JAMES EDWIN CAMPBELL: A SENSE OF PLACE

James Edwin Campbell not only produces unique poems and stories but also does so from a very unique place - a unique geographic place - southern Ohio, Appalachia, working class, small town town - a unique personal place - a biracial working class small town boy with access to a stellar, non-segregated education in the 1880s - and an important linguistic/cultural place - Appalachian and African heritages - and all that both of these can and do entail...

OVERVIEW

James Edwin Campbell was an African American poet, who was born in Pomeroy, Ohio, in 1867. He penned his early verses while studying at Pomeroy Academy (now known as Meigs High School) and published his first book of poetry, Driftings & Gleanings, in 1887. This book is written in Standard English, while his second collection, Echoes from the Cabin E. Elsewhere (1895), employs the rich dialect of the African Americans in the Appalachian region in which he was raised.

In this curriculum, students will read, interpret, and write poems inspired by Campbell's works. Students will examine his use of dialect and explore possible interpretations through close readings and short essays. By the end of the series, they will be able to explore the historical context of his poems, as well as discover interpretations of and their personal connections to Campbell's poetry.

Each of the curriculum documents available for download include:

- Age and grade level appropriate modifications
- Hyperlinks to additional resources, including audio and visual support
- Student activity sheets and worksheets, with a teacher's edition version of each
- Relevant Ohio English Language Standards reference numbers with each individual activity at each grade level.
