SPEECH OF REV. H. G. MILLER

DECORATION DAY SERVICE
OF KNIGHTS PYTHIAS AND
G. A. R. MAY THIRTIETH

At the request of the EAGLE Rev. Henry G. Miller has prepared for publication his speech delivered at the Decoration day service of the G. A. R. and Knights of Pythias, held at the Congregational church Thursday evening May 30th. It is an unprejudiced portrayal of northern valor and southern chivalry, places credit where credit is due, and may be read with feeling of pride by every American.

Comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, Brother Knights of Pythias, Ladies and Gentlemen:—At a meeting of the Second Continental Congress held in Carpenter's Hall, Philadelphia, just after the Battle of Lexington where the "minute men of '75" met the "red coats" and sent them back to Boston; and the Battle of Bunker Hill, where the "Knightly" Warren christened the American soil with his blood in the name of Liberty; Richard Henry Lee the grand uncle of the Cavalier Commander of the Army of Northern Virginia, Gen. Robert Lee; one of the delegates from the old Dominion; rose from his seat, and exclaimed: "henceforth we must no longer be Virginians, or Marylanders or Carolinians, or Pennsylvanians, or New Englanders, but all be "Americans." In that spirit I trust we meet together to-night—Americans! all of us. Americans, whose hearts throb, not for a particular State or Section. Whose love for the country, and the Stripped and Starry Banner, is such that we glory in the name, American, no matter from what section of the Great Empire we hail.

Our Annual Memorial Day is charged with heart stirring memories. The boys and girls that were born in 1866, the year after the close of the war are now 35 years of age. A new generation that has come on the stage since Grant said to his fallen but noble foe. "Let us have peace!" To this new generation the day is only an occasion of flowers, of music, of parade or a holliday.

But to the fathers and mothers it is vastly more—it is pregnant with heart stirring memories. Never to be forgotten scenes crowd themselves upon them. The exciting and stirring discussions in Congress, and on the hustings before that long and desperate struggle. Vivid, is their recollection of the shot fired at Sumpter and the flag; and which roused the nation, from Maine to California. They remember the call to arms. Again they see, the hurrying forming ranks of men, as they come from city, town, village and farm. Again they see, the brave but tearful mothers, wives, sisters and sweethearts, as they watch and wait along the line of march; and with aching hearts, cheer their loved ones on the road to duty. They remember the long, lonely waiting at home. The hardships of the camp. The dusty wearisome march. The shock and bloody barbarism of the battle. The heart breaking loneliness of the hospital and prison. To those whose memories are filled with pictures like these, Memorial day has a meaning, a depth of pathos about it, which others cannot measure.

How our memories recall those days! We were yet boys. How we saw the boys, the youth of our towns and villages filled with youthful enthusiasm, with springy elastic step, atheletic bearing, bright eye, in full health and vigor; march down our cities' streets, keeping step to bands playing, "The Girl I Left Behind me," or "Garryowen." Every one of them anxious to be at the front to defend the starry flag.

Look at some of those boys now. The few feeble, gray haired men who march in the annual procession to do reverence to their comrades, who in that terrific conflict kissed the soil they loved, and baptized it with their lifes' blood. Look how:—

"Thin grow the ranks!—A few worn weary men,
With the white spray of age upon each brow,
Come in sad memory of those far off days
When they marched gayly where they falter now.

"A few are left! how short has grown the list!
We call it tenderly with bated breath.
Lest from our ranks should fade the noble band
To answer the roll-call of the ruler Death.

"Few, few are left! The ranks grow thin and wide
Apart as the dim armies of the past;
Silent and slow they come, who once
Their conquering forces on the foeman cast.

"Only a few, with weak and faltering tread,
And for a little while their march they keep
O'er the rough ways of poverty and age
To bivouac grounds of rest, so green and deep.

"Thin grow the ranks! In silent camp they wait,
Who shared those hours of victory or defeat;
And marble sentries guard the sacred spot
Where war-worn heroes rest in slumber sweet.

