HARD TIMES IN GERMANY

Mrs. Susan Triedler, who arrived here last week from Berrived here last week from Berlin, Germany, was so overjoyed over reaching the United States safely and being freed from the strain of the war situation in Europe, that she clasped the American flag tenderly in her arms and kissed it again when she arrived at the ranch home of her daughter, Mrs. Korel, south of Deming. The home had been decorated with the Stars and Stripes, since the declaration of war, and it was draped over the

Mrs. Treidler arrived.

Mrs. Treidler says that conditions in Germany beggar description, and there is a terrible shortage in many of the necessities, particularly food stuffs and oils. Money, she says, has practically no purchasing power beyond what the government allows one to buy. Government agents are stationed in the stores and markets, and nothing can be carried away in excess of the small amounts allowed each customer. Many are suffering because of improper nourishment, as even the food which the people are permitted to buy, is lacking in sustaining elements. Noncombatants, who are not regarded as liable to engage in antigerman activities, are being allowed to leave the country in order that the supplies may not be taken from the soldiers on the fighting lines. Santa Fe, N. M., July 2.—The num-ber of graduates from the eighth grade in the rural schools of New Mexico in the rural schools of New Mexico during the past school year shows an increase of forty percent over the total of the previous year according to a compilation just completed by the department of education. Reports from all rural schools show that a total of 1062 boys and girls completed the eighth grade work successfully. If eighth grade graduates of the incorporated cities and towns be added the total of those now ready to enter New Mexico high achools in September is well over 1500. The entire educational working force of the state is now engaged in systematic effort to induce every one of these boys and girls who can do so to go on into high school work.

Estancia Lumber Company Headquarters for All Your Wants

FIRST EPISODE.

It is more than probable that had Henry Marston been born a few cen-turies earlier, the boldness, aggressive-ness, predaciousness, and cold-blooded unscrupulousness which were his most marked characteristics, would have won him a fellowship in the company of Cortez, Hawkins and Drake.

But instead of raiding the golden cities of the Indies and the Spanish Main, he raided the forests of the American northwest. The operations of the Northern Land & Lumber company, of which Marston was president and whose activities he directed and controlled, covered a quarter of the

When President Marston entered the company's palatial offices on an upper floor of the Pioneer building in Scat-tle precisely at ten o'clock as was his custom, his secretary, a human auto-maton named Johnson, handed him a telegram. It was dated at a lumber town in southern Oregon and read:
"McCarthy reports Holmes hard hit by fires and won't be able to cut over ten million feet at outside."

The message was signed "Davidson." Presently Mr. Frasier, who was the general manager of the Northern Land & Lumber company, and Marston's right-hand man, appeared.

"Frasier," said the president, speak-ing with more animation than was his wont—"I think we've at last got Rupert Holmes where we want bim." What makes you think so?" asked the general manager. "I suppose you know, don't you, that we have a contract with Holmes to deliver us 20,000,000 feet of lumber by the thirteenth of next month?"

"Yes," said the other, "I know it."
"And do you know that there have been some bad forest fires in Oregon while you were in the East?"

I saw something of the sort in the Chicago papers," replied Frasier.
"But what have the fires to do with our friend Holmes?"

"Only this," said Marston, unable entirely to keep the elation from his tone, "they've pretty well cleaned him out. That fellow's got something that I'd give a great deal for-something that we've been trying to get for years, and it looks now as if this was our chance to get it."

"Meaning-?"

"The boom rights on the Calapoola" rapped out Marston, triumphantly

"Your plan being, I take it," went on Frasier, "to give him his choice between being sued for nonfulfillment of contract and forced into bankruptcy or of handing over the boom privilege? Am I right?"
"Precisely," said Marston. "It's going to be as easy as taking candy from a child. Take my word for it, Fraster, we've at last got Holmes just where we want him and I'll send him a wire to let him know that we know it-Johnson, take a letter."

"To Mr. Rupert Holmes," dictated Marston, "Klamath Falls, Oregon. Dear Sir :- We have learned with rethat recent forest fires have caused damage to your timber hold-ings on the Calapooia. We trust that your misfortune has not been extensive enough to interfere with the de-livery on or before the 30th prox., of the 20,000,000 feet for which we contracted with you, as your failure to do so would cause us heavy losses in connection with certain export orders. In the event of your failure to comply with the terms of the contract we shall be regretfully compelled, in order to protect ourselves against loss, to insist on the payment of the penalty for nonfulfillment of contract.

