Founder's Day A Blast

Nobel Prize Winner at Ursinus

by Katie Cyr '86

On Sunday, November 7, Bomberger Hall was the setting for Ursinus' annual Founders' Day convocation. There was a good turnout for this year's ceremony, which honored three outstanding physicians.

The featured speaker at the convocation was William Y. Rial, M.D., president of the American Medical Association, who received the Doctor of Science degree. Also receiving this degree were Baruch S. Blumberg, M.D. and Clarence S. Livingood.

Dr. Blumberg, a Nobel Prize Winner, is an associate director of clinical research, senior member of the Institute for Cancer Research. He is also a University Professor of Medicine and Anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Livingood, a 1932 graduate of Ursinus, is the executive director of the American Board of Dermatology and a faculty member at the University of Michigan Medical School. In addition, he is chairman emeritus of the department of dermatology at Henry Ford Hospital, and serves as team physician to the Detroit Tigers baseball team.

During the ceremony thirteen undergraduates received degrees. The program was complemented by two choral selections presented by the Meistersingers, under the direction of John French.

Life in the Fast Lane

by Beverly Bergey '84

While America begins preparation for the celebration of Thanksgiving, many people throughout the world are uncertain as to how they will feed themselves and their families. Starvation and death due to malnutrition are real problems that many countries are faced with today.

This Thanksgiving, Ursinus students can express their gratitude for what they have by doing something to combat world hunger. On November 18, the Thursday before Thanksgiving, the Ursinus Student Government Association would like students to participate in the Fast for a World Harvest. All one has to do to participate is to give up eating lunch on this day. The money that the food service saves will be donated to Oxfam America.

Oxfam America, which is one of six independent international organizations, will use the donations to help alleviate poverty and malnutrition in 33 of the poorest countries of Asia, Africa, and Latin America. However, unlike some organizations, the money will be used to help the people help themselves. This is accomplished by the purchase of tools and seeds for agricultural and economic development

The U.S.G.A. would also like the faculty, staff, administration, and the community to participate. Dave Borgstrom, U.S.G.A. president, is requesting that these individuals fast and donate the money they would have spent on lunch to the Oxfam America fund. Donations should be sent to Fast for a World Harvest in care of Dave Borgstrom, U.S.G.A. president, Ursinus College.

The goals of the fast extend beyond just raising money, for it is hoped that the fast will increase one's awareness of what it is like to go without food, and develop a better understanding of other people and their cultures. Therefore, participants are asked to refrain from eating not just at the cafeteria, but at other places as well.

Not only will the Ursinus community be fasting, but many other schools, universities, churches and community groups across the United States will be involved. In order for the fast to be successful, everyone's efforts are needed. Giving up lunch for one day is a small sacrifice for a worthy cause — Won't YOU please participate?

Tray Contest at Wismer

by Sara Seese '86

Since students are consistently not taking their trays up to the dish counter when they have finished a meal, Dean Richard J. Whatley is holding a contest over the next few weeks to encourage students to clear their tables.

Beginning on Monday, November 15, someone will be by the tray return area handing out numbered tickets at certain times during breakfast, lunch, and dinner. As a student brings a tray in, he will be given a ticket, qualifying him for a prize drawing.

The contest will span a period of three weeks, and the prize drawing will be held on December 6.

Prizes to be awarded include pairs or tickets to the 76'ers game of January 19, 1983, and coupons for McDonald's, Burger King and Rustler's Steak House. Every prize is to be awarded, so there will be a redrawing if there are unclaimed prizes.

Dean Whatley hopes that students will develop the habit of clearing their tables and thus will continue to return their trays after the contest ends.

By conducting the contest on the pattern of K-Mart's "Blue light specials," Dean Whatley hopes to make the contest fun and fair for everyone.

International Accord Signed

The Board of Directors of Ursinus College at its October 22 meeting ratified an international exchange agreement signed in June by Tetsuo Selno, left, President of Tohoku Gakuin University, Sendai, Japan, and Ursinus President Richard P. Richter. Mrs. Richter, right, accompanied President Richter to Japan. Looking on is Shozo Kodama, center, TBU Board Chairman.

