Southern's enrollment exceeds expectations

By Warren Downs

The enrollment of Southern College is on the rise. According to Dr. Greenleaf, the Vice-president for Academic Affairs, the student increase is due to a couple of factors.

It is partially resultant from the many changes made in recruiting. Some of these changes consist of publicizing the relative good economics of attending Southern College versus other Adventist institutions, increasing recruitment of Adventist students in non-Adventist high schools, and improving the structure and awareness of scholarship opportunities.

Another less understood component of the increased enrollment is the admission of students on academic probation. These students either have a deficiency in one or more areas, as determined by the ACT exam, or have a poor high school academic record (all of these qualities are under the final judgment of the Admissions Department).

Students admitted on academic probation have some restrictions. They cannot be allowed to graduate or continue if he fails to meet the constraints placed on him upon his acceptance to Southern College.

take over twelve hours and must prove their fitness for a collegiate education and through their studies.

Several programs hope to insure the successes of the students on academic probation. In addition to limiting the number of hours permitted, there is the increased freshmen orientation, and students may also take advantage of the new counseling center and the tutorial system.

The justification for the admission of students on academic probation does not come from the increased funds received from tuition or from the prestige of having more students. According to Dr. Greenleaf, the justification comes from the purpose of Christian education. The purpose of Christian education is not only academic but evangelical.

Dr. Greenleaf assures that the acceptance of students on academic probation will in no way endanger the school's academic reputation as no student will

Cafeteria, dorms crowded by new arrivals

By Tim Burrill

12:05. Lunchtime. As S.C. students begin to form a long cafe line they set their books on shelves, on the floor, or on whatever stationary object offers its surface. Returning students may ask themselves if there are more books in the lobby than in previous years, and the answer is "YES!"

For the past three years, enrollment at S.C. has steadily risen. As of registration, Southern's enrollment has increased to 1,403—that's 85 over last year!

This increase in students is making the dean, a little worried about crowding. Dean Hobbs, speaking of the men's dorm remarked, "We only have 2 rooms left in Tiltje Hall that are not in use. We were expecting a larger student body but not quite this large!"

Thatcher Hall is facing a similar situation with locating new residents. The Conference Center had to be opened to students to accommodate an overflow of approximately 18 women.

The increased enrollment has been partially credited to the dramatic growth in students coming from outside the Southern Union. This year has seen an increase of 49 of these students over last year.

"This is a blessing from God. He is blessing us," said

Mary Elam, Director of Records. Elam continued by saying, "We (the recruiting department) sure hope it continues."

Harvey Hillyer, S.A. Social Vice President, when asked what he thought of the student growth said, "I think it is terrific! With more people, we can have more fun!"

The number of full time students has risen by 100, 70% for the Collegedate campus and 30% for the Orlando campus. Also, the percentage of female students to male students is 53% to 47% respectively, with increases in Elementary Education, Nursing (A.S.), Biology, Social Work, and History majors.

On Boredom

By John Caskey

"A man can stand almost anything except a succession of ordinary days."—Johann von Goethe

On a recent, rainy afternoon someone said to me, "This place sure is boring. I can't wait until December."

"What's going to happen in December?" I asked.

"School will be out and I can go home. I never get bored of home."

We have all experienced boredom at one time or another in our lives. But, I imagine very few of us have ever taken the time to consider the cause of this creeping malaise.

Strictly defined, boredom is the state of being tired by repetition or tediousness. To put it another way, boredom is what happens when we do the same thing over and over and college is full of this repetition.

College students go to the same classroom with the same fellow students and listen to the same teacher teaching the same subject on the same days of the week for weeks on end. And it would seem all of us should be victims of terminal ennui.

Why is it, then, that some of us profess to be bored more frequently than others? The answer to this question requires a better definition of boredom.

For me, the definition of boredom is failure to take advantage of the moment. We are all guilty of this to some extent. We fail to take advantage of the moment every time we wish we were somewhere else or that the situation were different in the place we happen to be. Perhaps things could be "better" if conditions were different; however, in dwelling on our wishes for the future, we rob ourselves of the present. Albert Einstein said, "I never think of the future. It comes soon enough."

As Christians, we know the future holds for us more joy than will ever be possible here on earth. Our actions in the present prepare us for the future. But, God did not put us on this earth to languish in boredom. He intends that we enjoy life to the fullest. By living a full and exciting life, we learn about God's plan for us. This makes taking advantage of the present all the more important. By failing to do so, we may miss out on something God had planned for us. Enjoy the present. You will never have the opportunity to enjoy it again.

So next time you're tempted to say, "There's nothing to do here—I'm bored," take a moment to ask yourself, "What is it that I'm missing out on right now?" If you can't think of anything, ask a friend. You will have done something different (and perhaps alleviated your boredom) by simply asking. If this strategy doesn't help, ask your Friend in Heaven. He has the answers and can make your ordinary days something extraordinary.

Bits and pieces

By David Denton

So, another year is upon us. Well, great! Welcome back, and all that. Those of you who are returning students may have noticed some of the changes around campus this year. You new students probably don't care. But since I could think of nothing else to write about this early in the year, I've decided to try to catalogue all the differences between this year and last.

The most obvious change involves one of our dearly beloved Physical Education Faculty. Steve Jackcs is newly slim and trim after a summer of physical fitness mania. We don't have a full report, but rumor has it that Mr. Jackcs weighs just about half what he did last year (I said it was just a rumor).

In Talge hall, Dear Qualley demonstrated his solution to the problem of size. He built a bigger office. Now, I don't see why there should be any problem with a head dean of Qualley's stature having an office he can be comfortable in, it's just that I can't help thinking of all those poor guys who live in dorm rooms that are half the size of Qualley's office. I guess the guys can take consolation in the basketball court which Qualley installed in his office. Now, when the gym is closed, they can pick up a game right at the dorm. I do wish he would do something with that tacky Lakers Backboard, though.

