Two years ago the democratic party was defeated at the polls and predictions were made freely that it was dead. Judge Taft had been swept into office by a solid north, leaving only on the outskirts of national republican victory a few struggling southern states. To these belated and lagging republics the republicans called "erring sisters" come in to the feast. You are standing in your own light and you are clamoring for principles which are not. Judge Taft came to Georgia and with a genial and exuberant good-fellowship he threatened the solid south. His next friend, Mr. John Hayes Hammond, called a meeting of republican clubs in Augusta. It looked like the beginning of the end. North Carolina had polled a heavy republican vote, the democratic representation in congress from that state had been cut down and there were plenty of people in the north and south ready to write an obituary of democracy. Our own people seemed to be hacked. Many staunch leaders feared that there was no future for the party of the people. The organization appeared to be without nerve or inspiration and to be straggling slowly towards dissolution.

Then the new president was inaugurated and called an extra session of congress. The leader of the minority on the floor of the house of representatives stood up to launch a protest against the high-handed action of Speaker Cannon and the rules committee to organize the house. There was not even vitality enough in the democratic party in congress to present an unbroken front, and 23 democrats preferred to vote with Speaker Cannon as a matter of policy or patronage rather than keep the party lines intact. It was not an inspiring exhibition. It did not represent a hopeful view. It seemed like the Appomattox of a great faction which was slowly staggering to its defeat.

But what a change, our countrymen! In two years the democratic party has found itself. It has regained its second wind and gotten back its nerve and prestige. In November, 1908, hardly a single state north of the Ohio flew the democratic pennant. Now, from the east and the west, state governments have been captured, the state legislatures have been reclaimed and congressmen and the United States senators have been elected by the democratic party. New York, the Empire state, has selected a governor and the full democratic state ticket, insuring a democratic general assembly and returning a majority of democratic congressmen. For the first time in sixteen years has such a showing been made. Connecticut, Massachusetts and New Jersey have gone democratic, and Ohio, the home of presidents, the state of Garfield, Hayes, McKinley and Taft, has re-elected Judson Harmon by nearly 100,000 majority, and has secured a democratic United States senator in place of Senator Dick. The same is true in Indiana and the far west. The democratic victory was widespread and sweeping. It shows what can be done with a party united and aggressive and true to its own principles. The state of North Carolina, which seemed to be wabbling two years ago, has reversed itself entirely and has reclaimed the three republican districts, sending a solid democratic delegation to congress. Instead of being weak and apologetic, the democratic party has jerked itself together, and, following the advice of Colonel George Harvey, has indulged in some "pizen-mad-pig-headed fighting." It has not only reclaimed everything that it has lost, but it has put itself in line for 1912, and has shown itself not only worthy of confidence, but also entitled to a presidential victory, which is apt to come.

A presidential victory is almost bound to follow such a tidal wave. Political history has taught this. In 1874 a democratic wave swept over the country. General Grant had been re-elected president in 1872 and the democratic party seemed engulfed in defeat. Two years later, however, came the revival and the democrats captured the house of congress by a large majority. Everybody looked for a democratic victory in 1876 to follow this tidal wave and it seemed that it came, too, for New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana went democratic and Samuel J. Tilden, although counted out, was believed to be elected President of the United States. The next democratic tidal wave came in 1882, when the whole face of the earth seemed to have gone democratic, for Charles J. Folger was defeated for governor of New York by Grover Cleveland by 200,000 majority, and both houses of congress were given to the democrats. Two years later, sure enough, Grover Cleveland was elected President of the United States over James G. Blaine. Then in 1890, after the passage of the McKinley tariff bill, the reaction of the country was so great that there was another democratic landslide. The democrats captured the lower house of congress, giving certain prophesy of the democratic presidential victory, which followed two years later when Grover Cleveland was re-elected president. The great victory of 1892 was genuine and thorough. Three times the democrats have elected presidents following big victories in off years like that of Tuesday, and if there is anything in past experience the way is open for a democratic president in 1912.

The democratic party has a wealth of material, almost an embarrassment of riches. Unquestionably the oldest man in point of service, a veteran and a valuable statesman, is Judson L. Harmon, of Ohio. He was attorney general under Grover Cleveland, and has been twice elected governor of Ohio. As the Press has pointed out, there is remarkable similarity between the records of President Taft and Judson Harmon. Both are from Ohio and each man has been judge in the state courts and on the federal bench. Then each in turn became a member of a presidential cabinet, the one democratic and the other republican. Judge Taft beat Judge Harmon to the White House, but the chances are that these men who were neighbors and friends in Ohio and who have been judges and cabinet ministers may be opposing candidates for president of the United States two years from now. It cannot be denied that Doctor Woodrow Wilson will be looked upon as presidential timber. He is a scholar and a statesman and a patriot; a teacher and speaker; a leader and a thinker. He will loom up larger as time advances, no doubt about that, and will be a candidate to be reckoned with by the time the national democratic convention begins to hunt for game. One of the curiosities of the campaign is the fact that Alton B. Parker, of New York, defeated candidate for president, will probably be elected United States senator, and that John W. Kern, of Indiana, defeated candidate for vice president, will also be elected United States senator from his state.

How to Cure Chronic Colds and Bronchitis

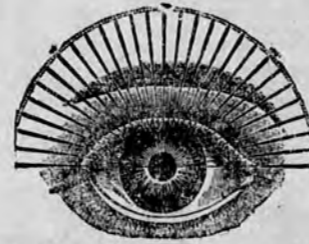

Bluevale, Ont., May 4, 1910. —I was sick for two years with a chronic cold and bronchitis and a consequent run-down condition. I received no benefit from doctors, and had to give up work. VINOL was recommended and from the second bottle I commenced to improve—I gained in weight and strength, my cold and bronchial trouble disappeared, and I am at work again. I want to recommend VINOL to anyone who is in need of such a medicine.—THOMAS HIGGINS.

It is the combined action of the curative elements of the cold's livers aided by the blood making and strength creating properties of tonic iron contained in VINOL which makes it so successful in curing stubborn colds and bronchitis.

VINOL is a constitutional remedy for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis and pulmonary trouble, not a palliative like cough syrups. Try a bottle of VINOL. If you don't think it helped you, we will return your money.
