The Old Capital is guite proud of the victories achieved at the Las Vecas educational meeting. The capital secured the annual convention over Alamogordo, Tucumcari and other towns that made a bid for it. A Santa Fe high school girl won the gold medal in the oratorical contest against six competitors. Santa Fe men were given places among the officers of the New Mexico Educational Association, and Santa Fe delegates took a leading part in the discussions. The Educational Association should establish its permanent headquarters in Santa Fe as it contemplated doing several years ago. The majority of the delegates at that time favored Santa Fe as the annual meeting place, but upon promises of delegates from another place, that if the contention met with them the following year, they would see to it that after that the Associanowhere else, the teachers will find HENRY F. # IN THE CAUSE

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.) When Dorothy Wait found her way to the second floor of a certain old brownstone house in High street, in answer to an advertisement in the morning paper for a young woman secretary of good family, she was too impatient to notice the sign in gold letters on the door.

"You understand typewriting?" the woman at the mahogany desk asked her, peering over the top of her goldrimmed eyeglasses. "And you could take charge of correspondence and simple accounts?" she continued.

"Yes," answered Dorothy, furtively glancing at the dull green hangings and tasteful and expensive furnishings of the room, wondering the while what sort of business could be carried on in such unbusinesslike surround-

"Of course you wouldn't mind making tea for the members?" Miss Tinker asked again-for indeed it was no less than the distinguished clubwoman, Bernadine Tinker, with whom Dorothy was talking.

"And you could begin work tomorrow?" went on Miss Tinker. "Yes, indeed," answered the young woman eagerly, for she was in need of the work. "Hm-m," meditated the distinguished woman, "and how are you on the suffrage?" "On the what?" asked Dorothy politely. "On the suffrage, woman suffrage," said the other hastily.

"Oh," exclaimed Dorothy, "I think it is very nice. That is, I don't know much about it, but-"

Miss Tinker removed her glasses altogether and scrutinized the young applicant. "I think I could find out about it, if you want me to," said Dorothy. "Yes," said Miss Tinker with affected weariness. "Of course we couldn't employ any one but a suffragist. You had better post yourself last month. When it came time to brew the afternoon cup of tea for any time you want it," said the young Miss Tinker and Miss Walker, and man, as he watched her read the the others. Dorothy looked in vain for a knife to cut the lemon.

"I can't cut it with a pen or a hat pin," she thought, helpiessly, and then seen, "I never even read that parashe asked Miss Tinker for advice.

"Just go and ask them at the Blue Pencil club. I am sure one of the men up there will have a knife. Men always carry knives." Dorothy's eyes looked protestation.

"Shall I just walk right in?" she asked. "Won't they think it strange?" "Strange!" echoed Miss Tinker. "Why, it is just a club of young newspaper men. They are really very obliging."

Dorothy timidly went door of the Blue Pencil club, which occupied the floor above the Suffrage

There was a young man-Robert Bayne, it happened to be-comfortably sprawling, book in band, before the fire in the club sitting room. He jumped to his feet as the unexpected guest pushed open the door.

Dorothy was apologetic and embarrassed, and blushing a little as she took the knife the young man offered her; and he in turn was also embarrassed and laughed at her confusion, not unkindly.

"You needn't bring it back again," he said. "I'll come for it when I want it." And after she had left, he wondered idly over his book why on earth women wanted the suffrage and thought, idly too, that the sort of stmid blue eyes he had fust seen didn't exactly agree with his idea of a thoroughgoing suffragist.

When Robert Bayne called for his knife the next day he looked with increasing wonder at the gentle blue eyes and the delicate curve of the pretty mouth.

"Are you really a suffragist?" he asked bluntly.

"Oh, yes, indeed," said Dorothy. remembering Miss Tinker's instructions. "Indeed I am. Every one is who understands the subject. Won't you take some of our pamphlets?" she asked as she handed him an assortment of brilliantly printed pam-

Of course, Robert Bayne had to call the next day for his knife, and after interpreters. that he found, on his frequent visits to the Blue Pencil club, some cort of excuse to stop at the suffrage rooms The result of it all was that within two months it was quite obvious, though neither Dorothy nor Robert had spoken of it to the other, that there was really a remarkable bond of sympathy between them, and except for the question of woman's suffrage, which they never discussed, Robert was sure they were two of the most agreeable and companionable people in the world. Then suddenly Robert Bayne's visits to the Blue Pencil club stopped. and, poor Dorothy, without really thowing why, found herself very veary of the long hours she spent at the Suffrage club rooms.

One day Robert did come back to the Blue Pencil club and, just as he was trying to pass by the rooms on the second floor without going in, he encountered Dorothy on the stairs.

"I suppose," he began, when he had followed her into her office, "that it did seem rather abrupt for me . to leave without saying anything about it." He looked at Dorothy's gentle passed over the pretty lips. "You did tant is still calling them horseless carmiss me a little, Dorothy, didn't you, riages.

"Oh, but that was different, Dorothy," said the young man impatiently. "Don't you understand? I'd do almost anything for you-anything but that."

