The Treasury Report.

The Treasury has assumed the importance in our political affairs that it held at the establishment of the government, and the financial minister is now premier of the administration as in the days before the Virginian line of Presidents ordained that the portfolio of foreign affairs should carry with it the leadership of the cabinet. The rebellion, which necessitated a great increase of taxation, the collection and expenditure of vast revenues, and the management of a national debt of huge proportions, made the Treasury if not the most important, certainly the most interesting department of the Federal government, and the report of its Secretary is awaited by the people of the United States with as much interest as the British budget by the people of the United Kingdom. It has come to be of far more importance than the President's message. This year the anxiety has been to learn what Mr. Sherman would say, not what Mr. Hayes would recommend or condemn.

Mr. Sherman's administration of the Treasury Department has been so able and so brilliantly successful that advice of his concerning the national finances comes with the weight of a master's words. The man who brought about resumption in the face of difficulties that to some of our profoundest students of political econmy seemed insuperable, who in the face of a hostile legislature, refunded the remaining debt at a rate of interest heretofore unknown in this country, who has so honestly gathered and wisely disbursed the national revenues has won at least a respectful and considerate hearing. His opinions on our currency system, on the continuance of Treasury notes, the silver question, the national banks and the reducion of taxation will command a wide attention and provoke an edifying discussion. That they will not secure the general assent of even his political friends is certain. To many of us the views advanced by President Haves will seem sounder as they are more radical and unhesitating. But the Secretary's suggestions will carry much weight ecause they are the suggestions of a practical and experienced man of affairs who has shown wisdom and skill almost beyond recedent in the conduct of the most important branch of the government. The opics of which he treats are those which will engage our legislators and concern our people for some years to come; and even hose who differ with him will admit that he Treasury Report of 1880 will prove to be one of the most notable papers in our documen-

THE ludicrous length to which a resolute and tenacious fault-finder will go rather than abandon his grievance is illustrated in very droll fashion by the position of the Advertiser in reference to the President's Message. That journal failed to receive the Message in time for publication in its vening edition of Monday. Whereupon it savagely criticised the Associated Press for negligence in not seasonably transmitting the Message. The Associated Press agent that the distribution was not enrusted to the Association as usual, but that he President chose this year to transmit it directly to the newspapers in care of the Postmasters and that the fault was in the ails or in the President's private secretary. Nothing dismayed the Advertiser responded that 'the apology is far from satisfactory." The situation calls to mind the performance of a prominent New York journal which had attacked Mr. Blaine for some Congressional action. Mr. Blaine responded by showing that he had not entered Congress at the time indicated. The journal promptly and undauntedly said "Why quibble about dates. If Mr. Blaine has no better defence than this he would much better have held his peace."

IT will be a matter of very general surp rise that in primary instruction Greece compares well with any of the States in Europe. In 1831 there were only 170 primary schools in that Kingdom. In 1841 there were 450, and in 1874 they had increased to 1,130. About 65 per cent. of the boys in Greece at_ tend school, and the annual estimate for primary education is a little over $30,000, of which the State pays about one-tenth. There are also 136 Hellenic schools and 18 gymnasia, where the instruction is as free as in the primary schools. The higher class education is represented by the University of Athens, which started in 1841 with 292 students and now has 1,250. It has four faculties with 62 Professors and lecturers, an observatory, botanic garden. lying-in hospital, general hospital and eye hospital, and a library containing 120,000 volumes. Instruction in this University, which has graduated 8,000 pupils, is also free.

to say whether or not the State Journal is that depends. If there be such a thing as ttainable—we are of course in favor of it. But we confess that we do not understand the meaning of the words "Civil-service reform" as used by our Godkins and Curtises, our "young scratchers" and high kickers, though we have spent hour upon hour in poring over their essays, and appeals, and ddresses and what not.

PRESIDENT ELIOT, of Harvard College, has written a letter asking that support be given to the Harvard Register, which, in closing its first year, has just annour that "to the present time the paper has been pecuniarily a failure, and its continuance depends wholly on the promptness with which the present subscribers renew their subscriptions and the readiness with which others will subscribe. The publisher can no longer maintain the publication at his own cost."

The Associated Press and the Mes

The Advertiser Monday criticised sharply the management of the Associated Press in regard to the President's Message, to which the agent replied as follows: PORTLAND, Dec. 7, 1880.

To the Editor of the Advertiser. The Associated Press was in no way responsible for the delay in the transmission of the President's message. President Hayes did not entrust it to the Associated Press this time, but allowed his private secretary to send it directly to each paper through the postmasters. It is therefore a question solely between you and the President.

STEPHEN BERRY,
Agent Associated Press.

