from the dean

Dear Friend of the College of Law,

In this issue of the College of Law magazine, UK Law Notes, we highlight the contributions of some of our graduates who serve in state government.

From service in elected positions at the highest level, such as Representative Tanya Pullin and Secretary of State Trey Grayson, to service in policy making positions on important issues such as health care, like Shannon Turner, our graduates are in important positions in the government of the Commonwealth.

Graduates such as John Gillig, Chief of Staff to the Speaker of the House, and Susan Stokely Clary, Court Clerk, General Counsel, and Court Administrator for the Supreme Court, are instrumental in making our state government function at the highest levels. Our graduates bring their legal educations to bear in direct ways, such as Laura Hendrix, General Counsel of the Legislative Research Commission, and Amy Dougherty at the Public Service Commission.

The graduates profiled are only a representative selection of the many graduates who serve the Commonwealth. Scores of College of Law graduates serve all across Kentucky, at all different levels and in an amazingly broad range of positions. It is a tradition of service that extends back to the founding of the College, almost one hundred years ago. It is a tradition the present generation of students will extend.

I hope you enjoy reading about our graduates who serve the Commonwealth by working in state government, and that you will thank them for their service when you next encounter them.

Best regards.

UK LAW BLSA MOCK TRIAL TEAM SECOND IN NATION

Four students from the University of Kentucky College of Law Black Law Student Association (BLSA) took second place in the nation in the Thurgood Marshall Mock Trial National Competition held this past March in Washington, D.C.

The UK team of Viola Forbin, Anthony Gray, Valorie Smith and Brandi Stewart were one of 12 teams competing for the nation's top spot. They defeated teams representing prestigious law schools such as Texas A&M School of Law, Howard University School of Law and Pepperdine University School of Law. UK's team defeated Pepperdine, the top seeded team for part of the tournament, twice before losing to the University of Georgia in the final round; a team they had beaten in the regional qualifying competition to win the Thurgood Marshall Mock Trial Southern Regional Competition in February.

"This is the first time that a UK Law mock trial team has finished this high in a national competition," said Allan Vestal, dean of the UK College of Law. "This is an outstanding quartet of students and their achievement is remarkable."

Mock trial tests law students' ability to try a case alternately as both the prosecutor and defense counsel. To succeed in competition, participants must be articulate, persuasive and think well on their feet, as well as being skilled in making opening statements, witness examinations, cross examinations and closing arguments.

Local attorney and UK College of Law graduate Robert Houlihan coached the team.

"Bobby's dedication to this team's success demonstrates how the involvement of our alumni directly contributes to the accomplishments of our students," said Vestal. □

▶ PROFESSOR CONNELLY AWARDED THE CHIEF JUSTICE'S SPECIAL SERVICE AWARD

Professor Allison Connelly was recently awarded the Chief Justice's Special Service Award at the KBA Convention. She was chosen in recognition of her distinguished service to the Court of Justice as a legal educator, for administering the Kentucky Legal Education Opportunity Program (KLEO), and for her efforts in promoting diversity within the Bench and Bar of the Commonwealth of Kentucky. □

▶ TWO UK LAW STUDENTS JOIN NBSA EXECUTIVE BOARD

University of Kentucky College of Law students Adrienne Thakur and Brandi Stewart have been named to the National Black Law Student Association (NBSA) Executive Board in the southern region. Thakur will serve as director of sub region one, which includes Kentucky and Tennessee, and Stewart, will serve as secretary.

NBSA is the largest student-run organization in America. As director, Thakur will be responsible for supervising and planning a regional academic retreat, participating in fundraising, and representing law schools in the southern region at events. As secretary, Stewart will be responsible for maintaining mailing lists for the entire “Without Chief Justice Lambert's vision and determination to ‘change the face of justice in Kentucky,’ there would be no KLEO program director to honor. Without Representative Jessie Crenshaw's commitment to KLEO and his superb legislative skills in obtaining funding for the program, the KLEO program would have never become a reality.”

▶ COMPED SCHOLARSHIP

CompEd, Inc. has established an endowed fellowship fund with the College of Law. The Fund will be known as the CompEd, Inc. Second Fellowship Fund.

CompEd, Inc. of Louisville, Kentucky, has held a long relationship with the College of Law. Since the company's first gift in 1994, they have contributed more than $115,000 to supporting student fellowships in the College. The recent $100,000 commitment will be matched through the state's RCTF program for a total gift of $200,000. □ region, creating and developing a monthly regional newsletter, and maintaining an open line of communication between the local, regional and national groups of the organization.

They will attend four regional meetings and the association's national meeting in Washington, D.C.

The southern region is the largest of six regions within NBSA and is comprised of 42 schools across 9 states. Members of the southern region executive board manage a budget of nearly $50,000, plan and implement academic support programs for student members and serve as the regional leadership team for 1,500 students. □

The One Less Traveled By

A low hum begins the warm-up as string, brass and wind instruments fall in and out of pitch with one another. The cacophony of noise rises and fills the empty auditorium at the Kentucky Center in Louisville, Kentucky, then slowly dies away. The conductor taps his baton and, when silence falls, raises it high above his head and begins leading the Louisville Orchestra in Mozart's Symphony No. 29 in A Major.

Toni M. Robinson,
Class of 2002

The swirl of sound envelops the listener. The melody and harmony chase one another and are expanded and deepened with the unique sounds created by the diverse instruments of the orchestra. Every detail of the piece—the notes, the rhythm, the dynamics—are orchestrated even to ensuring the string bows rise and fall in unison.

Stepping behind stage, you find an orchestra of a different sort. An industrious group of people who work to ensure the experience behind the scenes is as melodious as the performance—the orchestra librarian, personnel manager, stage manager, local stage hands, sound and lighting technicians and Toni Robinson, Director of Operations at the Louisville Orchestra and member of UK Law Class of 2002.

The Louisville native's journey to finding herself behind the stage curtains does not follow the usual pattern for most that enter orchestra administration. Robinson's musical career began in the fourth grade when she picked up the trumpet and later the viola in the sixth grade. She and her twin sister, a violinist, excelled in their chosen instruments. Both sisters were members of the Louisville Youth Orchestra in high school, and received full scholarships to attend the University of Louisville. While at U of L, Toni majored in music and minored in political science. Midway through her undergraduate career, Robinson began to examine what direction she should take with her musical talent.

"I decided I didn't want to teach music and I didn't have the dedication it takes to be a professional musician—all the hours practicing and taking auditions—it just wasn't what I perceived myself doing," Robinson said. "That's when I asked myself, what interests me? I knew that the law somewhat interested me, music interested me, business interested me—so I decided to go into entertainment law. That was my goal upon entering law school."

While at the UK College of Law, Robinson excelled in her course work and was an active member in the Black Law Students Association, the Trial Advocacy Board and was on the staff of the Journal of Natural Resources and Environmental Law. Yet it was becoming increasingly clear a career in the traditional practice of law was not what she wanted for herself. Her heart was in music and the arts. During her three years in Lexington, Toni found release from the stress and pressures of law school by performing with the Lexington Community Orchestra. Encouraged by mentors like Professor Allison Connelly to "follow her heart," after completing a juris doctorate, Robinson turned down a job offer with a law firm in Lexington to pursue a master's degree in arts administration at Indiana University.

