"What mighty contests arise from trivial things!" — Alexander Pope

La Salle Pursuits

Rules of Play

Equipment

A high-school diploma is a good start, and a healthy cash flow is a definite asset, whether begged, borrowed, or honestly earned. You also need: lots of textbooks, at prodigious prices; a supply of notebooks and pens; a thorough knowledge of a term paper guide; a retentive memory; and a great deal of willpower.

Object of the Game

A bachelor's degree, of course, in arts and sciences or business. What else is worth playing for?

Start of Play

September 9, 1982, for the Class of 1986. Welcome to two-hour classes and the killer stairs in Wister and College Hall.

Winning the Game

May 18, 1986 — Graduation Day! after at least four years, eight semesters, and countless days. 120 credits, at least 38 classes . . .

you are entitled to a seat on the floor at Convention Hall, the better to shout when Brother Ellis graduates your school.

Continuation of Play

Make friends, join clubs or Greek organizations; eat when you can (if you must) in the Snack Bar or the Dining Rooms. Buy appropriate dorm furniture. Race for lot spaces at 8:05 a.m. Take coffee intravenously. Wait for the 18 (formerly the S) or the 26 buses that do not come in rain, snow, sleet, hail, or hurricane. Set up housekeeping in a Wister carrel. Take a nap on the quad (or in class). Preregister, register again, pay your bill, twice a year. Do your Christmas shopping after last fall final. Take a course pass/fail. Memorize pizza delivery phone numbers. Live dangerously and try to buy a frat party ticket at the last minute. Join the skinny line snaking out of the textbook store. Buy a La Salle college sweatshirt — then buy a La Salle University one. Make a spring pilgrimage to Florida. Grow old in a Deli line. Name an experimental lab rat. Tap MAC. Change roommates. Pass 21, go directly to bar. Fight with your boy — or girl — friend, make up, split, find another one. Laugh loud and often. Have fun!

Notes on Play

All kidding aside, this is not an easy thing, this pursuit of a college degree. In fact, this not-so-trivial pursuit is one of the most important things we'll ever do. It is four years of work — of late nights over textbooks and typewriters, of hours in libraries and in front of computer terminals, of months spent traipsing between buildings from class to class to class.

Most importantly, it is four years of growth and maturation. This is when we "grow up," when we make some hard decisions about what we are going to do with the rest of our lives. We worry about grades and resumes, we make friends we'll have forever . . . serious stuff.

Yet often when we look back, it is the little things, the small details, the trivialities, that we remember. We remember faces whose names we never knew, we remember small smiles shared with friends over private jokes, we remember individual moments. We recall little facts — and in the end, that is what our big "major" pictures consist of, the small pieces of information integrated into careers and callings. The little things make up the rich canvas of the whole.

This is what the 1986 Explorer is all about. Let's take a look at those little things . . . the little things about ourselves, about La Salle University, about the world, the infinitely variable world, around us. It's pretty interesting — and after all, it's ours. What Alexander Pope wrote centuries ago really is true: "What mighty contests arise from trivial things!"

Claude F. Koch

The watch, an old-fashioned railroad pocket watch, stays with you. It fits the man. Claude F. Koch is an old-fashioned professor, both in his practice of his craft and in his ongoing dedication to this university in which he teaches. Forty years ago, a graduate and a veteran, he returned to La Salle to teach writing, and since then his contributions as an author and a teacher have been such that colleagues and students together agree that there is no match for him.

Mr. Koch, a 1940 La Salle graduate, returned here in 1946 after serving with the Marines in the Pacific. Four of his novels have been published, as well as more than eighty pieces of verse and forty short stories. His work has appeared in several literary magazines around the country, including La Salle's own Four Quarters. His contributions to that publication have been especially prolific; a story of his appeared in the very first issue, and one of his more recent ones, "Bread and Butter Questions," was published in Prize Stories, 1985: The O. Henry Awards as one of the twenty best American short stories of the year. Brother Patrick Ellis, La Salle's President, cites Mr. Koch's contributions as among the most consistently distinguished that the magazine has had.

All of his stories, Koch wrote in 1980, arise from a "desire to celebrate some remembered characteristic or circumstance or thing or place." He is a keen observer of the way human beings act in each other's lives; he has, as John Keenan, a colleague and former student, says, a "sacramental view of life, in which people and events are seen as outward signs of the workings of God's grace." His style, lyrical and often almost painterly, tugs at the corners of the reader's memory. No detail is trivial, and all combine to create rich canvases of inference and meaning. His Renaissance training and his constant reading are reflected in his work and in his classroom presentations.

Mr. Koch is a strong believer in the discipline inherent in the craft of writing and it is this belief which he has tried to instill in his students throughout his teaching career. He tries to make them understand that writing takes discipline, not just chance, that it is a matter of writing and rewriting and rewriting again — an idea that he can hardly emphasize enough. A charitable, courteous gentleman who posts long office hours for student conferences, his emphasis never-

It helps that he approaches student writing as an editor, not as a critic, the difference being that as an editor he wants to see the work-in-progress improve, and offers suggestions to that end. The level of craft is what concerns him and such craftsmanship is what students remember. "What I learned," Meredith says, "about making things out of words I learned from Claude early on."

Mr. Koch is one of many La Salle graduates who have returned to teach here. His contribution is all the more significant because his career here began with the birth of the "new" La Salle after World War II. Enrollment that had dropped to almost nothing during the war made a quantum leap in 1946 when veterans returned in droves. Mr. Koch was one of several lay faculty who, in that figurative "Year 1," began to shape La Salle as we know it today. His loyalty to this university, which has been virtually his career commitment, is abiding, and even somewhat rare.

This yearbook proposes to take a more or less light-hearted look at the little things, the sometimes quite trivial things, that make up our lives at La Salle. In Claude Koch, however, we have a teacher who has built wonderful things out of small details, out of moments remembered. From scenes intrinsically insignificant, he has crafted stories of grace and imagination.

Most importantly for us, he has tried, with generosity and wit, to impart such a feeling for the craft to students in classes from Composition 101 to Creative Writing 306. In doing so, he has given forty years of his life, his energy, his talents, his strong principles. It is for these reasons that the 1986 Explorer is dedicated to a gentleman, a writer, and a teacher, Claude F. Koch.

theless has often been enough to scare off the less-stubborn undergraduate. Joseph Meredith, another former student who is now the director of the Sheekey Writing Center, says that Koch has always "tried to thresh the class at the beginning of the term and end up with real grain."

The grain is rarely pure, but it is usually more refined. Students who pay attention for even a single term find themselves different writers after it. Mr. Koch's exacting standards make them think — really think — about the way they put words to paper.

Trivium + Convivium = Oblivium

Professor Flotsam pocketed his chalk, tossed aside his notes, and stepped out from behind the lectern.

"Okay," he snapped, glancing up to survey the crowded classroom. "We've discussed computer technology, we've debated foreign policy, and we've explored nuclear proliferation. Now, which of these issues would you say represents an emblem of sociopolitical or sociocultural life in the United States in these 1980's?"

Silence.

"Anybody?"

From somewhere in the back of the room came the whip-like crack of a wad of chewing gum being pulverized.

"Mr. Sinnick, how about you?"

"I pass."

"If you're lucky," muttered Flotsam.

A few polite chuckles, a nervous guffaw or two, then silence again.

"Okay," Sinnick finally chirped. "You want an emblem for the eighties? No problem."

"Well," goaded Flotsam.

Sinnick scowled. "Trivial Pursuit."

Flotsam's patented look of incredulity cascaded across his face.

"Would you care to explain that?" Flotsam asked.

"Nope."

Flotsam took a few steps toward the front row. "Could anybody else shed some light on this startling theory?"

A hand shot up in the third row. Gratefully, Flotsam acknowledged it.