Last year a New York journal published the whole message in advance on Sunday morning, but the Associated Press kept faith and gave out no copy until authorized to do so. This year the President kept it in his own hands and had copies sent to Postmasters to be delivered to editors when a message from his private secretary should anthorize it. The authorizing message was received by Postmaster Goddard, but the copies failed to come. The Kennebec Journal received a copy at eight o'clock. The Boston agent of the Associated Press procured a copy as quickly as it was in type and put it on the wires. The Advertiser justly remarks that "The whole plan of dealing with this matter is antiquated and unsatisfactory." It is not exactly antiquated as it is a new reform measure, but it is eminently unsatisfactory. But President Hayes and not the Associated Press, is responsible. The whole matter should be entrusted to the Associated Press, and that can be depended upon to obey instructions .

THE New Orleans Times, Democratic, says of General Garfield: "He has always been imbued with the broad national spirit and views of the western politicians."

the same backwards and forwards. HAYES holds his wind well. A Tow-Boat Catastrophe.

How Gen. Garfield Turns the Cold Shoulder to a Washington Club That Wished to Take Him in Hand.

Several months ago there budded and was such that propagation was a weak and or of the canal boy, Garfield, who was then a candidate for the Presidency. This Towpath Club, as a local wit said, organized by electing presents his side of the case with great ingenuity and information, and patriotic regard for the interests of the country. The and howling servile speeches in little seven by nine partisan gatherings, where not a mother's son of the spectators had a vote to be influenced.

The Towpathers had a badge made, the design of which is a canal boat, with helm hardaport, under a studding canvas of mules full set, bearing down upon the White House. The canal boat in the design is large enough to take the White House and all the departments into its held. They ears of the mules are a close copy of the deckhand's, the worthy genius who was first visited with the inspiration of devising the organization. The uniform of the Towpathers has been a white cap with a straight visor, worn with a white oil cloth cape. The edge of the cape was painted a beautiful red. Under the cape and cap the apparel of the average department serf was according to the server was according to the server was a server the server and cap the server was a server the server and cap the server was a server to the server the serv the picturesque makeup of the Towpathers. Their appearance was grotesque enough to make the real mules of the towpath laugh themselves into hysterics. When Garfield first visited Washington the Towpathers helped at his reception, and, it is estimated, produced about one-third of the hoarse shout of welcome that greeted him in front of the Riggs House. This one act was the only official one approaching importance performed by the Towpathers. It was noticed at the time that General Garfield did not fall upon the bosom of any of the deckhands, and that he embraced none of the roustabouts. He made no inquiries why the mules were overlooked in this organization. He merely treated the Towpathers as well as he did anybody else, and that was all there was of it.

When Gen. Garfield sent word here that he was of it.

When Gen. Garfield sent word here that he was coming on a visit, the Towpathers proposed to take him in hand. The idiots even elected Garfield a chief deckhand, and then made ready for the old sailor of the raging canawl. They planned a reception, in which a canal boat was to figure prominently. Then came Chief Deckhand Garfield's peremptory declination of any public reception. It came had eards specially printed for the occasion, with the title in full of "first deckhand," etc., printed after each precious owner's name. One may imagine Gen. Garfield's feelings when he was called from his library by a servant with a dozen of these cards. The reception he gave his friends was absolutely glacial. He curtly nodded to them standing, and not asking them to sit down. One of the spokesmen feebly tried to say that he was glad to see that the Garfield canal boat was finally entering the last lock, when Gen. Garfield shut him off with such a stern look that the speaker choked in the middle of a word and almost strangled. Gadually it began to dawn upon the callers that they were not pleasant companions, and they crept silently away, hoping, as they went, that they had not intruded. A first deckhand summed up the reception by answering an inquiry, "How were you received?" "D—d coid." Gen. Garfield said afterward to a friend, that he had no patience with such idicoy. He was not ashamed of his having been a canal boy, neither was it a matter of boasting, it was a mere incident in his life, of the least importance in shaping his after life. A Soldier Who Found One Hundred and Thirty Thousand Dollars. Ezelot, the French soldier who found the £26,000 which M. Pages lost in the Northern Railway station in Paris, has communicated to the Courier de l'Aisne, the particulars attendant on his good fortune. They are very into fortune, some achieve fortune, and some have fortune thrust upon them. Ezelot was walking through the railroad station with two comrades, when they noticed on the floor a packet wrapped in a newspaper. They kicked it along before them for some distance, and when Ezelot was getting into the train, going hen ion short leave, one of his comrades, picking up the packet, thrust it into the canvas forage bag hung at his side, Ezelot going on his way without having perceived the little pleasanty.

functionary, communicating with Paris, speed ily brought down M. Pagès, who, gratefull paying the promised reward of £1,000, went of with his oddly recovered treasure. It would be an interesting supplement to the narrative if we could have some record of the feelings of the soldier who thrust the packet upon Ezelot when he heard the sequel to the little joke.—London News.

Do Our Own Work. Keep Our Money at Home. My discussion with the University Profes sor was a protracted one, and covered nearly the whole ground of the English view of free

Professor. No. England will not seriously set up the claim that you are bound to consider her interests in arranging your tariff to the injury ot your own; but our contention is that free trade would promote your interest in the long run as well as our own. At the outset there is no doubt but many of your interests would suffer from a sudden change to free trade; but many others would be promoted by it, and all would in time be benefited.

