Push to restructure system continues

By Marc Chase
Senior Reporter

Bill to remove Board of Trustees taken off agenda

A bill calling for the elimination of the SIU Board of Trustees has been taken off the Illinois House Rules agenda due to mistakes in the wording, but the state representative who wrote the bill says he will continue to push for a restructuring of the governing boards for all state universities.

Illinois Representative John Ostenburg, D-Park Forest and chairman of the House

Subcommittee on Higher Education Governance, said the state of Illinois would be better served by having two university governing boards instead of the four Illinois currently has.

The current governing boards are the Board of Regents, Board of Governors, the University of Illinois and SIU Board of Trustees.

A bill Ostenburg sponsored, which he said has been taken off the list for reevaluation, initially called for the elimination of SIU's Board of Trustees, placing the University under the Board of Regents.

Ostenburg said the office that drafted the bill did not convey his plans for restructuring the board systems.

"I am in favor of having two governing board systems within the state — one with all universities offering doctoral degree programs and the other with those offering master's degree programs," Ostenburg said.

Besides saving the state money, Ostenburg said having two systems would eliminate much of the competition for state money and would group similar institutions together for greater efficiency in academic programs.

"My hope is that universities would be combined (under board systems) based on common missions," Ostenburg said. "The lines for distribution of higher education funding would also be clearly drawn, and similar universities would be able to share faculty and staff resources."

Also, the Illinois Board of Higher Education's Priority, Quality, and Productivity initiative, a plan to cut programs at universities to cut back on cost, would not be needed if the state followed a two board system,

High tech learning debuts at SIUC

Carolyn Snyder, dean of library affairs, demonstrates SIUC's new interactive classroom with Kia Malott, coordinator of Distance Learning, and Jerry Hostetler, head of instructional technology. Telephone wires connect this SIUC classroom with similar classrooms at other colleges statewide.

By Benjamin Golshahr
Staff Reporter

An entire SIUC classroom will be transported to high schools, colleges and universities statewide through the telephone lines, beginning in October.

Large television screens, microphones suspended from the ceiling and sound-sensitive mobile cameras make this a reality in a new form of teaching classes called Distance Learning.

A room in the basement of Morris Library has been redesigned to facilitate this program.

Carolyn A. Snyder, dean of library affairs, said $15 million of the state's budget was appropriated to the project in 1993-94. This money was used for wiring and equipping 125 Illinois Distance Learning classrooms.

Each classroom has three 29-inch video screens, a computer-operated instructor's podium and several microphones hanging from the ceiling. The room is specially sound-proofed, and the lighting is controlled to minimize glares.

Jerry Hostetler, head of instructional technology, said cameras capture the instructor visually, and sensitive microphones pick up the sounds of the classroom.

The signals are compressed and shot through the telephone lines. Another college with a similarly-equipped room

Tuition fear: hike to lower enrollment

By Chad Anderson
Staff Reporter

An SIU trustee says he is worried the University will have difficulty competing with junior colleges for new high school graduates if a tuition increase is approved for fiscal year 1996.

Mark Kochan, student trustee, said the increase could hurt the University's ability to attract potential freshmen.

"I was one of the people most opposed to it. I felt it might price us out of the market," Kochan said.

The University is in the middle of the price range for tuition costs for state schools — the University of Illinois, University of Illinois at Chicago and Northern Illinois University all are more expensive than SIUC.

The SIU Board of Trustees originally considered a 13-percent tuition increase over the next three years, but students and some trustees opposed such a drastic hike.

A new proposal allows for a 3.5-percent increase that would take effect next year, instead of the 6.5-percent increase originally proposed for Fall '95.

Kochan said SIUC and SIUE are two of the best educational values among state schools, but a 13-percent increase is too high.

The proposal also includes a 16.9-percent increase for the School of Medicine in Springfield and a 15-percent increase for the School of Law.

The increases are designed to generate revenue to help offset the costs of operating the University.

High school grads skip college for jobs

The Baltimore Sun

PHILADELPHIA—On the first pay day of the rest of his life, Kevin Gallagher, age 19, high school graduate, apprentice carpenter, takes home a check of $232.50.

"Taxes," he says, folding the check into the pocket of his well-worn jeans. "Taxes will kill me."

Welcome to the work world, kid. While the rest of his friends from the class of 1994 at Archbishop Ryan High School in northeast Philadelphia are going to college, Kevin Gallagher is going to work.

He is learning a trade passed down from his father and making his way into the job market without a college degree. He's hauling lumber, fetching coffee, banging nails and paying his dues in a four-year quest to become a unionized journeyman carpenter.

And he's not alone.

As late summer falls, much of America turns its attention to the nearly 1.5 million teen-agers bound to college for the first time. These are freshmen who load their hopes, CD players and much of their parents' bank accounts, into cars, setting off on educational paths that many hope will lead to successful careers.

But there are nearly 900,000 others from America's high school Class of 1994—about 38 percent—who are skipping college and going straight into the work force. Many of them are unknowingly at economic risk, courting what statistics show to be a downbeat work life that could lead to a series of dead-end jobs and shrinking opportunities.

Yet those like Kevin Gallagher are willing to play the odds, confident that they have the skills necessary to make a living in America.

The yearning for hard work, Kevin Gallagher says, is buried somewhere in his genes. The Gallagher family provides a snapshot of the American dream, where for two generations sweat and persistence have equaled success.

But the third generation, Kevin's generation, finds itself facing an altered American economic land

ANTI-CASTRO GROUP HOPING FOR REVOLT — MIAMI

After more than three decades of running obstacle courses in the Florida Everglades and shooting at paper targets, Alpha 66, a paramilitary group of right-wing Cuban-Americans, is hoping the Clinton administration's tough line against Cuba during the latest refugee exodus will provide them with the opportunity and momentum to lead an exile invasion of Cuba to spark rebellion and oust Fidel Castro. Group leaders say they expect the U.S. to take stronger steps against Castro's 35-year-old revolution.