"I did something that was atypical of everyone in my law class because no one else decided after all the hard work and dedication put into law school that 'Hey, this is not what I want to do. I'm going to go back to school after taking the bar,'" Robinson commented with a laugh.

As Toni's deft fingers on the strings of her viola coordinate with the graceful movements of the bow to create a lilting melody, so she also coordinates scheduling of venues, compliance with union contracts, and advancing the details of all concerts to create a successful orchestra season. She is the official liaison between all guest artists and the Orchestra, and personally handles every aspect of their visits from contracts to dry cleaning. Since coming to the Louisville Orchestra in February 2005, Robinson has worked with a number of diverse musical talents from violinist Judith Ingolfsson to Kenny

Rogers to Kool & The Gang. This upcoming season Toni is looking forward to working with Pops artists including Wynonna Judd, Olivia Newton-John, and The Beach Boys, as well as famous violinists Itzhak Perlman and Nadja Salerno-Sonnenberg.

"A lot of people assume, 'Oh, you're classically trained and you work for an orchestra so you listen to classical music all the time.' No. Not the case," Robinson smiles. "I'm a die hard pop music fan and I listen to DJX and love Kelly Clarkson and Justin Timberlake. Working with the pops artists is probably the one thing I enjoy the most about my job. It keeps my job interesting, and each experience is never the same because no guest artist is ever the same."

Talking with this down-to-earth, driven young woman, it is unmistakable that she finds joy in her work and is convinced that her courage in taking the road "less traveled by" has paid off in her life. "It was a logical if unusual progression to getting to where I am now," reflects Robinson. "Had I known earlier that there were people who made orchestra management their career, I might have taken a different career path, but I'm glad I took the path I did because I think it's a unique path. Especially with the law degree—it's been a great benefit and I use that knowledge every day in my work." While she would have been a talented attorney in any legal firm, Robinson decided early on that "if you don't love what you do, it isn't worth doing." And it is clear that she is doing something she finds worthwhile. □

Seven Serving The State

by Rebekah M. Tilley

As the state's preeminent and oldest law school, the College has supplied generations of Kentucky leaders.

These include leaders in public positions at all levels, men and women who serve their communities, large and small. They play important and valuable roles in their communities and serve the public through their ethical and knowledgeable application of the law and the development of enlightened public policies.

Called to Lead

It was Shannon Turner's (UK Law '00) last day as a state government employee. After devoting 18 months of time and energy to the historic reconfiguration of Kentucky's Medicaid program under the new federal waiver program, which will insure that thousands of Kentucky Medicaid beneficiaries continue to receive desperately needed service despite severe financial limitations on the program, Turner was returning to the private sector. Sitting among boxes and occasionally interrupted by colleagues who dropped in for last consultations, hugs, and tears, Turner described how, as a past recipient of Medicaid, she was able to handle the delicate transition from a system that was close to bankruptcy to the new system which will ensure continued service for the Commonwealth's most disadvantaged. Casually dressed and only 29, one wouldn't suspect that this frank young woman led the historic overhaul of a government program introduced long before she was born.

The Kentucky Health Choices program is the first of its kind in the nation, and other states are likely to model it in the future. Turner's vision, leadership and personal understanding of Medicaid made her exactly the right person at the right place at the right time to provide leadership on this crisis both in Kentucky and the rest of the nation.

Shannon Turner

While Turner was blazing new trails in Medicaid, Secretary of State Trey Grayson (UK Law '98) sought to bring his office into the 21st century by improving online services that were geared toward enhancing the ease of use as well as improving the information available for educational purposes. In this, he exemplified the innovative tradition in the Secretary of State's office, as did his predecessor, John Y. Brown III (UK Law '92). In the mid-1990s, Grayson and fellow Combs Scholarship recipient Amy Cubbage (UK Law '97) were a testament to the importance of student scholarships in retaining Kentucky's best and brightest. Trey Grayson, with a degree from Harvard under his belt, was headed to Wall Street when he was offered the Bert Combs Scholarship and decided to return to Kentucky. After a law degree, MBA, and his first political campaign Grayson became the youngest Secretary of State in Kentucky's history.

Purposeful and direct, Grayson quickly checked off a number of campaign promises including improving online services: a new election services Web site where Kentuckians can check their voter registration, real-time filing of business documents, updating Kentucky's election laws to include a repeal of taxpayer supported gubernatorial elections, instituting a 300 foot electioneering buffer-zone around polling stations, and work on an extensive civic literacy program that was begun in part by fellow UK Law graduate Representative Tanya Pullin (UK Law '86). "I like to tell people that my vocation used to be my avocation," said Grayson. "Now I get paid to do what I love. One to help young people get involved in their communities. Second, learning about the challenges that our election administrations face around the country after Florida, the mandates of the Help America Vote Act melding state and federal law—it was an exciting yet very challenging time to be Secretary of State and that really appealed to me. And on the business side, I have classmates who use the office, and I've enjoyed being able to improve that side of services offered through the Secretary of State's office."

spent 11 years enforcing the law as an Assistant Attorney General before joining Speaker Jody Richard's office. While working for the Speaker, Gillig has witnessed a decided shift in state partisan politics following the Republican Party takeover of the Kentucky Senate in 2000. Yet he notes one of the most striking things he has discovered working with legislators over the years is the amount of bipartisan cooperation on many issues. "Most people would be very surprised at the large number of bills that pass unanimously or nearly unanimously. The vast majority of bills that became law in the 2006 regular session—like previous sessions—passed with overwhelming support from both Democrats and Republicans," Gillig noted. "Most of the work that goes on is of a bipartisan nature. On any given day we may have a floor fight on a particular bill but on the same day legislators will also pass four, five or six bills without a fight because it makes sense, it's the right thing to do and it helps state government provide the services that people are asking for."

Two floors above Grayson on the opposite side of the Capitol, John Gillig (UK Law '76), Chief of Staff to Kentucky House Speaker Jody Richards represents behind-the-scenes leadership. A large part of his job consists of working to bring law makers together toward a common goal—if not always common means—of improving the lives of all Kentuckians. A man with a good measure of interpersonal finesse, Gillig has served with the Speaker since 1995, first as General Counsel and now as Chief of Staff.

Growing up in a politically active home—his mother and grandmother both served as President of the Kentucky Democratic Women's Club, his grandfather served as a state senator for several terms, and his uncle was Kentucky Supreme Court Justice James B. Stevenson (UK Law '51)—Gillig

Driven by Duty

State Representative Tanya Pullin (UK Law '86) made the journey all on her own. While some people are surprised that she can boil water, Pullin holds an undergraduate degree in Home Economics because it allowed her to "sample from the smorgasbord of college." From the time she was in 8th grade, she knew she wanted to be an attorney. The Eastern Kentucky girl found her niche in intellectual property law, worked in Hong Kong for almost 8 years, and was part of the historic negotiations in Hanoi that were the foundation of the intellectual property portion of the trade agreement between Vietnam and the US. Then, at the age of 40, Pullin left it all behind, retired, and returned to the small town of South Shore where she finally obtained the three things she felt were missing in her life: a house, a car and a dog. Deciding one day that it was "my time to serve," Pullin tirelessly campaigned for state representative and began representing Greenup County in 2001.