"Trivial Pursuit is a board game, sir," gulped a nervous young woman in horn-rimmed glasses.

"Tell me more," smiled Flotsam, relishing his role as master of ceremonies.

"All I know is that it started in Canada," continued the woman, sitting back emphatically as if to vacate her throne.

"Then to whom do we owe our debt of gratitude?"

A hand shot up on the side of the room. Flotsam nodded in its direction.

"Two journalists created it," announced a tall, bearded young man.

"Their names?"

The student beamed. "Chris Haney, photo editor of The Montreal Gazette, and Scott Abbott, a sportswriter for the Canadian Press news agency."

"Ah, an expert," said Flotsam, moving closer.

"And who markets and manufactures it?"

"In the United States, you mean?"

"(H-huh.)"

"Selchow and Righter."

"How is it that you know so much about this?" asked Flotsam.

"I spend a lot of time reading the package while we're playing," said the student, sheepishly.

"And what else do Selchow and Righter manufacture?" asked Flotsam.

"I'm not sure."

"Anybody?"

A hand shot up on the opposite side of the room. Flotsam pointed.

"Scrabble and Parcheesi."

"Okay. And what game did the manufacturer previously decline to market, to its everlasting chagrin?"

"Monopoly," offered three students simultaneously.

"Aha," said Flotsam. "And this new one is a big commercial success, I take it?"

"The biggest," chimed an anonymous high-pitched voice from the middle of the room.

"How so?"

Another hand. "Well, not only has it been outselling every other game in this country, but it's spawned imitators galore and come out in different versions — spinoffs. Like the Baby Boomer edition, the Silver Screen edition, and Genus II."

"Do tell," trilled Flotsam, turning toward Sinnick. "How are we doing?"

"Oh, just great," said Sinnick, sarcasm dripping from every pore. "I rest my case."

"Why's that?"

"Because you've proved my point."

"We have?" asked Flotsam, surprised.

"Vividly. But don't take it as a compliment."

"And why not, pray tell?"

"Well, look at how you operate. As soon as the topic comes up, you begin oiling our machinery to spew out minutiae. Right away, you begin tapping everybody's recall, testing our brain-mouth coordination, panning for random nuggets of information. This classroom is like a meeting of Informaniacs Anonymous."

"And how do you propose we assimilate this brilliantly perceptive theory that, in case you've forgotten, you yourself advanced just minutes ago?" challenged Flotsam, on the defensive for the first time.

"By merely seeing it for what it is. Trivial Pursuit isn't just cardboard entertainment. It's become a way of life. But the game didn't create itself. You know who created the game, who fueled our insatiable desire for disconnected facts? You. Teachers. The educational system.

"You guys have been rewarding students for the wrong kind of knowledge for years. Tests, exams, quizzes, grades. What'd you expect?"

"Oh, I see," said Flotsam. "This game has nothing whatsoever to do with exhilaration generated by the fast-paced demonstration of wit and whimsy. And it's certainly not a convenient way to experience camaraderie while consuming vast quantities of chicken wings, Doritos, Twinkies, and Michelob Light, is it?"

The bell suddenly sounded, signaling the end of class.

Sinnick bolted to his feet. "Yeah, it's all those things. But it's also a chance to intellectually humiliate your friends," he said, edging toward the aisle. "And for the appreciation of that charming skill, we have you and your ilk to thank."

"Class dismissed," shouted Flotsam above the din. He turned away from the large audience of faces before allowing himself a big, broad smile of barely perceptible ambivalence.

Belfield

"I am often pleased with the solemn groves skirting my meadows in majestic silence and cool appearance. There is a spring . . . in the most romantic scenery your imagination can conceive . . . an immense wood of lofty trees on the side of a middling steep hill . . . a handsome meadow. The light on it is seen between the trees."

This bit of paradise is Charles Willson Peale's Belfield. When Peale wrote his glowing description of his new home to his son in 1910, he was eager to get to work on it, eager to make it a profitable farm. Now, more than a century-and-a-half later, Peale's farm is a part of La Salle, the latest addition to University property.

Peale was an artist and, among many other interests, a master-builder and gardener. He created the terraced gardens for which Belfield became famous, and built onto the original house to make it suitable as a studio. He even experimented with a vineyard which eventually produced a sought-after sweet wine, although Peale himself was a temperance advocate.

The house remains today, and is being renovated, in accordance with its historic landmark status, to house the President's office. The gardens are being reclaimed from the wild, and the outlying land has been cleared for parking. Yet still, on a quiet afternoon, the serenity of Peale's vision is undamaged by the outside world. It is a piece of the country in the midst of the city . . . a piece of the past in the present.

Shelves full of composition textbooks and back issues of the Grimoire and Four Quarters, a poet's corner in the far end of the room decorated with crayon portraits of "DADDY," and a genuine sense of "welcome" all characterize the atmosphere prevalent in the Sheekey Writing Center, the famed haunt of students plagued by faulty grammar and writing phobias. Whether it's a complex case of mixed metaphors or vague reference, or a simple problem of "i before e except after c," the Sheekey Writing Center could well be the answer to the ailing student's prayers. Situated on the second floor of Olney Hall, the relatively recent adjunct of La Salle's English department has tutored, coached, and encouraged students since its inception six years ago.

By the mid-1970's, the need for such a facility became apparent as the level of entering skills declined nationwide. With the exception of the elite Liberal Arts and Ivy League schools, most institutions of higher learning experienced an overall erosion of general skills. By 1975, it was obvious that something had to be done with the writing ability of the incoming freshmen, and so the idea of a writing center was conceived. Then-chairman of the English department John Keenan, with the enthusiastic support of many of his colleagues, envisioned a place where students could drop in at any time with any kind of writing problem and see someone who could help them. Consequently, in 1979, partially to liberate composition teachers from spending too much class time on the horrors of basic grammar, and partially to provide students with a haven from the ceaseless onslaught of punctuation trivia, the Sheekey Writing Center was established.

The Center was named for Brother Edward Patrick Sheekey, now retired, who taught writing for 59 years. Beginning his career at West Catholic as a younger brother, Brother Patrick eventually taught composition, expository prose, and creative writing at La Salle; many of his former students have returned to La Salle as faculty members, including John Keenan, Claude Koch, John Seydow, and Joseph Meredith, who is the current administrator of the Writing Center.

In addition to their work with freshmen composition "customers," explains Meredith, the Sheekey staff also helps students prepare resumes, letters of application, statements of intent and so forth. While the majority of the students using the Center are sent by their composition or general education literature instructors, teachers in other departments also encourage their students to take advantage of the available services. The Sheekey staff conducts anywhere from 1000 to 1500 tutorial sessions a year for some 200 regular customers; each session lasts at least half an hour.

"We can't substitute for a writing course," explains Meredith, "but we can, I think, successfully supplement what the writing instructor does. We're not meant to take the place of a writing course — we can't do the work of a real writing teacher in a 14-week course — but we can buttress some of the skills mentioned in class." The staff can guide a student through a number of exercises in half an hour — and sometimes, that's all it takes. Tutoring sessions are supplemented by workshops conducted by the staff throughout the semester.

So, does it work? Definitely. But how? What makes the Sheekey Writing Center a successful venture? A smile crosses Meredith's face: "The people . . . teaching is something the tutors find they really like to do." Meredith resisted offers of assorted mechanical equipment, computers, et al. because he believes that "you still do the best work one person to one person." The Sheekey staff consists of Judy Trachtenberg and Anita Tiambeng, professional tutors, both fully qualified for the position; three student tutors fill out the remainder of the roster. "I've been very lucky over the years with the tutors I've hired," notes Meredith. "They have been preeminently qualified for the most part and also good people, nice people. And you could really tell they enjoyed what they were doing. They really wanted to teach someone something, and not just teach them a lesson — you can always tell it's gonna hurt when someone teaches you a lesson."

