How the Famous Lecturer's Appearance

Melville D. Landon, better known as "Eli Perkins," who lately died at his home in Yonkers, N. Y., at the age of 71, was one time well-known as a writer and lecturer of the humorous order. It was in the winter of 1892 or '93 that Eli came to Rockland in the capacity of a lecturer, the engagement being effected by Wallace Mason, at that time principal of the Thomaston high school, for whatever profit might be forthcoming from the connection.

It probably had never snowed harder than it snowed all day on the date set for the performance. Main street, and other streets, were buried in o'erpowering drifts, when Eli on a belated train turned questioningly to his escort. There was a noiseless but gloomy chorus of shaking heads.

"I was afraid," said one of the editors, haltingly, "that the awful snow-drifts would-er-" and the explanation trailed weakly off, the others taking it un along largely corroborative aking it up along largely corroborative taking it up along largely lines.

"You see," said another of them explanatorially—they all wanted to make it as pleasant as possible for Eli—"our people are hard to get out in such snowdrifts. Not a street in town but is practically impassable. Probably if it hadn't been for this tremendous storm—you know yourself, Mr. ous storm—you know yourself, Mr. Perkins, how terribly it has snowed all day—this hall would have been filled. ay—this hall would have on't you think so, Black?

Don't you think so, Black?"

The veteran ticket seller, who had joined the group, thus appealed to made no verbal reply. He merely gave utterance to a little laugh that sounded like drawing a poker up and down a length of rusty stovepipe.

Well, it was no use, in the vernacular of that period, standing there chewing the rag. Somebody suggested, by way of doing something to ease off the situation and show the visitor such hospitality as might under the circumstances be available, that the party adolurn en masse to the Congregationalist vestry, where a church social, it was explained, stood scheduled to come off.

Valued at an average of $26 per acre, the 3,242,000 acres of farming area in New Hampshire possesses a total valuation of $85,542,000, according to returns made to the census bureau. Of this aggregative valuation almost one-half of $41,215,000, is due to the buildings. Less than one-third of the land, or 927,000 acres, is improved. Last year $3,340,000 was expended in the state for farm labor.

YOUR FAVORITE POEM Old fashioned poetry, but cheicely good.

—Isaak Walt-

Three Little Graves Three little graves, ranged side by side My close attention drew; O'er two the tall grass bending sighed, And one seemed fresh and new. As lingering there I mused awhile On death's long deamless sleep, And opening life's deceifful smile, A mourner came to weep.

A mourner came to weep.
Her form was bowed, but not with years,
Hor words were faint and few;
And on these little graves, her tears
Distilled like evening dew.
A prattling boy, some lour years old,
Her trembling hand embraced;
And from my heart, the tale he fold
"Mamma, now you must love me more;
For little sister's ead;
And brother, too, you said.
And brother, too, you said.
She loved me when we played,
You told me if I would not cry,
You'd show me where she's laid."

You'd show me where she's laid."
"It is here, my ohlid, that sister lies,
Seep buried in the ground;
No light cones to her little eyes,
And she can hear no sound."
"Mamma, why can't we take her up,
And pc' her in my bef?
"I'l feed her from my little cup,
I'll feed her from my little cup,
And pc' her in my bef?
"I'l dead hear from the cup,
And pc' her in my bef?
I'l feed her from my little cup,
I'l feed her from my little
I'l feed her from my little Recause there is no little."
"Nor God, who saw her die,
As he looks down from Heaven and smile
Called her above the sky.

leged, out of place in poetry; the best of Lowell's work went into his "Biglow Papers;" and Browning, Burns, and Chancer are celebrated for humorous verse.

Some of Kipling's poems will certainly survive, though many are already sinking into well deserved oblivion. In several he combines enough poetic qualifies and shows them to a sufficiently high degree to insure permanance. Among these fortunate survivors we may even at this early date mention with confidence that noble poem "Recessional."

The lecture was illustrated with the following selections, delightfully sung by Clarence A. Pendleton: "Mother O' Mine," "Ford of Kapul River," "Danny Deever," "Gypsy Trail," "Mandlay" and "Recessional." Miss Faith Greenhalgh was the accampanist.

Walter J. Fernald arrived home last week from Oldtown, where he has been stationed the last year as Sturgis deputy, making additional side-trips into Bangor, that bottomless pit of fluid that intoxicates. He says that the Bangor dealers are dead game sports. They play the game with full knowledge of the risk it contains. When they get caught they don their coats and hafs and march to the magistrate's without a whimper. The same does not apply to all of the Oldtown dealers. Mr. Fernald's work as a Sturgis deputy is all done, and it is a fair presumption that he is not altogether sorry of the opportunity to get into some other kind of employment. He has been one of the most, capable men on the staff, but has never been mixed up in the scraps or controversies that appear to have been the lot of nearly all the other deputies.

He waved his whip in dazed surprise and stood watching the automobile until it was out of sight. He paid so little attention to his plowing the rest of the afternoon that the patient horses turned to look inquiringly at him now and then as if to ask what the matter was. But Jeff was thinking, and his train of thought, though by no means comparable in speed to a fast mail, had all the ponderous inertia of a double headed time freight.

By the time he had finished milking he had come to a conclusion. "I'm going he had come to a conclusion. "I'm going his kinee. "I'll beat that stuck up Du Val yet." And he went into the house and wrote to an automobile company for prices.

But if Jeff had known the trend of the conversation in the touring car be might have been better satisfied with verything in general and with one or two things in particular.

"Who is that fellow?" inquired Harold as they passed Jeff.

"That's Jeff Pearson, one of my best friends," promptly replied Gladys.
"So you like plowboys, do you?" Harold asked, with a quizzical smile.

"A dollar and a half a barrel texts."

turned. "Did you ever do any work in your life?"

Again Harold smiled that exasperating smile, though it was a tritle less self confident this time. "What's the use?" he inquired. "Father's got plenty of money."

"If I were a boy," the cold contempt in Gladys' voice jarred Harold out of his accustomed self assurance, "I'd be ashamed to have no ambition but to spend my father's money. You don't have to work for a living, but the very fact that you don't makes it possible for you to accomplish much greater things."

"I don't think you're hardly fair."

"I don't think you're hardly fair."

"That's it—father, father, all the time. Why don't you learn to depend on yourself a little? Why don't you go to college and learn something and then start out for yourself and do "Tell her about it." said a voice behind her, and she turned to see Gladys standing beside the half filled apple basket. Her face was stern.
"Tell her about it." said Mabel, turning to the stranger, and he once more stranger.

mysterious visitor might be monotonous if presented by a less able actor. There is no man on the English and American stage today, who, by reason of his accomplishments in finely wrought character acting, is better fitted to advance this new idea of the drama. Mr. Robertson stands first among living English actors for technique, personal charm, unusual intellect, and broad human sympathies. He is assisted by a capable company.

In conclusion, Mr. Robertson's presentation of Jerome's plays, both because of the purport and mystical symbolism, and because of the admirable impersonation, has done much in advancing the ethical and aesthetic influence of the modern drama.