While she is clear that her top priority is serving her district, Pullin is actively involved in a number of statewide initiatives including advocating for the deployment of broadband all across Kentucky, energy independence, and civic education. Long before being invited to participate in a national initiative to improve civic literacy, Pullin regularly visited grade schools in her district and spoke to school children about the importance of voting and giving simple lessons on how a bill becomes law. "Politics has become so much about television that it's become unreal," Pullin comments. "I want children from an early age to understand that their elected officials are real, normal, and just like them. I'm a flesh and blood person who lives just down the road, not an imaginary television personality." Along with Senator Jack Westwood, Pullin participated in the Congressional Conference on Civic Education which ultimately led to the Civic Literacy Initiative of Kentucky which is administered by the Administrative Office of the Courts, the Department of Education and the Secretary of State.

Stepping down the marble steps to the second floor of the Capitol, one will find Susan Stokely Clary (UK Law '81), Court Clerk, General Counsel, and Court Administrator for the highest court in the Commonwealth. She wears a dozen hats on the Court; operating as press secretary, government liaison, and is almost as institutionalized as the Court itself. Pictures of the 18 different courts she has served since 1981 rise in three columns to the top of her Capitol office's high ceilings. Clary came of age during Kennedy-inspired emphasis on service and the women's movement that brought a new cohort of women into the legal profession. "I loved the idea of jurisprudence and government. I loved the idea of the law. But when I inquired about law school admission, the woman at the placement office told me that dating a football player and being a cheerleader wouldn't get you into law school. I'd never done either! And I had a 4.0 G.P.A. in two majors!" Clary said. "So I took umbrage at that and actually applied to go to law school. So, she really helped me by getting me over that hump of being afraid to move on what you wanted to do."

The petite, commanding blonde, whose office door's nameplate is the word "Mom" spelled out in Scotch tape, courtesy of her 11-year-old son, is a specialist in Family Law who sits on the Children's Rights Committee of the Kentucky Bar Association, and is a member of the UK College of Social Work Interdisciplinary Committee on Children and Families. While she could have poured her passion for the law into a lucrative job in private practice, she views her position with the Kentucky Supreme Court as giving her a great opportunity to make a substantial impact. "I question the path I've taken sometimes when I look at my 12-year-old car" she smiles. "But you have to be happy with what you do. You spend more time in your job and in your career than anywhere else, and it's important to leave a legacy. To feel like you're part of the solution rather than part of the problem. Governance is not always glory, but in the long term you do see big victories. The juvenile code was one. Rose v. Council—being part of that opinion was monumental; having the opportunity to change the whole educational system of the state."

Wheelchair bound, Amy Dougherty's (UK Law '85) decision to become a government servant after leaving law school was driven both by the state's willingness to accommodate her physical needs as well as an ingrained sense of duty fostered by her father's military roots. "When I came to the Public Service Commission I thought it would be a good fit in terms of the work situation. We have a hearing room where people have to come to us that cut out all my disability issues," Dougherty, a senior attorney at the Kentucky Public Service Commission, explained. As a utility regulator, Dougherty's work has a real and direct impact on every citizen in the Commonwealth who has water, gas, electric and telephone service. "I spend

Amy Dougherty

months fighting to hold rates down $0.05 or a dollar a month. And you think, this isn't that much benefit to any individual person. But when you look at the appropriate balance between utilities that are given protection for their service and the people that they're serving it seems to me that the government's role of fighting for not increasing rates a few pennies is a good balance. I've appreciated that role in my career. And to me, what I do is a non-military extension of the sense of service instilled by my family."

A career state government employee, Dougherty is within a few years of retirement and is already planning to pursue interests in restorative justice following her retirement. She recently returned from a trip to Nicaragua where she spent seven days working with two humanitarian organizations; one that provides basic personal hygiene items to prisoners referred to as abandonados or "the abandoned" because their families are unable or unwilling to provide these items; the other provides basic legal services such as helping a couple file for a marriage license for a reasonable fee. It is a natural extension of her service to the Commonwealth.

In a similar way, Laura Hendrix (UK Law '92) felt called to the legal profession because it gave her the opportunity to advance basic principles of justice and fairness. As a co-founder of the UK Law Student Public Interest Law Foundation, Hendrix knew early on the path she wanted to follow in her legal career. "My dad went to West Point and I grew up reading about John Kennedy and from that grew a desire to work in government service," Hendrix reflected. "I feel like wherever you are, you need to feel like you're called to your profession and are contributing something to society. I feel that even more strongly about that now that I have three kids. I hope that I can say that I am making the world a better place, making Kentucky a better place, just by doing my job."

Now, as General Counsel of the Legislative Research Commission (LRC), Hendrix serves Kentucky's elected public servants, all 138 members of Kentucky's General Assembly. Her office on the third floor of the Capitol building is crowded with thick books, stacks of research and pictures of her three children. The Commission is a non-partisan body, and Hendrix and her colleagues at LRC help to ensure that legislators get independent confidential information as they work to draft legislation. Legislators' work is protected by the speech and debate clause within the Kentucky Constitution, Section 43, and staff members strive to ensure that this legislative immunity is protected with strict confidentiality about an individual legislator's proposals, information, and research. "When a legislator calls and says, 'I have this idea,' my thought immediately goes to, 'How much information can I give this person?' That's our job, to give legislators unbiased information. Then they, as the elected official, can sit down with the information and decide which position they're going to take," Hendrix explains "You want the legislators to decide what their position is going to be, but they need the ability to have space to work through the issues in a confidential environment." The legislators can then decide to develop legislative policy based on thorough information.

The College of Law has countless alumni who, in many different ways, serve the people of the Commonwealth of Kentucky every day. The preceding profiles provide just a glimpse of the College's graduates who currently work in state government. They come from different backgrounds and generations, but they are dedicated to expending the College's long tradition of excellence in leadership. □ foreseeability in courts' determination of duty. So I decided to try to tackle it myself. It was a little daunting as a first-year professor to address such a fundamental tenet of negligence law, especially one that has been debated by the field's leading scholars for many years—but big problems have always attracted me (or perhaps it is the reverse).

AMERICAN LAW INSTITUTE PROFESSOR JONATHAN CARDI

Q:: Your first article on the subject was cited by the Reporters for the Restatement Third of Torts, being prepared through the American Law Institute. Can you explain the issue on which you were cited and why it is so important to the work of the ALI?

A:: The concept of foreseeability concerns whether a person, or risk, or type or manner of injury was foreseeable to a particular defendant at the time of the plaintiff's injury. Foreseeability is clearly relevant to determining a defendant's tort liability, but over the past century foreseeability has increasingly been used by courts to decide the element of duty, in particular. There are a number of problems with this trend, in my view, not least of which is that foreseeability has become a powerful tool for judges to take negligence decisions away from juries, and without explaining any policy reason for doing so. My article urged the Restatement Reporters to take the fairly radical step of explicitly renouncing foreseeability's role in duty—amazingly, they bought it.

