The Editor's Page

Our Law Review is operating this year with a new organizational concept, which we feel will assist us in enhancing the quality of our publication. The editorial tasks have been divided along functional lines and as a consequence each article which appears in the Law Review is subjected to the scrutiny of an editorial team whose combined efforts assure a better product.

Other changes have taken place this year, including a sorely needed renovation of our Law Review Room. The Law Review deeply appreciates the new desks which were custom-built and donated by the Labcraft Division of N. I. I. Laboratory Furniture, Inc. of Elkins, West Virginia. We feel this company's interest in education outside the scientific field is highly commendable. The Law Review also is very grateful to Roger Jeffries, a member of the class of 1970, for his substantial help in the renovation of our Law Review Room, and to the Charleston law firm of Kay, Casto & Chaney for their donation of carpeting.

This edition of Volume 72 reflects a new emphasis on service to the West Virginia lawyer. The selection of materials for this edition was guided in large part by our desire to provide our readers with materials more relevant to the practice of law in West Virginia. The reader will note that in both the leading articles and in the student work, greater emphasis has been placed on analysis of applicable West Virginia law.

We invite you to peruse this edition of Volume 72 critically and we welcome your comments about the articles printed here.
