Grey Area

By Lindsey Clark

Chalkboard erasers

have words living in their folds.

Confined in tight quarters

Descartes is dueling with Keynes

- philosophies of human nature matter not to the question of human existence.

Is it like a dream in there,

where battles rage

while I and you and teachers and students and custodians and little flies that get in the classroom are unaware?

We are tricked by white and black felt slabs dismissing little specks of colorful humanity as dust.