"So few are left! Where are those gallant ones
Who led the conquering band to victory,
Who out of darkness brought the light of peace
And set a race of suffering people free?—"

"So few, but ah! The golden fruited years
Have scattered memory's blossoms on their way;
And a glad nation comes with thankful heart
To tell its love on Decoration Day."

It does us good occasionally to pause and think. To consider how much the flag, with its untorn folds, and its ever adding stars has cost in treasure and blood.

On the other hand it is a great joy and matter of thanks giving, that the bitterness between the sections engaged in that conflict has died out. That the arts of peace have united in real fellowship, and interest all parts of our great republic. It is a delightful fact we have learned to respect and love—yes, even to prefer one another. Can we not rejoice that the president, who himself was a comrade in arms for four years, has chosen for the regular army two men who had been conspicuous and successful generals of the Confederacy, That an officer attached to the staff of Genl. Lee has been selected by the Grand Army of the Republic, to deliver the Memorial Oration at the Tomb of Genl. Grant.

For years it has been a delightful experience on part of some comrades, of posts who visited the city of Richmond. In order that they might revisit the scenes of those dark and bloody days; to receive, the warmest greeting and most generous welcome, from the members of the camps of Confederate Veterans in that city. What transformation time has wrought! The impact of battle has become indeed the embrace of fraternal love.

When the Grand Army of the Republic met in Louisville, Ky. in 1895. Henry Waterson speaking the words of welcome said:—"It is with a kind of exultation, that I fling open the gateway to the South. I bid you welcome in the name of the people whose voice is the voice of God. You came and we resisted you; you come and we greet you; for times change and men change with them. You will find here scarcely a sign of the battle, not a reminiscence of its passions. Grim visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front; and which ever way you turn on either side, you shall encounter as you pass those moldering heaps which remind you of your valor, and travail only the magnanimous spirit of dead heroes, with Grant and Sherman, and Thomas and Logan looking down from the happy stars, as if repeating the words of the Master: "Charity for all; Malice towards none." We, too, have our graves; we too, had our heroes! all, all are comrades now upon the other side, where you and I must shortly join them. Blessed, thince blessed we who have lived to see fulfilled the Psalmists prophecy of peace:

Peace in our quiet dales,
Made rankly fertile by the blood of men;
Peace in the woodland, and the lonely glen,
Peace in the peopled valus.

Peace in the crowded town;
Peace in the thousand fields of waving grain;
Peace in the highway and the flowery lane;
Peace o'er the windswept down.

Peace in the whirring marts;
Peace where the scholar thinks, the hunter roams;
Peace, God of peace, peace, peace in all our homes
And all our hearts."

On this Memorial day, with its mingled pathos and exultation there ought to be kindled in all our hearts a patriotism of that high and noble kind, which gives sympathy and appreciation to all alike. To every one who loves the name of America, and loves her liberty.

On this day of American glory, as the old scenes rise before us; as we are thrilled and moved, by which our eyes have seen, and part of which we were. Let us remember that in that drama, all the actors were Americans. The heroic deeds were the outgrowth of American valor, and thus only can it be one of our Nations Holy days.

The character of a people is unconsciously expressed, in the memories they cherish and the deeds they celebrate! The river boats on the Potomac, as the glide beneath the shades of Mt Vernon reverently toll their bells As their music peals over the chamberdust of the Father of his Country, they proclaim to the world, that the memory of Washington can not die. America has had other deeds to remember as sacred since Washington led his uncomplaining heroes starving and barefooted across the snows at Valley Forge. History has stretched forth her sacred hand and carved the names of other immortals. On the sacred scrol in blazing letters and high above every other name is the name of America's best beloved son, the greatest American of them all: Abraham Lincoln There are names from the Northland, and names from the Southland. Ulyses S. Grant, William Tecumseh Sherman, Philip Henry Sheridan, Virginias's noble son, George H. Thomas. The pride of Illinois, John A. Logan. The Christian Soldier, Oliver Otis Howard. The invincible sailor from the Mountains of Tennessee, David Glasgow Farragut. The fearless Yankee Skipper, Andrew Hull Foote. And may we not add, for they also were Americans; The noble soldier of the Confederacy—"The chevalier sans reproche et sans pareil" Robert Edward Lee. And the great Puritan Chieftan, America's Cromwell, Thomas Jonathan Jackson! I might add scores of other names, all, like these noble. But time forbids me to call the roll; all of whom have honored and made lustrous the name American. And as often as the circling year brings us into the season of flowers, we rejoice to do reverence to our never to be forgotten dead.