"Yours very truly,
"Northern Land & Lumber Company,

Per, Henry Marston, President." In their shrewdness, their predatory instincts, their total lack of commercial scruple and their mercilessness to ward all who opposed them, Henry Marston and Rupert Holmes were amuzingly slike. But there the sim-ltarity ended. Marston had taken his degree at a great eastern university. Holmes, on the other hand, had graduated from the hard school of the northern lumber camps and it had made him, both physically and morally, a hard, hard man.

Rupert Holmes' greed for wealth and power was matched only by his longing for a son-a man child-who would inherit the fortune he dreamed of making and who would perpetuate his

Two years before this story opens

he had married a young southern schoolteacher—a siender, dark-haired, dark-eyed girl—and now she was about to become the mother of his child. His wish was to be fulfilled.

But after a summer, of unprecedent ed dryness came the great forest fires, sweeping across southern Oregon in a roaring wave of flame, and half of Holmes holdings were included in the blackened waste left behind. Still stubborn old Holmes fought hard against the vicissitudes of fate.

The mail which contained Marston's letter reached Holmes' camp on the Calapoola when he was in the shanty which he called his office, conferring with his foreman, a dour and rawboned Scotchman named McClintock, "Just as I thought, Mac," Holmes

"Marston has heard about the fires and he knows that we can' make good on the contract. 'We shall be regretfully compelled' he says, 'to insist on the penalty for failure on your contract.' The lying hypocrite! We're up against it good and hard, Mac, my boy. If we could only get the Indian lands we'd have no difficul-ty in filling our contract," went on Holmes, "but there's nothing doing I'm afraid—not a thing doing,—Hello! what the devil do you want?"

The ejaculation had been caused by the sudden appearance of a youth, one of the camp cook's helpers, who flung himself into the office, panting.

"You're wanted at your cabin," the boy informed Holmes—"the doc told me to fetch you."

When Holmes reached the cabin which stood half a mile above the camp on a high bluff flanking the river, the doctor, a grizzled practitioner, who had spent his life alleviating the lumberland's ills, awaited him.

"Congratulations, Holmes," called the doctor, cheerily—"Your wife has stood it finely."

"It's a boy?" demanded the lumber

'Not on your life," answered the doctor. "its a girl—ten pounds if she weighs an ounce and as pretty as they make 'em."

"I'm so sorry it isn't a boy, dear," whispered Mrs. Holmes feebly, "I know how you had set your heart on having a son. But look, Rupert, isn't she a darling? We'll call her Helen, after our mother."

Holmes' face was convulsed with disappointment and anger,

"D—— you, woman!" he cried, his voice hoarse with unreasoning passion.
"I married you to get a son and you give me this! I wish to heaven that I'd never seen you-I hope that I'll never set eyes on you or your kid

The dark eyes of the wife filled with tears and her face, already drained of its color, turned ashen.

"You ought to be ashamed of your-self, Holmes," interposed the doctor, sternly. "You're behaving like Holmes whirled on the physician in a fury, his arm swung back as though to strike.

"I take no such words from any man," he snarled.

"You'll take them from me," said the other, coolly, looking the blg lumber-man fearlessly in the eye. "Get out of here now and don't return until you can act like a human being."

Holmes went out into the forest and strode on, he knew not where, nor cared. In his blind rage he walked farther than he had imagined, and so, the more quickly to retrace his steps. cided to take a short cut across the property of the Klamath Indians which adjoined his own holdings.

Repeatedly Holmes had endeavored to induce the Indians to part with their iand but always unsuccessfully, for Sleepy Dog, the strong lender of a weak and vacillating tribe, had used his authority to prevent his people from disposing of their birthright.

Entering the Indian village, Holmes made his way through to the dwelling of the chief. Sleepy Dog was sented on a bench in front of his house, dandling on his knee a lusty, bronze-colored papoose.

"What you want?" the Indian bluntly demanded.

"I want to buy some of your land." snapped the visitor.

"No sell um land," the Indian re peated, stolldly. "Keep um for son," and he proudly indicated the papeose, now crowing in its mother's arms.

