally, if you still don't think you're cool enough, get a rock column in a paper: any paper. Heck, if you wanted to, you could create your own paper. Then when you write an article use a Wilco song lyric as your column title. And have your image be John Stamos, because, remember, the '80s are cool, so you will be cool too.

Truesdell's Red Hawks subdued again

by Anthony J. Totoraitis
For The Lawrentian

The most recent notch in the Ripon/Lawrence rivalry clearly shows that Lawrence is on its way up in the MWC. LU Men's and Women's Basketball teams both handily defeated the Red Hawks in front of a boisterous home crowd. Once again, Dean Truesdell's alma mater was unresponsive in the clutch.

For many years in the esteemed

Midwest Conference, Lawrence was not considered a powerhouse. Little or no respect was given to Lawrence's athletes, who concentrate on studies first. The Vikings garnered little attention. Those days are clearly over in the MWC.

Lawrence has thrust itself upon the athletic scene without sacrificing any of its highly respected academics. This is very hard to do in a small school setting. Many schools in the conference are struggling right now for equilibrium.

Illinois College recently built a large new athletic facility and now has little money for its academic departments. Ripon is cutting departments, as it does not have the funds to support a teaching staff.

At times when others are falling in academics, Lawrence has stayed the course. Now Lawrence is asserting itself on the field, too.

In basketball, both men and women are particularly hot. The men have a one game lead on Grinnell, and the women are winners of six of their last seven.

Men's Hockey is in contention for conference, despite a disappointing weekend against Marian.

The baseball team is looking for another quality year behind head coach Korey Krueger.

Men's golf is scorching behind Jeff Henderson, Blake Nelson and the Orth brothers. Last year the women received the all-sports

Midwest Conference Champions.

This recent surge of athletic prowess must be from the brilliant recruiting job of the head and assistant coaches. Recruiting classes are getting bigger and more talented.

With this new depth, experience will come in a few years. Lawrence will maintain this recent success as long as our coaches keep up their hard work. Credit the players for their drive for excellence and hard work.

LUC: Brokaw not to be used for future student housing

greater detail next week when the council will also vote whether to pass the legislation. DeLaney encouraged council members to speak to their constituents during the week to determine student sentiment on the subject.

An important issue regarding student life was also announced at the meeting. Megan Brown, of the residence life committee, announced that Brokaw Hall will not be used for student housing next year.

Dean Nancy Truesdell explained that Brokaw had never been intended for use as long-term housing for students and with the new dorm, it will no longer be necessary.

Men's B-ball: Super season sustains success

John Tharp took a time out and gathered his Vikings around to try and stop the Redhawks. Whatever Tharp said in that huddle worked, because the Vikings came out playing like they had against Ripon in the first game.

The Vikings stormed back to tie the game at 60, and when Chris MacGillis hit a beautiful spinning lay-up in the lane to put the Vikings ahead 62-60, they wouldn't relinquish the lead the rest of the way.

The Redhawks would continue to pressure the ball and hit three pointers down the stretch, but the Vikings hit 13 of 14 free throws in the last two minutes to hang on and sweep the Redhawks for the first time since the 1982-83 season.

The Vikings were led on the floor by junior guard Nenahlo. He scored 21 points for the Vikings and connected on 11 of 12 free throws in the game.

Brendan Falls had 17 points, including going six for six on free throws in the game.

Braier was huge on the boards as he outdid his point total by two. He had 15 points and an amazing 17 rebounds.

With the win the Vikings remain on pace to win their first MWC Title since 1996-97. The Vikings are in first place with a game and a half lead on Grinnell.

The Vikings will be down in Illinois this weekend taking on Lake Forest and Illinois College.

Another game the Vikings will be watching closely takes place Saturday afternoon.

Grinnell will be hosting Ripon in a game that could determine who will be fighting the Vikings for the top spot over the last two weeks of the season.

Game time for the Vikings is 7:30 p.m. at Lake Forest Friday and 4:00 p.m. at Illinois College on Saturday.

LU Women: Vikings rise into fourth place

down the right sideline and stopped on the baseline. She put up an 18-foot jump shot and nailed it to put the Vikings ahead 67-66 with 2.4 seconds left. Zarecki stole the ensuing inbounds pass and the Vikings pulled off the upset.