D. What interests have we that would be promoted by free trade?

Prof. The farming interests throughout all the country. Your tariff, if not intended to do so, does in fact promote the interests of the manufacturers and of the manufacturing States, to the injury of the farmers and of the agricultural States. Your tariff largely increases the price of manufactured goods which the farmers consume, while the prices of agricultural products are not enhanced; in short, the farmers are taxed for the profit of the man-D. I know that is the English argument, but it is not supported by the facts in the case. The theory was all well enough until the results of protection began to be developed, when the facts showed conclusively that the theory unsound. You apply the same theory to the protection of our varied industries, that you properly applied to the English tariff on bread stuffs, which had no effect but to make dear bread, because it had no tendency to increase the home production of corn. Your agricultural industries could not be materially enlarged, for lack of farming land: so your "corn laws" were really a tax on bread at the cost of the consumer, for the benefit of your landed aristocracy. Everybody in England concedes that now. But the facts of the corn laws will not apply to our protective system, because the latter stimulates production in every branch of industry and crowds our home market with its results. If we were not able to enlarge our productive power, your corn law theory would apply to us, and every increased tax on imports would add something to their cost to the consumer. But as the re-sult of an enormous production of all sorts of goods needed for our own consumption, our markets are well supplied and sometimes glutted, so that goods come here to a full mar-ket, and must be sold at a very low price, if sold at all, and British competition keeps down the prices generally, so that we buy goods of every description very much cheaper as well as better, than we did at the time the policy of protection was adopted. If we were to go back now to the policy of free trade there would be no home competition with imported goods, which would come into a bare market and would command any price the importer should choose to demand.

Prof. Very well; when, as you say, the prices of imported goods should be thus increased, your manufacturers could successfully compete with them, and thus the prices would compete with them, and thus the prices would be brought down to a fair scale.

D. But that would be impossible. After our mills, forges and furnaces should become silent, and all their work people dispersed over our wide country, it would require years to collect them together and to start up again; and for the first two or three years our manufacturers could not make both ends meet. But if such a thing were attempted, British manufacturers would put their goods on our markets for a time at cost, so as effectually to stifle at the outset any attempt at renewed home production. That is not a surn by we have had full experience of it.

duction. That is not a surn a wish to pay for in our manufacturers. If you will not receive them, how can we pay at all?

D. Pay as we used to do in gold. Before our policy of protection we used to buy more than we sold, some $300,000,000 more or less every year. The balance against us was always a grievous burden to bear. We paid it in gold or remained in debt for it, and our finances were always in confusion from that cause. Now under our present policy we sall nances were always in confusion from that cause. Now, under our present policy, we sell more than we buy, some $300,000,000 more or less annually, and the balance comes to us in gold or its equivalent. The result of this is an abundance of money among us; but under the former system all our interests were suffering for lack of money. As to the selling our surplus agricultural products, we find no difficulty, and never shall. The English come to us to buy and pay for it in gold instead of goods as they used to do. They come to us only because they can buy of us cheaper and better than elsewhere; they pay in gold because they must have the provisions, and we don't want the goods. If they were yet sending us all our manufactured goods, they would not take our pro 'isions in payment if they could obtain them cheaper in France, up the Baltic or in Southern Russia, in which case we must pay in gold.

or in Southern Russia, in which case we must pay in gold.

Prof. But we think it a great hardship and a wrong that by your system any class of people, or indeed any citizen, must pay for what he requires more than he would but for that system. It cannot be denied that a great many of your people are compelled to do this. If there were free trade, your western farmers could buy their goods of English make a great deal cheaper than they now buy American goods, and could sell their products as well as they do now.

deal cheaper than they now buy American goods, and could sell their products as well as they do now.

D. Yes, it can be denied, and I deny, that our people, upon the whole, pay more for their goods now than they did under free trade. And I go further and say that upon the whole they pay less now than they would under free trade. All the facts and all our experience quite bear us out in that. No doubt there are some things—French silks and gloves, for instance—that we could buy cheaper under free trade than we now do; but upon the whole, we buy cheaper now than we could under the old system. I could refer to comparative prices in almost every branch of trade to show this—but the iron trade will do; and will illustrate the point I wish to make. America was the great market for English iron and all the products of iron. We made none, or almost none, and our market for iron was enormous. We paid eighty-five dollars a ton for English rails, and I think that a fair average price. English furnaces were running night and day to supply American needs. By our policy our iron trade was built up to very great proportions, so that now we buy steel rails at $45 at ton, that are cheaper than iron rails at $10 at ton. That is a fair sample of the actual effect of encouraging our own industries.

Prof. Yes, but steel rails in England are now £5 at on $25, while your people are compelled to pay almost twice as much as the result of protection. Your case in point upsets your argument entirely in favor of protection, and demonstrates the advantage of free trade.