Q:: Your second article delves into the jurisprudential basis for foreseeability in tort doctrine. Explain how your second article builds on the work of the first.

Q:: Your scholarship deals with the core tort concept of foreseeability. What prompted you to take on such a fundamental subject?

A:: I was invited to attend an ALI meeting, the purpose of which was to discuss a draft of the Restatement Third of Torts. The level of discussion of tort doctrine at this meeting was quite high, and the group was struggling with the Restatement's core section on duty—the element of negligence by which the court decides whether a defendant owed a duty of care under the circumstances. It struck me that neither the group nor the proposed section was confronting the central issue head-on. That issue was the role of

A:: In seeing the reluctance of some to my proposal, it occurred to me that many judges and scholars feel that with all its practical faults, foreseeability nonetheless plays a necessary conceptual role in the element of duty. Without foreseeability, of what would duty consist? My second article attempts to prove that foreseeability's usefulness in negligence decisions is wholly encompassed by its role in the elements of breach and causation; therefore, there is no need for a foreseeability inquiry at the duty stage. I also attempt to show that duty would yet remain an important and cogent element of negligence without foreseeability.

Q:: What will the subject of your next article cover on foreseeability in tort law?

A:: I think that people have heard enough from me about foreseeability. One of my current projects involves foreseeability to some degree, however. I am currently conducting an empirical study of summary judgment decisions in tort cases over the past thirty years. I am trying to test my hypothesis that judges are increasingly granting such motions and thus removing an increasing number of cases from the hands of juries. As part of this study, I am looking into the doctrinal means by which courts grant summary judgment—one common tool is foreseeability.

Q:: In the last 10 years, there has been a reworking of our understanding of torts and fault and blame have shifted. Looking at the issue from a purely economic analysis, how has this shift changed the way we consider blameworthiness and do you think this is a good trend?

A:: I am not sure about a marked change in the past ten years. I do think that over a somewhat longer period of time, there has been a general shift toward what I call the "suck it up" approach to torts—that is, a sentiment that unless a defendant acted VERY badly and unless the plaintiff was significantly harmed, the plaintiff should stop whining and “suck it up.” I think that this shift has arisen from a number of factors—public disgust with the stereotype of the ambulance-chasing, 30% contingency-fee-grubbing plaintiff’s attorney; a public reaction to some highly publicized enormous jury awards for seemingly slight harms, for example the McDonalds coffee-burn case; and the political storm over rising insurance premiums. Although there is some kernel of reality to these concerns, they have in my opinion taken on an unjustified, almost mythical status in the eyes of the public. I also find it somewhat amusing that many people who share this view of plaintiff’s attorneys and tort claims quickly abandon it when they themselves are wronged. As far as an economic analysis of this trend, my guess is that it has led to fewer findings of liability and a correspondingly rising effect of under-deterrence—in other words, as fewer negligent acts lead to liability, people become more careless and cause more injuries. But this is just a guess—I am not familiar with empirical evidence on the question.

Q:: How does your research affect your teaching of first year Torts?

A:: Foreseeability is one of the most confusing concepts for 1Ls to grasp, especially since it appears in so many otherwise distinct areas of tort law. I think that my research has greatly helped me to explain foreseeability’s concurrent uses to students. My students will tell you that I make no attempt to hide my opinion of foreseeability’s proper place in negligence law, but I think that I also make it clear that my opinion is not widely embraced by courts—at least not yet! □

Reshaping the Broken Landscape of Music Copyright” in the Iowa Law Review (forthcoming 2006). He presented a work on judicial activism in torts at the Wake Forest School of Law at the end of April. Furthermore, he presented this same work on a panel at the Southeastern Association of Law Schools conference in July. In addition to the torts judicial activism empirical study that he conducted, he is also working on an article comparing the affirmative duties of doctors and mental health professionals to protect third parties from harm caused by patients.

Professor Cardi will teach torts and jurisprudence at Vanderbilt Law School as a visiting professor this coming fall semester. He is also writing a chapter for and co-editing a book entitled Critical Race Realism: Intersections of Psychology, Race, and Law that will be published by The New Press. Prof. Cardi received promotion to Associate Professor with Tenure this spring.

ALLISON CONNELLY, Associate Professor of Law and Director, Legal Clinic, received the Chief Justice's Special Service Award "in recognition of her distinguished service to the Court of Justice as a legal educator, for administering the Kentucky Legal Education Opportunity Program (KLEO), and for her efforts in promoting diversity within the Bench and Bar of the Commonwealth of Kentucky."

HELANE DAVIS, Director, Alvin E. Evans Law Library and Assistant Professor of Law, will publish "Web Resources Cited in Select Washington Law Reviews, 2001-03," L. Lib. J. (forthcoming fall 2006).

Professor Davis is currently completing work on "Jumpstarting Your Career" for inclusion in A Day in the Life: Essays on Academic Law Librarianship, which will be published by William S. Hein & Company.

MARY DAVIS, Stites & Harbison Professor of Law, recently completed her third article on federal preemption of products liability laws, "Discovering the Boundaries: Federal Preemption of Prescription Drug Labeling Product Liability Actions."

Professor Davis was a featured speaker at the University of Louisville School of Law on this subject in March 2006. The article is currently under review at law journals for publication.

Professor Davis is currently completing work on the 5th edition of her text book on products liability with Professors David Owen and John Montgomery of the University of South Carolina. The fifth edition will be published in 2007. The 2006 Supplement for the fourth edition was published in August 2006.

Professor Davis continues to serve on the Member's Consultative Group of the American Law Institute's project on "Principles of the Law of Aggregate Litigation" and she also is now involved in the American Law Institute's work on the "Restatement Third of Torts: Economic Loss."

WILLIAM H. FORTUNE, Robert G. Lawson Professor of Law, published the sixth edition of Psychology and the Legal System this spring (as co-author).

Prof. Fortune was also a Panelist at the Kentucky Bar Association annual convention in June.

CHRISTOPHER W. FROST, Frost Brown Todd Professor of Law, served as the treasurer of the Office of Kentucky Legal Services Programs and on the Board of the Fayette County Bar Association. He also serves on the American Board of Certification and on the Advisory Board of the American Bankruptcy Institute Law Review. He is Contributing Editor of West's Bankruptcy Law Letter and writes a semi-monthly article on bankruptcy topics. Professor Frost and Professor Rutherford Campbell's article "Managers' Fiduciary Duties in Financially Distressed Corporations: Chaos in Delaware (and Elsewhere)" will be published in the spring issue of the Journal of Corporation Law.

EUGENE R. GAETKE, H. Wendall Cherry Professor of Law, published "Expecting Too Much and Too Little of Lawyers" as forthcoming in the summer 2006 issue of volume 67 of the University of Pittsburgh Law Review.

Prof. Gaetke has also authored an article entitled "Lessons in Legal Ethics from Reading about the Life of Lincoln" (forthcoming 2007).

