

The John Carroll Review

Volume 71 | Issue 1

Article 15

April 2017

Elegy for Naive Love

Rachel Lefebvre

John Carroll University, rlefebvre19@jcu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: <http://collected.jcu.edu/jcr>

 Part of the Fiction Commons, Nonfiction Commons, and the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

Lefebvre, Rachel (2017) "Elegy for Naive Love," The John Carroll Review: Vol. 71 : Iss. 1 , Article 15.

Available at: <http://collected.jcu.edu/jcr/vol71/iss1/15>

This Poem is brought to you for free and open access by the Student at Carroll Collected. It has been accepted for inclusion in The John Carroll Review by an authorized editor of Carroll Collected. For more information, please contact connell@jcu.edu.

ELEGY FOR NAIVE LOVE

Rachel Lefebre

It was me, the younger sister, who got the call to pick him up after he fell to the floor,
 his eyes empty as the pill bottle
 I found in the car,
 foam dripping from his lips
 like a shaken can of beer
 cracked open slowly,
 the kind he drank
 every day before noon.

It was me, the younger sister,
swallowing my own breath,
who believed him when he blamed his sickness on the July sun and an empty water bottle.

It was me, who did not think love should have been gripping his shoulders and shaking dead brain cells out of his ears.
Love should have been hiding car keys,
 searching his drawers for drugs,
 and two fingers down his throat.

But it was me, the younger sister, who did not know the gruesome parts of love and so when he asked me to just drive home, I did.
And only knowing love as a trusting kind of space,
I brought him a glass of water and closed the door as I left him alone.