D. We shall see in a moment how that is. Rails in England now are a glut in the market for want of a demand. The furnaces in America are in active work, but cannot supply the enormous home demand; and our people send orders to England for rails that they cannot obtain at home. The English home demand is very small in comparison. But if Americans were compelled to come to England for all obtain at home. The English home demand is very small in comparison. But if Americans were compelled to come to England for all their rails, and for all the iron they need of other kinds, the mills of England would be driven to their utmost capacity, without nearly supplying the demand; and English iron masters could command their own prices, which would certainly be far higher to us than they are now. English prices are kept down by American competition, and home prices are kept down by the sharp English competition, Without our home policy English manufacturers would have, practically, the monopoly of our markets, and for the greater part of their goods of all sorts would have no competition. We should go back to the old days when almost all our goods, of cotton, wool and iron, were imported from England at prices more than twice as great as those we pay now.

N. D.

Of men who whistle, few proceed to extremties of tune. It can hardly be said that they tle for want of thought, because no habitthe plurality of whistlers, merely serves as a signal which calls attention to their existence, fact otherwise at some risk of being overooked. It is an effect of automatic instinc rather than of conscious intentionr and its otive might be shared by the lower animals, if the lower animals ever suffered from uneasy steem complicated with a sort of defiancies honte. There are whistlers who no nly do not whistle "at their own sweet will," who evidently do whistle against it. If sheep could refrain from basing in circumbaa. If a whistier could refrain from whistling, when by whistling he makes himself feel ish as a man in the act of whistling always looks, he would not whistle. Whistling is intensely and peculiarly English and it has flourished very much of late years; which fact looks a little awkward for the intellectual character, as well as persona manners of the nation. Let any elderly person of good observation and memory try to very quickly, and the habits of individuals bevery quickly, and the habits of individuals become the habits of classes, and in time the habits of nations. There is just the connection between an individual and his country, through the classes with which he is most familiar, that there is between the sentiment of egotism and the sentiment of patriotism through the middle sentiment of parcohiality. This peculiar habit of whistling, therefore, may have spread from a potboy to a people, passing through many steps of class contagion by the way. by the way.

Few Frenchmen whistle, and Italians never.

The French, indeed, have a provert on the

The French, indeed, have a proverb on the subject, which is not complimentary to their lively neighbors, ourselves. When Germans whistle, and it is not often they do, it is with melody prepense. They cultivate odd gifts of amusement; those convivial Teutons, and whistling is sometimes practiced among them as an accomplishment. But it is precisely because a German whistles with skill that he keeps his endowment for service and seldom whistles in public or without being asked. The Englishman who cannot whistle does. Do we not all know the stolid fat man of few words, but of one unceasing sound, who is so entirely not all know the stolid fat man of few words, but of one unceasing sound, who is so entirely the creature of habit that he takes up the same position at regular periods, and if he cannot get his accustomed chair pines nervously in another? But in his place or out of it, he whistles softly and oleaginously, as if he would never grow thin. His whistle is not the shrill piping of the plebeian youth, who suffers not the drowsy air to slumber, nor the sharp winter wind to thrill him into silence. It is a fat, round, soft, hard-breathing whistle, as of an elderly grampus overcome by heat. Then there is the restless man who whistles, and who, so far from gravitating to one loved spot, never sits five minutes in any. His whistle is the most irritating of all; for he seems to be perpetually suffering from a bad tune in the head, which he is vainly trying to whistle away. The restless whistler is great at the devil's tattoo. He beats that infernal rappel with his finger-nails on the table, on the crown of his hat, on anything responsive to the diawith his finger-nails on the table, on the crown of his hat, on anything responsive to the diabolical drumming A knife or poker will serve him in keeping up a steady tap-tap-tap for as bad a quarter of an hour as ever was chimed on a cracked bell. If chance should move him to put his hands in his pockets it is a dead certainty that he will whistle. For he is the bird of ill note; the prophet of disturbance in the moral atmosphere; the Mother Carey's chick of ,he vexed life-sea.

for counting the electoral vote, as a matter of privileg., gave rise to a long debate.

Mr. Conger made an elaborate argument to show the matter did not present a question of privilege. He relied principally on the fact that the late revision of the rule nine, which specified what were questions of privilege did. that the late revision of the rule nine, which specified what were questions of privilege, did not include this subject. If the Speaker were to go beyond rule nine and declare this a question of privilege on some wild theory, because the government is Republican, because great interests are at stake, because the Presidential question is an important matter, because the country has been on the very verge of revolution and had barely escaped, because that same danger threatened it again and again the Speaker himself would be acting in a revolutionary manner.

tion and had barely escaped, because that same danger threatened it again and again the Speaker himself would be acting in a revolutionary manner.

