

Catholic University Law Review

Volume 34
Issue 3 Spring 1985

Article 3

1985

Preface

Roberto L. Corrad

Elizabeth R. Lieberman

Follow this and additional works at: <https://scholarship.law.edu/lawreview>

Recommended Citation

Roberto L. Corrad & Elizabeth R. Lieberman, Preface, 34 Cath. U. L. Rev. (1985).
Available at: <https://scholarship.law.edu/lawreview/vol34/iss3/3>

This Introduction is brought to you for free and open access by CUA Law Scholarship Repository. It has been accepted for inclusion in Catholic University Law Review by an authorized editor of CUA Law Scholarship Repository. For more information, please contact edinger@law.edu.

PREFACE

Communications law has changed significantly in the last two years as legislative and judicial action have attempted to keep pace with technology. This special issue devoted to communications law represents an effort on the part of the Catholic University Law Review to tap the pulse of this communications law surge. The issue presents an array of articles by leading practitioners analyzing new trends in communications law and technology.

The Columbus School of Law of the Catholic University of America has been a forerunner in the effort to educate potential communications lawyers to meet the challenge of an ever-changing field of law. As this issue was going to print, the Institute for Communications Law Studies at the Columbus School of Law was graduating its first class of communications law students. The presence of the Institute in general, and of its Director, Professor Harvey L. Zuckman, in particular, are major reasons why the Law Review has chosen to focus on communications law in recent years.

The Law Review wishes to express its gratitude to the many persons who have cooperated in the preparation of this issue. The significant contributions of the distinguished lawyers who have given generously of their time to prepare commentaries and articles for this issue are greatly appreciated. In addition, the Law Review owes particular thanks to Shelly Spiegel and Diane Kiesel for their efforts in obtaining articles for this issue.

Roberto L. Corrada
Editor-in-Chief

Elizabeth R. Lieberman
Lead Articles & Book Review Editor