The Writing Center offers students a kind of "unthreatening clearing house of infor-

taking it off campus

An example of true human concern, Project Appalachia is a special event that occurs every spring at La Salle. Sponsored by the Campus Ministry, it is a program in which fifteen to twenty La Salle students offer up their week of spring vacation to service in the poverty-stricken Appalachian mountains. Journeying to such hidden places as Jonestown, Virginia and Henderson Gap, Kentucky, these students work at local community centers or participate in the repair, reconstruction, and insulation of homes so dilapidated they would appear unfit for living by our standards. For many, it is their first experience with a hammer and nails, one that does not come without its bumps and bruises. For everyone, though, the trip is a harsh awakening to the destitution that prevails in certain areas of our country.

While the actual trip lasts only a week, the extensive preparation and fund-raising affairs essential to Project Appalachia begin more than a month earlier. All of the building materials used at the worksites are paid for by La Salle students; therefore, great effort must be put into activities such as bake sales, "tuck-ins," and the annual twenty-four-hour Game-a-thon.

For all of those involved, Project Appalachia is a great deal of work. However, by the time the vans are ready to set out for the return trip to Philadelphia, no one will regret the time and effort they spent. The effects of Project Appalachia are reciprocal; the grateful looks on the faces of the Virginians and Kentuckians who will enjoy warmer homes in the upcoming winter are certainly reflected in the cheerful faces of the departing La Salle students.

gation," continues Meredith. "Learning shouldn't be threatening and students will open up and talk to a tutor, ask questions of a tutor that they will not ask of a teacher, even in conference, and certainly not in a classroom . . . Tutors have to be good listeners as well as speakers."

And in such a spirit, the Center awaits its future generations, armed with dictionaries, thesasaureses, writing exercises, grammar skills, and unwavering patience.

Where did La Salle's first resident student live?

John Brennan lived in the Belfield Country Club (today's North Dorms Complex) with two Brothers, while attending class at the old 1240 N. Broad Street campus.

What does the phrase "human camel pack" describe?

F. Lewis Donaghy, F.S.C., used it in his Conceived in Crisis history of the College to describe the appearance of the student body moving La Salle, bag, baggage, and library, from its North Broad Street campus to 20th and Olney in 1930.

How many cherubs are there on the Trivial Pursuit board?

Nineteen — and here are eleven of La Salle's!

"We are here for the students"

Any curious La Salle University student who ventures to the second floor of Holroyd Hall is likely to encounter Brother Richard Hawley, the leader of the Biology department that occupies the floor. Acting as chairman of the department, Brother Richard devotes his time to both the administrative responsibilities of his position and to meeting with students — specifically to his one true passion: teaching.

Having received both his Bachelor's and his Master's degrees in Biology from the Catholic University of America, Brother Richard joined the then-La Salle College faculty in 1966. He taught Bio for several years before he also took on the responsibility of heading the College's newly-developed Audio-Visual Center in 1969. He returned to full-time teaching in the department in 1972, and accepted the chairmanship in 1976 when his predecessor, Brother James Muldoon, became the Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences.

Within the general and vast field of Biology, Brother Richard has taught a variety of subjects, including general Biology, Anatomy, Embryology, and Microbiology. Among these topics, the study of embryology, his "first love," sits at the top of his list of favorites. Concentrating his interests particularly in human embryology, Brother Richard has developed a specific fascination for the possibility of the regeneration of limbs, and has pursued the topic in research for the past five years.

trative duties, Brother Richard occupies some of his spare time by putting his creative side to work; when he isn't reading, he enjoys building model fire engines to add to his collection that currently numbers about fifty. But because he spends so much of his time in the Biology Department, Brother Richard confesses, "I guess, in a sense, I'm a workaholic, like a lot of other people."

Despite his full-time responsibilities as the Biology Department chairman, and the demands of his other activities, Brother

Richard admits the true enjoyment he finds in teaching: "I love it. I get so much satisfaction out of teaching — just to look down on a classroom and see somebody grabbing what I'm talking about elates me. For me, teaching is the prime reason that the staff is here." Speaking from a true teacher's perspective, Brother Richard emphasizes the role of the faculty: "We are here for the students."

A separation on good terms

This is the first time, in the history of the Explorer, that a page has been devoted to the Communication Arts Department. That's because, for the first time in the history of La Salle, there is a Communication Arts Department at La Salle.

Communication Arts itself is not new to La Salle. In 1976, La Salle first offered courses designated as Communications, and in 1979, the first graduates with a degree in Communication Arts left the College. However, the program was considered a part of the English Department.

As a major, Communication Arts enjoyed tremendous growth, both in students and in curriculum, over the next few years. In 1981, the English Department became the English & Communication Arts Department, thus giving the quietly-developing program more visibility.

But an official split between the two majors did not occur until the middle of the spring semester in 1985. It was then that the Communication Arts Department was born.

Dr. Richard Goedkoop, a Communication Arts professor at La Salle for six years, served as acting chairman for the first full semester of the department's official existence, filling in for Brother Gerard Moly-neaux, who was on leave studying film in Italy in the fall.

Dr. Goedkoop says that "there were several reasons (for the split), and none of them had to do with anyone being mad at anyone in English." It was simply decided that "the time was right" for the move.

"For one thing, Communications is a different discipline than English," Dr. Goedkoop explains. Historically, the split between the two actually occurred around 1915, when Communications began to develop into the study of interpersonal and mass communications that it is today.

Dr. Goedkoop also cites the increase in

Dr. Thomas Straub, Chairman

Dr. William Price

Communication Arts majors as a factor in the split. Communications has become "almost twice the size of English." It is one of the largest majors on campus, "and yet it only had an assistant chairman."

"We were removed from important policy-making procedures and committees on campus," he says. "And in terms of fine-tuning the program ... those decisions should be in the hands of those trained in the discipline."

But the reasons for the split were not entirely based on gaining administrative muscle on campus; "externally, there was also a problem," Dr. Goedkoop says. Businesses hiring Communication Arts majors may not have been sure of what that degree entailed when it came out of an English Department. Also, incoming students expressed confusion over the situation.

"There was an ambiguity that needed clarification," Dr. Goedkoop states.

And so the split was on.

But that split does not seem to have affected anyone involved very dramatically.

Dr. Goedkoop thinks that "the change will be more in the future" for the students. "Administratively, there may be a little more identity, but that depends on the individual student."

"And I don't think in the long run, or in the near future, that it's going to affect the English Department negatively," Dr. Goedkoop believes. The two departments are still co-operating on several matters. For instance, there will be an ongoing relationship between the two in the writing program. The two can be combined to form a joint minor in the new curriculum. They share many faculty members, and the student lounge as well.

"There has been a change, but it's not like a complete divorce," Dr. Goedkoop says. "It's more like a separation on good terms."

Teaching teachers

Anyone who has had the opportunity to speak with Dr. Preston Feden, or has worked with him in class, would find it hard to believe that he did not always aspire to the teaching profession. As an undergraduate, his interests lay in the areas of psychology and sociology; some of his courses involved work with children. Eventually, he took a position in the Neshaminy School District teaching special education classes. Later, he entered the Special Education program at Temple University, where he subsequently earned his Master's and his Doctorate. He came to La Salle as an associate to Marilyn Lambert, who was then the Director of the newly-organized Special Education department. He has directed the program since 1973, and became the chairman of the Education department this year.

Dr. Feden's contributions to the Education department are numerous. His Lindback Award attests to the fact that his is an invaluable position within the program. Most recently, he has assisted in the development of both the Elementary and Graduate Education programs, and has also participated in efforts to educate the parents of the handicapped. Without a doubt, his work has helped to widen the educational focus of the La Salle community.