Berry Brings About Changes

by Perry Romer '84

During this year, Ursinus College curriculum experienced changes, particularly in political science and mathematics. These revisions centered around a change in the basic requirements for majors in both fields. In a few other majors, change involved only the re-wording of course descriptions in the college catalog.

In a recent interview with department chairman Dr. Nicholas Berry, it was learned that changes in the political science curriculum were initiated after a series of meetings within the department. According to Berry, the department had been seeking "an all-purpose curriculum that would work for majors (political science and non-majors alike.)"

This newly-revised course of study is the result of three important changes. The first establishes the basic 100-level course as the foundation for the major. A second change makes all courses for political science one semester courses. The reason for this is that two-semester courses crowd the semester. Now, instead of having thirteen 200-level and seven 300-level courses, there will be four 200-level and seventeen 300-level courses. "It will make instruction more advanced," says Berry, "and more specific in title." Finally, a third change will give the student more choice in course selection.

In addition to the previous three measures, the department plans to integrate methodology into most of its courses. Berry comments, "methodology alone has no purpose . . . the student has to see its practical application."

Currently, students can choose a concentration in American Government, Comparative Politics, International Politics, and Political Theory. When asked whether increased enrollment will result with the new changes, Berry's answer was that the department could lose a few students because of the "more rigorous courses." His belief that political science prepares students for the widest selection of careers is evident when he says "these new and exciting courses could draw people in." The new political science curriculum will go into effect for the 1983-84 school year.

A similar series of changes also occurred in the Mathematical Sciences. For all majors in mathematics, Computer Programming I will become a requirement. The department will also introduce a new course, 050-110 Precalculus. This course is intended to prepare the student for Mathematical Sciences 111 and 112. These basic changes have not yet been passed by the faculty, but they will be reconsidered by the Academic Council on November 17.

Eclectic Exhibit

by Allison K. Brown '86

Last Saturday, November 6, a new art exhibit arrived in the magazine section of Ursinus' Myrin Library. The theme of this exhibit is "Thread Embossment," a term coined by its creator, Dr. Herbert Appelson. A professor of art at Glassboro State College, he also exhibits his artwork throughout the United States and in Florence, Italy.

In his technique he employs two materials. The first of these is thick white paper which has been uniformly embossed, forming a series of raised dots. He then uses the second ingredient, different colored threads, to "sew stitches" through the ridges, creating interesting and pretty patterns. Varied colors and stitch directions are enhanced by the folding of segments of the paper into geometrical and symmetrical areas.

This artwork is so unusual that any description will not suffice. Therefore, the only logical solution is to actually go and see it! The exhibit will remain on the Ursinus campus until December 3, and all artwork is available for sale.

President's Corner...

by President Richard P. Richter

There once was a college far from here. Its students were bright and it was known for its very competitive academic program. But the dean was worried. A friend from another town had called him about a neighbor whose son was an applicant for admission.

"This young man and his parents came on campus last week and liked it. But they were amazed to see your students walking around the place in the open drinking beer. The parents wanted to know if you're running a party school."

It was the third time in a week that the dean had heard a similar comment. He called in a student leader and told him about the problem.

"Students vaguely know there's a rule against drinking on the open campus," said the student leader. "But it doesn't mean anything. If you could tell them why they shouldn't do it, I think they would be reasonable and restrain themselves."

The dean was a seasoned if not hardened professional. "Words, words, words," he mumbled after the student leader left his office. But as the afternoon sun was turning red in the tower window facing the campus, he began scribbling on his yellow tablet. And this is what he wrote:

"(1) Why? For your own SELF-RESPECT: The college assumes, for educational purposes, that students are responsible adults capable of self-restraint appropriate to a given social situation. Since the college, the townspeople and parents think of outdoor drinking as undesirable, students ought to acknowledge public expectations and modify their personal behavior as a matter of adult self-respect." ("Words," he grumbled.)