In all our studies in nature, one principle is always applicable, namely: The outward and visible, are the expression of something antecedent, and unseen. A flower, a plant, a tree, compels us to infer an antecedent, something of which these are the utterance. In the same method the external world, leads us up to the necessity for the Infinite. We infer God, as living out himself in the great exhibitions of the universe. Throwing out the golden spray of multitudinous worlds, to the weight and rush and throb of his own wonderous nature. Spontaneous life being ever the proof and outflow, of spontaneous love. By the same method we understand the history of mankind. We look for the ideas and impulses of which actions and events are the expression and effect. Neither in nature or history can anything, isolated or viewed alone, give adequate account of itself. Lose sight of this principle, nature becomes incoherent and mindless, while history seems purposeless, whimsical and capricious.

Without considering this principle, the terrific war through which our country passed nearly forty years ago, becomes merely a strife, without sanctity in its sacrifices, glory in its achievements

FROM ANGUS.

(Bonito Valley Items.)

Correspondence.

With the many people from abroad that are spending their summer outing in our rugged mountains, and the large increase in interest in mining matters are making it pretty lively times on the Upper Bonito, and her interesting lateral canyons. There is joy in the mountains boys, in this summer land, that is a poem.

Our people are agitating the question of voting $1,000 in bonds for a new school house, and there is likely to be a stiff opposition to the measure which, however, will probably carry.

During Supt. of schools, A. Ridgeway's administration the lower part of the district was by consolidation, moved so far from school house that they receive no schooling and they now feel that they were hoboed out of their rights and for that reason they are opposed to being taxed to supply the upper end of the district with such an expensive building. They say they would better have two school houses for the same tax.

Dear Sir:—I enclose you $1.50 for one year's subscription to EAGLE.

I notice in EAGLE Mr. Lund's general invitation, to the world, to attend a grand Fourth of July Ball at Hotel Ozanne.

Please tell him that owing to a previous engagement to attend a barbecue picnic, given by the local lodge K. P. here, it will be impossible for us to attend.

Am glad to see by your paper that your section is prospering.

We are all well, but it is mighty hot in Alabama compared to New Mexico. We often sigh for the cool mountain breezes of White Oaks.

Wishing the EAGLE success and prosperity and with kindest regards to all our old friends,

I remain,
Yours truly,

The rail road base ball team camp 28, has arrived. This promises to be one of the most interesting games our boys have ever played, as some of the nine have been league players, and the chances are that they haven't forgotten much yet. Drying preparations simply develop dry catarrh; they dry up the secretions, which adhere to the membrane and decompose, causing a far more serious trouble than the ordinary form of catarrh. Avoid all drying inhalants, fumes, smokes and snuffs and use that which cleanses, soothes and heals. Ely's Cream Balm is such a remedy and will cure catarrh or cold in the head easily and pleasantly. A trial size will be mailed for 10 cents. All druggists sell the 50c. size, Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N. Y. The Balm cures without pain, does not irritate or cause sneezing. It spreads itself over an irritated and angry surface, relieving immediately the painful inflammation. With Ely's Cream Balm you are armed against Nasal Catarrh and Hay Fever.

SPEECH OF REV.

H. G. MILLER.

Oh be swift my soul to answer him
Be jubilant my feet!
For, our God is marching on."

To them,—

In the beauty of the lilies
Christ was born across the sea,
There was a glory in his bosom
That transfigured them indeed.

They sang:—

As he died to make men holy
Let us die to make them free,—
While our God is marching on."

The battle, was God's! in which he marshaled his mighty forces of the future, and hurled them against the entrenched forces of the past.

I should dim the glory of your noble comrades, our nation's heroes;

"Who from western plains to ocean tide
Have made our ransomed soil their grave;
The Four hundred thousand men,
The brave, the good, the true
Who! In tangled wood, in mountain glen,
On battle field, in prison pen
Lie dead for me and you."

