CENTER FOR COLLABORATIVE LEADERSHIP AND THE CENTER FOR SOCIAL POLICY

Executive Report

The mission of the Emerging Leaders Program, part of the Center for Collaborative Leadership at UMass Boston, is to “discover and empower leaders for tomorrow – skillful and accomplished leaders from all sectors of our community, who will be moving into major leadership positions in their organizations.”

The forty Fellows in the 2011 Emerging Leaders Program worked in collaboration with the Center for Social Policy at UMass Boston on their “reshaping poverty policy” initiative. The Fellows used their professional skills to analyze data and create awareness campaigns, in turn getting a deeper view of how their civic engagement can make a difference in addressing social issues that affect both businesses and communities. The Fellows examined factors that affect housing and family homelessness, working closely with three organizations:

- Boston Tenant Coalition
- The Fair Housing Center of Greater Boston
- GoKids Boston

In addition to these partners, the Center for Collaborative Leadership was honored to have two teams focus on strategy for the Center. The Fellows’ projects offer fresh views on the following issues:

1. Harnessing the “power of the project.” Each year, a core component of the Emerging Leaders Program is the work that is done by cross-sector teams to address current issues facing the city and region. This facet of the program gives the Fellows a safe place to try the skills that they are learning in the program, employing the collaborative leadership model to make a difference in the community. This project team worked closely with alumni of the program, current and prior project sponsors, and the Center to create a set of recommendations to enhance the power of the project. Presented by Jennifer Thibadeau, Raytheon.
2. Making all communities welcoming: “Race and Place” dialogues in Milton. A team of Fellows designed and launched a series of “Race and Place” dialogues in Milton. “Race and Place” dialogues have been established to enhance communication and support the goals of integration and fair housing. Community members gather to learn about the history of race in the U.S., to talk about their experiences of race in a candid and authentic way, and to plan ways their community can remove barriers and enhance integration. This four part series began on September 14th and will conclude on October 12th. Presented by Andrew Russell, Museum of Fine Arts.
3. Generating support for affordable housing: Creating a marketing and multi-media messaging campaign. Last year, a team of Fellows was charged with creating a public awareness campaign in support of affordable housing in the Forest Hills/Jamaica Plain neighborhood of Boston. They piloted themes for a print campaign, which challenges myths about the look and desirability of affordable housing and which introduces the people who work in vital jobs (such as child care) who may need affordable housing. Leveraging this work, this year's team moved the campaign to the web and developed a social media strategy to expand the grassroots reach of the campaign. Presented by Mike McCarthy, The Boston Globe.

4. Supporting families with good working conditions in low wage jobs. A team of Fellows examined what employers could do to support workers in low wage jobs, who need benefits and flexibility to retain their jobs. Lower turnover in these jobs is beneficial both to families who need stable income and to businesses that rely on the work done in these front line positions. They built off a proposal from last year's team to create a set of "best practice" standards for low wage work, similar to the now-familiar environmental standards for green buildings and operations. They worked with organizations with significant low wage populations to identify policies that alleviate strains on low wage workers. They created and refined a survey meant to recognize those employers with the best practices, similar to Boston's Best Places to Work. Presented by Tom Yeulenski, Tufts Health Plan.
5. Creating a healthier Columbia Point. GoKids Boston is an initiative of the UMass Boston College of Nursing and Health Sciences, focused on improving children's lives through fitness, education, role modeling, and supportive relationships. This ELP project team was tasked with helping GoKids to identify and engage collaborators in and around Columbia Point whose mission was similar to their own. This team has laid the groundwork for a Columbia Point Youth and Family Health Promotion Coalition by bringing together stakeholders with shared interests but previously limited time and space to collaborate, including GoKids, Geiger Gibson Community Health Center, and Dever-McCormack School. Presented by Raul Porras, EMC Corporation.
6. Assessing the impact of the "People and Place" initiative in the Fairmount Corridor in Boston. The "People and Place" initiative, pioneered and funded by The Boston Foundation, links organizations that are empowering families and creating infrastructure improvements in the Fairmount Corridor. The Center for Social Policy (CSP) was charged with evaluating how the enhanced alignment of several separate but related initiatives in this area could create measurable impacts. The role of the Fellows' team was to "evaluate the evaluators," ensuring that the CSP met its own objectives of actively engaging the participating organizations, creating meaningful metrics, and jointly producing a roadmap for success. Presented by Tim Sullivan, Massachusetts AFL-CIO.
7. Expanding the impact and influence of the Center. For the last decade, the Center for Collaborative Leadership has maintained a clear focus of identifying and nurturing Greater Boston's future leaders. The Center is poised to leverage the success of the Emerging Leaders Program as a springboard to extend our presence in the arena of leadership. This team of Fellows interviewed key stakeholders of the program and conducted a marketplace audit in order to propose a framework for that growth over the next five years. Presented by Carl Guerin, The Boston Company Asset Management.

After the Fellows share their ideas, we will hear a perspective from Boston City Hall on the impact and implications of these projects for the economic and social health of the city and the region:

- Howard Leibowitz, Chief of Programs and Partnerships, Mayor's Office, City of Boston.

We will then hear reflections from our panelists, who represent organizations poised to benefit from the well-honed collaborative leadership skills and the specific project contributions of this year's Fellows, including:

- Deborah Felton, Executive Director, Milton Fuller Housing Corporation
- Christine Green, Executive Director, Trefler Foundation
- Fred Ramos, Senior Managing Director, State Street Corporation
- Other stakeholders from businesses, non-profits, the media

We invite audience members to raise questions and share thoughts following the panel.