Porrata was the player of the night for the Vikings. She finished with a double double with 22 points and 11 rebounds. Getzoff added 12 and Jetel added 11 for the Vikings.

With the win the Vikings move to 7-4 in the MWC, good enough for fourth place. Ripon falls into second place at 9-2. The Vikings are in line for the fourth and final playoff spot right now, but still have five games remaining.

This weekend they will take on Lake Forest, who the Vikings defeated on a Getzoff buzzer-beater earlier in the year and Illinois College who is one game behind the Vikings for the final playoff spot.

Game time will be 5:30 p.m. Friday at Lake Forest and 2:00 p.m. at Illinois College Saturday.

LU Swimmers place second in Wisconsin Private College Championships

The Lawrence University Swimming and Diving teams both took second place at the Wisconsin Private College Championships this past weekend here at Lawrence. Look for a complete review of the meet, including news of a national qualifier and a preview of the MWC Conference meet in next week's Lawrentian.

Viking Pucksters crushed by Marian

The Lawrence University Men's Hockey team lost almost any chance of winning the MCHA title this past weekend, dropping games to Marian 8-2 and 11-4. The Vikings trail Marian by three points in the standings.

Friday night the Vikings fell victim to the fast-paced scoring attack of the Sabers. Marian scored two goals in 30 seconds in the first period, and added the eventual game winner only a minute and a half into the second period. Andy Link's goal brought the Vikings within one, but the Sabers scored the next five goals. Matt Melchiori added the final Viking goal.

Saturday night the Vikings started off by taking the lead early.

Paul Melchiori scored only a minute and a half into the game, but Marian soon struck back. Two goals in 30 seconds gave the Sabers the lead. The Vikings responded with Danny Schroeder's goal on the power play, but again Marian scored two goals and took a 4-2 lead into the first intermission.

The Vikings pulled Daniel Ljung and put in Dan Pfeiffelman, but it wasn't enough to stop the Sabers. They scored the next six goals, and then another three after Andy Rozanski's goal for the Vikings. Schroeder added his second goal late in the third period, but it wasn't nearly enough.

The Vikings will host a non-conference series against Hamline University this weekend at the Appleton Family Ice Center. Face-off is 7:00 p.m. Friday and 2:00 p.m. Saturday.

Viking Grapplers drop two to WIAC Foes

The Lawrence University Wrestling team dropped two

WIAC duel matches this past weekend. Friday they lost 20-15 to UW-Whitewater and Saturday they lost to sixth ranked nationally UW-La Crosse.

Winning matches for the Vikings on Friday were Ric Scannel, Ben Dictus, Mark Schmoll and Noah Plavansky. Saturday only Scannel had a win.

The next match for the Vikings is this weekend when they travel to compete in the Wheaton College Invitational.

Indoor Track sprints to good finish

The LU Indoor Track team finished well at the Carthage College Invitational this past weekend. The women finished fifth, while the men placed in 11th.

Leading the women was Sarah Slivinski. She placed in four different events, with her highest finish being second in the 200 hurdles. Other high finishes for the Viking women included Shelley Ebert placing second in the 600; the 1,600 relay and the long distance relay also took second place.

Kolade Agbaje-Williams led the men. He broke the meet record and fell just short of the LU record in winning the triple jump. He also narrowly missed the LU record in the long jump; he took second. The Vikings next meet will take place next weekend as they compete in the UW-Stevens Point Invitational.

Vikings of the Week

TIFFANY PANNIER
SWIMMING

Tiffany Pannier placed in three events to lead Lawrence University to second place at the Wisconsin Private College Championships last Saturday. Pannier, a junior from Salt Lake City, Utah, won the 400-yard individual medley in 4 minutes, 59.88 seconds. She also grabbed second in the 200 IM in 2:21.78 and took sixth in the 200 butterfly in 2:29.89.

KOLADE WILLIAMS
INDOOR TRACK

Kolade Agbaje-Williams won one event and placed second in another at the Carthage College Invitational last Saturday.

The Evergreen Park, Ill. native shattered the meet record in the triple jump when he jumped 45 feet, 6.25 inches, breaking the previous record of 44'6" and coming up 3.5 inches short of Lawrence's school record.