"(2) Why? For public SAFETY: Outdoor drinking can result in hazardous broken glass on campus. Bottles and cans, moreover, can become dangerous missiles. Responsible adults ought to oppose the resulting hazards of personal safety." ("Words, words," he muttered.)

3. Why? For your own REPUTATION: Students come here overwhelmingly because of its academic reputation. If students carry and consume beer etc. indiscriminately on the open campus, sooner or later we will build in the eyes of the public a different reputation. The public behavior of students on a campus helps determine and to reflect the prevailing style and value system of the college in question. A college depends for its reputation on a thousand times a thousand events, each in itself insignificant, save for the contribution it makes to the total impression of the place in the minds of many people.

"To a student enjoying a beer in the sun, it might seem absurd to suggest that he can tarnish the reputation of this college and therefore reduce the quality of his own diploma. But quantity can become quality. Multiply the number of students enjoying a beer and multiply the number of times that number of students is observed drinking in the sun, and the reputation will change at some point." (Words, words, WORDS," he asserted.)

"(4) Why? For the sake of the LAW: Authorities have come down on students at colleges where drinking has been considered a special problem. A student at a private college enjoys no immunity. A sure way to send bad signals to the public authorities is to flaunt beer etc. in public." ("WORDS, WORDS, WORDS," he erupted.)

The sky by now was black outside the tower window facing the campus. He balled up the paper on which he wrote and tossed it into the waste basket.

Then he threw open the window and shouted out into the night. "JUST CUT IT OUT!"

He left the office a hardened professional.

The Grizzly was founded in 1978, replacing The Ursinus Weekly, the previous campus newspaper. It is published by the students of Ursinus College every Friday during the academic year except during examination and vacation periods. The Grizzly is edited entirely by students and the views expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those held by the administration, faculty, or a consensus of the student body.

Reviews by Romer

by Perry Romer '84

Did you ever get the impression that Sylvester Stallone doesn't know the meaning of the word "pain?" Obviously that beating he received from "Mr. T." in "Rocky III" wasn't enough to convince the muscular cinematic masochist. Who said the boxing ring was big enough to hold Stallone anyway? Well he's at it again, but this time instead of running for a title through the streets of South Philly, he's running for his life in the cold and unfriendly wilderness of Washington (the state). His new flick is called "First Blood," but after all the bleeding, it's a wonder he has any of the red stuff left at all.

The movie is basically one gigantic chase scene that entails everything from the local police and national guard to an old man whose pack of hungry Dobermans join the chase because they "need the exercise." It all begins when John Rambo, played by Stallone, drifts into a small town in search of a friend from his days as a Green Beret in Vietnam. Rambo doesn't find the guy, but he does manage to find himself in jail after getting on the "wrong side" of the law. On a charge bordering vagrancy and obstruction of justice, Rambo undergoes treatment that reminds him of the torture he suffered at the hands of the Viet Cong.

A "flashback" couldn't come at a better time, and Rambo manages to escape his captors in a flurry of fists and feet ala Bruce Lee. After commandeering a motorcycle, Rambo takes flight to the backwoods hoping the terrain will be enough to deter his pursuers in their trusty old Plymouth Furies. His plan backfires, and the cycle is no match for the large, rocky inclines. Rambo flees on foot despite the sheriff's warning cries that "he won't make it."

But Rambo does make it. After all, he once was a Green Beret, so he does know a little bit about survival. His makeshift garments from canvas and a large hunting knife are his only means of self-preservation. But Rambo never quite gets the chance to catch his breath. He's a study in perpetual motion until he runs out of terra firma. Talk about cliffhangers, Rambo's entrapment on a precipice makes him easy prey in the sights of a high-powered rifle. But his fingers give out before his will to live does, and a hundred foot drop is worth only a broken arm and a few bruises.

Do miracles ever cease? Not in this movie, as Rambo proceeds to take on an entire police force and the national guard. These "weekend warriors" get their first taste of real-live combat against a one-man army. But their attempts are futile when stacked against an expert in the trade secrets of death. The sheriff, however, doesn't heed Rambo's warning "to let it go" when they meet face-to-face following Rambo's ambush.