NEW IMMIGRANTS COULD THREATEN ISRAEL — KIRYAT ARBA, Israeli-Occupied West Bank

Israeli officials are considering changing the policy that any Jew, from anywhere, can claim instant citizenship upon arrival in Israel following news that several million Indians claiming to be descendants of one of the twelve tribes of Israel are seeking entry into the state. For a nation of 5 million, still struggling to absorb about 500,000 Russian immigrants who have fled the former Soviet Union in the past four years, millions of new citizens could produce a crisis situation.

PENTAGON CUTS TO REDUCE NAVY DOLPHINS — WASHINGTON

As a result of military cutbacks, 30 of the Navy's elite squad of 100 dolphins — reserved for the most daring underwater search and demolitions missions — will be sent to amusement centers, aquariums and parks. Two years ago, Congress asked the Navy to study the possibility of releasing the animals into the open sea, but researchers determined that freeing the tamed dolphins, which are regularly fed and treated for medical problems, could expose them to diseases and leave them without necessary survival skills.

GOP HOPES TO GAIN CONTROL OF CONGRESS — WASHINGTON

On Sept. 27, hundreds of Republicans will crowd onto the steps of the Capitol for an audacious publicity stunt — the unveiling of their agenda for the first 100 days of a Republican-controlled Congress. For the first time in a generation, the talk of a GOP takeover of Capitol Hill is real. With the 1994 elections 10 weeks away, Republicans stand a decent chance of gaining control of the Senate and have an outside shot at taking the House of Representatives as well.

Ryan gets tough on late child support

By Dean Weaver
Senior Reporter

Illinois Secretary of State George Ryan has made a campaign promise to crack down on individuals not paying their share when it comes to child support by suspending their driving privileges.

Ryan's proposal would take away the driver's licenses of those parents who are 90 days past due in their child-support payments. Once a payment plan is negotiated, the driver's license would be reinstated.

Dean Schott, spokesperson for the Illinois Department of Public Aid, said an unacceptable 50 percent of individuals ordered to pay child support are either late on their payments or pay no support at all.

The public aid department is the agency given the power to intervene on behalf of the custodial parents in child-support cases.

Schott said his department supports any additional powers given it, including the power to suspend a driver's license.

John Gibbs, acting regional manager of Marion regional child support, said in Southern Illinois when a person is delinquent on a child-support payment their office turns the case over to the assistant attorney general's office who files the case in circuit court.

Gibbs said although employers are supposed to automatically deduct child support from their employees wages, many people still default on payments because they are self-employed or they move from state to state.

He said the most common action taken to collect payments is to take individuals who do not pay to

Prison boot camp designed with youth in mind

By Connie Fritsche
Staff Reporter

Gov. Jim Edgar announced Monday that a new prison boot camp will be built one mile east of Murphysboro, north of Route 13.

The facility will cost $6 million dollars and will be built over an 18 month period.

A press release from Edgar stated that the facility will mean up to 250 construction jobs and 80 permanent positions for Murphysboro and will put the community at the forefront of reforms to combat juvenile crime.

An agreement with local trade unions is being sought to ensure that construction jobs will go to Illinois residents.

Murphysboro Mayor David McDowell said he is happy Murphysboro finally will have a prison facility after seven years of efforts to acquire one.

McDowell said although it is hard to estimate exactly how much money the facility will generate, the camp should have a major impact on the local economy.

State Rep. Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin, said the boot camp will be the first of its type in Illinois.

The new 100-bed facility will handle younger offenders than current camps.

Hawkins said he introduced legislation to help ensure the facility would be built in Southern Illinois.

"Southern Illinois has the experience, space and dedication needed to serve these types of correctional facilities," Hawkins said.

"The camp is designed to reform kids who haven't been taught any responsibility in the past."

The camp will house youth incarcerated for non-violent offenses such as drug possession and property-damage crimes.

"Southern Illinois has the experience, space and dedication needed to serve these types of correctional facilities."

—Gerald Hawkins

The Illinois Department of Corrections will assess the camp's benefits to youth.

Edgar said the first youth assigned to the camp will be those authorities consider most likely to become repeat offenders.

Hawkins said the program is designed to combine community service with rigorous physical training and mandatory education programs.

It also will include counseling and drug-abuse treatment, he said.

"It [the boot camp] would be an extremely disciplined environment, much like military boot camps, with a strenuous exercise program," Hawkins said. "All work details are done at double-time, and the camp will encompass education programs, such as drug education."

After graduating from the program, the youth will receive a minimum parole of three months.

During the first month of parole, the inmate may be assigned to wear an electronic monitoring device.

Illinois Corrections Director Howard A. Peters III said youths who graduate from the boot camp will gain self-esteem and return to the community better prepared to be law-abiding citizens.

"They will...understand the value of teamwork and a positive attitude when confronting difficult tasks or situations," he said.

Peters said all employees of the camp will undergo similar training, regardless of primary job duty, to encourage teamwork among staff members.

"The staff training will promote a team approach that will serve as a positive role model for the youth assigned to the camp," he said.

"When the camp is operational, you will see educators involved in

University students join a trend, catch Internet's cyberspace wave

By Aaron Butler
Staff Reporter

The cool thing to do in cyberspace these days seems to be surfing the Internet — or so it would appear if one reads "Time," "Omni," or "Newsweek" — but many students do not know how to climb aboard.

John Lowell, an information specialist at the SIUC help desk, said a common misconception of the internet is that it is a specific destination in itself.

"The Internet is like a highway system. People who say, 'I want to get on the Internet' need to understand that," Lowell said.

Mike Schwartz, director of Campus Wide Information Systems, said the campus network constantly is expanding, and soon will connect every computer on campus to one fiber-optic network.

Ohel Bursey, a graduate student in public administration, works in Computer Learning Center 2, helping students familiarize themselves with the network.

"The most commonly used CWIS feature seems to be HGopher, (a user-friendly menu system)," Bursey said.

"Anyone can use gopher without a password, and it helps you get an idea of what the Internet has to offer."

Bursey said gopher is easy to use.