The freshman also took second in the long jump with a leap of 22-11, which also broke the meet record, but he was edged for the title in the event by Henry Holmes of Aquinas, who jumped 23'0.5". Agbaje-Williams' jump was an inch short of Lawrence's school record.

Agbaje-Williams also ran to 14th place in the 400 in 54.81 seconds.

Around the Bases

Not just cricket anymore

By the time this column is printed, the 8th Cricket World Cup will be just a day away.

As an aside, this columnist would like to point out that it will be the first World Cup he has not been able to watch on television for 20 years. He is justifiably not pleased about such a situation.

But back to the subject at hand, i.e., the tournament itself. The Australians are the clear favorites to defend their title, with South Africa touted as second favorite.

An interesting statistic that works against the South Africans is that no country has ever won the World Cup on home soil.

Whether the South Africans succumb to the jinx remains to be seen, of course, but even they have acknowledged that Australia is the team to beat.

Of more pressing note, however -- and this is an issue I commented on a couple of weeks ago -- the English team has officially submitted a request to ICC World Cup Technical Committee requesting that their match in Harare on Feb. 13 be moved to South Africa for safety and security reasons.

This comes on the heels of New Zealand asking that their match in Kenya be moved to a safer location. New Zealand is also looking at possible legal options if the ICC turns down their request.

Once again I assert that the venues should be changed, and not just because of security and safety reasons.

Naturally, the safety of the players is the primary concern in such a situation, but there is also the question of recognizing the realities on the ground.

If the ICC chooses not to move the matches, it will send the wrong signal to the cricketing world, that the governing body of the sport does not care about its players and their concerns.

The ICC must therefore be most judicious in the handling of this issue, and put the interests of the game and the players before its own interests.

Vikings continue to soar

LU sweeps Ripon for first time since 1983

by Andy York
Sports Editor

The Lawrence University Men's basketball team continues to soar toward a Midwest Conference championship after sweeping two Illinois teams this weekend and defeating rival Ripon Tuesday night. The Vikings defeated Knox 80-70, Monmouth 86-56, and Ripon 78-72.

Friday night against Knox the Vikings showed their supremacy over the Prairie Fire. While the score may look close, it actually was not a close game. The Vikings easily led at the half 36-23, and cruised in the second half as well.

The lead got cut to seven points as John Tharp played the end of his bench for the rest of the half, but the Vikings were never in danger of losing the game.

The Vikings had four players in double figures, and were led by Chris Braier. The freshman phenom had 16 points and also had 10 rebounds for another double double.

Jason Hollinbeck had a great game for the Vikings, scoring 18 points. Rob Nenahlo had 15 points, in what would be a warm up for the Ripon game for him, and Chris MacGillis rounded out the Vikings in double figures with 11.

If Friday's game was too close for you, then Saturday was more like it for Viking fans. The Vikings had defeated the Scots by 35 the week before, and the Scots were trying to avenge that loss. It didn't happen.

The Vikings got on top early, and rolled in the second half as they cruised to a 30-point victory.

The closest Monmouth ever got was 16-12, and then the Vikings just put them away. By the half Lawrence had jumped out to a 47-23 lead. It just got worse for the Scots from there.

The Vikings went on a 25-10 run to begin the half, and they achieved their biggest lead of 39 points with a score of 72-33. The end of the Viking bench saw the most action they have seen all year, and the Vikings ran away with an 86-56 victory. It was the second largest win the Vikings have ever achieved over the Scots, with only the game the week before being larger.

The Vikings only had three people in double figures, as most of the starters and role players did not play much in the second half. Quentin Herring had his best game as a Viking, scoring 14 points. Braier added 13 of his own along with nine boards in only 16 minutes on the floor. Hollinbeck rounded out his weekend with 10.

So that set up the crown jewel of the season: the Vikings hosting rival Ripon. The Redhawks still remembered the crushing 79-64 defeat the Vikings put on them at Ripon on Jan. 11. It would end up being a back and forth battle, but the Vikings would prevail in the end.

The first half was a seesaw battle between two of the better teams in the MWC. Each team jumped out to a six-point lead at one time during the first half, but no one could hold the advantage.

Scott Landish led the Redhawks. He had 15 points at the half for Ripon, but the Vikings had shut everyone else down. The Vikings had spread the ball around as is their typical fashion, no one player dominating the way Landish was. At the half Ripon clung to a one point lead, 34-33.