ALVIN L. GOLDMAN, William T. Lafferty Professor of Law, recently became a member of the College of Labor and Employment Lawyers. In early September, at a conference in Brussels, Belgium, Professor Goldman will present a paper on Telework Law in the U.S., after which he will attend the World Congress of the International Society for Labor and Social Security Law in Paris, France.

In June, Professor Goldman was a panelist at a conference on teaching employment law which was sponsored by the Labor Law Group. Professor Goldman is a member of the committee on amicus briefs for the National Academy of Arbitrators and chairs its committee on liaison with other labor and employment law related organizations.

MARY LOUISE EVERETT GRAHAM, Wendell H. Ford Professor of Law, is on sabbatical this fall, working on a new edition of Kentucky Domestic Relations. Professor Graham is also re-working the material for her seminar in Law and Literature. In the spring the seminar will be taking on the topic "War, Law and Literature," reading The Trojan Women, Slaughterhouse Five, and A Thread of Grace.

ROBERTA M. HARDING, Willburt D. Ham Professor of Law, published "Celluloid

Death: Cinematic Depictions of Capital Punishment" in The Death Penalty, Vol. I (Austin Sarat ed. 2005) and "Reel Violence: Popular Culture and Concerns about Capital Punishment in Contemporary American Society" in Law and Popular Culture, ed. Michael Freeman (Oxford University Press 2005). Prof. Harding will also publish "Capital Punishment: Methods of Execution" and "Capital Punishment and Race Discrimination" in The Encyclopedia of American Civil Liberties (Routledge) this fall.

Professor Harding was the recipient of the 2005 Robert M. & Joanne K. Duncan Faculty Award.

MICHAEL P. HEALY, Associate Dean, Academic Affairs and Dorothy Salmon Professor of Law, has written an article entitled "Florida East Coast Railway and the Structure of Administrative Law" that will be published in the Administrative Law Review. This paper will be published together with a group of papers that were discussed at the Administrative Law Discussion Group hosted by the University of Louisville in May 2006.

Professor Healy is moderating a panel that he organized at the 2006 annual meeting of the Southeastern Association of Law Schools. The panel will address the extent to which the principle of sustainable development offers insights into environmental law and policy. Professor Healy is continuing work on a law review article discussing sustainable development and U.S. environmental law. Professor Healy is also continuing to serve as a Peer Reviewer for the Fulbright Senior Specialists Program.

NICOLE HUBERFELD, Assistant Professor of Law, will publish an article entitled "Tackling the 'Evils' of Interlocking Directorates in Healthcare Nonprofits" in the Nebraska Law Review in the spring. She was appointed to Who's Who in Medicine & Healthcare for 2006-2007. Professor Huberfeld has also been designated a Bioethics Associate in the Department of Behavioral Science at the UK College of Medicine, which requires assisting the Program for Bioethics with legal issues in bioethics and bioethical decision making.

Currently, Professor Huberfeld is working on an article examining the cross section between Congress' power to spend and federal aspects of healthcare and healthcare legislation. More specifically, her current project studies the Supreme Court's Spending Clause jurisprudence and attempts to predict the new direction that this case law will move given that Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O'Connor, two architects of the current Spending Clause jurisprudence, are no longer on the Court. This analysis will be applied to the more specific context of the controversial Medicare Clawback provision, an aspect of the Medicare Part D program that is being challenged by a number of states, including Kentucky.

MARK F. KIGHTLINGER, Assistant Professor of Law, is writing about the EU and U.S. legal regimes that protect the privacy of personal information on the Internet. Building on the work of such scholars as Max Weber and Alasdair MacIntyre, Professor Kightlinger is examining what might be called the "bureaucratization of privacy." In addition to carrying forward his research agenda, this project dovetails with his teaching, which includes courses on administrative law and Internet law. He also serves as faculty advisor to the Journal of Natural Resources and Environmental Law and to the new Gay & Lesbian Law Caucus.

ROBERT G. LAWSON, Charles S. Cassis Professor of Law, has recently finished a law review article entitled "Turning Jails Into Prisons - Collateral Damage from Kentucky's War on Crime." This article discusses the overcrowded conditions in local jail systems and the problems of using that system for long-term incarceration of state inmates. The core of the article is about visits that Prof. Lawson made to nine jails across the state and to three of the state's overcrowded prisons. The article will be published in early fall in the Kentucky Law Journal.

In addition, Prof. Lawson was selected by the Kentucky Department of Public Advocacy to receive the Nelson Mandela Lifetime Achievement Award for his work in criminal law and criminal defense. He received this award at the Public Advocacy's dinner on June 12, which was held during the 34th Annual Public Defender Education Conference in Erlanger, Ky.

In addition, Professor Lawson was the 2005 recipient of the Charles Cassis Award for the best faculty article in the Kentucky Law Journal.

DOUGLAS C. MICHAEL,
Edward T.
Breathitt
Professor of Law, published

"Self-Regulation for Safety and Security: Final Minutes or Finest Hour?" in the Seton Hall Law Review.

DAVID H. MOORE,
Associate
Professor of Law, has drafted
an article entitled "An Emerging Uniformity for International Law," which will appear as the lead article in Volume 75 of the George Washington Law Review. Moreover, along with Duke Law Professor Curtis A. Bradley and Harvard Law Professor Jack L. Goldsmith, Professor Moore authored an article entitled "Sosa, Customary International Law, and the Continuing Relevance of Erie," which will appear in the Harvard Law Review in 2007. In addition, Prof. Moore will publish "Setting the Record Straight: Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain and the Debate over Customary International Law" (anticipated 2007 in an American Enterprise Institute book). Finally, Professor Moore has drafted an article that builds on a panel presentation he gave at the American Enterprise Institute's Outsourcing American Law conference held on February 21, 2006 in Washington, D.C., at which Justice Scalia was the keynote speaker. Professor Moore's presentation was broadcast on C-Span, and the article deriving from his presentation will be published along with the conference proceedings.

Professor Moore's participation in the confirmation process of Justice Samuel A. Alito earlier this year included giving media interviews, attending the confirmation hearings in Washington D.C., and meeting with President Bush and many other former Alito clerks in the Oval Office prior to participating in a news conference with President Bush.

In addition, Prof. Moore was invited to serve (and will be accepting the invitation) as an inaugural member of the Academic Advisory Board for the International Center for Law and Religion Studies at Brigham Young University.

KATHRYN MOORE,
Everett H.
Metcalf, Jr.
Professor of Law, wrote a report on family

benefits under the American Social Security system for the French government's Conseil d'orientation des retraites. She presented the report at a meeting in Paris with several other international experts. She will continue to work with the Conseil on its comparative study of survivors' benefits in seven different countries.

Prof. Moore continues to help edit the annual supplements to the ABA's Employee Benefits Law treatise and, in light of her extensive work, was named an Associate Editor of the treatise.

She also wrote an article entitled "Social Security Reform in 2005 and Beyond" that will be published in the NYU Review of Employee Benefits and Executive Compensation (forthcoming 2006). In addition, Prof. Moore completed the 2006 supplements to her employee benefits casebook and statutory supplement.