"Students can find a huge amount of information simply by choosing from the menu items on the screen," he said.

"Everything from financial aid information, to nationwide job listings, to a campus phone directory are right at your fingertips."

After using CWIS and the internet for three years, Drew Hendricks, a senior in journalism, said he still learns new things all the time.

"In ten years this technology will replace most of the communication we now do by mail and phone," Hendricks said.

"The internet is growing exponentially, and it is simply impossible to keep up with everything that's going on."

Shon Cole, a new CWIS user, said he uses the network out of necessity as well as personal interest.

"I use CWIS because my psychology professor puts a lot of instructional material on the network, and also posts grades online," Cole said.

Robert McNeal, one of Cole's classmates, said the class is a lot easier for students using the network.

"The word around class is that students using CWIS to get information get more As and Bs than those who just listen to the lectures and read the text," McNeal said.

Students wishing to learn more about the computer networks on campus and the world-wide Internet can get help at the three Computer Learning Centers on campus.

SIU researcher will study diabetic drug treatments

By Diane Dove
Staff Reporter

Diabetic patients suffering from nerve or kidney damage may have a new treatment just around the corner, a researcher from the SIU School of Medicine says.

Dr. Michael Pfeifer recently received two grants totaling more than $761,000 to study the effect of two drugs on diabetes — carnitine, which has slowed the progression of nerve damage in animals, and aminoguanidine, which may prevent kidney damage.

Pfeifer said nerve damage, characterized by pain or numbness in hands and feet, is a common affliction among diabetes sufferers.

Mary Schumer, director of research, said the cause of nerve damage among diabetics is unknown, but researchers have theorized that the high blood sugar level of diabetic patients causes nerve damage.

"It's a slow progression," she said. "It can be five or 10 years before anyone can see any problems."

But although nerve deterioration in diabetics happens slowly, Pfeifer said the problem is serious.

"Nerve damage can ultimately lead to a foot ulcer and even amputation," he said. "It can be very debilitating and can affect the ability to walk."

In March, Pfeifer received $385,992 from Hoffman-LaRoche, Inc. to study ALCAR, the company's name for carnitine.

As a lipid, carnitine supplies energy to cells and maintains fatty acids in cell membranes, Pfeifer said.

"It looks like if you can fix the fatty acids to the nerves (and thus fix the cell membrane), that improves the blood flow to the nerves and slows down deterioration of the nerve from

'It's a new beginning' for Watson's Salukis

WITH SHAWN WATSON AS THE NEW HEAD coach and several promising new players, the football Salukis have expectations on the upswing for the '94 season. With this year's motto of "It's a new beginning" the team has been hitting the practice field hard in preparation for its season opener Saturday against Tennessee-Martin.

Watson, who played defensive back for SIUC and graduated in 1982, has brought a youthful energy to the football program. With Watson came four new assistant coaches and one veteran coach, all of whom maintain the theme of team revitalization. Watson has been only at SIUC since December and has acknowledged a lack of size and experience on the team, but the dedication and enthusiasm together make for a powerfully-motivated team. Steady improvement and hard work are the key this season.

Even without the experience of some of SIUC's tougher opponents in the conference, the Salukis can be expected to put up some solid competition. Melvin Dukes, a sophomore running back from Florida, has the potential to elevate the Salukis' offense to new levels this season. Other players anticipated to lead the team in numbers include linebacker Brian Tranchitella, veteran offensive lineman Jeff Zoeteman and free safety Jim Cravens.

WHEN THE RETURNING PLAYERS ARE combined with the raw talent and enthusiasm of the team, the probability of good, hard football games is high. Coach Watson has said how important the support and encouragement of the students is to the success of the team. Surely it could not hurt if 10 or 15,000 crazed fans showed up at the opener and stomped their feet with Saluki approval. With the amount of effort each coach and player is giving to the program, it would be fitting for the fans of SIUC to let them know that those efforts are appreciated. Saturday Sept. 3 at McAndrew seems like a perfect time to let those student voices be heard. So why not, under this new and improved beginning, come out and see the new Salukis play?

Struck out at home: Baseball strike lingers

WITH THE MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL STRIKE well into its third week, players and owners continue to fight about desperately needed salary caps. In the midst of the media frenzy it is important to remember one thing: the NFL kicks off Sunday.

Enough said.

Commentary

World should not be Americanized

The Los Angeles Times

The conviction that America should, in President Clinton's words, help "create a just, peaceful and ever-more democratic world" is often embraced as a moral imperative; it may in fact lead us to moral disaster.

Across the political spectrum, many believe that, with the end of the Cold War, the United States has the opportunity and the responsibility to create a world order shaped by American power and values. In the words of U.S. National Security Adviser Anthony Lake, America's foreign-policy imperative is nothing less than "the enlargement of the world's community of market democracies."

This policy requires, in effect, that the United States regard as hostile those states that do not subscribe to American economic and political beliefs.

Democrats hardly have a monopoly on this Wilsonian enthusiasm. Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., the Republican Party's most distinguished foreign-policy spokesman, also betrays the dangerous belief that America can be safe and prosperous only when it has made the world very much like America.

The United States, Lugar asserts, must remain the world's dominant power so that it can "project market economies and democratic institutions abroad." Embracing the logic that brought us the domino theory, Lugar argues that such an effort must be truly global in scope since "there can be no lasting security at the center without security at the periphery."

Those who oppose this grandiose vision of America's role in the world often argue that exporting American values is not a practical goal of foreign policy, which should instead concentrate on the defense of concrete national interests.

This opposition must go further. There are, in fact, moral hazards in attempting to effect a new world order.

First, to argue, as Lugar does, that only American power and leadership can provide a stable and secure international marketplace smacks of economic imperialism. And to assert that this capitalist enlargement is, in Lake's words, America's "security mission" because "the expansion of market-based economies abroad helps expand our exports and create American jobs," is to arrogantly conflate what is in America's economic interest with a moral imperative to interfere with economies and politics throughout the world.