'Keep your d—d land then," snarled Holmes, and he strode away. Dusk had fallen when the angigiant reached his camp. In the shadow of a bunkhouse a man was skulking.

"Come out of there," ordered Holmes So it's you Dill?" he went on harshly, as he recognized in the cring harshly, as he recognized in the cring-ing figure before him, one Juke Dill, a notorious whisky bootlegger. "D'ye remember," Holmes demanded, "what I told you I'd do to you the next time I caught you selling your rotgut to my men?"

"Let me off this time, guv'nor," the man pleaded. "I won't never come round here no more. I won't even go near the Indians. I'll keep out of the county altogether, Mr. Holmes—so help me God, I will!" Holmes stood staring at the man.

An idea had entered his scheming

"Dill." he said, suddenly, "perhaps I can strike a bargain with you. Come over to the office and we'll talk it

When the bootlegger left, two hours fater Holmes had made his bargain.

"Its risky business for me," said
Dill. "It'll be federal prison if I'm caught-selling whisky to Indians." "Then don't get caught," rasped the big woodsman—"that is up to you."

Holmes' scheme for the tricking of the Indians worked out as he had planned. Early next morning Dill rode into the Klamath village, his saddle bags bursting with contraband. By Indian was gloriously noon every Indian was gloriously drunk and no hand stayed their revels since Sleepy Dog had gone to Portland.

Within an hour the transfer Holmes prepared was signed by e adult Indian with McClintock and Dill for witnesses,

"Now Mac," said Holmes, as they siunk from the village—"this land is legally mine. We'll begin cutting to-morrow. Burn this stinking village before you start the cut."

same day Holmes sent a telegram to Henry Marston at the offices of the Northern Land & Lumber company in Seattle:

"Astonished at intimation per your letter that I will be unable to fulfil terms of contract. Twenty million feet will be delivered your Port Jefferson mill by thirteenth, prox., as agreed. Can you use ten million more at same price?"

Some hours later he received an answer:

"What will you take for the boom rights on the Calapoola?"

To which Holmes replied: "Thousand shares Northern Land & Lumber company stock and seat on directorate."

With ill-concealed impatience awaited Marston's reply. It was brief and to the point:

"All right, come and see me." He had won.

It was the end of the week before Sleepy Dog completed his business with the official head of the department of Indian affairs, whom he had gone to Portland to see.

As the chief drew near home he was paralyzed with horror. The village

And just then Holmes emerged from he forest. He stood with folded arms surveying the old Indian, a sardonic grin upon his lips.

"Holmes," said Sleepy Dog, without heat, "you d——d t'ief,"

At that the fierce temper of the lum-berman broke loose. His right fist shot foreward in a sledgehammer blow. It caught the Indian on the point of the jaw and he went down like a pole-axed steer. In a frenzy of demonlac rage Holmes dragged the body to the river edge and tossed it a hundred feet to the rocks below, where it lay in a widening pool of crimson, Virginia Holmes, though she had not been able to overhear the conversation between Sleepy Dog and her husband. hetween Steepy Dog and her husband, had witnessed every detail of the tragedy. Her decision was quickly taken. She must cross the log jam to reach the other side of the swollen Calapooia and safety with friends. Carrying her child she stole through the trees like a chost. the trees like a ghost.

Near the jam, but screened by a clump of trees from a momentarily awaited explosion, stood Holmes and McClinhourse shout of horror.

"Guid God!" he cried, "It's the meesis and, she has her bairn! Stop her! For God's sake, men, stop her, or t'will be too late."

"Leave her alone, d- her! she wants to get killed let her. It'll be small loss," snarled Holmes.

"It's your ain wife-your own wee bairn, mon!" gasped the Scot, "they're goin' to their deaths."

"Let them," said Rupert Holmes. grimly. Boom !

To the hypnotized watchers on the shore there came the dull rumble of an explosion followed instantly by the crash of rending timbers. The jam had broken, while Virginia and her child were but half way over.

A moment later they saw her come to the surface—saw her throw her free arm over a log and raise her baby upon it. An instant later both were lost to sight in the angry drive of the torrent.

GOWNS FOR SUMMER'S BRIDES

New York.—Many a wedding will oc-cur this summer that was scheduled to occur next autumn.