As the chairman of the Education Department, Dr. Feden's primary goal is the consolidation of various programs in order to concentrate more intensively on the needs of the students. He hopes to establish an extensive dialogue between those students and the faculty; he feels that students should "become part of the workings of the department . . . working side-by-side with the faculty", by contributing to the evaluation of the program and helping to design research projects.

Dr. Feden's major concern is the training of intelligent, well-qualified and individuals who understand child and adolescent development — the "focal point of education," and the foundation of all of La Salle's Education programs. Having a strong background in the study of those areas is "what makes a teacher different from a lay person . . . People who enter teaching do it because it seems safe. That's not teaching to me. A teacher is someone who is constantly making decisions on behalf of the students." Thus, Dr. Feden provides his students with plenty of opportunities to "get to know what it's like on the other side of the desk" from his Early Experience course until they set out for the Professional Year.

For Dr. Feden, teaching is important, and it has been very satisfying and rewarding. However, it can only be so for those who, like him, are intelligent educators who take their work seriously. He sees himself as "an extension of the Department" whose operations depend upon the interaction of all of its members. Yet his work goes beyond the more business-oriented aspect of his position. To see someone who is so concerned about his students and so dedicated to the training of the most qualified and intelligent teachers is to understand what the teaching profession is all about. Under his guidance, La Salle's Education department cannot help but produce those qualified, intelligent effective teachers — the best teachers.

Great Expectations

If you've ever wondered what Picasso's Cubist masterpiece, Les Demoiselles d'Avignon, and T.S. Eliot's seminal work, The Wasteland, have in common, you have only to look as far as Dr. Patricia Haberstroh of La Salle's English Department. In an age where specialization has become the mode, Dr. Haberstroh's varied interests in art and its relationship to literature reflect a multi-disciplinary nature not often found in institutions of higher education. As many of her students will jokingly confirm, there is sometimes as much color and artistic expression in her wardrobe as there is in her subject matter.

Dr. Haberstroh began her teaching career as a part-time member of the Evening Division faculty in 1968. Before moving to the Day Division, she served as the coordinator of the Continuing Education for Women program during the 1975-76 academic year.

Since then, she has been a full-time member of the English Department faculty. Her primary academic interests include modern British and American novels, contemporary poetry, and writing.

She laughs when she says that her favorite literary work is Eliot's Four Quarters; as she explains, "somebody's got to like it." Yet it was in reading Charles Dickens' Great Expectations at the age of 8 or 9 that her desire to teach English was confirmed. She relates, with a smile, "Little did I know that my own 'great expectations' would not include material wealth."

Even when she is not teaching, Dr. Haberstroh spends a good deal of time in the classroom. As a result of her interest in art, she is currently pursuing a Master's degree in Art History from Temple, concentrating primarily on the experiments in form within modern art. "I knew that I liked modern art, but I didn't quite understand it. What I found out," she quips, "is that I didn't have to understand it."

Her curiosity about modern art as been successfully parlayed into an Honors Program course in which students examine the relationship between many of the movements in both modern literature and art. The course reflects much of her broader philosophy towards education; she encourages students to "trust their own abilities to read and understand things." While she believes that education is not always "fun," the hard work, she says, "is usually more than rewarding."

Dr. Haberstroh has found the demands of teaching, studying, and raising a family to be extremely time-consuming: "My biggest problem is time — time to do the things I want to do." She loves to travel; one colleague says that she is "literally willing to go anywhere on a moment's notice." Recent trips include an excursion to London to study British women authors and a three-week hiatus in Italy this past summer during which she studied Renaissance art.

She has been named as a PEW Fellow for the 1985-86 academic year, placing her among a group of faculty members studying the uses of the computer within the humanities classroom. This distinction has provided her with unanticipated benefits, namely, the opportunity to use a word processor to compensate for what she calls "my terrible typing skills."

Being involved in so much has left her with little time for other interests, so much so that she jokes, "the extent of my exercise is using the stairs in Olney Hall." She is "fascinated by design, particularly graphic art," and wants to pursue silkscreening as a hobby, because, she says, "it is one of the practical applications of art which does not take a great deal of talent — you can produce something 'artistic' without necessarily being Picasso."

Although she is constantly on the move, her main commitment is to her students.

Her office door is literally always open, and when she is not in class, she can usually be found in conference with a student. In fact, it is rare when an appointment with a student does not run over the allotted time. This, she says, is a result of one of her "most distinguishing characteristics," namely, "the inability to keep my mouth shut."

Those who know Dr. Haberstroh wouldn't hesitate to agree, and be glad about it. Her enthusiasm and her dedication to teaching are surpassed only by her devotion to and concern for her students. She describes herself as a "confirmed spectator, supporting old adage that 'those who can, do, and those who can't, teach'." But fortunately for La Salle, Patricia Haberstroh has given a new meaning to that old precept by demonstrating that often — especially in her case — teaching is the most successful way to "do."

Creative Teaching and Experiential Learning

"Creativity in teaching means working to develop a dynamic learning environment in the classroom which is characterized by a sense of challenge, excitement, and fun, for both students and teacher." This is a formal statement by the Management Department's Dr. Steven Meisel, but it indicates exactly the stimulating and growth-encouraging atmosphere one finds in his classroom. In his five years at La Salle, he has earned a reputation among students as dedicated professor, and this, he says, is because "I bring a great deal of enthusiasm to my classes and I think it's reflected in the students' interest in the subject matter."

How Dr. Meisel came to teach at La Salle is a story in itself. His formal training was as a psychologist; he received a B.A. in Psychology from West Chester, a Master's in Group Dynamics from Temple, and a Ph.D. in Organizational Behavior from Temple. It was while he was working in a mental health center that he began to realize that the money being sent into the facility was not being used well as it might have been, even though the employees were trying hard to do good work. Thus, he speculated on the effectiveness of the organization and the people involved — that is, on "organizational behavior." From work with abnormal behavior, then, came a transition to work with organizational behavior, here at La Salle.

Dr. Meisel's interests lie not in the clinical one-to-one relationships, but in finding out how organizations work and how psychology influences groups. Organizational behavior analyzes the emergence of motivation and leadership within groups. He says that he starts classes by telling students what the established issues are, so that they can go on from there to make new discoveries, instead of each class "reinventing the wheel" by discovering basic information about itself.

This is part of his philosophy of teaching, which relies on Experiential Learning. If, for example, a class is talking about competition, Dr. Meisel will present them with some of the theories about competition, but it's "better to set up a competitive situation and discuss the feelings and reactions of those involved." Students remember the basics years later, because they recall the class set-ups that included Tinker Toys or Legos to prove a point.

Dr. Meisel, like almost any professor, says that he hopes for some memorability of topic; within the Management Department, he feels that Experiential Learning usually provides it. The entire department, in his view, promotes a progressive atmosphere which is conducive to learning. To that end, Meisel, along with chairman Joseph Seltzer, attends meetings of the Organizational Behavior Teaching Society, an international organization which meets to deliver papers and discuss developments in the field.

Dr. Meisel's enjoyment of his day undergraduate classes stems from the fact that "it's a lot of fun to deal with people who are open to new ideas and forming new opinions." He finds La Salle students to be, on the whole, bright and hard-working; after five years here, he can attest that teaching itself is "hard work to do well." But he enjoys it, and he brings a sense of independence and humor to all of his classes, to the sure benefit of his students.

His is an easy-going, bright, and dynamic style, and is clearly visible when Dr. Meisel is asked about his hobbies. He is a movie buff in all genres, a fan of Sherlock Holmes, and a traveller. "For me," he says, "an ideal situation is to go to an interesting place and see a Sherlock Holmes movie." It must be elementary.

The little joys of teaching . . .

