

University of Groningen

Reprocessing of biometric data for law enforcement purposes

Jasserand-Breeman, Catherine

IMPORTANT NOTE: You are advised to consult the publisher's version (publisher's PDF) if you wish to cite from it. Please check the document version below.

Document Version

Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Publication date:

2019

Link to publication in University of Groningen/UMCG research database

Citation for published version (APA):

Jasserand-Breeman, C. (2019). Reprocessing of biometric data for law enforcement purposes: Individuals' safeguards caught at the Interface between the GDPR and the 'Police' directive?. [Groningen]: University of Groningen.

Copyright

Other than for strictly personal use, it is not permitted to download or to forward/distribute the text or part of it without the consent of the author(s) and/or copyright holder(s), unless the work is under an open content license (like Creative Commons).

Take-down policy

If you believe that this document breaches copyright please contact us providing details, and we will remove access to the work immediately and investigate your claim.

Downloaded from the University of Groningen/UMCG research database (Pure): <http://www.rug.nl/research/portal>. For technical reasons the number of authors shown on this cover page is limited to 10 maximum.

List of propositions

1. Biometric data deserve a better protection from a data protection perspective.
2. There is an inherent tension between the principle of purpose limitation and the re-use of personal data across sectors.
3. The law should understand technological practices before adopting regulations impacting them.
4. Guidance from the European Data Protection Board is needed on the reprocessing of GDPR data for law enforcement purposes.
5. The right to information in the 'police' Directive does not reach the standard set in the CoE Recommendation R(87) 15 on the use of personal data by police authorities.
6. The new EU data protection framework is already outdated.
7. If I have nothing to hide, I still don't want to be defined by the cells of my body or my inner thoughts.