Upcoming Events

“TWO PIANISTS:” NINA SCHUMANN AND LUIS MAGALHÃES

Saturday, Oct. 3

Historically, most distinguished performers of classical music travelled beyond their home to pursue mastery of their respective instruments in Europe or the United States. Some left for short periods before they returned to make significant musical contributions in the country of their birth. Others remained abroad for extensive periods, spanning their entire performing careers, before returning home to retire. Yet others settled in their adopted countries where their talents were rewarded with opportunities and recognition not readily forthcoming in their home country. In what is a rich historical tapestry of musical migration, intercontinental transmission of performing practices and kaleidoscopic influences, there is very little precedent for South African-Portuguese exchange. The Magalhães-Schumann Piano Duo (Two Pianists), institutionally based at Stellenbosch University, is therefore cultural history in the making. Enjoy an evening of Brahms: Paganini Variations op.35; Rachmaninoff: Suite No. 2 op 17; Arensky: Suite no 2 “Silhouettes”; Lutoslawski: Variations on a theme by Paganini and Copland: El Salon Mexico

Mark Kaplan's career began in Europe in 1975, when he was asked to replace Pinchas Zukerman in a concert in Cologne, which led to engagements that launched an international career. Professor Kaplan plays a violin made by Antonio Stradivari in 1685, which is named "The Marquis" after the Marchese Spinola, whose family owned the violin for several generations. MARK KAPLAN AND YAEL WEISS IN RECITAL

Other engagements soon followed, including the City of London Festival, New York's Bargemusic and the Banff Festival. In 2002 the Duo partners were married, becoming partners in life as well as music, with their work as a duo taking a central part in their life together.