Mr. Whitthorne (Dem.) of Tennessee, said the attitude of the gentleman on the other side informs the Speaker as well as the country that there is a claim under the constitution that the Vice President alone has the right or authority to count the electoral vote. The Speaker and country are informed by the past legislative practices and customs heretofore prevailing that the House of Representatives and Senate have asserted their right to do this thing. The pending proposition is one going directly to the highest privileges of this House. The attitude of the gentlemen on the other side is a denial of that right. The Speaker is aware that the House must decide the question at this session. It is therefore right before the Speaker, and I submit that the proposition involves a question of privilege, but I arise merely for the purpose of saying that the question involved here has no reference to the pending Presidential election. I declare to you and the country (and I speak for the penogratic party of the country) that the proposition has nothing to do with the election of Mr. Garfield. He has been elected by the people and I for one shall see to it that he is inaugurated. Mr. Springer (Dem.) said a Republican Cengress had enacted the joint rule for counting the electoral votes.

Mr. Robeson replied that under pressure of war and reconstruction that followed the Republicans had made a good deal of false legislation and were suffering from it today.

The speaker then decided the matter a question of privilege on constitutional grounds.

A long discussion ensued as the limitation of debate, the Republicans demanding it be without limit and the Democrats refusing to yield unlimited time. No agreement was reached and after Keifer (Rep.) had delivered an argument against the pending measure, which he denounced as one "of usurpation and fraud and one which might lead to blood and war," the matter went over.

Indictment of officers and owners of the Seawanhaka were read before the House.

Reprinting was ordered of the inter-state, commerce and refunding bills and the joint resolution making the President's term six years and Representatives three.

THE MESSAGE.

London, Dec. 6.—The Times in a leading editorial article this morning, reviewing a forecast telegraphed hither of President Hayes's message to Congress, congratulates the United States on the uneventfulness of the annals of the administration and the satisfactory state of the finances. Relative to the fisheries question the article says: "The doctrine attributed to the article says: "The doctrine attributed to the late government, that the local laws of Canada could overrule treaty obligations, was never advanced by them. The real point at issue between Lord Salisbury and Mr. Evarts was the true meaning of the obligations of the Treaty of Washington in respect to the concurrent privileges of the citizens of the United States and of the Dominion on the coasts of the latter. The point may have been misconstrued, and Earl Granville, the present Foreign Secretary, may have removed the misconception. It is, however, most desirable that the whole questlon should be settled in a more permanent fashion than is contemp'ated by the Treaty of Washington, which seems purposely framed to provide for recurring occasions of quarrel. If a new commission is to be appointed, an effort should be made to effect a final settlement of the whole matter."

Parnell's and Dillon's Speeches at the Waterford Banquet. BOLD DEFIANCE OF THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT.

Freasonable Utterances Thinly Disguised

Dublin, Dec. 7.—At the banquet at Waterford, Mr. Parnell made the following speech:

In responding to a toast in his own honor, he said the English government had great resources, but he did not believe her resources were adequate to perpetuate her government in Ireland. "I do not believe," he continued, "that any amount of money or strength and power of even the greatest nation in the world can work impossibilities and it is abundantly proved that governing Ireland outside of Ireland, by a power and people who do not live in the country, is impossible.

We have gigantic forces arrayed against us, but we have more powerful forces on our side, namely, the forces of nature, the forces of nationality, the forces of patriotism and true devotion. These are sufficient to break the yoke of English misgovernment and chase from the country that usurpation which has long had its heel upon our neck. Look at what we have done to this pitiful government. In twelve months we have obliged them to reverse every principle, every law, every tradition on which they built their position. We have made them eat their speeches, even Gladstone. I don't believe Gladstone can settle the Irish question without breaking up his cabinet. He could not even pass his miserable little compensation bill last year. If I had not been confident that the Lords would reject it I would have had the Irish party reject it, but I preferred to let the Lords do my dirty work. When John Bull finds that he will have to pay £150,000,000 in the next four or five years to govern this country, he will think the English mode of governing Ireland The Temperance Congress.

New York, Dec. 7.—A reception under the auspices of the New York Temperance Society was given last night at the Cooper Institute to Gov. J. P. St. John of Kansas, and was the opening event of the Temperance Congress, which will last for five days. The gathering was presided over by the Rev. Peter Stryker. Addresses on temperance were made by Rev. Drs. Srayker, Eli Johnson and T. L. Cuyler. Gov. St. John made a powerful argument in favor of total abstinence, and predicted that within less than a quarter of a century from now every State that gave its electoral votes to James A. Garfield would have prohibition embodied in its constitution.

The Temperance Congress, during its session will hold public meetings at night and "drawing-room" meetings each day, which will be addressed by 'ady workers in the cause of temperance.

acts and statutes are so much waste paper, that it is impossible in these days to continue governing this country against the will of the majority of the people. No nation in history was ever able to do this, and of all nations that ever tried it England has made the worst mess of it. We stand to-day in the same position that our ancestors stood. We deciare that it is the duty of every Irishmen to free his country if he can. We refuse to inflict needless suffering on the masses. We will work by constitutional means so long as it suits us to do so. We refuse to plunge this country into horrors of civil war when she has not a chance. But I ask any man at this board, I ask any true Irishman, be he priest or layman, whether he would not consider it the first duty of an Irishman to do what he could to enable his country to take her place among the nations of the world. (Deafening cheers.) If it could be proved to you that there is a fair prospect that success would follow from the sacrifice, I ask you whether it would not be your highest duty to give your lives for your country that gave you birth? I call for no useless sacrifice. I don't wish to be misunderstood. Our present path is within the limits of the constitution. England has given us that constitution for her purposes. We will use it for ours. If I ever call upon the people to go beyond the constitution, we shall do so openly and above board. We shall not ask the people to take a risk we are not willing to share, but for the present we will remain within the constitution, relying on Parliamentary action in England and upon organized national action at home. I believe we have in these power to achieve our ends. We call upon you, if you believe in its use and in our honesty, to nelp us with the ability and the genius God has given you, confident in the future of our common country." (Great cheering.)