The small poster above Brother Edward's desk reads, "The little joys of teaching are without number." Anyone familiar with his dry wit may find in this statement an ironic twist. "I never wanted to be anything else," Brother Edward explains. He began his teaching career in the Baltimore public school system before entering the Christian Brothers in 1952. Within three years, he found himself at La Salle, beginning what has turned out to be a solid thirty-year relationship with the institution.

Brother Edward Davis was assigned to the College by his superiors to teach Educational Psychology, even though his first Master's degree was in the Philosophy of Education. Brother Edward soon moved on to the Religion Department, while feverishly studying in that field. Now that he has a Master's in Religion from La Salle and a Ph.D. from Catholic University in Religion, he feels a bit more confident in his abilities. In fact, Brother Edward has been so successful at teaching Religion that he was chosen as one of last year's recipients of the prestigious Lindback Award. His talents have also allowed him to study archaeology on partial scholarship at Hebrew Union College in Jerusalem.

Academically, Brother Edward has two loves, the Greek language and the study of Biblical literature. Of the former, he reports, "I love it; it keeps me sane!" Thus he continues to study the language, still under the tutelage of Brother Jude Sapone. Having also a workable knowledge of Hebrew, Brother Edward displays scholarship in the critical examination of both Old and new testament texts. He views his teaching of Biblical literature as something of a ministry. He explains, "Almost nobody really understands the nature of Biblical literature, so I would like to make a small group of people understand it as potential believers and as members of Western Culture." He wishes to dispel what his students have learned as children, which "is often erroneous and on a fantasy-world level. What good is this for organizing one's interior self? It has to have existential meaning — that sounds Lutheran, but it's true."

Brother Edward's expertise served him well during a three-year term as Chairman of the Religion Department and during a seven-year term as Director of Graduate Religion, although his true claim to fame is having taught several of his contemporaries on the faculty. Drs. Rossi, Rudnitsky, and McCann were, at one time, "the fresh-persons whom one enjoys every semester." Brother Edward beams, "La Salle has a great deal to offer — we can give a good education to the very bright but what we do best is to educate the ordinary student. That is what so-called prestigious institutions don't do!" Brother Edward views this as the primary strength of La Salle University.

Of course, his career has been greatly influenced by the Brothers. Brother Edward elaborates, "it has brought out in me potentialities that would never have been realized otherwise. It's like food for growth." Paraphrasing the book of Ecclesiastes, he explains that his experience as a Brother, "has taught me the foolishness of the acquisition of possessions." Brother Edward is satisfied with the enjoyment of classical music and opera, and, of course, the study of Greek.

During his many years here, Brother Edward has served the institution in many capacities — not only as teacher and chairman, but as Director of Housing (1961-2), as well. However, he asserts, "there is not some sort of thing, 'the institution,' which hires the faculty — a university is the faculty and the students." Reflecting further, Brother Edward adds, "The administrators merely serve — that is in danger of being forgotten."

When asked what he saw in store for himself, looking toward the future, Brother Edward replied (his dry wit still intact), "I see retirement." Despite his apparent cynicism, Brother Edward's outlook is basically optimistic: "It's been an interesting life . . . and I've enjoyed it."

In Memoriam

At a place like La Salle, a school which prides itself on community spirit and on the nurturing of friendly personal relationships between faculty and students, it is always hard to lose a member of one's family.

A teacher and an administrator here for over twenty years, Brother G. Claude Demitras will surely be missed. During his years as professor and chairman of the Chemistry Department, Brother Claude exhibited far finer qualities than his Lindback Award could ever recognize. Besides being responsible for a majority of our current chemistry program and all of our modern equipment, he was also a well-known academician in his field and the author of several texts. More importantly, however, Brother Claude commanded the utmost respect of his students. When he yelled at students in lab, it was always received as the constructive criticism it was intended to be.

Even during his seven-year tenure as Dean of the Evening Division (1977-1984), Brother Claude spoke of returning to teaching chemistry once he retired from the administrative post. Students were always his top priority. His passing, therefore, is not only a loss to those who knew him, but to those who will never know him, as well.

Ed Skorpinski

The real purpose of meditation . . . is the exploration and discovery of new dimensions in freedom, illumination, and love, in deepening our awareness of our life in Christ.

These words of Thomas Merton must have inspired Brother Alfred Grunewald, for they only scratch the surface of the kind of life in Christ that he continually sought to attain. His vocation as a Christian Brother was a never-ending process in which an awareness of his calling was always at the forefront of his thought, so much so that even in his late fifties, Brother Alfred began exploring new opportunities in living up to his calling. In his studies for a degree in Pastoral Counseling, as well as in his duties as Director of Circulation at La Salle's library, Brother Alfred exhibited a Christ-like concern for and sensitivity toward others, along with, in the words of his colleague and Brother, Daniel Burke, "a clear sense of duty and a realistic humility that is asserted so simply by the poet in Psalm 131: 'O Lord, my heart is not proud . . .'" It is for his smile and his daily living of the Word of Christ that he will be remembered and missed.

Season Ends With Third Co

The 1985 Soccer team left no doubt as to who is the best in the MAAC conference for the early eighties. Undefeated in League play this season, the Explorers went on to an impressive 10-6-3 season. This sting of championships can also be added to the 1982 ECC crown, prior to the formation of MAAC, making the string of championships stand at four.

The 1985 season also marks a year of individual feats. Bob "Greek" Poursanidis was selected as the conference's most valuable player while Coach Wilkinson was voted MAAC Coach of the Year. All-league first team selection include Poursanidis and junior Bob Wilkinson. Members of the second team are Joe Rudy, Mark Melvin, and Mike Conners.

This season marked the end of an era for La Salle Soccer as it is the final season for senior co-captains Rudy and Poursanidis, who have both been starters on no less than all four championship teams. Rudy and Wilkinson were also selected for the Philadelphia Soccer Seven.

Goal Keeper Mark Melvin also turned in another excellent season with a goals-against-average of only 1.19, having also played in eight shutouts this season, and only allowing three goals in all seven MAAC games.

Rudy and the Greek were the key to La Salle scoring this year, combining for 15 goals and 8 assists while Conners also contributed 6 goals and 3 assists.

With another title defense successfully completed and one looming in the future, it will be interesting to see what the team will do next season as they attempt to make it five straight championships.

Sometimes The Record Lies!

As the 1985 season got under way, the Lady Explorers were looking forward to a good season under the leadership of new head coach Donna Partin and assistant Marge Garrity. Although the loss of six seniors and the unexpected resignation of last year's coach left the team with little to hope for, the addition of several talented freshman and coach Partin made up for much of what was lost last season.

The team's initial enthusiasm was dampened by a 2-1 loss to Bucknell in the season opener. They took their first win, after two more losses, against American. La Salle proceeded to win their next three games before losing to Loyola in the fourth game.

Injuries made it difficult for the team to get back on the winning track, but towards the end of the season, the sticksters defeated Notre Dame 1-0. They also fought hard fights against two nationally-ranked teams: Ursinas was a 2-1 loss, but the team held Rutgers scoreless before dropping the game in overtime.

Despite a disappointing year in the record books (6-13-1), senior Co-Captain Carol McLoughlin felt that the 1985 team was "the best I've had the pleasure of playing with during my four years at La Salle." McLoughlin, who led the team with assists, and strong midfielder Cindy McBrearty will be missed next year, as will the creative play of Jeanne Yuengling. However, the team's young talent, especially scoring sensations Terry Tipton and Virginia Onofrio, will return next year under Coach Partin's energetic leadership. The Lady Explorers look forward to a bright future.

Season Finale Lifts Hopes

The 1985 Volleyball team entered the season as defending MAAC champions for the second time in as many years. Once again the ladies were favored to take the MAAC title. The makings of a dynasty seemed well under way. With a new coaching staff and some fresh young talent, prospects were high for 1985.