LORI RINGHAND,
Associate
Professor of Law, published
"Judicial Activism

Today" in FCBA's March/April issue of Bar News. Constitutional Commentary, one of the two most prestigious peer-reviewed constitutional law journals, recently accepted Professor Ringhand's article "The Changing Face of Judicial Activism: An Empirical Examination of Voting Behavior on the Rehnquist Natural Court," in which she conducted an empirical analysis of the Rehnquist court. In addition, the article has prompted the editors of the journal to propose a symposium around the article with some of the prominent names in the field. The editors have also proposed making Professor Ringhand a guest editor of the journal for the symposium issue.

Professor Ringhand will also publish "The Rehnquist Court: A 'By the Numbers' Retrospective," forthcoming in the University of Pennsylvania Journal of Constitutional Law and "UK Election Law: A Critical Examination" (a review of the book UK Election Law, by Bob Watt), forthcoming in Law and Politics Book Review, as well as "The Roberts Court: Year 1" forthcoming this fall in the Tennessee Law Review.

Prof. Ringhand attended the Southeastern Association of Law Schools Annual Conference as a panelist regarding the meaning of "judicial activism." She also was a guest speaker at the Fayette County Women's Bar Association Luncheon.

Prof. Ringhand received promotion to Associate Professor with Tenure this spring. She also received the Teacher Recognition Award from the Black Law Student's Association.

PAUL E. SALAMANCA,
James & Mary
Lassiter
Professor of Law, last fall, published an article entitled "Video Games as a Protected Form of Expression" in the Georgia Law Review. He is currently co-authoring an article about separation of powers with former Kentucky Supreme Court Justice James Keller.

ROBERT G. SCHWEMM,
Ashland
Professor of Law, has recently given presentations on fair housing law in San Diego, Chicago, Washington and Los Angeles. The annual update to his book, Housing Discrimination: Law and Litigation, was published in July.

In the spring semester of 2007, Professor Schwemm will be a visiting professor at the John Marshall Law School in Chicago. He is currently doing research on two articles, one about the continuing nature of racial discrimination in apartment rentals and the other dealing with a Kentucky slave case, Strader v. Graham, that was decided by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1851 and was one of the foundational precedents for the Dred Scott decision.

RICHARD H. UNDERWOOD,
Spears-Gilbert
Professor of Law,
published a 2006
edition of the
*Kentucky Evidence
Courtroom Manual*,

and a 2006 supplement to Modern Litigation and Professional Responsibility Handbook 2nd ed. Professor Underwood also published an article about an infamous Carter County murder trial, "Stella Kenney: A Little Problem in Evidence," in the Journal of Southern Legal History. He has also placed three articles in West Virginia University's Legal Studies Forum. "Mr. Howe's Last Case" is about a turn of the century murder trial in Long Island City, New York, which broke William "Big Bill" Howe of the notorious firm of Howe and Hummel. Professor Underwood is working with UK History Professor Dan Smith (aka "Doc Hollywood") to develop a screenplay based on this story. The other two articles are "The Other Batson Case", about a turn of the century murder in Louisiana; and "Arch & Gordon: The Crime Behind the Ballad," the true story of the killing of a Governor's son in old Louisville.

Professor Underwood will be on sabbatical in the fall, and he hopes to complete a book on southern murder ballads during that time.

ALLAN W. VESTAL,
Dean and Professor of Law, has an article coming out in the
Saint Louis University Law Journal, co-authored with Tom Rutledge (UK Law
'90), entitled

"Disappointing Diogenes: The LLC Debate That Never Was." Dean Vestal and Mr. Rutledge also published an article in the Journal of Business Entities entitled "Former Clients and Changes in the Business Entity Law—Just One More Place Where Something May Go Wrong."

In June, Dean Vestal presented a paper entitled "Private Ordering Within Closely Held Companies" at a conference on Reform of Private Company Law at the Hague and was sponsored by the Dutch Ministry of Justice.

Dean Vestal is also completing work on two articles, one entitled "Wide Open: Nevada's Emerging Intra-State Partnership Law Market" and the other entitled "Watching for Pigs on the Wing...Envisioning a Robust, National, Interstate Market in Private Firm Law."

HAROLD R. WEINBERG,
Wyatt Tarrant
& Combs
Professor of Law, published an article, "Is the Monopoly Theory of Trademarks Robust or a Bust?," in the Journal of Intellectual Property Law (2005).

SARAH N. WELLING,
Wendell H.
Ford Professor of Law, is on contract to write the annual supplements for Federal Practice & Procedure, Vols. 3 and 3A (formerly known as Wright & Miller), covering Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure 31 through 42. The 2006 supplement was published in June 2006.

Furthermore, Prof. Welling is the reporter of the 2005 edition of Sixth Circuit Pattern Criminal Jury Instructions, published by ThomsonWest, as well as a writer for the instruction updates that are posted on the Sixth Circuit Web site.

RICHARD H. WESTIN,
Professor of Law, spoke on the subject of
"The Use of IRA Annuities for Estate Planning Purposes" in May 2006 to the Society of Trust and Estate Practitioners.

new faculty faces

AT THE COLLEGE OF LAW

HELANE DAVIS, Director, Alvin E. Evans Law Library and Assistant Professor of Law, joined the law library faculty in February 2005 as the library's Associate Director and Head of Public Services. In July 2006, Davis became the library's director. Prior to joining the law library, she was affiliated with the libraries at Seattle University School of Law and Howard University School of Law. In addition to teaching Advanced Legal Research at Howard University School of Law and Basic Legal Research at University of Maryland University College, Professor Davis has presented on legal research and online legal resources in various settings. She received her juris doctorate from the University of Iowa in 1985, and her M.L.I.S. from the University of Washington in 2004.

ANDREA L. DENNIS, Assistant Professor of Law, joined the College of Law faculty in 2006. Prior to this, she earned her juris doctorate at New York University School of Law. Dennis' areas of academic research include criminal law, children and the law, and racial presumptions in the American legal process. She comes to the College with a number of years of professional legal experience including work as a civil prosecutor of child abuse and neglect cases, and three years' experience as an assistant federal public defender in Maryland. Most recently, Dennis served in the U.S. Department of Labor as a senior associate in the National Office of Job Corps-Division of Program Planning and Development where she engaged in long-range, strategic analysis and planning related to vocational training programs.

MELYNDA J. PRICE, Assistant Professor of Law, joined the UK College of Law faculty in 2006. She earned her juris doctorate at the University of Texas School of Law and will soon defend her doctoral dissertation in Political Science at the University of Michigan. Price is a specialist in research related to the intersection of African-American religious beliefs and how they impact the community's understanding of the death penalty. Her research dovetails with a legal career that has included working with cases of political asylum and the death penalty.

▶ Continuing Legal Education

As the first continuing legal education organization in Kentucky, UK/CLE is your best source for developing and sustaining practical lawyering skills.