Speech by Mr. Dillon.

Mr. Dillon spoke at a land meeting at Fethard, Tipperary, Archdeaken Kane presiding.
Mr. Dillon said that within the last few Mr. Dillon said that within the last few months the league movement has made an immense advance. Its position in Ireland today was such that their governors had only two alternatives. Either they must yield to the demands formulated by the Land League which spoke on behalf the people, or they must resort to brute force to coerce the vast majority of the Irish people. Was the British government once more going to resort to blood and brute force to compel the Irish people to obey laws which were detestable to them? The British government was, of course, a great force, and could imprison all who were engaged in the Land League movement. A voice—"They wont get room for the whole of them." (Cheers.

"They wont get room for the whole of them."
(Cheers.

But if this movement were repressed by force it would be well for the government to know that such a course would leave in the minds of the Irish people such hatred of the laws of England that nothing but an enormous military force could compel the people to obey them. If the government attempted to have recourse to coercion, that would render the connection between the two countries impossible in the future. If this movement was repressed, such repression would excite so much absolute and bitter hatred of the people that the house of every landlord in Ireland would be built over a volcano. They would not be able to tell the hour when it would blow up and sweep them and all belonging to them to a worse fate than that which the Land League intended for them. (A voice. "To Hell.") He should say that all the Irish race all over the world was thoroughly aroused to the great patriotic and national character of this movement. In Canada, America and Australia, the Irish people were in sympathy with them. Money would pour in to help them, but they must remember that the amount of help they would get from these countries was in proportion to the amount of work they did for themselves. He advised them to stand firm and show that they were able to help themselves. If they did so then their friends in America would be at their backs, and if they did not help themselves they would not get help from abroad. Each man should work as if the welfare of the cause depended upon him alone. If they acted in that spirit neither the constitution nor the government could put them down.

John Habberton is no unhealthy sentimentalist, but he is a man who, while seeking the odd and humorous side of every incident and every character, overflows with strong human kindliness, tenderness and pity for suffering. His play is sure to present some striking contrasts, some irresistible drolleries and comicalities, and some bits of genuine pathos. It is also distinctively American, racy of the soil, with the bracing air of a Massachusetts farmhouse and the odor of the Maine woods running through it. It is not a weak play; it possesses several very strong dramatic situations; yet it is a healthy, clean and pure play, that Sunday school children might be taken to see and be all the better for it. Above all, the Deacon is a new type. He is not the lying, sanctimonious hypocrite that stage deacons always have been, but a jolly, hearty, hospitable, jovial individual, whom even his wife has hot been able tto repress. I hope every one will like "Deacon Crankett," and that as many ladies will go to see it as possible, for all women owe a debt of gratitude to John Habberton for writing "Just One Day."

Fire on Newbury Street. The alarm from box 15 at 7.30 p. m. yester day was caused by a fire breaking out in a long two storied wooden dwelling, with a hip roof, situated on Newbury street near the lower end. The house is very long, some eighty feet perhaps, and if any wind had been blowing a sizable conflagration might have been expected. The building is a tenement house, but the only occupants were a Mrs. Shannahan in the rear part of the lower floor, and an old woman amed Mrs. Lyden, who occupied a small room in the front attic. The fire was first observed by the old woman, who ran down and informed Mr. Shannahan and then rushed back to her own apartment. Several sailors went into the om, where she was surrounded by the fire, and found her rocking in her chair with the flames about her, talking to herself, and they took her in their arms and carried her out-She declared she had money hid away among her things, but, if so, it is possible it was re-aged condition. Mr. Shannahan's apartments were hardly touched by the water. Chief Littlefield made a searching examition for the cause of the fire and concluded a rat must have carried a match into his hole near the door of Mrs. Lyden's room, and from the match the fire took. The flames first, started down in the partition in the second story and burst therefrom into the attic.

The house was owned by Mr. Patrick Mc-Glinchy, who is in Boston. Mrs. McGlinchy said the house was insured with Rollins & Adams, and the insurance money paid Monday. The value of the house or insurance she could not give. The real estate men present valued the property at about $2000 and estimated the loss at perhaps $250. A Book of Probate Practice.