War weddings have become so much the social pastime that the cynics insist that hundreds of girls are getting husbands who might otherwise have remained old maids.

There is no one class so grateful for these constantly occurring weddings as the dressmakers. They have been on the verge of nervous breakdowns ever since war was declared. They have seen themselves go out of existence, and they have seen good clothes become one of those rare luxuries that are sold at infrequent intervals, like jewels and Chinese rugs.

The dressmakers have doubled and turned on their tracks in trying to get new clothes for the summer and to attract the coin out of the purses of even the economists by presenting a class of costumery that varies from the spring models.

You can well imagine, therefore, that the decision on the part of the brides-elect to have their weddings occur in the summer instead of the autumn is a flag of happiness which the dressmakers cast their eyes In hope.

Even If the brides of this summer insist upon telling each other often and rapidly that they intend to be economical in the purchase of their trousseaux, they at least yield to the temptation to have an extraordinarily good-looking wedding costume for the outfit.

Even though the wenther is warm, there are few brides, even in war-time, who care to relinquish the traditional white satin gown. It must be that each woman-child, from the cradle to maturity, has that kind of bridal frock fixed in her subconsciousdays, she dresses her dolls in white satin to go to the altar; in her school-girl days she giggies and confides to her intimate friends the plan for that sumptuous frock. It may be said that she thinks more of the gown than the man, for she always sees herself at apex of her career as a radiant vision in tulie and satin, slowly approaching a flower-banked altar.

And now that it is wartime sometimes end at the altar almost as soon as they have begun in a corner of a drawing room, the thought of the white satin gown rides triumphant, until it is finally expressed through the skill of the dressmaker.

War-time simplicity, however, rules over peace-time extravagance. One might add that extravagance has been squelched in appearance more than in actuality, for the demure outfit that the brides wear at the summer resorts rom Newport to Coronado Beach has its price, and that price is not low,

There are those who maintain that the heaviness of ivory satin should be substituted by dead white chiffon. substituted by dead white chi These two materials divide all Taffeta has its claimants, but rtistic women know that the stiffgess of this fabric does not lend itself easily to the various ways in which a wedding gown is made.

Crepe de chine is the third choice.

the loose girdling and the attenuated droop of the hem can be gotten through crepe de chine as well as satin.

Once upon a time, ultra-fashionable folk thought that it was high time to adopt some of the primitive methods concerning wedding gowns. They introduced sen green, pale blue and rose-pink into the white draperies. They borrowed from the peasantry of other countries the glittering gold and silver embroideries. They filched from the Italian days of Catherine de Medici the metallic tissues and soft and brilliant tinsels, and they borrowed from Russia the massive laces and deeptoned white and cream velvets. Not content with this, they had subtly woven lace gowns, the patterns of which had been originated for royalty. Doucet once made an entire lace frock dropped over ivory satin, at the cost of $1,200, to be worn by a young girl in Washington.

A thousand dollars was paid for court trains of subtly woven lace, which were caught on the shoulders with diamond ornaments and held out at their extreme length by tiny pages in white satin and Louis XIV hats.

The daughter of a great banker paid $2,000 for a wedding gown of old Itālian tissue, woven with crystals and embroidered in silver threads, with a deep tunic of old French lace that had once belonged to royalty.

These gowns were worn at a time when such prices were considered monstrous, and that was only a few

For the last three years, this extravagant idea of wedding finery has passed out. It is faintly possible that the war may have something to do with this condition, but probably not.

The actual reason for the disinclina-tion of women to use colors is that they prefer white for the wedding day. It is a tradition that dies hard and may never die, No bride of today will consider an extravagant wedding gown. She may pay a reasonably high price for it at a good dressmaker's, but there will be no lavish display of lace flounces, metal underskirts, jeweled court trains or gorgeous girdles.

The Russian influence is still being strongly felt in all wedding costumery, but it is content in expressing itself through the headdress. Every bride has looked for something new in the way of headgear. She has experimented with all manner of crowns, from the coronet of a countess to a copy of the royal crowns that are sufficiently to be placed at British museums.

The rather splendio headdress of the Russian, which is used for court ceremonials by royalty, as well as the folk of the middle class at such af-fairs as weddings, has appealed more to the Anglo-Saxon women than to the French ones,

It came to America via London and has almost become an established fashion in this country. It has taken the place of the bunches of tulle and orange blossoms which the Americans adopted from the French a century or so ago.