I should dim the lustre of their glory, should I assume that the war, was simply a conflict between the great sections of our beloved land. A conflict between the sturdy, loyal North and the fiery, enthusiastic, impetuous South. It was not that. The question involved in the conflict, State Sovereignty, Secession and Slavery, prominent as they were; were only the pivotal points on which the future of our American civilization was determined. The time had come to advance. The great clock of progress had struck the hour when civilization must take step forward, toward human liberty and equality. The war was the necessary result, of the law of progress. A law higher than any legislative statute, higher even than the national constitution. It was therefore inevitable. The contending forces were, tradition against progress; civilization against life. The past had met the future. When the bannered hosts of the future appeared on the horizon, dim and far; the past threw up intrenchments and flew to arms. The future was new and lacked experience. The morning dews of youth glistened upon its brow. The past was venerable and mighty. The past was a twice told tale. The future was a new evangel. A gospel of glad tidings. Yet a gospel that must be first proclaimed from the lips of men, with tongues of fire. The past was a century grown. It was adamant. The future was fluid. At first a feeble stream; it became a river; the river widened and deepened; it became a Niagara and resistless; this resistless flood, met that immovable adamant, and when the cataclysm of blood and tears had passed, six hundred thousand graves marked the passage of insatiate death. In the seven sky above, however, floated the flag of freedom and the future. On every crimson strip, and in all its glittering field of stars, were emblazoned the promises of larger liberties that were to be.

It is a severe limitation to say, the North conquered the South. Nor is it true. The thinking man must affirm, that the future conquered the past. Napoleon on Egypt's sands, could say nothing more inspiring to his soldiers than this: "Soldiers forty centuries look down upon you from those pyramids." When your comrades were dying in the trenches before Vicksburg: When they were engaged in that terrific death struggle on Cemetery Ridge; when they were falling at the rate of eight thousand an hour at Cold Harbor; when Hooker was leading his men to death above the clouds on Look Out Mountain; when they held each other, in death's embrace at the "bloody angle" at Spotsylvania; it was no thought of the storied past that nerved them to do their duty, and laugh at death! It was the ineffable omnific inspiration of the future. Faith in the right! Hope in its Triumph and love for God and humanity.

With what burning enthusiasm the soldier fought, is illustrated by an incident at the Battle of Nashville.

Genl. Thomas, had ordered Gen. A. J. Smith to capture a battery situated on a prominent hill. It was a daring undertaking. Genl. Smith and Genl. Thomas, watched the charge of the troops across the field under the heavy confederate fire. Genl. Thomas remarked, "General," "I see your men are struggling somewhat"! The defence of the hill was magnificent; The assault fierce and resistless! Brave men were falling by the score. Gen. Smith made no reply, but watched with bated breath every movement; every falter; every advance. The sweat was rolling from his face, his whole body was in a quiver. The daring men of the 13 corps reached the summit of the hill. They mounted the Confederate battery; there was a short hand to hand struggle; and the anxious Commander strained his eyes to see the result. At last, a fierce yell rolled across the fields, and the stars and stripes were seen to wave above the battery,—and then with his face aglow, he turned to Genl. Thomas, and said, "yes general, they do struggle a little, but they fight like h—l."

No friends! It was not a section of our country that triumphed over the other section. It was the strong arm of the Almighty. A battle is deaths toll gate across the way of progress. And the soldier is the prophet that speaks of better days to come, and dies to bring them to pass.

It rejoices our hearts that the spirit of sectionalism has passed into the shadows. We can now speak as brother to brother without stirring the feelings that were rife over a third of a century ago. Those were terrible days, when brother was fated to meet brother and father the son in the pitiless agony of war. To-day there is not a true soldier who wore the blue, but has respect for, and honors the true soldier who wore the grey. We know that braver men never lived, than those who comforted us, and fought us at Shiloh, at Antietam, at Manasses, at Chickamauga, at Atlanta, at Petersburg, at Gettysburg! Comrades, some of you remember that awful July day, and that wonderful charge of "Picketts" division, unparalleled in the world's history! How that day and scene comes before you! The terrific cannonading; the trembling earth; the sudden stillness; the almost oppressive calm, and the hot atmosphere; the overwhelming impression of an impending crash; the long line of butternut and gray, with their red battle flags commingled out from the cover in the distance; the magnificent march at double quick across the open fields; the sudden roar of the musketry, and the awful thunder of the cannon; the final rush; the mingling of yell and cheer, and the deadly impact. Oh! the glorious charge they made.

