About the 2011 Allen Chair Symposium

Federal courts across the United States have been deciding constitutional challenges to President Obama's signature legislative initiative, the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act of 2010.

Courts have split on the constitutionality of the individual mandate, or minimal essential coverage provision.

It is widely expected that the Supreme Court will ultimately address this issue.

Although scholarly and popular attention has focused on the constitutional merits, the litigation over the healthcare legislation has raised important questions about the role of states as litigants, the distinction between facial and applied challenges, severability, and other issues.

The 2011 Allen Chair Symposium brings together experts from state government and academia to explore these important but unheralded issues and to situate the litigation in the broader political and regulatory landscape.