However, as the season began to unfold, so did the worst season ever for La Salle volleyball. With a lone win coming against Cabrini, the team entered the MAAC championship tournament with a dismal 1-22 record, not quite what champions are made from.

Showing great spirit and determination, the team just could not give up. The Ladies plowed through five consecutive opponents, only to fall to host Holy Cross and wind up with second place. The tremendous effort cannot completely dispel the rest of the season but it certainly must help.

Two players, freshman Gayle Gunkowski and junior Vicki Missar, were selected to the All-MAAC team, indicating bright hopes for the future. Sophomore Ailleen O'Brien also shows excellent promise on defense. The team will have to put 1985 behind them as they look forward to an exciting future.

Youth Brings High Hopes

The 1985 tennis season brought disappointment to La Salle University players and fans as both teams compiled losing records for the season.

The women's team, graduating four players and being relatively small (only ten players) faced the prospects of a difficult season with determination and the hopes of a fifth consecutive winning season. However, this was not to be, as the Ladies finished the season with a 4-7 record. Coach Jeff Marmon experienced only his third losing season in twenty years.

Andi Horvath led the team at number 1 singles this year. Three freshmen, Laurie Schlosser, Jill Ingadella, and Meena Kumar contributed youth and the promise of a bright future to the starting squad. As the team matures and the new courts on campus are finished, practices and meets will be more convenient. The new facilities also should attract new talent to the school.

The men's team will also be looking forward to improving their record in the future, beginning with the matches this spring. The men are also coached by Jeff Marmon.

Bruce Brien

Harriers Post respectable

Throughout the 1985 Cross Country season, the Explorer harriers sought to continue the magic of their incredible first (men) and second (women) place performances in the 1984 MAAC Championship races.

Returning to the men's team were seniors Kevin Ruch, Tony Morelli, and Tom Fitzpatrick, the team's three best runners. Kevin Ruch, the team's captain, won four out of the season's five meets, setting new Explorer records for the five-mile course at Belmont Plateau in Philadelphia and at the Van Courtlandt course in New York. Freshmen John Schwab and Paul Sayvagean, sophomores Matt Costello and Bill Selgrath, and senior Jeff Knolls all made significant contributions to the team's success.

Brother Jerome Benway, the women's coach, figured this year to a rebuilding year. The only member of last year's team to return is senior Sue Silvestrini, this year's team captain. Aided by sophomore standout Patty Fallon and freshman Andrea Schwind, the team posted a very respectable 3-3-1 record. Adding stability were junior Kathy Kupper, sophomore Bernadette Jackson, and freshmen Bernadette Mulligan, Susan Murphy, and Verlinda Taurino.

Although the Lady Explorers will lose first runner Sue Silvestrini, the team is looking forward to bettering their fifth place MAAC Championship finish next year.

TOURNEY WIN OPENS SEASON

Wrestling coach Tom Murt, one of the youngest Division I coaches in any sport, has brought a welcome change to the Explorer team. Last year the Explorers broke .500 for the first time ever, finishing at 10-10-2.

Led by senior Andy Lafond, La Salle won its own invitational tournament to open a hopeful 1985-86 season. The growing attention to wrestling at La Salle was evident from the large crowd in attendance at the tournament.

La Salle's cheerleaders play an important role in many of our team's closer victories and strong comebacks. Cheerleading requires many long hours of hard work and dedication much like any sport they cheer for. On many occasions the squad has brought a Palestra crowd to its feet, inspiring the Explorers to victory. Their hard work is well appreciated by both fans and players alike.

of the rally was an excellent exhibition given by La Salle's own cheerleading squad.

The cheerleaders instilled a spirit and an optimism into the crowd that they hoped would be carried throughout the season. And overall, the rally was a pleasant tribute to both basketball teams.

Players' highs, team

While the 1985-86 Men's basketball team as a whole will not enter the record books as having one of the better seasons in the history of the school, surely it had some bright moments and individual performances that were worth celebrating. The opening three victories over Monmouth, Niagara, and Maine, the feisty loss to tough Notre Dame, the consistent play of senior Chip Greenberg, and the 74-69 upset over St. Joseph's to end the regular season with a four game winning streak undoubtedly gave us something to cheer about. Untimely losses throughout the year, however, never failed to halt the team's momentum, and the 72-70 loss to underdog Holy Cross in the MAAC tournament ended the 1985-86 season in disappointment. Clearly, the 14-14 final record reflected the performance of the men's team.

In retrospect, one must remember that this year's Explorers did not enter the season as highly ranked contenders. Although two of 85's steady starters, Greenberg and junior forward Larry Koretz, returned, two of its stars, graduated. Despite the critics however, La Salle showed strong signs of becoming the surprise team of the year. Greenberg proved to be a triple threat in scoring, rebounds, and assists, and became the 26th Explorer to score 1000 points in a career. Koretz led the team in rebounds and also crossed the 1000-point plateau. Sophomore guards Tim Legler, the team's 3rd leading scorer, and Rich Tarr worked hard all season long. Junior Ron Barnes and

Swimmers Open Seasons

Both the men's and women's swim teams opened their 1985-86 seasons with double wins. The future for both of these young teams looks very bright, as they are coming from excellent seasons last year. Coach John Lyons is responsible for both teams, and it is to his credit that he has done an excellent job of keeping the men's championship string alive at six, while also bringing the women's team up to championship caliber with first and second place finishes over the last two years.

Coach Lyons enjoys La Salle victories.

Victoriously

The men's and women's high point scorers at the MAAC championships last year are now only sophomores, and can all look forward to bright college careers. They include Ron Karnaugh and Kim Long.

Looking to 1986-87, both teams will lose only two seniors each to graduation. They will retain some very powerful undergraduate swimmers.

James Gavaghan has been coaching track at La Salle for 8 years. He has led the teams to several winning seasons. In the spring, the name changes to Outdoor Track, but the players and coach are the Mental preparation is a key to success.

A year of victories brings

"We put it all together at the end of the season and everything went well. We had a great end of the year," boasts baseball coach Gene McDonnell. The 1985 Explorer team, ending one of their finest seasons ever, stopped only one win short of the College World Series.

Taking second place in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC), La Salle lost their East Coast Athletic Conference (ECAC) South playoff berth to Iona. Due to their outstanding regular season record (27-16), however, the Explorers were invited to compete in the ECAC North Tournament in Maine. There they won three of their four games: one over Maine and two over Long Island. The Long Island team also handed the Explorers their only defeat in this series.

The next tournament took the team to the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) East Regionals, held in South Carolina. Of the four games there, La Salle captured two wins, topping Western Carolina and Rider. The Explorers dropped the first and final games to South Carolina. This record earned them second place in the tournament.

Overall, the Explorers ended their 1985 season with a 31-20 record. In itself, this statistic was a team record for games won and games played in a season. By advancing this far in their region, the 1985 Explorer baseball team has made its mark in the annals of La Salle sports history.

Records fall during banner

The 1985 Explorer baseball team produced one of La Salle's greatest seasons in this sport to date. Their 27-16 record eventually led to a spot in the Regional Tournament. Yet, this feat could not have been accomplished without the team's perseverance and dedication during the regular season.

This year's team was composed of several seniors who lent the squad confidence and experience. Juniors Pat Waninger and Sam Boone contributed a great deal to the regular season. Boone was named an All-Tournament player at the ECAC finals. Waninger also gained this honor, adding to it by being named All-Regional. Freshman All-American Barry Petrachenko received these titles, too.

Freshman pitcher Joe Marykwas (8-6) accrued almost 100 innings pitched and finished with an ERA of 5.53. The pitching crew was outshone only by the Explorer's defense on the field. Overall, the team percentage was .934 with 1182 put-outs. Eight team members maintained a perfect fielding percentage. This tight fielding saved many an Explorer outing.

