
Sectarianism and Shia Politics in Pakistan, 1979-Present

Vali NASR

Édition électronique

URL : <http://journals.openedition.org/cemoti/604>

ISSN : 1777-5396

Éditeur

AFEMOTI

Édition imprimée

Date de publication : 1 juin 1999

Pagination :

311-323

ISSN : 0764-9878

Référence électronique

Vali NASR, « Sectarianism and Shia Politics in Pakistan, 1979-Present », Cahiers d'études sur la Méditerranée orientale et le monde turco-iranien [En ligne], 28 | 1999, mis en ligne le 31 mars 2004, consulté le 06 mai 2019. URL : <http://journals.openedition.org/cemoti/604>

Ce document a été généré automatiquement le 6 mai 2019.

Tous droits réservés

Sectarianism and Shia Politics in Pakistan, 1979-Present

Vali NASR

RÉSUMÉS

The Iranian revolution has left a profound mark on Pakistan's politics in general and the role of religion therein, in particular. The revolution underscored the importance of Islam to sociopolitical change, and provided impetus for Islamist activism. Iran's drive to establish regional hegemony combined with growing Sunni resistance to its Shia characteristics produced sectarian conflict. This conflict has been fed on regional struggles for power between Iran and its Arab neighbors, and competition for resources and influence between Sunnis and Shias in South Asia. The result has been a new form of Islamist politics, one that draws on Islamism in tandem with identity politics. Its force has greatly impacted sociopolitical relations in the region. The more lasting impact of the Iranian revolution in the region has not been promotion of Islamist activism, but deep division between Shias and Sunnis, a sectarian discourse of power, and deepening of social cleavages in the region.