Brave men and true, they were, who fought and contested every foot of ground all along the bloody pathway from Bull Run to Appomatox. We would dim the glory of our chieftans and those of our comrades whose graves mark the scene of a hundred fierce battles, should we fail to give due meed of honor and praise to the brave sons of the Southland, who laughed at hungers pangs, and trampled obstacles under foot. Their heroism is our heritage. It was American valor. Oh! how the very midst of the bloody strife; the vital spirit of home love, love for the old flag, love of peace and the country reveals itself, and for a time overwhelms every other feeling.

When the army of the Potomac and the army of northern Virginia were encamped on opposite banks of the Rappahannock in the autumn of '62. One beautiful evening a union band began to play, and the tune that was wafted across the river was "John Brown." The last notes had hardly ceased, when a band on the other side sent back the greeting, to the tune of "Dixie." Again the union band responded, with "My country 'tis of thee,"—to which the southern band answer: "Maryland my Maryland." And as the melody was dying, the union band struck up the air which stirs every American heart, "The Star Spangled Banner." Meanwhile the sun had passed behind the western hills and sent his good night kiss to the declining day; and twilight had given place to a beautiful starlight night; when from the distance a third band joined in the music of the night. How sweetly its music was carried on the night breeze! It was the old heart touching melody; "Home sweet home." There was a moment of pause, and then the other two bands took up the melody; and the three bands joined together and made the night melodious and sweet with thoughts of loved ones; mother; wife; child; sweetheart; home.

And now what the result? What new light and life, greeted the vision of the world, when the noise of the battle was stilled, and the smoke and mist had cleared away?

A new and holy civilization had emerged from that terrific ordeal. In her awful travail of soul, Columbia had broken the shackles of human slavery and stood before the world the embodiment of liberty and equality for all. The highest glory of the brave men, whose memories we recall and whose deeds we honor; is, that by and in their death, this was accomplished. In this great fact our brothers and sisters of our beautiful south land, join with us in songs of heartfelt praise. The kindling touch of freedom has come to the slave; and rising from the dust and degradation of centuries; and praying for knowledge, and industriously striving for manhood, he can raise his eyes to the skies, and cry, "Thank God! I too am a man."

The serf has been transformed into a citizen. He has been lifted to that point at least, of theoretical justice, in which are guaranteed unto him his natural rights, to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Thus emphasizing Jefferson's immortal declaration of this country's right to be.

We honor our heroes on account of their bravery and the sacrifices which they made. They illustrated and exemplified the patriotism of the nation. They gave new glory to the starry banner which they loved and followed, and tinged with their blood.

For those reasons we honor the dead. Peaceful they sleep beneath their tents of green. Storms may rage above them, they heed them not. They wake no more to the battles clarion call. Their wars are over. Their strifes are ended. Their conflicts finished. Their glory is accomplished. Beyond the storm and strife they have touched the hem of God's white raiment, and have entered into everlasting peace.

One word for the living! Here I can do best by recalling to your minds, the last sentences of the address, on the greatest battle field of the war, by the noblest American of them all, Abraham Lincoln.

"That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion. That we highly here resolve, that these dead shall not have died in vain. That this nation under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the face of the earth."

SPEECH OF REV.

H. G. MILLER.

or permanence in its results.

And then, there is an uninterrupted continuity, between events, as well as things. Each individual thing in nature implies all the past. Nature delegates to conserving forces the work of storing the past, and reproducing it in the present. The present is the achievement of all the past. Today is the child of all the yesterdays, the parent of all the tomorrows.