▶ Programs

Continuing Legal Education (UK/CLE) courses are taught by legal experts who provide in-depth review, analysis and discussion of various practice areas. Our program offerings include seminars that give legal professionals an extensive understanding of hot new legal trends as well as a set schedule of annual and biennial courses.

▶ Publications

UK/CLE offers for purchase the only complete library of practice publications for the Kentucky lawyer. We offer over 50 titles that assist Kentucky attorneys in the day-to-day practice of law. These publications range from comprehensive multi-author, fully indexed practice handbooks to concise monographs that treat more focused legal topics.

▶ Self Study Products

UK/CLE now offers accredited "self-study" CD and DVD Learning Products to meet all of your continuing legal education needs. These products offer a convenient, affordable means of achieving your continuing legal education goals. Kentucky Supreme Court Rule 3.663 allows attorneys to receive up to six hours of continuing legal education credit through the use of accredited technology products. This includes the full two-hour ethics requirement. A 24/7 On-Demand site is also offered where attorneys can stream audio directly to their computer to receive up to 6 hours of CLE.

► LAW ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

One of the best things about being a graduate of the UK College of Law is our strong alumni network. The UK Law Alumni Association provides opportunities to keep up with your friends and classmates from law school, to receive news about developments at the College, and to work as a volunteer to assist the College.

Your Alumni Association dues and donations provide scholarships that entice high-quality students to choose our college over other out-of-state law schools. Our alumni network assists new and recent graduates in their quest for employment ensuring that the brightest young Kentuckians stay and make a positive impact in our Commonwealth. Every year the UK Law Alumni Association welcomes incoming first year students with a picnic their first week, provides current students with a delicious continental breakfast during finals week, and assists the College in selecting our Hall of Fame recipients.

The UK Law Alumni Association is distinct from the University of Kentucky Alumni Association; the Law Alumni Association is the alumni group of the College of Law, established and maintained to include and support the College.

► NOTEWORTHY

U.S. Magistrate Judge J. GREGORY WEHRMAN donated his left kidney to Assistant U.S. Attorney E.J. WALBOURN, who had life-threatening kidney disease. The Louisville Courier-Journal reported, "they aren't related, or even friends. I just wanted to offer somebody who deserved it a chance at life," said Wehrman, 62, who sits in Covington.

Walbourn, 54, who supervises a four-lawyer office in Northern Kentucky, said, "The words 'thank you' seem inadequate. It is just an absolutely magnanimous gesture of humanity."

To avoid even the appearance of a conflict, Walbourn stopped appearing before the judge once he agreed to the donation last November. And the two agreed that Walbourn won't appear in his court in the future on any matter requiring the judge's discretion. Walbourn, who is co-prosecutor—with now Lt. Gov. Steve Pence—of the 21 defendants convicted in the state government and corruption probe, nicknamed BOPROT, says his doctors say he can return to work in one month. Wehrman, who has been a magistrate since 1975, expects to be back on the job in one week. He and Walbourn hope that publicity over the transplant will encourage others to give, saying, "There are 68,000 on the waiting list, and a lot of them are not going to make it."

Wehrman was released two days after the transplant June 20 at Cincinnati's Christ Hospital, and Walbourn four days later. Both are healing well. (story taken from Louisville Courier-Journal, 6/30/06)

Arizona Superior Court Judge KENNETH FIELDS and fellow alum Judge Janet Barton (UK Law '85) are two of three Arizona Superior Court judges currently serving on the special Arizona Complex Civil Litigation Court, a special pilot court that primarily handles intricate business cases. Fields has served on the court since 2002 and was appointed by the Honorable Colin Campbell, Presiding Judge, out of a field of approximately 166 judges. He is currently a director of the Association of Business Court Judges.

STEPHEN B. BRIGHT is a focus in the documentary film Fighting For Life in the Death-Belt. The film is an inside look at the efforts of Stephen B. Bright and other lawyers at the Southern Center for Human Rights, in Atlanta, to save the lives of two clients on death row. Bright ran a public interest law firm for 23 years, until this past January, freeing him up for full-time lawyering and part-time teaching. Bright is the Southern Center's president and senior counsel.

ROBERT F. 2007 FUTURE ALUMNUS

KRISTIN GONZALEZ

After attending the University of Florida where she graduated in 3 1/2 years with high honors (3.8 GPA) with a Bachelors of Science in Psychology and a minor in Criminology, Kristin Gonzalez decided to put her skills to use with a career in law. She chose UK College of Law because of their outstanding reputation for excellent education and the quality of their professors. Gonzalez adds that she "also liked the teacher to student ratio in that it was smaller than most other schools. I was offered a provost fellowship to attend UK which pays for 50% of my tuition."

As a third year law student, Gonzalez has had the opportunity to work with The Rural Drug Program (RDPAP), which she notes "has been an amazing experience for me." She worked out of the Cynthiana office in Harrison county which covers Harrison, Bourbon, Pendleton, Robertson and Nicholas counties. Gonzalez has done everything from research on important legal questions to sitting in on every stage of the system; including arraignments, pre-trial conferences and trials. She has sat in on juvenile court and has attended detention hearings, as well as been able to visit the jails to interview clients; having attended both district and circuit courts. The directing attorney of this program is La Mer Kyle-Reno. Gonzalez notes, "she has been instrumental in my education during this process, as well as the other attorneys." Gonzalez adds, "The judges have been wonderfully accommodating in letting the interns see all aspects of how a courtroom works. I have been allowed to sit at counsel table as well as stand up at the podium with a client and have even been allowed in the judge's chambers while he was having discussions with the attorneys. It has been such a rewarding experience and everyone has been so helpful."

Upon graduation, in May 2007, Gonzalez plans to continue in this line of work and hopefully get a position with the Department of Public Advocacy. □

WILLIAM DAVIS

WILLIAM DAVIS, a UKCOL 1973 graduate, has worked in the administration of justice internationally, nationally and at the state level for more than 35 years. He has served as the chief administrative officer for the largest circuit in the federal courts, the Ninth Circuit, the Administrative Director of the Courts for the states of California and Kentucky. In 1992 Mr. Davis began to work exclusively on reforms in the justice sectors on an international basis and continues to do so.

Q:: Tell me a little about what you do now.

A:: I am the president of a consulting firm that works in promotion of the Rule of Law and Transparency. We bid on contracts that are left by donor agencies (i.e., the World Bank). We have offices in 18 countries; we work with these countries to help them improve their legal systems. Our criminal process is oral here in the United States, so we help make the transition from written to oral in these countries (reform initiative).

I am also a mediator with International Finance Corporation (a private sector of World Bank). The Ombudsman office receives complaints from communities and individuals where the IFC is a shareholder. These complaints tend to focus on environmental, economic and social issues.

Q:: Your resume is very impressive. You served as Administrative Director of the Courts for the Commonwealth of Kentucky from 1975-79. During that time you oversaw the complete reorganization of the state court system; Administrative Director of the Courts for the State of California 1987-92; Circuit Executive of the Ninth Circuit 1981-85. How did your work with the American legal system in both state and federal courts prepare you for your work at the international level?

