Domenico Scarlatti - Sonata in A, K. 208

Domenico Scarlatti was an Italian harpsichordist and composer of the Baroque era, though his compositional style is often thought of as more Classical. He best known for his 555 keyboard sonatas, most of which are single-movement works in binary form, as is the case with his Sonata in A, K. 208. Many of his sonatas translate beautifully on harp, and have been performed and recorded by renowned harpists including Maria Luisa Rayan-Forero, Yolanda Kondonassis and Judy Loman.

Louis Spohr - Fantasie in C minor, Op. 35

Louis Spohr was a German violinist, teacher, conductor, and composer of the late Classical/early Romantic era. Although most of his works are seldom performed today, he was prolific and highly regarded in his time. While he was concertmaster at the court of Gotha, he met and fell in love with his future wife: a young and talented harpist named Dorette Scheidler. Spohr was inspired to write a number of solo and chamber works for harp, including his Fantasie, which he dedicated to Dorette.

Arnold Bax - Elegiac Trio

Arnold Bax was an English poet and composer whose musical style combines Romantic and Impressionistic elements. His Elegiac Trio, composed in 1916, is a dreamy, reflective single-movement work written as a memorial to those who died in the Easter Rising insurrection in Dublin. The piece is divided into two main sections, each with it's own theme; in the first section, the viola and flute pass the melody back and forth as the harp plays arpeggios underneath. The second theme is introduced by the flute after a brief harp cadenza. After the recapitulation, the trio draws to a close with a subdued tempo and dynamic; a rising four-note figure is repeated in the flute while the harp and viola restate the second theme.

Gabriel Faure - Impromptu, Op. 86

Gabriel Faure was a French composer, organist, pianist and teacher. His music has been described as a link between late Romanticism and early modernism; his early works were inspired by the likes of Chopin and Schumann, and in his later years, he experimented with compositional techniques that were more impressionistic and foreshadowed atonality. Faure wrote six Impromptus, all of which were composed for piano except for the last one: his Impromptu for Harp was written in 1904 and is characteristic of his later composition style, which was turbulent and impassioned.
