Mr. LaRose studies saxophone with Sam Skelton.

Michael LaRose, saxophonist and music educator, has grown from a small town country boy into a well-rounded musician and teacher. As a native from Jackson County, Georgia, Michael began playing the tenor saxophone at the age of eleven when he started the 6th grade. It was not until five years later that Michael realized that music was going to be the rest of his life. Performing with many ensembles, including the District 13 Honor Band six times, the Georgia All-State Honor Band three times, the Kennesaw State University Wind Ensemble, the KSU Concert Band, and the KSU Jazz Band I, Michael has performed repertoire written by a wide range of composers from Holst, Grainger and Copland to Mackey, Markowski, and Bryant.

Currently, Michael is studying saxophone performance under Sam Skelton and has studied music education under John Culvahouse, Allison Mann, and Barbara Hammond. As an educator, Michael has worked with the Douglas County High School Marching Band, conducted the KSU Concert Band, and gives private lessons to high school students on saxophone, clarinet, and flute. Michael is also working with local middle and high school band directors, giving master classes on instrument maintenance, instrument accessories and good tone production. Michael plans to graduate from KSU in the spring of 2013 with a degree in Music Education and pursue a high school band director position for the 2013-2014 school year.