Some of the team's toughest competition during the entire season came from within their own conference. Coach Mc-Donnell cited Holy Cross, Fordham, Fairfield, St. Peter's and Iona as their stiffest competition.

In addition, the 1985 team broke several La Salle individual single season records. Boone shattered six records single-handedly: hits (84), runs (73), triples (7), home runs (11), RBIs (63), and total bases (142). Petrachenko chalked up 38 stolen bases for a new team record and carried a record 19-game hitting streak. Tied for the record for most games pitched were Marykwas and Waninger. And, with 99 and 1/3 innings pitched this season, freshman Marykwas again stole the show. The team's 31 wins and 51 games played also broke past records, giving this year's Explorer squad something to cheer about.

victories followed by a comeback win over Fairfield. The next victory against the Lady Gaels, forced a special playoff round. Unfortunately, La Salle couldn't hold off a tough Iona offense, losing the final game 7-0.

With Wilmoth returning to the mound in 1986, the Ladies can expect another exciting season, with the championship tournament again being held in Richboro from the 25th to the 27th of April.

New Styles Top Class Ring Choices

According to Jostens' representative Diane McDonnell, it's the nontraditional styles of college rings that are fast becoming the favorites on campuses across the country. Although the larger, more classic styles have remained popular, nontraditional rings are the big best-sellers in 1985-86. Today's student is making smart investments in college rings that can be worn for ten or even twenty years after graduation without looking out-of-date.

La Salle students who purchase rings follow the national trend. The most popular rings on campus this year for women are newer, slimmer styles — Tianna, a more delicate, oval version of the classic ring with a stone, and Espri, which features three small center stones and the school name on the side. Adagio, another nontraditional ring with the school name across the center, has remained popular, too. Only Christina, this year's new ring, hasn't done well in sales.

Jostens also introduced a new men's ring this year — Odyssey II, a medium-sized, updated version of the traditional ring with one's curriculum on the side. For a new style, it is remarkably popular — seventy percent of all of the men's rings' sales this year were Odyssey II.

Most students choose ring settings of ten karat gold because it is more durable than lustrum and more affordable than fourteen or eighteen karat gold. Students can usually choose from a wide variety of stones (including some genuine ones), but the most popular for women this year are mother-of-pearl, fire blue spinel (La Salle's color and the stone for September), and cubic zirconia. Men overwhelmingly choose fire blue spinels for their rings.

Most La Salle students begin pricing college rings during sophomore or junior year. By the middle of junior year, they have probably spoken to the Jostens' representative who appears regularly in the Union Lobby, picked up a brochure, tried on a few sample rings, and asked for current prices. They tend to purchase their very own ring during junior or senior year, although students who didn't buy high school rings may buy their college rings as early as sophomore year.

But whatever the style, the stone, or the setting, one thing is true of all La Salle rings — they are lasting symbols of hard work and good times.

A Lamp Still Lifted

Liberty — the foundation of democracy, the cornerstone of justice, the force which unites mankind in the hope of a better future, the ability to exercise the freedoms which are the undeniable right of humanity. It is the spirit of liberty that Auguste Bartholdi captured in the face, full of determination, cast in copper, which welcomes the "huddled masses" as they enter America.

Celebrating her 100th birthday this year, the Statue of Liberty has long stood as a symbol for those who immigrated to the United States. Her face and her torch are the first glimpses of their freedom as they reach that "golden door" in New York Harbor. She has come to embody all of that for which America, and democracy as well, stands.

The story of the Statue reflects a truly "American" quest for achievement. It began, however, with a Frenchman, sculptor Auguste Bartholdi, who planned a masterpiece in his French Republic. To realize it, he needed both public and governmental support; the French contributed $400,000, and Americans $250,000. In November, 1875, he received the official commission.

He was aided in his efforts by French engineer Gustave Eiffel, who created the intricate support system and spiral staircase within the Statue's head after four years of planning. The actual sculpture, of copper beaten into shape over plaster casts, took much longer. The finished Lady stood 151 feet high and weighed 225 tons.

In the United States, publisher Joseph Pulitzer rallied support for the construction of a pedestal for the Statue, which was designed by architect Richard M. Hunt. The Statue was shipped in pieces from France and assembled on Bedloe's Island. Bartholdi placed her so that her face could be seen from any angle by those who entered the harbor. On October 21, 1886, with a 21-gun salute, she was dedicated.

She still stands, one hundred years later, the welcomer of countless thousands of immigrants. Weathered by time, she requires extensive repairs, which should be completed by July 4, 1986 — and paid for almost entirely by private contributions.

Yes, she still stands, with her torch aloft and her beaming crown aglow, as tall and proud as ever. She is still the universal image of freedom which withstands time, famine, and war. In her light shines the hope that oppression will end and strife will cease. And in her story lives the tradition of universal perseverance and dedication, which is the ultimate pursuit of liberty.

100 Years of the All-American Drink

The pause that refreshes . . . the real thing . . . it. What is it? — it's Coca-Cola, the best-selling cola soft drink in the world, and the one that flows (more or less regularly) from soda taps and machines at La Salle. And in 1986, the carbonated, caffeinated, sugared drink celebrates its first century of existence.

Coke was the medicinal creation of Georgian "Dr." John Styth Pemberton, who brewed the first batch of the stuff in a kettle in his back yard on May 8, 1886. Initially advertised as a headache remedy, it quickly became popular with Atlantans as a beverage because, unlike other "medicines" of the day, it tasted good. The combination of extracts from the coca leaf and the kola nut, sugar, and soda water (which are the basics in Coke's top-secret 7X formula) was, within a few years, more often promoted as "delicious and refreshing" than it was as a cure-all. Did it, as some claim, get its "kick" from cocaine? — not according to the Coca-Cola Company, which throughout the past century has spent thousands of dollars trying to erase the "dope" image from its wholesome product.

Which of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World was alive?

The Hanging Gardens of Babylon

Coke, over the years, has become almost as American as the proverbial apple pie — an image its advertising has carefully cultivated. Within the Class of '86's lifetime, Coke has mounted several enormously successful ad campaigns: "I'd Like to Teach the World to Sing" has backed several commercials since the late '60's (the song was actually written for Coke first, and became a hit later); "It's the Real Thing" has been used for years; "Look up, America" appeared in the mid-'70's; and "Coke Is It!" has flowed through the American media since the '80's began. Coke ads are well-known for their youth appeal, and for their occasional tear-jerking qualities.

Coke, in fact, has become so American that changing it has become almost synonymous with spitting on the flag, something which became evident in 1985 when the company announced that it was changing the formula. After 77 days, howls of protest, and the metamorphosis of "Old Coke" into a collector's item, the company changed its corporate mind — and now America has new Coke and Coca-Cola Classic, in addition to Cherry Coke, Diet Coke, and two decaffeinated versions. In its second century, as one magazine pointed out, "Coke are it!" . . . all over the world.

It's the Apartment Life for Seniors

Most students would agree that living at school represents a great portion of their college experience — a portion which is extremely enjoyable. And many students cap that experience by living in one of La Salle's two campus apartment complexes, St. Theresa Court or La Salle Apartments.

The apartments are mostly occupied by upperclassmen, due to the Resident Life lottery system in which students with seniority in both academic credit hours and campus living are favored. These students spend their "formative years" in the dorms, and then move onward to the apartments.

What's so great about the apartments?

Well, one of the most important things students who opt for apartment life consider is cost-efficiency. When relieved of the burden of the dorm-mandatory meal card, students save a lot of money. Apartment dwellers have their own kitchens, and usually keep an ample supply of food on hand when residents throw in twenty dollars a week. A better bonus is living with someone who likes to cook or is at least able to cook. Otherwise, you just learn the hard way: trial and error.

