AN ENGLISH-CHINESE BROADCASTING DICTIONARY

Liu, Thin-By Leo, M. A. Morehead State University, 1980

Michael Biel

Director of Thesis:

In my country, the Republic of China, most broadcasting terms used by professionals are still in English. As a native Chinese I feel strongly for the need of having an English-Chinese broadcasting dictionary. This is the reason I decided my thesis's topic.

I have been many libraries looking for the materials I need.

I was disappointed to accept the fact that there was not any dictionary or book available which have been translated in broadcasting terms from English to Chinese, or vice versa.

However I got some Chinese sources from my friends who are working in related broadcasting companies. In the winter of 1979, I have had my translation checked by some professionals in television industry in Taiwan. Since the begining, I have constantly consulted with many Chinese scholars who have had experience in the field of mass communications in the United States.

In translating the terms from English to Chinese of this dictionary I have adopted the principles as follows:

- 1. Using the Original Terms in Chinese:
  Radio 無線電;收音機
  Speaker喇叭;揚聲器
- 2. Using the Official Gazette from the Government Organization of Taiwan, the Republic of China:

Chinese Television Service (CTS) 中華電視台
National Broadcasting Company (NBC) 美國國家廣播公司

3. Using the Public Recognition: Television 量礼

Medium 媒介

4. Using the Translation from General Dictionaries:
Electron 妻子
Style 唱針

5. Using the Technology Term adopted by the broadcasting workers:

Level 標準音調 Stand By 現場安静, 準備開播

6. Translating by Meaning:

Dubbing 西音 Overshoulder Shot 過肩景

7. Translating by Prounication:
Microphone 麥克風
Oscar 奥斯卡

8. Others:

Nielsen Rating System 尼爾生收視享無法 These terms were basically chosen from six Radio-TV textbooks in Morehead State University. I hope this dictionary will doing some contribution to the Chinese broadcasting in the future.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This author would like to express his deep appreciation to his committee Chairman, Dr. Michael Biel; and to his other committee members, Mr. Tom Yancy and Mr. Paul Wright for their guidance and understanding in the preparation of this thesis.

This author would also like to acknowledge the assistance he has received from his wife, Grace, who has made all of this and more possible.

INTRODUCTION

Television, a medium of communication primarily used for broadcasting visual impressions of reality through space, is the most effective means of mass communication known to mankind. After about 80 years of development, television made it possible for millions of people to share a single experience. For instance, about 600 million people saw mankind first set foot on the moon in 1969. The people on Taiwan, the Republic of China, were among the 600 million who shared this experience.

Chinese radio broadcasting started as early as the BBC did in 1922, but television broadcasting was a little later (1962) because of the Sino-Japanese War and Communist rebellion. American television broadcasting is the most advanced in the world after World War II. That is why I came to this country to research on TV broadcasting, and I hope that I will be able to contribute something to the development of the television broadcasting in my country.

Up to the present time, there is no unified translation of Radio-TV terms in Chinese and English (bilingual language). In my country most broadcasting terms used by professionals are still in English. As a native Chinese, I feel strongly for the need of having an English-Chinese broadcasting dictionary, since the Chinese population is the largest one on the earth. And as a major in journalism, I have decided to dedicate my efforts to translating a glossary. Since the Chinese characters are widely used in many countries and areas of Asia, such as: Singapore, Korea, Japan, Hong Kong, etc. I hope this glossary will be a good learning experience for myself, and hopefully it will be doing some contribution to the Chinese broadcasting in the future.

In order to compile this dictionary, I have phoned and written to my friends at Indiana University, Iowa University, Michigan State University, and University of Southern California, asking them for assistance. I have also been to Columbia University, Ohio State University, Southern Illinois University, Temple University, University of Kentucky, and University of Pennsylvania looking for some material from there. I searched in every library I could get in, and talked to everybody who might help me. I have also tried to get specialized dictionaries from my country. I even went to New York trying to acquire more data. I went to the biggest Chinese book store, the TV Library in Broadcasting Museum.

I was disappointed to accept the fact that there was not any dictionary or book available which have been translated in broadcasting terms from English to Chinese, or vice versa.

However I got some Chinese sources from my friends who are working in related broadcasting companies.

In the winter of 1979, I have had my translation checked by some professionals in television industry in Taiwan, the Republic of China. Since the begining, I have constantly consulted with many Chinese scholars who have had experience in the field of Mass Communications in the United States. Miss Chee Chang at Columbia University, Consultant of the office of Bilingual Education of the board of Education of the city of New York. Miss Bonnie Peng at Southern Illinois University, and Miss Tulip Lin at New York Institute of Techinology, both of them have worked in Chinese Television Company. Miss Irene Wang at Columbia University, specialist in instructional itechnology and media.

This thesis is different from others that are written on certain topics. However, doing this work required a lot of research. It gave me helpful knowledges in many areas of broadcasting.

Furthermore I wish to have this thesis published and I hope it will be very helpful to those Chinese students who are interested in Radio-TV broadcasting.