A:: It's been vital because in every aspect of the reform effort, you learn new things. In the Kentucky experience, in the mid '70s, the public vote that changed the judicial system was motivated largely because of allegations of corruption. So I find myself consistently looking at issues of corruption in other countries. We found that in the first year of operation in trial courts in Kentucky the system took in 10 million dollars more than the year before, so we developed a transparent accounting system, trained court staff and audited it; thus, creating more accountability.

Q:: You have worked with client countries over the years that do not share a legal background rooted in the Rule of Law. How do you overcome cultural, as well as structural barriers, to implementing reforms in these countries?

A:: An example is that I have spent a lot of time in Jordan and I don't speak Arabic. I find that in this secular government, not a religious government, that there is a universal language and concern about justice. It is like the Old Testament in Isaiah, "Who defends Israel, defends day and night." In my own words, he who seeks to improve justice never rests. Everywhere I have gone in the world, whether it is Pakistan, Bangladesh or Latin America, there are people who want to make their justice systems work better. It is with those people that you find so much in common, building a partnership of understanding and commitment to building a different world. We try to work on the basis of principles, rather than formulas.

Q:: Given your line of work and experience working with other Middle Eastern countries, what is your opinion of the government building process in Iraq? Are there things the U.S. could have done or should now be doing to help ensure a successful outcome?

A:: We were invited to be a part of a bid before the invasion with the Research Triangle Institute in North Carolina, but we declined, because we thought the process violated international law and lacked the necessary consensus to build sustaining activities.

Iraq has a history and organizational tradition. We have focused mostly on the Saddam Hussein era without recognizing this country had a previous history. In this business you never start from zero. The most successful strategies build on those aspects of society and government that worked. If one assumes that everything is broken you will have a self-fulfilling prophesy. It takes a disciplined approach and the need to recognize that one must respect the dignity of the ones with whom one is cooperating.

Q:: You have been working in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to improve the judicial system of the Palestinian Authority since 2005. Given that the U.S. is hardly seen as an honest broker by the Palestinians in the political disputes between Israel and Palestine, how does that affect your work in the region, given that you are a U.S.-based company promoting, I'm assuming, a U.S. philosophy of legal justice?

A:: You can do meaningful things in Palestine. The week before the election of Hamas, the Attorney General of Palestine told President Abbas that they now have the case to indict four Palestinians for stealing 700 million dollars. That couldn't happen when Arafat was there. We had a Jewish-American prosecutor from L.A. training Palestinian prosecutors for three years. We trained them on how to deal with corruption cases. This was the first case in their history. To me, the effort was worth it.

Unfortunately, the media generalizes about everyone. When one says Palestinians it immediately conjures up a visual image of bearded people with their heads covered up. There are many kinds of Palestinians and quite a large number have families in the U.S. Among many Palestinians, there is keen interest in creating a functioning justice system as they once had during the British Mandate period. We have had extraordinary receptivity from the judiciary and prosecution.

Q:: In January 2006, Hamas became the ruling part in the Palestinian Authority. How has this affected your work, if at all?

A:: The election of Hamas has changed the relationship between our government and the Palestinian Authority. We submitted a proposal to the U.S. government that the work with the Supreme Court and Attorney General are not under Hamas control, the executive branch, they are an independent branch of government. Both the chief justice and attorney general wrote a letter asking for us to stay involved. This may be one of the few portholes the U.S. has with the Palestinian Authority in this time period. □

► JUDICIAL ACTIVISM REVISITED

The phrase "judicial activism" is used with some frequency these days, and defenders of the judiciary are correct to argue that calling someone a "judicial activist" is often the same as saying "I disagree." What exactly is "judicial activism?" Deviation from plain text? From precedent? What if plain text says one thing and precedent says another? For many people, these are not easy questions.

Take for example the not-entirely-exciting Eleventh Amendment, which provides that "the Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State." By its plain language, this amendment does not bar an action against a state in federal court by one of its own citizens, yet since Hans v. Louisiana (1890) the U.S. Supreme Court has generally interpreted this provision to do exactly that, reasoning that those who adopted the amendment couldn't possibly have intended a different result. Activist? Restrained? The answer depends on many factors, including due regard for text, historical context, federalism and stare decisis. Depending on one's appreciation for these sources of authority, allowing a state to be sued in federal court by one of its own citizens could readily be described as either activist or humble.

But let's not burn down the house to roast the pig. Although we can acknowledge that aspersions of judicial activism often add more heat than light to the debate, we should not leave the issue entirely behind and adopt the reductionist view that judicial activism of a sort can never exist, or that judicial restraint is not a virtue. Alexander Hamilton certainly took the position in Federalist 78 that restraint is part of the judicial function. Even while defending the principle of judicial review, he observed that "[t]he courts must declare the sense of the law; and if they should be disposed to exercise WILL instead of JUDGMENT, the consequence would equally be the substitution of their pleasure to that of the legislative body."

Of course, this observation doesn't help much, for we could just as easily call a court "willful" as "activist," and make yet another conclusory assertion. But Hamilton's observation does help by assuming that the concept of "judgment" has objective meaning, however difficult it may be to discern. If the umpire in a baseball game presumed to tell a particular batter to bunt, we would not hesitate to say that the umpire had overstepped his or her bounds. We may refrain from using the word "activist," but the basis for our complaint would be understandable indeed.

So how do we ascribe content to the concepts of "judgment" and "restraint"? Although no one would presume to answer this question with authority, perhaps we can find some common ground. We can begin by recognizing that courts can be "wrong" without being out of bounds. If, after considering the various sources of authority that apply to a particular case, we conclude that a court decided it wrongly, we are certainly empowered as citizens to say so, and to criticize the judiciary for its "mistake" (in our eyes). But if a recognized source of authority supports the decision, we should hesitate to criticize it as out of bounds, because it really isn't. Within our constitutional tradition, courts justify decisions in terms of text, original intent, precedent and structural theory. To the extent we accept these sources of authority as legitimate, a decision that arises persuasively from within them can be defended against a charge of activism. This is not to say that it can't be criticized, but only that it must be criticized on the merits, such as by arguing that, in such-and-such a context, the text, underlying intent, and precedent are ambiguous, and strong structural considerations cut the other way. On the other hand, a decision that arises persuasively from none of these sources is subject to stern criticism.

Judicial review and the formulation of public policy are not fungible. Responsibility for one lies principally with the judiciary, and for the other with the political branches. We must keep this in mind if we are to preserve separation of powers. ►

by Paul E. Salamanca
James & Mary Lassiter
Professor of Law

► As Judge Michael McConnell of the Tenth Circuit aptly noted in the Fordham Law Review (Vol. 65, 1997): Within the range of discretion established by various conceptions that are consistent with text, history, practice, and precedent, the people through their representative institutions—not the courts—have authority to decide which course of action "does most credit to the nation." There may be many different answers to that question, and none is constitutionally privileged. It is the right, privilege, and obligation of the people to deliberate about such questions through their elected representatives.

Closing Argument is a forum for faculty to express their opinions on controversial legal topics. Your reactions are welcome and may be submitted to Law Notes, 209 Law Building, Lexington, KY 40506-0048. Published letters may be edited for length and clarity.