As we study history, we discover that qualities, principles alone abide. The men who exhibit them, who live them, pass away. Those spirits; those lives; serve us best, from whom we are farthest removed. Of Washington's life, in its details we know but little. But he is to us, the representative of every man that went into that war, to make this a free and independent country; dedicated to liberty and equality. And of every woman that moulded bullets, and picked lint for her soldier husband, brother or lover. He stands forth as the ideal of a principle. In the same way, by the same process of reasoning we shall be able, to do greater justice to the heroes of our own generation as they recede into the vista of the past.

What is the greatness of men, and of events? The bravery that tramples upon obstacles and smiles at sacrifices? Oh no! Not that! While the courage, and self denying heroism of the volunteer soldier may have been equalled—perhaps has been equalled; there never stood an army under the blue canopy of heaven that has won such imperishable greatness. There have been other wars before the conflict out of which has grown this national day; but no such war for awful bloodshed and tremendous influence on the world's future. Marathon and Waterloo, were meaningless compared with Antietam, Chickamauga or Gettysburg. Bloody battles have been fought, but none in which the baptism of blood involved so much. The impact of these battles was terrific. Fire and steel were in the blood of both armies. It was an American war fought out by Americans. It was brother against brother, and father against son. The soldier who is great, is the soldier who is the exponent of some great and noble cause. Who represents a divine humanitarian principle. As he expresses the life and principle of benefaction to humanity. As his life throbs in love for humanity; as his heart throbs in unison with the great heart of God. In unison with that heart, that suffers, that it may emancipate humanity from bondage. When his heart, thus beats; when his spirit is thus alive, he is great; because he has risen into companionship with the Divine. That soldier never stands alone! God stands with him.

Napoleon once was great. He stood as the representative of France. France stood then, as the embodiment of the humanitarian principles of liberty, equality and order. Napoleon stood as the man who had turned his back upon the past, and trampled upon tradition. In this attitude he became resistless. He was the incarnation of a people that were the embodiment of the future. And when the allied forces of Europe looked upon him they had great cause to fear. Napoleon was the future Incarnate. He became great; historic; invincible. Napoleon withdrew his hand from the divine hand. He narrowed, began to represent individualism, and he receded into the shadows of tradition. When he said:—"I propose and dispose too," he fell. It was not the iron captain of England that crushed him on the field of Waterloo. It was destiny! the future! God! who ever moves onward and forward, and upward.

The soldier need not understand the greatness of his cause or of his deed. He may be unconscious of everything but a necessity. There is a constraint when his heart is afire. There is a drawing impulse when his heart throbs in unison, with the larger heart of God. When his will is in harmony with that vaster will. The great Soldier of Christ, he of Tarsus, expresses this thought: "the love of Christ constraineth us" This constraining power, this divine impulse draws men, they feel it; it impels them, they move forward; it inspires them, they act. This soldier of ours became the incarnation and exponent of this onmoving force. He took up arms and fought, allying himself with a principle that was the heart thought of God himself.

The soldier himself may have been a very common man; I would not say that every one was an immaculate man. The cause and principle he represented sanctifies the man. I would not judge the eagle soaring in his native skies, by the bird that is trailing his feathers in the dust; for then he would be a very common bird. The soldier of ours living or dead is no longer a common man. The principle he represented, and for which he placed his life on the altar, lifted him above the common. He was lifted into the realms of spotless immortality.

The war itself, was the humanitarian principle of the nation in travail. There have been wars between people and nations that were simple a guage of strength. Among the Ancients, the time was, when one champion from each side stepped out on to the battle ground and fought for their respective forces. Nor was the war one of aggression, as was that between France and Germany in 1870-71. Or, for the extension of territory, or the replenshing of of the nations exchequer, like Spain in South America or England in India. No thought of spoilation or trade expansion or spirit of commercialism cast a shadow over that conflict.

It was a contest of ideas; of purposes; of principles; which involved the progress of civilization and the happiness of the race. The thousands marshaled in battle array, stood as the representation of one colossal future creating idea. That army was not simply a multitude of individuals armed for battle. It was the merging of all of them into one terrific mass, that became the arm of the Infinite. It became the force to make way for progress; to open the door to a higher civilization. They were inspired by a vision of the Almighty.

Their eyes had seen,—
The coming of the glory of the Lord
They had seen, Him,—
