Government

Lesson for August 10, 1958

WHEN a preacher tells the truth about liquor from the pulpit, that isn't news. But when a preacher in a New Jersey church took out a bottle of liquor from the pulpit, and told his congregation where he got it, that was news. It was a college town and there were laws closely reg-ulating the sale of liquor, only the laws and the public paid rather less. Preachers aren't supposed to know where illicit liquor can be had: but this one Dr. Foreman did. He made things so hot for the police department that finally he was offered the job of mayorwas offered the job of mayor— and he took it. His congregation gave him a leave of absence, and he went to work trying to get the laws enforced. His enemies made it hard for him. He himself was "tailed" (as the detective stories put it) day and night; if he drove one mile above the legal speed limit some policeman was right limit, some policeman was right there to give him a ticket. But he outlived the embarrassments and he outfought the underworld and he showed that you can have good rovernment if you want it. And then he went back to his preaching again. People listened more than they used to, for now they knew this was a man.

Politics and Religion

A vice president of the United States stepped off the train in a big city. Even a vice president rates at least one reporter, and so there was one there. He asked the V.P. his views on a matter in the public eye at the time, but the high official did not oblige. "I came here," he said, "to speak to a men's Bible class. Politics and religion don't mix." "Politics and religion don't mix" is what every shady character in or on the fringes of politics would like us all to believe. Men who view public office as a chance to build up their private fortunes are only too glad if the church people will look the other way. Religion that is worth anything, religion that resembles and is drawn from the religion of the Eible, is interested in political estions. We cannot esc government of some kind.

Eves to See

Norman Thomas, a Presbyterian who was a sort of perpetual and never successful candidate for President, years ago, was talking to a room full of students for the ministry. "Don't use your pulpit for a political platform," he said. 'If you feel called and impelled to ing, and do your fighting in the political arena." Mr. Thomas was warning against a real danger. It is true that what a minister is tryng to do, and the way he tries t do it, are different from what (let us say) a good congressman is try-ing to do and the way he tries to do it. It is also true that most ministers are not trained in political science and still less fitted for the sort of scramble that most legis-lative bodies are. Nevertheless: the minister, and the church generally, ought to be able to see the moral issues involved in public affairs, problems and decisions. Most "political" questions, local or national, affect human beings; and what-ever affects human beings is a con-cern for all Christians.

In There Fighting

The church, as an organization should never turn itself into a poshould never turn itself into a po-litical pressure group. A church no better than a political party need not be surprised if it receives no more respect than a political party. Nevertheless Christian people, helped by their ministers and their churches, ought to be, and are, in there fighting for better government, juster laws, better law enforcement. In our Congress and Senate there are many con-vinced and committed Christians. At a great Christian men's convention last year the most effective speaker (many believed) was none of the visiting spell-binding preachers, but the Christian govpreachers, but the Christian gov-ernor of the state. Every branch of government can use, and sorely needs, Christian men and women who will try to apply in public affairs the sturdy faith that is in

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemornhoids and to relieve pain—without surgery. In case after case, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (ahrinkage) took place. Most amazing of all—results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"