The struggle intensifies, and when they think they have the crazed vet trapped in a collapsed mine, he is making his way back to town via an Army supply truck. Meanwhile his old commander, who has been called to the scene, looks on with satisfaction as his "boy" wreaks havoc. Rambo places the entire city under siege, systematically knocking out its sources of power. As the town is engulfed in flames, the movie's climax includes the sheriff's death and a melodramatic surrender speech by Rambo as an appeal to the dignity of all Vietnam vets.

"First Blood" makes up with action what it lacks in plot. Stallone had a hand in its production, and the role of John Rambo seems tailored for him. Stallone comes off as a tough, yet sensitive hero in the Rocky Balboa fashion. His commanding physical presence on the screen is not enough, however, and his heavy South Philadelphia accent does little for an otherwise limp script. What this movie may prove is that Stallone has shed the gloves for good to find fresher material and more versatile roles. But if that's his goal, then "First Blood" is a step in the wrong direction. Move over Charlie Bronson, there's a new "tough kid" on the block! Someone give this movie a tourniquet while I give it two stars.

From Bar to Bard

On Wednesday, November 10, Frank E. Fowle, III, "The Bard," ended the fall forum program on a strong note with his recitation of Book XIV of The Iliad to a capacity crowd in Wismer Auditorium.

Dr. John Wickersham, professor of classics, introduced Fowle, who told the audience it was "an honor to be at Ursinus," and dedicated his presentation to unity and justice. Then Fowle proceeded to captivate the crowd with a dynamic recitation of "The Seduction of Zeus," covering the stage like a full company of actors. He was in constant motion, gesturing to the audience and using verbal characterizations to conjure up the Greek gods and warriors.

At the end of the presentation, Fowle invited the audience to an informal question and answer session in the Parents' Lounge. He said the purpose of a bard is to "Keep alive for posterity the heroic period," and feels that "Homer's Iliad and Odyssey are at the foundation of western civilization." His repertoire includes several books of The Iliad, in addition to other classic works.

A graduate of Washington University Law School, Fowle has abandoned his law practice to tour the country, bringing this unusual art form to high schools and colleges. He feels the ultimate fruition of his work would be to appear on Broadway.

UPB Bus to New Market

The Union Board has arranged a bus trip to Philadelphia for this Sunday. The 44-seat bus will leave from the bookstore on Sunday morning at 10:30. It is scheduled to reach the historic New Market section at 11:30. The bus will leave for the return trip to Ursinus at 4:00 from The Gallery, which is about six blocks from New Market near Market and 8th Streets.

The price of a ticket is $3, which goes towards offsetting the cost of Union subsidization of the trip.

Anyone interested in going can sign up with the house manager in the Union.

A positive response to the idea of bus trips to Philadelphia could lead to trips to other places of interest in the city.

Transplanted Texan

by Duncan C. Atkins

With the appointment of Nevada Sen. Paul Laxalt, an ideological ally and personal friend of the President, as head honcho over at the Republican Committee, it becomes apparent that Uncle Ronnie is going to seek reelection. This just goes to prove that Reagan still has the basic instincts of a "B" actor: if you think it will sell, make a sequel no matter how bad the original picture was.

To know Reagan's reasons for seeking reelection, one must know Reagan. You see, in the eyes of Uncle Ron, his disaster of a Presidency is doing America a favor. Ronnie is weaning the State and Local governments of Federal "control," (i.e. bankrupting them), lowering inflation (i.e. creating record levels of unemployment), improving America's defense (i.e. enlarging the federal deficit). In foreign affairs he is taming the Russian bear (i.e. unnecessarily provoking and alienating the USSR). In the world according to Reagan, these past two years have been good for America. "Stay the course," he urged, campaigning for last week's mid-term elections. "Stay the course" to where Uncle Ronnie? To a depression? To an unnecessary confrontation with the Soviet Union? No thanks, Mr. President, I think I'll bolt. "Mr. Sulu set new coordinates, Scotty Warp 9 on my command. Get us the hell out of here."