It is very satisfying, from an artistic sense, that the clever designer of this senson is making severe wedding gowns, without ornamentation, when they are to be projected against a background of a Russian veil and headdress.

"I have taken three bottles of Tanlac and have actually gained sixteen pounds," was the remarkable statement made by Charles H. Mair of 814 Arcadia street, Colorado Springs, recently.

"For a long time," he continued, "my stomach has been in a bad fix and for the last five years it has given me all sorts of trouble. What little I managed to ent seemed to do me harm instead of good and for the last two years I have lived mostly on milk and toast and even then I suffered from indigestion. Gas would form on my stomach and bloat me up and make me miserable. I was also very nervous and would just toss and roll all night unable to sleep. I fell off in weight from one hundred and fifty-five one hundred and twenty-eight to one hundred and twenty-eight pounds and kept going down and getting weaker every day. When I had taken three bottles I could eat anything I wanted without having a sign of trouble and I could hardly believe it, but I weighed sixteen pounds more than when I started taking it. My strength had increased a hundred per cent and I went back to work and I am never bothered with the trouble any more at all, and can work all day without getting tired. SECRETARY BAKER, AS DEFENSE COUNCIL HEAD, DECLARES $3 IS EXORBITANT.

NO POWER TO FIX PRICES

SECRETARY OF NAVY DANIELS WILL BUY FOR GOVERNMENT AT $2.33 AT MINES.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.

Washington, July 2.—Secretary of War Baker, as president of the Coun-cil of National Defense, repudiated Saturday an agreement fixing a tenta-tive price of $3 a ton for bituminous coal reached at a conference here Thursday between coal producers, Secretary Lane, a member of the Defense Council, members of the council's coal preparation committee, and the Federal Trade Commission.

Neither the council nor its committees, Secretary Baker said in a letter to W. S. Gifford of the council, has power to fix prices. He added that the price of $3 at the mines suggested for bituminous coal is "exorbitant, un-just and oppressive."

Secretary Daniels, another member of the council, earlier in the day said the agreement would in no way affect coal purchases for the navy. The navy he said, will continue to buy from the mines at $2.33 a ton, leaving a price to be determined after the Federal Trade Commission has ascertained production costs.

In his letter to Mr. Gifford, Mr. Baker asserted that he believed no members of the Defense Council disagree with him as to the limitations on the powers of the council and its committees and as to the effect of the action taken. The fact that the conferences were attended by mem-bers of the council and of the trade commission, he declared, gave no le-commission, he dectared, gave no le-gality to the agreement.

The price-fixing agreement was reached after 400 operators called here by the coal production committee had adopted resolutions authorizing their committees to give assent to such maximum bituminous prices as might be named by the secretary of the interior, the Federal Trade Commission and the coal committee

NFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save many of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. There can be no danger in the use of Castoria if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher as it contains no opiates or narcotics of any kind.

M. E. LADIES' AID

The Ladies' Aid of the M. E. church met at the home of Mrs. Lipe with ten members and one visitor present.

Plans were made to have an ice cream social at the parsonage on next Tuesday night, July 10th, on the lawn. The lawn will be all lighted with Japanese lanterns, and the best of ice cream and cake will be served. Everyone should patronize us as we are working hard to improve our church. We have the calcimining and carpet and $40 of the work all paid out, and not half through yet, so we would ask a liberal patronage as there are so many things needed and so few to do the work. Next meeting will be with Mrs. Armstrong.

WHY YOU ARE NERVOUS

The nervous system is the alarm system of the human body.

In perfect health we hardly realize that we have a network of nerves, but when health is ebbing, when strength is declining, the same nervous system gives the alarm in headaches, tiredness, dreamful sleep, irritability and unless corrected, leads straight to a breakdown.

To correct nervousness, Scott's Rmulsion is exactly what you should take; its rich nutriment gets into the blood and rich blood feeds the tiny nerve-cells while the whole system responds to its refreshing tonic force. It is free from alcohol.

of the steamboat?" asked the teacher.
"What things might not have happened If the steamboat had not been invent-ed?' she hinted.

"Well,' answered little Johnny, who had been called on, "well, um-m-a, Co-lumbus might not have discovered America."
