Get the Maine Habit This Summer

HERE to go for a summer vacation will never bother you after a summer in Maine. The days or weeks you spend on the Maine coast or inland among her woods and mountains, her tranquil lakes and silver streams will remain pleasant memories.

In Maine summer is genial. Days are pleasantly warm and you can enjoy to the full every sort of outdoor recreation—golf, tennis, yachting, motor-boating, swimming, canoeing, fishing, hiking, mountain climbing and motoring.

Inviigorating sea breezes and balsam-scented forest air put spring into the step and color into the cheeks. Cool nights, after days of glorious sport, bring sound sleep. You build up stores of strength and endurance for the hurly-burly of the year's grind. Maine is a repair shop for jangled nerves where a million city-tired people find recreations to suit every mood, inclination and need. For rest, relaxation or rebuilding, for active sport and social diversions, come to Maine. Get the Maine habit.

Live in the "big woods" that Theodore Roosevelt loved. Whip the waters where Grover Cleveland and Joseph Jefferson cast their feathered lures. Play beside the ocean in its many moods. Climb cloud-wreathed Katahdin. Loiter through Maine's hill country threaded by thousands of rivers and streams, and gemmed with forest-bowered lakes and ponds. Visit Lafayette National Park, considered nature's greatest masterpiece in coast and mountain scenery north of the equator.

In Maine, beauty lies in wait at every turn in the road, on every side. Comfortable motor roads follow the most picturesque seacoast on the Atlantic and lead through the heart of Maine's forests. In the last dozen years Maine has spent forty millions on her motor roads. The last Maine legislature authorized eighteen millions more for the building and maintenance of highways and bridges.

Wherever you go in Maine, inland or along the coast, you will find comfortable accommodations to suit every purse. You can stay at smart hotels or more modest ones; at camps where you have the privacy of family life in the woods without the worry or work of housekeeping; at hospitable Maine homes and farms in town or country; in a cottage, bungalow or camp where you live as you please. You can motor-camp through Maine or explore her forest lakes and wilderness streams by canoe.

Endowed by nature with charms for the vacationist, Maine also rejoices in great natural resources which support a healthy and expanding industrial life and a prosperous farm population. Maine potatoes, apples, sweet corn and peas set the world's standards. In water power development Maine ranks fourth among the states, and as much more can be profitably harnessed for industrial purposes. Maine is a land of promise and opportunity.