This policy of capitalist enlargement can easily appear to its recipients as nothing more than a new world order version of old-style interventionism, a crude intrusion in their domestic affairs.

Furthermore, America's missionary impulse — the conviction that it is our obligation to inflict our conscience upon the world because there are no enlightened alternatives to American ways — breeds within us an intolerance and a narrowness.

To believe that Russia or Haiti or Cuba is ours to rescue, or to demonize those who do not hold our values is to indulge in a paternalism that reduces other peoples to wayward children to be cajoled until they conform to our image. This cannot help but engender within us a reckless, and cruel pride.

Rescue fantasies are intrinsically insidious. Once we make others the objects of our generous wishes, we inevitably make them the objects of our pity, and ultimately of our coercion. A sense of righteous omniscience is not the mark of a balanced and enlightened state, but of the crusader from whose civilizing zeal brutality seems inevitably to flow.

President Clinton has said that America has an obligation "to give back to a contentious world some of the lessons we learned during our own democratic voyage." But if we seek to teach the world by imposing our achievements on it, we have learned the wrong lesson from that journey.

In viewing what promises to be a tumultuous post-Cold War world, it is important to remember that our nation, too, was forged in blood and iron, that our own struggle to build a more perfect union and effect democracy has been marked by tragically, aggression and brutality.

For better or worse, without these trials we would not be the nation we are today. And, despite much of which we may be proud, we have not reached our destination.

If we understood our transgressions as well as our achievements, we would perhaps be able to reach a more generous understanding of others.

Then, rather than seeking to convert other peoples, we could accept them for what their history has made them.

If this fatalism replaced idealism in our expectations of and conduct toward the world, a more respectful and measured outlook could supplant our present arrogant and feverish one.

By pursuing grand visions pleasing to our self-image, we may, like Kurtz in Conrad's "Heart of Darkness," set out to civilize the world as "an emissary of pity and progress," only to awaken the savage within ourselves.

he said. "The whole PQP process would not be necessary because there would be no more competition," Ostenburg said.

"Because similar institutions will be grouped together, they will not be competitive."

Programs cut at SIUC because of PQP include a doctoral program in physical education, and undergraduate program in religious studies and a masters program in community development.

Ostenburg said his subcommittee will continue to serve as a task force to eliminate waste on the administrative level of higher education.

Representative Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin and member of the subcommittee, said he is opposed to the elimination of the current SIU governing board system.

"I think we (Southern Illinois) would lose control of SIU if a plan like this were to happen," Hawkins said.

"I don't think a bill like this has any chance of passing."

Ron Groves, chancellor for the Board of Regents, said implementing a system of two governing boards would not change the current system very dramatically.

"Shifting a system of five boards to two or three is a waste of time," Groves said.

"It would be much ado about little at all, and universities would lose their logical organizational structures."

A.D. VanMeter, chairman of the SIU Board of Trustees, was unavailable for comment.

Albert Somit, former SIUC president, said he is also an advocate of a two or three board system such as the one Ostenburg proposes because it would be more cost effective for the state.

receives the signal, decompresses it and feeds it through its screens and speakers.

In October, the first course will be taught from SIUC, in which Scott Air Force Base will receive Work Force Education.

Jay Starratt, director of technical and automation services at Morris Library, said distance learning is truly interactive.

The instructor sees and hears the class as the class sees the instructor, he said.

Starratt said if a student has a question, the ceiling microphones pick up the voice and a sound sensitive mobile camera zeroes in on the student. The instructor can answer the question directly to the class.

Snyder said Kaskaskia College, SIUE and Belleville Area Colleges have expressed interest in SIUC's Japanese courses.

Colleges also have requested agriculture and marketing courses, she said.

Starratt said educational resources traditionally found only at large universities will be available to rural high schools and smaller community colleges.

Starratt said it is the library's responsibility to train faculty instructors to operate the equipment.

Snyder said the program eventually may extend to satellite communication, in which case distance learning may one day exist worldwide.

Graduate and Professional Student Council president, said he increase will not hurt the university this year, but it could in the future.

"I don't think most graduate students would have a problem with a small increase," Smith said. But continuing increases could hurt SIU's law and medical schools, Smith said.

"One of our strongest selling points is that we're a very low-priced institution, especially for Law and Medicine," he said.

scape. It's a place where even a college education is no guarantee of future success.

Kevin's grandfather, John Patrick Gallagher, born in Ireland in 1902, landed in America in 1918 and worked 40 years in the shipping department for General Electric. Even into his 80s, John Patrick would haul bricks up a ladder.

"He was my idol," Kevin says. "He was always my hero."

Kevin's father, John, went straight from high school into the Marine Corps, and then, into the carpenter's union. For 26 years, John Gallagher has helped build many of the high-rises that dominate the Philadelphia skyline. John, 47, and his wife Veronica, 45, have also carved out a solid middle-class life, raising a family in a well-kept, split-level home in the Bustleton section of northeast Philadelphia.

But as they sit at their kitchen table, the Gallaghers worry about the future of their sons, John, 24, Brian 22, and Kevin.

"I don't think Americans realize how much the country has changed until they see their children go out in the workforce, and there is nothing there for them," the father says.

Kevin has two jobs, working days as a carpenter's apprentice, and three nights a week as a stock clerk at Super Fresh. The grocery store job may be mind-numbing, but the pay is good — $10 an hour — and the benefits include health insurance.

"Kevin told me it would be a waste of time for him to go to college, and he told me not to waste the money" John recalls. "I always wanted to show my sons that there were many things they could do, many ways for them to go. I wanted to show them all what was out there. College. Working. I'm very happy that Kevin made his own decision."

Kevin is a working man now, still living at home, up before dawn, sometimes home after midnight. He has a car but he can't drive it since he is unable to meet a staggering $5,000 a year insurance payment. So he hitches rides with his father to work, takes the bus home and often walks a mile to and from the grocery store. Meanwhile, his friends are still students, encountering the first gridlock of registering for college classes.

He admits he has a trace of jealousy for the lives his friends will lead in college. He has detected a growing gap between himself and some of his friends, even though school has barely started.