Nancy Reagan has an interesting point on why her husband should seek reelection. She feels that the Presidency is in danger of becoming a one term job. Aunt Nanc, proving that even the most ignorant of broads do get something out of 4 years at Smith, does have a point. As a general rule, incumbent Presidents have retained office when seeking reelection. There, of course, have always been numerous exceptions, one of the most prominent being FDR's landmark defeat of Herbert Hoover in 1932. Since 1960, however, when Ike retired after completing eight years in the White House, no President has served

White House, no President has served two full terms.

Nice try Nancy, but the only

No Encore, Please

President in the past twenty years, that deserved to serve two full terms was blown away by some bastard madman in 1963. After JFK we've had a succession of duds. I hope America can survive the remainder of Reagan's first term. To make it through another four years of Death Valley Ron would require an Act of God.

Obviously the GOP nomination is the President's for the asking, so our alternative is going to come from the Democrats. Over here we have four possibilities. Walter Mondale is too tainted by his associations with Jimmy the Jack-Ass' Pseudo Presidency and with Hubert Horatio Humphrey's corrupt Minnesota Machine to warrant my serious consideration. Teddy Kennedy is a poor imitation of Bobby and John who at least has the right instincts. Ted's Presidential hopes, however, vanished that weird night that his car went off the bridge at Chappaquidick. Gary Hart, Senator from Colorado, at least as the semblance of a plan but it is really no alternative to Reagan, but rather a watered down, ever so slightly more palatable version thereof. John Glenn still has his hero astronaut image and is reasonably pragmatic, but is as charismatic as a can of pork and beans. So I can honestly support none of the apparent candidates for President.

There is only one thing left to do. I will take matters into my own hand and run for the Presidency on a Dirtman-Lax fusion ticket. I will run an honest campaign . . . I will have beer bashes in the oval office . . . I will save the world . . .

(Editor's note: Apparently at this point, Mr. Atkins left out on the balcony of New Men's Dorm and began shouting "To Arms, To Arms the invasion has begun." Mr. Atkins is resting nicely at Norristown State Hospital and we expect to hear from him again next week.)

(Surgeon General's note: I have determined that soberly considering the future of our nation is dangerous. Don't do it, okay?)

Immersion Excursion

by Regina Cirtella '85

The best way to become more fluent in a foreign language is to spend time in the country of that language. By completely abandoning the native tongue, one learns to speak and think more naturally in the other language.

Birch Hill is a foundation which organizes total immersion weekends in Spanish, German, and French. The experience is designed to make the student forget that he/she is really on a farm in Malvern, Pa. The atmosphere is informal and the student is really able to learn what life in Europe is like. Absolutely no one speaks English during the weekend, forcing the students to forget this is America, the land where everyone struggles to avoid foreign language requirements. Dr. Frances Hoekstra, Founder and Director of Birch Hill, designs the meals, games, music, and group discussions to best accustom the participants with life in the host country. Excluding the "no-English" rule, the meals especially enhance the European atmosphere at Birch Hill.

College undergraduates enrolled in intermediate level language or literature courses are eligible to attend. All students interested in travelling or studying abroad, or simply speaking a foreign language more fluently, should experience Birch Hill. The language barrier is surprisingly lessened and often eliminated before the end of the weekend. The Birch Hill project leaves students more confident and encouraged to speak a foreign language.

This written description of the total immersion weekend diminishes the impact of personal experience. The weekend is rewarding, exciting, and unique.

Frostburg Freezes UC in ECAC Playoffs

by Scott Scheffler '84

This past Friday, the Ursinus Bears Soccer Team awoke to find themselves on a frigid soccer field in Frostburg, Maryland. The team was competing in the ECAC Invitational Championship and after enduring a four-hour journey the day before and "resting" in a warm hotel overnight, the lads were greeted by bone-chilling cold and intermittent snowstorms the next morning. However; Coach Walt Manning managed to pull his squad together as they prepared to do battle with Mary Washington College — a Jesuit school located somewhere in the rolling hills of Virginia.