Andrew J. Nichols

Mr. Nichols died most unexpectedly and suddenly at his residence in Natick, on Tuesmorning, Nov. 30, 1880. Only a few hours before, he had parted with the family in the gayest and happiest mood, and apparently in perfect health, to spend the day in Boston, returning on the ten o'clock train. All his companions who met him in this interval testify that he was in his usual vigorous spirits, enertaining every one who spoke with him. But at 1.15 a. m., he was dead-epileptic conrulsions, passing into paralysis of the heart "Media in vita in morte sumus" Mr. Nichols had a large experience with men and the world, as the following brief record shows: Born in Augusta, Maine, December 30, 1837, ne went to California at the age of seventeen where he lived nine years. Somewhat earlier, however, he sailed for home in the unfortunate "Golden Gate," burned at sea and showed signally his bravery and endurance by helping many to escape to a barren coast, and then by swimming to hail a passing vessel when they many to escape to a barren coast, and then by swimming to hail a passing vessel when they were nearly dead with starvation. He lived, and first told the news of the disaster in San Francisco. By the advice of his physician and to regain his health, he took office as a Purser in the steamer Constitution running between San Francisco and Panama, and made about forty trips. At length he arrived home in October, 1863, and assisted in raising companies for the 2d Maine Cavalry, with whom he served a year in the Quartermaster's Department at New Orleans, as the command was scattered on various duties, though Gen. Burnside plead to have them at the front.

After the war he engaged in business in Savannah, which was soon disposed of that he might go to a dying sister in Gibraltar. Returning to the United States, he next went to Liverpool, England, where he nearly died of cholera, whose germs were contracted in Spain. That was in 1866. In 1867 he-married in Natick, soon went again to California with his wife and stayed three years. During this period he was assistant Secretary of State.

Once more coming to Natick in the fall of 1870, he was for a time associated with the late Edward Walcott in the shoe business, and was a member of the Union Lumber Company in which capacity he is so well remembered. In the winter of 1876 he travelled for his health, vititing California, Norfolk, Va., etc. In 1877 he spent the summer at the Ocean House, Cape Etizabeth, and finding sea air so beneficial, he purchased the property, and has most successfully managed this popular summer resort ever since. Then came his death.

Everybody knew him, what a generous, open-hearted, companionable man he was, drawing to himself hosts of friends that had no particular claim upon him, and attaching with the bonds of love, all those who had such claims. He was loyal to all, a dear good fellow to all, and an irreparable loss to his relatives. He believed in "God Almighty, in Jesus Christ and in a good conscience," and it is a comfort to know that his

His funeral was attended on Thursday afternoon, the services being performed by Rev. F.

Templar, the following Sir Knights of the Natick Commandery acted as bearers: C. A.

The Lieut. General Pays One of His Bets.

The General is a well known and prominent citizen of this city and is withal an intense Democrat. He is in the habit of betting on elections, especially when he feels sure of winning. After the State election in September the General, who had won several bets of small amounts, feeling considerably elated at the result, so far forgot his usual prudence as to risk quite an amount in different bets on the Presidential election. For instance, a barrel of sugar, a barrel of apples, another barrel of apples, a bushel of apples, a hat, a Hand-book of Practice in the Probate Courts pint, and last but not least, made a bet with Tom which was as follows: The General bets the oysters for Tom, Joshua and Sam, and the oysters and rum for himself, (the General) that Hancock will be elected by the people. The bet was booked by Sam. After the result became known, and the General found that he had lost, his enthusiasm in the matter bereminded (very gently) that he owed the oysters. He did not take, and he has been followed up so persistently, not only by Tom but by members of a society in which he has the honor to hold an important office, (a lucrative one besides) that he finally decided to pay up, being fearful that the society would want oysters for compelling him to "pay up." He secretly notified the parties interested to appear cretly notified the parties interested to appear at Saunders' at a certain hour December 6th, and openly gave out that the supper would be given next Monday evening. "Sam," he said, "you will see all the members going to Saunders' as they think at my expense. Won't they be sold, by hokey!" Arriving at Saunders' and taking an upper back room the General told him that if any members of the society should come there to tell them that the supper would be next Monday evening. They had hardly sat down to the table when Joshua suddenly sang out, "There they come." had hardly sat down to the table when Joshua suddenly sang out, "There they come." "Heavens," said the General jumping up, "keep them out, keep them out!" Next Tom says, "There they are, General!" "Good Heavens, stop them," sang out the General jumping up, and in so doing upsetting his oysters and scalding his lap. "Confound it," says he, gingerly wiping his lap with his napkin, "I wish I had invited the whole society and saved all this cussed bother." The supper finally came to an end, as all things, do, but there is the sugar, the apples, apples, apples, hat and pint yet to come.