"Some of them are acting like they're better than I am," he says. "It doesn't really bother me. But I try to pump myself up a little more, and tell them that I'll do better than they will, that I've got a job and they don't. But really, around now, all of us are wondering, 'What are we going to do with our lives?'"

Now, instead of attending classes with friends, he's associating with co-workers, many of whom are decades older than he is.

"It's a different atmosphere," he says. "Different talk. They talk about bills, about paying for their homes and their cars."

The carpenters who have met Kevin on his first job at Frankford Hospital offer him advice that can be whittled down to four words: Go to college, kid.

"There's nothing wrong with physical work," says Scott Conover, 26.

"But if you went to college you wouldn't be out here busting your chops. Kevin should go back to school. If he waits four or five more years, he's almost hooked, hooked for the money. But, you know, there are a lot of owners of companies who once had carpenter's belts around their waists."

circuit court.

"The judge can seize a person's assets or put them in jail if necessary," Gibbs said.

Schott said his department contacts the state's comptroller's office if someone is behind on child-support payments and they seize the person's IRS tax returns.

Schott said his department can also seize portions of an individuals unemployment compensation along with reporting them to a consumer credit agency.

In addition to this, Schott said legislation has been passed that would allow professional licenses to be revoked from those who do not keep up with child-support payments.

"The system would allow us to take away those licenses which would affect doctors, lawyers and electricians or anyone else who holds a state license," Schott said.

Schott said letters are just beginning to be sent out to these professional license holders, but to date no licenses have been revoked.

Gerald Hawkins, D-Du Quoin, said it is obvious something needs to be done about deadbeat parents, those who are delinquent on child-support payments, but the effects must be considered.

"It would be difficult for someone to earn money without a drivers license," he said. "We should seize income taxes and garnish wages."

Claude Walker, spokesperson for Illinois Treasurer Patrick Quinn, said Ryan already has the authority to revoke the driver's licenses of parents delinquent on child-support payments. Quinn is Ryan's political rival for secretary of state.

"General provisions in the Illinois Connotated Statutes already gives him this power," he said. "This is another example of Ryan overlooking issues until right before an election."

Walker said Ryan has only recently addressed important issues like organ donation awareness, zero tolerance for teenagers arrested for drunken driving and criminal background checks for school bus drivers.

Schott said there are other ways to improve the percentage of people who pay child-support.

"We should standardize the rules and regulations states have to follow when it comes to court orders for child support," Schott said.

Schott said all states should recognize the original court order for child support.

diabetes," he said. "It won't repair damage, but if it can slow the progression (of the damage), that's a laudable goal."

The School of Medicine is one of six centers in the U.S., along with six in Canada, participating in the study, Pfeifer said.

Each participating center has until the end of the year to recruit 15 patients, ranging in age from 18 to 70, for the study.

The patients will be monitored for one year.

Pfeifer also received $375,112 in June from Marion Merril Dow, Inc. to study aminoguanidine in patients with type 1 — or juvenile onset — diabetes.

With diabetes, Schumer explained, blood sugar coats proteins, causing them to cross-link with other proteins, eventually leading to kidney damage.

"Proteins make all the necessary chemical reactions in the kidney happen," she said. "When they're coated with glucose and cross-link with other proteins, it prevents them from working effectively."

But Pfeifer said aminoguanidine can prevent protein dysfunction as a result of diabetes.

"Aminoguanidine can keep proteins functioning even when they're glazed," he said.

The aminoguanidine study, which began in June, is a multi-center study throughout the U.S., Pfeifer said.

Each center has two years to recruit 18 participants for the study, which will last up to four years, he said. Participants for the study must be between 22 and 50 years old, and must have been diagnosed with diabetes before the age of 30, Pfeifer said.

The participants must have some protein in their urine, an indication of kidney damage, but must not have severe kidney damage, he said.

Pfeifer said both studies are double-blind studies, meaning some of the participants will receive placebos in place of the drug, and neither the participants nor the experimenters will know who is receiving the drug until after the experiment.

The participants will be under the care of their primary physicians during the study, but will be paid for their participation and will receive the drugs for free after the study until they are marketed, Pfeifer said.

He said it is common for drug companies to provide study participants with drugs which have proven to be safe and effective, regardless of whether they received the drug or the placebo during the experiment.

"But that's not the reason to get into the study," Pfeifer said. "The reason to get in is to help research."

Fall fashion designs suit average person

The Washington Post

No one in fashion takes seriously a debate over hemlines. Those ultra-short skirts that appear on runways are inevitably brought down to reality in the showrooms. And the new longer lengths proposed by Calvin Klein and Karl Lagerfeld are really the same old dumb lengths that fashion editors have been warning women about for years.

Somewhere between brevity and dumbness lies the sensible length for a suitable fall. The flared or fluted mini seems to naturally require a softer, shorter jacket, just as a tapered skirt now looks better with a leaner jacket.

Suits in general are more fitted this season, with a focus on waists and legs rather than fussy details. Many designers avoid the question of blouses by cutting their jackets close to the body. blouses. Clearly, the question this fall is not whether a skirt is too short or a jacket too narrow, but whether it suits you.

counseling, security staff counseling youths and counselors involved in educational programs."

Hawkins said the camps seem to be successful in reforming offenders, but it is too early to determine the extent of the program's impact.

Edgar said this boot camp could become a model for the nation.

"(The camp) represents a creative effort to turn around the lives of young offenders who are on their way toward becoming dangerous and hardened criminals," he said.

Edgar also announced two new adult work camps that will be located at Pittsfield and Vandalia.

Americans choosing to drive aging automobiles

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Take a look down Ferndale Street in Kensington, Md. There's John Fagan's 1975 Oldsmobile Delta 88, still plugging away after 220,000 miles.

Down the street is Alice Gibson and her 1984 Oldsmobile Cutlass Salon, with 91,000 miles.

"You used to look out on the street and see the new cars. Not now. People are keeping their cars longer," said Gibson, 56, who has lived on Ferndale for about 30 years.