As the Bears took the field to warm up, the winds whipped up and snow flurries began to blanket the frozen earth. It became apparent that each team would have to clash with mother nature as well as its opponent. So, as both squads attempted to stay warm and gain their composure, play commenced.

In the early going, neither team was able to dominate play. Ursinus took the offensive, though, as they searched for an opening in the opposition's defense. Then, about 12 minutes into the first half, Mary Washington turned the tables on U.C. when they scored on a break-away, to take a 1-9 advantage. Shocked by the quick strike, Ursinus attempted to regroup. Mounting a strong offensive that emerged about midway through the season, U.C. pushed for the tying score. With less than six minutes remaining in the period, Tim Howard spotted Terry Junker circling toward the goal. Junker received a pass from Howard, dribbled a few steps, and unleashed a bullet. The shot found the upper right-hand corner of the net and evened the score at 1-1. There was no further scoring as the half ended in a frozen deadlock.

After taking a few minutes to thaw-out over the half-time intermission, U.C. returned psyched-up for the second period. When play resumed, the Bears quickly established themselves as the aggressor. Once again Ursinus fell victim to a quick goal and Mary Washington led for the second time. U.C., by putting together potential scoring strikes, continued to put pressure on their opponent. Then, to the misfortune of the Bears, lightning struck again as Mary Washington tallied for the third time. With the score standing at 3-1 and less than 6 minutes left in the contest, Ursinus was awarded a penalty shot. Tim Howard took the free kick and placed a low-liner into the left-hand corner of the net to put Ursinus within striking distance at 3-2. But for the Bears it was too little, too late. When the final gun sounded, Ursinus found themselves on the short end of a 3-2 decision.

The loss was especially tough for the Ursinus senior soccer players as they were instrumental in building a winning tradition for Ursinus Soccer. It is the second consecutive year that Ursinus has received a bid to the invitational championship and the second straight year that U.C. has come up one goal short. The Bears outshot Mary Washington 15-5 over the course of the game as they dominated play for the most part. It seems as though fate has dealt Ursinus Soccer another frustrating setback in the big game.

Field Hockey Ends Season at .500

by Jean Morrison '83

On Thursday, November 4, the field hockey team ended a rather dismal season by suffering a 2-0 defeat at the hands of Princeton, ranked twelfth nationally. The loss dropped the Lady Bears record to .500, with 10 wins and 10 losses. Ursinus, suffering a scoring drought, could not muster a goal and, therefore, ended their season shutout.

Each team came out strong, but Princeton was the stronger team and quickly took control of the game. For the most part, the first half was played in the Ursinus defensive end. However, there were times that Ursinus threatened. The combined passing skills of senior Sandy Signorino and junior Bernie Powell set up several threats to the Princeton goal. Princeton, on the other hand, capitalized on one of their several opportunities late in the first half to take a 1-0 lead going into halftime.

The second half was a fight between Princeton trying to put the game out of reach, and Ursinus trying to tie up the score. And as play progressed, it was Princeton that won the battle with a little help from the officials. Princeton scored on a lofted ball in the area of a few Ursinus defender's heads, making it a questionable goal as it seemed dangerous. However, the official did not view it as such, and gave the goal and a 2-0 lead to Princeton. Princeton held on to take the game and the victory.

The J.V. squad ended their season with a 0-0 tie with Princeton; everyone played well in a hard fought game which gave them a final record of 15-3-3.

Career Options Presented

The Ursinus College Business Economics Council will sponsor a presentation on November 29, tentatively entitled "Your First Job Is Not Your Last Job."

Edward Mahler of Bell of Pennsylvania, Charles W. Soltis of Soltis Management Services, and Charles Coqueron of Girard

Bank will be the three speakers representing line management, staff, and management recruiting. The presentation will be moderated by Donald G. Stauffer of American Telephone & Telegraph.

The program will begin promptly at 1:00 p.m. and go through 2:30 p.m.
