This collection was a gift from Virginia (Brannon) Harris.

SCOPE AND CONTENT OF THE COLLECTION

Mr. Harris was a local (Huntington, WV) professor and politician who served as the first director of Marshall University's Graduate Program as well as the mayor of Huntington, West Virginia. Born in Little Birch, West Virginia, Harris received a teaching certificate at the Glenville State Normal School (Now Glenville State College) where he served as an English teacher before embarking on further education. Receiving a bachelor's degree from Marshall University; he would attend both the Universities of Pennsylvania and Iowa where he would earn terminal degrees. Harris is the namesake of Harris Hall at Marshall University. Materials originating from Glenville State College were utilized in establishing the facts used in this biography.

PROCESSING NOTES

The collection was donated by the subject's wife years after his passing. The collection is mostly comprised of various personal and professional artifacts from Harris's life and career. Consisting mostly of paper-based materials, the collection is very well preserved considering its age. Most of the damage that does exist comes from rodents that fed on many of the letters within the collection. Other than the rodent damage, all other degradation is age related; which is to be expected when paper-based materials are concerned.

When processing the collection, the greatest difficulty was both finding the proper context to place the items and handling the now brittle paper materials which make up the bulk of the collection. Of particular interest in the collection are the materials dealing with his relationship with his wife, Virginia. Letters and materials from his early teaching career allow researchers to trace the evolution of the relationship between Harris and his eventual wife. Materials pertaining to both his educational and political career may be of interest and use to scholars researching the history of Huntington, West Virginia, Marshall University, Glenville State College, and early 20th century education.