Across the country, the cars on the road today are older than ever, according to a recently released federal survey. Just as the average age of the U.S. population is going up, so is that of America's automobiles.

The average age of the nation's 186 million automobiles is almost eight years; 25 years ago, the average age was five.

Almost half the total miles now driven each year are in vehicles at least six years old, compared with a quarter of the total miles driven in vehicles at least that old in 1969.

The problems associated with aging automobiles, analysts said, are enormous.

Most older cars burn more fuel per mile than newer ones and give off more pollution-creating emissions at a time when many urban areas are under federal orders to reduce such emissions. And older cars generally are less safe, lacking features such as air bags and anti-lock brakes.

Internships key to future job success

Newsday

NEW YORK — Some of the best jobs in life are free — if you can afford to take them.

Jodi Sherman is making just $300 this summer, but she has been known to sing on her train ride home from work.

The Swarthmore College sophomore can afford her job because she lives with her parents while she works as an intern with Henson Associates, the Muppet people.

Sherman's Manhattan office looks like a grade school playroom. Gonzo dolls sprawl on filing cabinets. A flying contraption dangles four stories down the central staircase. Muppet interns are almost literally babes in a toyland. They have slumber parties at each other's houses. Sherman, 19, proudly wears her Kermit watch, even if she can't exactly tell the time with it.

"We were just saying the other day," she chirps, "if we worked at a law office we wouldn't be taking home any toys at all."

Some are perfect and some are perfectly awful, but internships are an increasingly essential stepping stone to career nirvana. Internships provide students with practical experience in their future professions. For businesses, internships provide a low-cost labor force, and are an increasingly popular recruiting tool.

The National Basketball Association, for example, started its program with two interns in 1988, and now takes about 40 a year.

Leroy Nunery, the NBA's director of human and information resources said, "These are people you want to look back on and hire—or at least have a shot at." Roughly 10 of the NBA's approximately 400 employees are former interns, and other ex-interns are working elsewhere in sports management.

Internships are everywhere.

If there's a place you want to work, try offering yourself, even if they don't have a program.

From 1987 to 1994, openings listed in The National Directory of Internships nearly doubled from 22,000 to more than 43,000, said Arienne Fennelly, herself an intern at the North Carolina-based National Society for Experiential Education, which publishes the book.

"It first became significant with MBAs and lawyers," said placement expert Victor Lindquist, a former associate dean and director of placement at Northwestern University. "It drifted down to the undergraduate population in the last five years."

Internships are all over the map in terms of perks and pay. Graduate student-interns in law, banking and engineering are called "summer associates" and are handsomely rewarded.

Firms woo the best and brightest with weekly salaries as high as $1,600. That kind of top compensation exists only in a few fields. But no-pay internships are also limited to a few fields, such as entertainment.

Billy Goat's unconventional instruments, rhythm rowdy

By Aleksandra Macys
Senior Reporter

Who would have thought an empty coffee can and a wet cloth could make for interesting music? One band from Texas used that and other unconventional instruments at their show Sunday night at Hangar 9.

Billy Goat played to a jumping, writhing crowd — all of whom seemed in tune to the innovative, tribal music and lyrics.

After waiting for what seemed like hours, Billy Goat finally took the stage. The crowd immediately jumped to its feet and began dancing to the overpowering percussion beats.

"I like it (the music) — it's funky, but it took so long for the band to get up there, I almost fell asleep," Jim Bain of Carbondale said.

"I like it — it's funky, but it took so long for the band to get up there, I almost fell asleep."

— Jim Bain

The bassist, two guitarists and keyboardist added to the show, but the spotlight was on the percussion section of the band featuring bongos and drums, making the band worth seeing for those who enjoy percussion instruments.

The lyrics were difficult to understand most of the time, so it is a good thing their CD's offer lyric sheets. The only time the lyrics were clearly understood was when the lead singer spoke instead of sang. The band's dancing woman and back-up vocalist provided much needed entertainment at times like when the band was singing the songs that could not be understood, as the band took on styles of other bands with sounds like the Beastie Boys and Santana.

Slower parts of songs allowed for more musical expression from the keyboardist and guitar players, whose styles ranged from Jimi Hendrix to Steve Vai.

The crowd really got hopping after band members threw food such as Corn Flakes and torn pages from books on the crowd.

One patron said she thought both bands were "primo," but not as crazy as the last time." She said the band was "really intense and into what they're doing."

Unlike previous shows during which the band took their clothes off, no flesh was revealed at this show. Explaining to the crowd why he would not expose himself, lead singer and bongo player Dillon said he had gotten into trouble with the local authorities three years ago for doing so.

Opening for Billy Goat was the local band Nitro Jr, who pumped up the crowd with their fast, hard-hitting style of music.

Overall, the audience and band members seemed to have a good time.

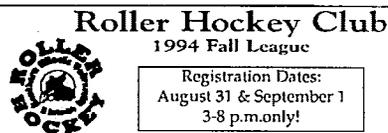

Carbondale resident Ed Riddle, who had never previously seen the band, said he had a great time and would definitely be back to see them again.

A show worth catching, Billy Goat puts on a great stage performance and plays hard and fast throughout the show. The show is not recommended for people who are easily offended.

Those who want more information about Billy Goat can write to them at 4325 Holly St., Kansas City, Mo. 64111.

Bizarre smoke damage raises book value

The Washington Post

Get a whiff of this. On second thought, unless you are Jeffrey Dahmer, it might be better to resist. A Los Angeles rare-book dealer is selling copies of a horror novel that are impregnated with the odor of burnt human flesh. Even scarier is the fact that he's already found two takers, for $600 a pop.

In its unperfumed form, the book — a limited edition of a novel called "Drawing Blood," by ascending horror star Poppy Z. Brite — sold for $50.

It is quite a markup to $600, but as Brite herself notes, "There's no precedent for this sort of thing."

Opinion seems divided on whether Barry Levin, the bookseller, is a ghoul or merely ghoulish.