The "Order of Aryan Americans." A dispatch to yesterday's New York Times from Baltimore says an article purporting to be an exposure of the secret order of Aryan Americans, for the purpose of establishing a nobility in this country, published Monday in a Philadelphia paper, has created great merriment among those whose names are mentioned in connection with it. The organizer, Frederick Gregory Forsyth, came to Baltimore the last week in October and requested the use of the Maryland Histor ical Rooms to held a meeting of the American College of Genealogical Research, John H. B. Latrobe, the President of the society, granted him the use of the room, and a meeting was hold, with just six persons present. The Hon. J. J. Stewart and Edward Hewes, who are named as Provosts of Maryland, state that they never heard of the society before and are not members of it. Mr. Latrobe looks on Forsyth as a monomaniac on the subject of genealogy and heraldry, and does not think that he and his five colleagues dangerously threaten the life of this free and enlightened Courtney's Exploits in Baltimore. It has come to light, says the New Yoak Times, that the bogus lord, Charles Pelham Clinton, alias Courtney, did not overlook Baltimore in his travels, but came to that hospitable city during the Christmas holidays last year. He established himself at the St. Clair hotel, and put his name down as Sir Hugh Leslie Courtney, R. N. On the strength of his begus credentials he was taken into the Maryland Club and received every possible courtesy from its members, who dined and wined him with true Southern hospitality. He began paying court to a well known society belle, but her father interfered in time to prevent his marriage with her. His schemes for raising money were varied and there are a dozen or nore gentlemen there who remember that they have his note for several hundred dollars. He departed without mentioning his hotel bill, but the proprietor was kind enough to take up one of his notes given to a Baltimore county gentleman to prevent its going to protest. He often spoke of his father as the Earl of Devon. and impressed all he met with his lordly ways.

Scarboro. Rev. O. M. Cousins of Bridgton delivered the closing lecture of the course at Dunstan Corner, Scarboro', Monday evening. His subject was "Sights of Scotland." A portrayal of his travels in that famous country, its scenery, nners and customs of the people, together with a description of many historical events made it a very interesting and profitable entertainment. At the close he exhibited many photographic views of interesting scenes mentioned in the lecture. This course of lectures given under the auspices of Stephen Sewall Lodge of Good Templars has proved to be a uccess in every respect.

The Insane Asylum. The Insane Asylum.

Rev. G. W. Quinby of the Gospel Banner publishes an article relative to the water supply of the Insane Asylum. While in the wet season the supply obtained from the surface ponds is adequate, during several dry months in summer there is hardly enough far lavatory purposes. Should fire break out in those months the result, Mr. Quinby thinks, would be disastrous. He suggests that the supply be drawn direct from the Kennebec river.

The farm buildings of Corydon Veazie of Highland were burned last Saturday, together with four oxen, three cows, fifty sheep, one hog, two wagons, all of the farming tools, thirty tons of good hay and 400 pounds of wool. The fire commenced in one corner of the barn. The cause of the fire is a mystery. Loss on personal property from ten to twelve hundred dollars. Insurance on buildings $800.

for Dwellings, Stores and Green-houses, is McDonald's Water Heater. It is a home invention and home manufacture, not one cent's worth of labor being spent on it outside of this city. I challenge any man to show its equal in efficiency, simplicity, economy, durability and price. People preferring water heat can best serve their own good by trying it, and if it will not do as I will tell them, I will remove it at my own expense. There is no need of going to New York for heaters, nor to Montreal for experts, as my heater has no peer in the former city or State, and if myself will not take the second place to any man setting them. I trust that my fellow citizens will not take "Bosh" for truth and facts, and be induced to buy inferior articles because far-fetched. actionary Health Lift.

every man or woman in every walk of life. It furnishes an exercise which may, and should be introduced in o every house; which may be practiced at all seasons, in all kinds of weather, by persons of both sexes, all ages or degrees of strengt' or weakness, alone or in company. No one or a say too much in praise of it, and no one can afford to do without it. All who investigate thor aghly, use it, and consider it invaluable and indispensable. It is the safest, simplest, cheapest and most efficient medicine ever discovered. No claim is set up for it which is anscientific or impracticable.

General. It is the best of rest. It is perfectly safe. No harm ever came from its use. It strains no portion of the system. It directs the vital forces to the affected parts. By its use the health is easily maintained. The purchase of a Reactionary Lifter is the best kind of economy. The convenience of baving one in the house is very great.

Mind and Brain.—It invigorates and strengthms the brain, and renders it more active and efficient in all its operations.

Sicep.—It is the simplest and safest narcotic. It is the most natural and probably the best means of inducing sound and refreshing sleep.

Nerves.—It is a wonderful tonic to the whole nervous system. It is a most efficacious remedy in paralysis, if taken in time.

Lungs, Throat and Voice.—It gives special expansion and greater mobility to the chest; enlarges the lungs increases the volume of respiration, and brings the voice more fully under control. As a preventive and cure of lung diseases it has no equal. equal.

Exercise.—It is the most perfect exercise for man or woman, furnishing the best form of physical culture and development in the safest, castest, most thorough and expeditious manner. It is better than the gymnasium, and free from its dangers; cheaper than the saddle; less laborious than boating and infinitely better than drugs in a majority of chronic diseases. It rounds and hardens the muscles, and educates them into ever ready, faithful and efficient servants of the will.