Robert sat for a few minutes in dejection at Dorothy's side, watching her fingers as they tried nervously to address a pile of envelopes that lay before her. Then he rose and came to her, "I've got to do it," he said very solemnly. "I don't know how I can, but I'll manage somehow. I'll make any sort of a fool of myself you want me to, so long as you will marry me. Dorothy we were made for each other from the beginning of time and there's no use trying to get away from Dorothy had given a little gasp and now turned to look at the unhappy man beside her. "I don't see why you need make a fool of yourself. Robert, or why it is any disgrace to want to -to marry me."

"Oh, it isn't just marrying a suffragist, it's the other part-having to here. give up my career, and go into politics, and fight for a cause I don't care about. It's that, Dorothy. It seems as if I simply couldn't; but I suppose that's the penalty I have got to pay, if you'll let me-

"Why, I don't see what you mean," said Dorothy, with tears in her eyes. "I think you are making fun of me." Robert had taken a well-worn pamphlet from his pocket and handed it to the girl. "Here it is," he said, pointing to a clause in heavy print. "It's that blessed pledge of yours. It has kept me awake nights for the

"I'll give you my solemn promise clause.

"Why, Robert," said Dorothy, with the sweetest smile Robert had ever graph before. I'm not a really, truly suffragist, you know-if you'll marry me."

A Snore Strangler Invented. Countless thousands who have been compelled to lie awake nights and listen to olfactory organ recitals by sleeping relatives and neighbors will rejoice to learn of an invention which promises to make snoring a lost art. "The Anti-Snorer" is the name of the little device which guarantees to make the most noisy face soundproof.

It is designed to fit any set of features The new invention is a great advance over the custom of slipping a clothespin on the nose of the offending sleeper. It consists of a strong piece of netting which incases the chin-after the face has been folded up-and which is held in place by straps buttoning across the top and behind the head.

This neat little arrangement prevents the lower section of the face from coming loose during slumber and shuts off the leak through which most of the noise escapes. The device can be tightened or loosened to suit the comfort of the wearer, but it cannot be adjusted without help. This will make married women a bit cautious about buying it because of a fear that their husbands would refuse to come to their assistance when they wanted to remove the halter.

Chinese Dialects.

Dialects of China are so diverse that people from one province are unable to understand those from another. Among the educated classes common ground is found in the official language of Pekin. But not so among the trading classes. A Chinaman from Pekin and another from Kwantung who find it utterly impossible to communicate their thoughts to each other by speaking their respective dialects, often make themselves underbroken English. "Long ago," said the young woman stenographer, "the chief threw out a strong hint that I'd be a great comfort to him if I kept the vault in perfect order. He said it never had been done. That was my cue for working toward approval and incidentally an increase in salary." The stenographer sighed. "The first hat I wrapped up carefully and put into the vault. second I stuck into an old bandbox. The seventh and eighth I jumbled into a bag. For six months those packages were moved from one side of the vauit to the other. Sometimes they were on the floor and sometimes on the shelf-always in the way. But I pictured to myself the gratitude those men would show when I brought out their hats the next seabon, scarcely used and as good as new."

The collector grinned. "Did they wear them?" he asked. "No; still, they wouldn't let me throw those hats away. Finally I put Mr. Wolcott's hat on Mr. Barker's desk. Mr. Barker had no scruples about getting rid of it. A cast-off hat of Mr. Barker's I put on Mr. Hammond's chair-I didn't have to do it twice. This method I pursued systematically until there wasn't a superfluous hat left."

"You are a deep, designing woman." The stenographer shook her head, and continued. "Just your mentioning Christmas makes me shudder. Last year, for weeks before Christmas, mysterious packages kept arriving and had to be stored in the vault. My real trouble, however, began after Christmas. What do people mean by giving such presents as they do? Look at the cushions on that settee. Regularly, I have to rip off the covers, take them to the cleaners, bring them back and sew them on again."

"What would you have the chief's friends give him?" The stenographer scowled.

wouldn't have them give him fancy calendars that have to be adjusted every morning-"Hang a monthly calendar in his office and stop fussing."

"Is that a joke? Look at the walls in his office. Is there space on them for even a postcard? I had the photographs of at least thirty of those men framed for him and the clerk in the picture store acted just as if he court." thought I was making a collection of matinee idols. After the office was repapered the janitor and I hung pictures at the rate of one a minute.

"I noticed that you put the three ballet girls in the darkest corner and that you had the picture of the Johnson-Jeffries prize fight framed in black."

"Look at the chief's desk," said the young woman stenographer with a deepening sense of injustice. "That portfolio holds two sheets of paper and two one-cent stamps. The silver rim of that fancy blotter has to be mended weekly. No store in Chicago keeps the right-sized leads for those fancy pencils. I've tried 'em all. The only thing that lavender notebook holds is dust. Who gave him that fountain pen? Every time he uses it I feel as if I ought to put on a rain coat and stuff my ears with cotton.

"For eleven months a perfectly good shelf in the vault has been used for his missit Christmas gifts. Yesterday he sent them to his country home and today when I looked at the perfect order of the vault I began to have hopes of more salary, but the chief went Christmas shopping today -and here's the boy with your hat!'

Out of the Dim Past. The Roman theatrical managers had told Seneca that his dramas, while showing unquestioned ability, were unfitted for the stage. "Are they?" he said, with a broad