"I'm rather shocked by this," L.W. Curry, the dean of science fiction and horror rare-book dealers, said. "It's in bad taste."

Levin agrees that "there's some sensibility involved here, obviously," but makes a case for how he is bringing good out of tragedy.

The story begins last Dec. 24. Levin's new catalogue tells it best: "At approximately 6 a.m., a man entered the front door of Westwood Mail Services in West Los Angeles. ... He produced a Molotov cocktail, ignited the rag wick and broke the gasoline-filled bottle against a bank of mailboxes, thus setting himself and Westwood Mail Services on fire."

The man, whose motives remain murky, died in the hospital. One of the few items to survive the conflagration intact was a piece of mail waiting for Levin: three copies of "Drawing Blood." They were untouched, but they smelled very, very bad.

"You really want to know?" asks the bookseller. "Cannibals used to call their delicacy 'long pig.' And it does have that sickeningly sweet porklike aroma."

Levin is no stranger to what he calls "unique items." A couple of years ago, there was a special limited-edition copy of "The Satanic Verses," signed by Salman Rushdie, that had bound into it the signature of the writer's nemesis, the Ayatollah Khomeini.

And Levin sold a copy of Salvador Dali's edition of "Alice in Wonderland" that a collector had asked Dali to put his "mark" on. Dali being Dali, he made his mark by urinating on it.

What prompted Levin to sell the copies of "Drawing Blood" instead of merely holding his nose and disposing of them was both the nature of the incident and the nature of the novel.

"If this had happened under any other circumstances, where the person wasn't evil or if anyone else had been hurt, then selling these wouldn't have been appropriate," he said.

In any case, Levin said he plans to give the profits to the family that owned the mail shop.

The suicidal bomber "almost put them out of business," he said.

"I'm trying to have some good come out of this."

It also was essential that the books be horror novels.

"If this were, say, 'The Bridges of Madison County,' who would wish to have a copy? There would be no correlation," he said.

"Drawing Blood," the tale of a young man coming to grips with the fact that 20 years ago his father went crazy and killed his other son, his wife and then himself, does not feature any self-immolations.

But Jeanne Cavelos, its editor, agrees it was "very appropriate that these books would survive this horrible experience, because it's a novel about survival — how you cope with the horrible things that people do."

The premise of Aikido is that the mind, body, and spirit move as a single unit. Practice is done with a partner to establish an environment where one learns to protect oneself, and extend that protection to others as well. The movements of Aikido are not designed to stop attacks, but rather to blend with the movement of the attack and then redirect it.

Although all fall routines are original, the Shaker board discusses themes the women will perform, she said.

"Our crowd at the Arena is a lot different (than the crowd at the stadium), so we try to appeal to the variety of age ranges," Piper said. "We try to perform some 50s and 60s dance routines in addition to the jazz and funk dances."

One dance the Shakers enjoy performing that also is a crowd pleaser is "Dad's dance," a dance performed around Valentine's Day.

Squad members invite their fathers to SIUC and teach them a dance they perform together during a basketball game, Piper said.

Nancy Estling, Shaker coordinator, cheerleader and mascot coach, said she is responsible for the Shakers' image, public appearances and costumes. Different outfits dictate the various music the squad dance to at games.

Besides coaching the SIUC cheerleaders, Estling is the spirit coach for the Shakers, coordinating cheers all three groups perform.

"I teach them (the Shakers) to project spirit and their emotions to the crowd in a positive image," Estling said. "I like to see lots of jumps and kicks — they're a lot easier to recognize than a smile on a girl's face or a twinkle in her eye."

speech communication for Murphysboro and squad member for three years, said in addition to the fun the Shakers have together, they go through rigorous tryouts, interviews and weigh-ins before being chosen for the squad.

Snyder said Shaker tryouts begin in April. Potential Shakers learn and perform dance and march routines, choreograph their own routine, are interviewed and are weighed in.

"Everyone is more worried about the actual level of fitness, rather than the weight," she said. "If someone is overweight, her body fat percentage is evaluated and she is put on a diet and in an exercise program."

The Shakers practice from June through March, Snyder said.

An annual event the Shakers look forward to is traveling to one of the Chicago Bears' home games to perform with the band during half-time, Piper said.

"The first football game is always exciting, the Bears game is fun and basketball at SIU is something we always look forward to," she said.

Snyder said she is hoping for a better football season and looking forward to the MVC tournament.

This summer Snyder and Shakers Gina Simpkins and Marci Shasteen led a four-day Saluki Shaker clinic for 24 K-6th grade girls in conjunction with the Carbondale Park District.

training, because we really don't know how much time we will be able to practice outside in February," he said.

"About the only thing we will be able to do indoors right before the season is get our arms loose and ready, so fall practice is extremely important to intensely work on our fundamentals."

Callahan said on Sept. 11 there will be tryouts to see if there are any players who might have slipped through cracks and could help the team.

"It does not usually happen, but every once in a while you find somebody who really makes an impression," he said.

"In 1985, Dale Kisten walked-on at a tryout and then was Missouri Valley Conference Most Valuable Player."

He said the downside is that people just come out for fun without any real baseball experience and can turn tryouts into a circus.

Henderson said the team will hold a inter-squad world series Oct. 11, 12 and 14, and invite scouts to watch the players practice on Oct. 13.

"This gives the scouts a chance to observe the players and allow the players to get some exposure," Henderson said.

Callahan said the short time he has been here has been very hectic.

"Since early August we have been doing little things that have amounted to a very busy schedule and I have not really had time to enjoy my position because we have been so busy," he said.

"Once fall practice starts the little things will be out of the way and then we can concentrate on the team and recruiting."

are required to attend for each of the seven trips.

"Many people don't know what to bring on a trip, and we try to guide them through this process before the day of the event," she said.

"Campers can get the date and time of the pre-trip meeting when they register for the trip at the information desk on the second floor of the Rec Center."

The other three trips offered by ARC are a canoe trip to the Cache river Oct. 15, a Clear Springs camping trip Oct. 29 and 30, and an Ava caving trip Nov. 12.