Many students also appreciate the greater privacy that is inherent in apartment life — generally, all you have to do when you need to study is close the door of your room.

Living with two or three friends who share the same interests is another plus in the apartments. Often, fraternities or sororities get together for a block of apartments; the same goes for groups of friends from the various dorms. It's possible to get two or three apartments right next to each other. That way, you can enjoy the closeness of dorm life with the advantages of apartment life.

The apartments also frequently enjoy dominance in intramurals because they have a greater wealth of talent from which to choose — both Theresa Court and La Salle apartments currently house over one hundred students, more than dorm floors. (And apartment dwellers can still play for dorm teams if they'd like.)

This is apartment life — plus a lot more. It's an enjoyable experience, and it also teaches you many of the skills and responsibilities you need to survive on your own after graduation.

Rock-and-Roll Discovers Its Conscience

While rock-and-roll produced many new groups and songs in 1985, its biggest product may be its new-found power to help people in need and raise society's conscience about world problems.

In the fall of 1984, British rock star Bob Geldof (lead singer of the Boomtown Rats), stirred by reports of the famine in Africa, decided that it was his responsibility to help those in need. To that end, he organized the biggest names in British pop music into the group Band Aid and recorded "Do They Know It's Christmas?" The recording raised millions of dollars for famine relief and focused world attention on the problem.

Band Aid's success inspired American musician Quincy Jones to try it in the States. He gathered American recording stars from Ray Charles to Cyndi Lauper into the group United Support of Artists (USA) for Africa for the song "We Are the World," which rose to Number One on the charts and also raised millions.

Geldof, realizing the money-raising potential of these efforts, announced plans for a huge rock concert that would take place simultaneously in Philadelphia and London. On July 13, 1985, Live Aid rocked the world and featured some of the most famous names in the business, including reunions by Led Zepplin, the Who, and Crosby, Stills, and Nash.

By the end of 1985, the Band Aid Trust had raised more than $85 million to help end the suffering in Africa. Inspired by this success, other musicians organized similar operations for special causes. Country and pop music stars joined Willie Nelson for Farm Aid, a concert to help America's family farmers. Singer Julio Iglesias led an effort on behalf of the Mexico City earthquake victims. And another group of artists, led by jazz musician Miles Davis, lent their talents to Sun City, an album in protest of apartheid in South Africa. In addition, at every stop on his summer tour, Bruce Springsteen donated thousands of dollars to help the poor and the homeless, and encouraged his fans to do the same.

What separates Band Aid and its sister benefits from the past efforts of rock musicians who protested social evils are their widespread support and efficient organization. Geldof and company combined the artist's sense of civic duty with modern organizational and fundraising strategies. Also, Geldof is not perceived as some long-haired artist trying to make a statement about love and peace; instead, view of him as a man with a specific goal trying to use his resources to win public and powerful support lends his efforts a new sense of respectability.

But whether rock artists continue to be successful in their efforts can't be predicted; much depends on how well the funds are spent, and on how long these artists continue to work for causes. In any event, 1985 will be remembered as the year rock-and-roll rediscovered the very real social and political influence it can have on world events.

Class of '86: Shining Stars

Wister Hall will still be a tall climb. Olney Hall's "The Solitude of Thought" will still brood over late students running to class. September freshmen will wander through the Union as nervous as we once were. Wild baseballs will still fly over the Hank DeVincent Field fence. The Palestra will still be overwhelmed by soaring blue and gold streamers. And still, students will be learning and laughing and sharing on this La Salle campus that has meant so much to all of us.

The Class of 1986, though, won't be here—broken up, as we will be, and scattered, like the stars of the night.

Sad, yes, but joyous, too. Some of us will breathe enormous sighs of relief, while others undoubtedly will leap and do flips in the air. Some of us may cry. But all of us will share something we didn't have four years ago; no matter where we go or what we do, we will always be explorers — La Salle University Explorers.

Glory La Salle! — that's the title of our alma mater. Now that we're graduating, and taking our places in the world, we are reminded that we are the "glory of La Salle."

A school is more than classrooms and blackboards and desks — a school is people, people who are searching and growing. Our school, La Salle, is us, and we are La Salle — we are the good times shared in classrooms, in the cafeterias, at the gym, in the gameroom, in the chapel, or on the hills of the quad . . . times that will forever be a part of us.

Glory La Salle! Thanks to this place and these teachers, we have already traveled to the Middle Ages, to the computers of the future, to the wonders of the human cell, to the social injustices of our world, to the triumphs and tragedies of histories past, to the majesty of God and to the wonders that dwell within our selves.

And so here we are, in 1986, men and women ready to take on the stars, shining with a glow that includes a past still bright and a future that can be brilliant — as long as we never stop reaching, never stop growing, never stop exploring.

We leave in a last blast of glory. Our Baccalaureate Mass is celebrated at the Cathedral Basilica of SS. Peter and Paul on Logan Square, on May 17th, 1986. It is followed by the Faculty-Senior Reception, on campus, during which we can attack our teachers (or vice versa). And on Sunday, May 18th, 1986, the moment we've all been waiting for arrives at Convention Hall in the Civic Center.

But before we crack open yet another bottle of champagne, before we take our degrees and run with them, before we hug each other to the limit, we sing "Glory La Salle." And the glory of La Salle we'll be — St. John Baptiste de la Salle will surely watch over us. The best of life, love, and God's blessings to the Class of 1986!

TRIVIAL PURSUIT and the TRIVIAL PURSUIT Logo are registered trade marks of Horn Abbot Ltd. The TRIVIAL PURSUIT Game, GENUS Edition, is Copyright 1981 by Horn Abbot Ltd., all rights reserved.

Pope's remark about mighty contests and trivial things is more than apt for the '86 Explorer. Assembling a yearbook of this size — a mighty contest for a handful of people who are all full-time, committed students — led to a lot of trivial pursuits as we scrambled to get names and facts and trivia (for which we owe a debt of gratitude to both the Trivial Pursuit game and to Brother F. Lewis Donaghy's history of La Salle, Conceived in Crisis). The fact that we pulled it off is due in no small or trivial way to the ongoing efforts of the following people, whom we thank from the bottom of our collective heart: Bob Davine, from Herff-Jones, and his wife Rita, who were especially great when deadlines became casualties of the semester; Abe and Esther Orlick of Davor Photo, who, in their twentieth year with La Salle, continue to process our film and offer us as much help as they can; and Kathy Schrader in the Student Life Office, who was always available for frantic questions, thank God.

I owe personal thanks to all of these people, and to a few more: our moderator, Dr. Barbara Millard, whose counsel, calm, and most of all confidence, richly entitle her, in my opinion, to the Lindback teaching award she received in 1985; my family, and all of the editors' families, who had to live with us; and all of our classmates who wrote copy and otherwise helped out (particularly L.M.B., K.D.H., and

But the most difficult, most late-night work was done by people listed on the other side of this page, who are busy people made busier by the commitment they made to this yearbook: Michelle filled a sudden space with more than business acumen, and was wonderfully, thankfully willing to do whatever needed to be done; Mike took more pictures than he'll ever want to take again, once even driving through a hurricane for them; Bruce appeared out of nowhere to take the one job no one wanted, and put in some long, late, appreciated hours; Ed McK. turned his talents to his drawing pad and to alternately tormenting me and making me laugh; and Mary and Ed, who made the best of some awkward situations, worked very hard, and still remarkably, want to do this next year. Thanks, so much, for being there.

We hope that the events and good times recorded in the pages of this yearbook are only the beginning of the good times for the Class of 1986, so that they might agree with Ogden Nash:

*Here lies my past, good-by I have kissed it;
Thank you kids, I wouldn't have missed it.*