The Vikings came out and set the tone immediately, as the first shot of the second half was a Nenahlo three pointer. The Vikings parlayed that into a 9-0 run to start the half, but they knew that wouldn't be enough against the potent Redhawk offense.

Ripon would come back, and did. With 12 minutes, Josh Glocke hit a three pointer to tie the game at 48. It was only the beginning of the Ripon onslaught. The Redhawks continued to outplay the Vikings over a six-minute stretch, and with 8:18 left Ripon had its biggest lead of the second half at 58-53.

Jumping into the hunt

Women's B-ball sweeps trio of MWC opponents

by Andy York
Sports Editor

The Lawrence University Women's Basketball team is cruising up the MWC standings after another great weekend. The Vikings defeated Knox and crushed Monmouth this weekend and upset first place Ripon Tuesday night.

The Vikings got off to a good start on Friday against Knox. The Vikings immediately jumped all over the Prairie Fire and took an 11-0 lead. They built on that and went into halftime with a 30-17 lead.

The second half would be no less of a Viking domination as they stretched their lead up to 23 points with the score being 61-38. Coach Amy Proctor got the end of her bench some playing time and the Vikings cruised to a 70-50 victory.

Freshman Claire Getzoff led the Vikings with 22 points. Jenny Jetel had her best game of the season with her first career double double. She had 14 points and 10 rebounds. Jetel would have an even better game the next afternoon against Monmouth.

Just like the men, the Viking women got on top of the Scots early and just kept going. Jetel scored the first nine Viking points, a good start to her best game yet as a Viking.

The Scots scored seven early points, but then were stalled by the Viking defense and they couldn't even creep into double figures until there were just under two minutes left in the half.

The game went from being tied at seven with 17 minutes left in the half to being a 42-9 Viking lead with two minutes left. The half mercifully ended for the Scots with the Vikings ahead 48-13.

The Scots mounted a comeback in the second half, but it was too little too late. The Vikings pushed their lead up to as much as 37 points early in the second half, and they cruised down the stretch to a 71-49 victory.

Every single player who got into the game scored for the Vikings. Jetel had a career game for LU by scoring 17 points. Ashley Stanton had her best game of the season as she added 11 points for LU. Felice Porrata added 10 to round out the double figure scorers for the Vikings. For Porrata it would only be a lead-in to the game against Ripon on Tuesday.

Tuesday night the Vikings came out thinking they could upset the Redhawks and it happened. The Vikings came out in the first half with all of the intensity and played good basketball. The Redhawks looked surprised, as the Vikings seemed to stomp all over them.

Ripon didn't have a very good shooting first half, and the Vikings shot well. Less than two minutes into the game the Vikings were already up 10-0 and the Redhawks were on their heels.

The Vikings maintained that lead for most of the first half as Ripon got within six, but the Vikings quickly built it up again. At the half the shell-shocked Redhawks trailed the surprising Vikings 31-22. However, Ripon would be heard in the second half.

The Vikings continued to dominate the game early in the second half. With 13 minutes left, the Vikings took their biggest lead, a 17 point lead on a Getzoff three-pointer.

The Vikings led 50-33, but suddenly the Redhawks were on the offensive. The Vikings began to get sloppy, and Karin Kedrowski took over for Ripon. The Ripon star started to play the point guard slot, and would pull up for an open three-pointer if she had the shot.

The Vikings lead steadily decreased, and then with 4:28 left in the game, Kedrowski hit a three pointer to put the Redhawks in the lead for the first time at 59-58.

From then on the game went back and forth, no team holding a definite advantage. With 24 seconds left Melissa Skurzewski hit a lay-up to put the Redhawks up, 66-63.

Skurzewski was also fouled on the play and went to the line with a chance to bury the Vikings hopes, but a miss and a rebound by Porrata, and the Vikings were back in business.

Getzoff missed her tying three-pointer, and Carla Zarecki was fouled and put on the free throw line. She hit both, and with 11 seconds left the Vikings trailed by one.

Ripon guard Molly Kneip was fouled on the inbounds pass and had a chance to increase the Ripon lead. However, she missed both free throws, and after another rebound by Porrata, the Vikings called time-out to set up the last play.

The play was set up to go to Getzoff, but she was smothered so Porrata took the ball. She drove