McKinley said the Clear Springs camping trip is a part of a new series offered by ARC in conjunction with Disabled Student Recreation.

"The Clear Springs camping trip is sponsored by Disabled Student Recreation, which makes this trip accessible to disabled students," she said.

"The new series sponsored by Disabled Student Recreation also includes a variety of free clinics offered by the ARC. Anyone interested in these free clinics can call the ARC for more information."

The ARC has nine free clinics planned for the fall to include kayaking, rock climbing and hunting clinics.

Each clinic is held at the Student Recreation Center at 7 p.m. except for the owl prowl, which is held at 8 p.m.

Anyone interested in attending a trip or clinic should contact the ARC at 453-1285.

No strike here: Saluki baseball readies for spring

By Doug Durso
Senior Reporter

While the professional boys of summer continue to talk instead of play, the baseball Salukis are getting ready for a season that begins several months from now.

The Salukis will begin preparation for next season this week with weight and condition training for eight hours a week, which is all that is allowed by NCAA rules, and then start their five week training camp on Sept. 12.

Head Coach Dan Callahan, who was hired over the summer, said this fall practice will be very important for everyone in the baseball organization, because he does not know how the squad performs.

"Fall practice is going to be the first time I will be really be able to see how individuals on the team play," Callahan said. "The only things I know about the players is what (assistant) Coach Henderson has told me and when I was trying to recruit some of them at Eastern (Illinois)."

Callahan said he will be very open-minded about giving every player a chance to battle for starting positions.

"Since I have not seen these players perform before, no position is guaranteed, so the back line players have extra incentive to play well," he said.

Another reason the fall workouts are crucial is because of the different philosophies a new coach brings with him.

"We need to get the players accustomed to the new system a coaching team brings; and this is a time we can do that," Callahan said.

Ken Henderson, Saluki assistant coach, said fall practice is a time to get ready for the season beginning in February.

High steppin' Shakers kick up heels

By Kellie Huttes
Senior Reporter

As the Dawgs return to the field this Saturday in the year's first football game, the Saluki Shakers also will make their fall debut on the turf as part of the half-time entertainment show, performing with the Marching Salukis and flag guard.

The Shakers work all summer choreographing and perfecting the original dance routines they will use during the football half-time shows, Shaker head coach Donna Piper said.

In addition to performing with the band at football games, the squad dances at men's and women's basketball games and at special events, Piper said.

The Shakers, a group of 16 female students, received a first place award for their home routine, an original choreographed mixture of dance music performances, in a competition at the University of Missouri in Columbia Aug. 4.

Piper said the squad was due to win first place.

"I knew our home routine was good when we went to competition and after we saw others perform," she said. "So when we won I

Former Saluki running back cracks NFL lineup with Buffalo

By Grant Deady
Sports Editor

When Monday Night Football made its season premiere on Aug. 8 with a game pitting the Buffalo Bills against the Washington Redskins, a former Saluki running back emerged in front of the nationwide audience.

Yonel Jourdain, a four-year starter for the SIUC squad from 1989-1992, came into the game for Buffalo midway through the first half and sparked the Bills with both his running and receiving ability.

The ABC announcing crew of Al Michaels, Frank Gifford and Dan Dierdorf singled Jourdain out as a player with a legitimate shot of making the team and jokingly referred to his alma mater's mascot, the Saluki.

On Sunday night as the Bills made their final roster cut after posting a 3-1 preseason record, the jokes switched from SIUC's famous Egyptian canine trademark to those who doubted the NFL potential of Jourdain.

After spending one year on Buffalo's developmental squad, Jourdain landed a spot on the Bills' opening day roster and has become a key ingredient to the team's hopes of returning to its fifth straight Super Bowl.

A product of Evanston, Jourdain

Jourdain

(5-11, 204) led the Bills in kickoff returns this preseason with 146 yards on six attempts (24.3 yard avg.). The ex-Saluki shouldered a load at the tailback position playing behind All-Pro Thurman Thomas by gaining 79 yards on 21 carries, which turned out to be the second-best rushing total registered on the preseason squad.

Jourdain displayed his receiving talents also, by pulling in three catches for 21 yards.

It's impossible to ignore Jourdain's name in the SIUC football record books as he ranks among the greatest of all time in four different rushing categories.

His 412 attempts is fifth on the list of Saluki greats, while his 10.6 yards per carry outlast Austin Peay State in 1992 places fourth in single-game-highs.

Jourdain appears second on the list for consecutive 100-yard games with four during his senior season. Saluki fans will have a chance to catch Jourdain in action later this fall, as the Bills are slated to battle the Bears in Chicago on Oct. 2 at Soldier Field.

Adventure Resource Center organizes recreational trips

By Sean Walker
Staff Reporter

The Adventure Resource Center in conjunction with the Base Camp, located in the Student Recreation Center, is planning seven adventure trips this fall for students, student recreation members, university affiliates, and the local community.

Chris McKinley, a student work supervisor for ARC and Base Camp, said prices for the trips vary due to traveling distance and costs for equipment rental.

"ARC plans the trips, then the participants come to Base Camp to rent personal equipment," she said. "The cost of the trip includes transportation and group equipment."

"Group equipment includes canoes, stoves and cave helmets and lights."

Of the seven trips planned for fall, four of them are sponsored by the Wilderness Education Association stewardship program. These four trips are limited to the first 10 people registered.

Zak Zalocha, the WEA program administrator, said participants can gain a stewardship through the organization by attending three of the four WEA sponsored trips.

"The goal of the WEA trips is to teach wilderness leadership skills that involve group decisions and conflict resolution," Zalocha said. "Many of the people who take these trips use them for their personal knowledge and confidence to go camping on their own."

"For people in the field of outdoor leadership, a WEA stewardship will help them get a job in the future," he said.

The four WEA trips include: minimum impact camping Sept. 10 and 11, cross country navigation Sept. 24 and 25, river canoeing Oct. 21 to 23 and rock climbing Nov. 5 and 6.