Deans Mathis and Hobbs are also enjoying newly refurbished offices (same sizes as last year's, however). In Dean Hobbs' office you'll find a nice map of Chattanooga (circa 1865) and the faces of about 24 Confederate and Union officers on his wall. Hobbs is a Civil War enthusiast, and if you ask him, he'll be glad to tell you all about the Battle of Chattanooga. He can even name all of the officers pictured on his wall. Impressive, huh?

There are reports that the fashion fairy visited Happy Valley over the summer. No one saw her, but according to sources, she visited the Beckett home one night and replaced his old glasses with a new pair of high fashion, plastic frame spectacles. It is still not known whether the old glasses had been placed under Mr. Beckett's pillow. The reaction of the general public has been favorable. My opinion is that Mr. Beckett and his new glasses really look sharp!

There's at least one new math teacher this year. I met him and his wife briefly and learned that this is their first trip south. So all ya'll folks drop in and say "howdy!" Ah'm sure it'll make 'em feel right at home.

There are also some new journalism teachers and a new history teacher whom I've not met. I've heard good things about them, though.

One thing that has not changed, unfortunately, is the rule prohibiting members of the opposite sex from Talge and Thatcher lobbies after 8 p.m. But, you know what they say, "The more things change, the more they stay the same."

Headline: Enrollment Hits All Time High in SMC's 1959-60 Registration

On Monday September 7, the Annual college registration program began for old and transfer students of Southern Missionary College for the academic year 1959-1960; the program continued through Tuesday and ended Wednesday, September 9, with the largest enrollment figures in the history of the institution.

Even though the enrollment figures do not include the students presently engaged on the Orlando, Florida campus of the Division of Nursing, the total number enrolled is 550, or 575 with the nursing students included

Improvements seen in Men's Residence Hall

By Mark Trenchard

Talge Hall is once again echoing with the sounds of saws, hammers, and paint brushes. Renovations this year include the dean's offices, a new kitchen, and the vending machine room. The remodeling of Head Dean Ron Qualley's office is the most of the dorm improvements.

Last spring the engineering department removed a wall between Dean Qualley's former office and an adjacent room transforming the previously minute space into a spacious room. The room was left useless all summer until a new carpet was installed last Sunday. Dean Qualley did the painting and much of the other work himself. Despite the long wait, dorm residents are enthusiastic about the changes taking place in the Head Dean's office. Resident Assistant, John Sager said the new expanded office will provide a proper place to hold staff meetings and "more room for guys to come in and get to know the dean better." Except for the electrical work in Dean Hobbs' office that remains unfinished, the other offices are now complete thanks to the efforts of the deans themselves.

The yet-to-be-completed kitchen room located in the basement of Talge Hall replaces the old appliances that used to be in what is now the vending machine room. The new kitchen area contains a large double sink, a stove, an oven, and plenty of counter and table space. It used to house a bolted down microwave which was stolen during the fourth summer session. One major reason for the move is that Dean Qualley is "sick of smelling people's burn offerings" in the lobby.

The vending machine room is now larger due to removal of the old kitchen appliances. It awaits only a coat of paint in order to be totally finished.

Renovations will probably never be complete in Talge Hall, but these minor improvements will help make this school year more tolerable for the "men of Talge".

New faculty members welcomed to Southern

By Richard Murphy

The students and faculty here at Southern College have always welcomed new teachers on campus with open hearts. This year is no exception.

The Department of Journalism has welcomed three new staff members. Among them is Dr. Lynn Sauls, the new Department head for Journalism. A graduate of Andrew's University, he currently holds a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa, a masters degree from Peabody College of Vanderbilt University, and a

B.A. from yours truly, Southern College. In his words, "I'd like to be treated like a college Junior, like one of the crowd." With Dr. Sauls' open friendliness and abundant experience, we are sure that he will be a successful leader of our Journalism department.

Pamela Maize Harris also has long history of reporting and journalism experience. Counted by all of her past employers as "the best in our employ", Pamela is sure to be a credit to this department and a valued member of our collegiate staff.

Volker R. Henning, also joining S.C.'s journalism department as Assistant Professor, is experienced in photography, Audio, and Video productions. As a first-class photography and visual arts instructor, he will no doubt be an asset to the department.

Last, but not least, Douglas Morgan, the new History department teacher, specializes in the History of Christianity. He sums up his philosophy thusly, "If we do not understand the importance of history, we cannot understand the importance of today."

Renovation of Student Center nearly complete

By Adrienne Dabney

Does something look different in the Student Center? Isn't something strange going on in there? Hasn't the appearance of the Student Center changed? Students are asking about the Student Center. Several changes have been made in the parlor, the game room, the parlor, the game room, and the Student Association offices.

At the end of last school year, the parlor was re-carpeted and the sofas and chairs were re-upholstered. This summer, a game room, formerly the workroom of the Strawberry Festival, was the major sight of reconstruction. The blinds, paint, pictures, and plants have all been changed, and according to Beth Malgady, a pool table, ping-pong tables, and air hockey game are all soon to come.

The latest change in the Student Center has been the relocation of the Student Association offices. The S.A. offices are now divided into two separate parts. The president, secretary, and the treasurer are in one office. The Joker (which isn't an all year activity), executive vice-president, social vice-president, parliamentarian, and public relations rooms are in the other office. They formerly worked out of one office with all of our other student affairs officers, and they crowded each other. These changes were made so the S.A. officers can serve the students better. Take advantage of this by visiting the Student Center today!

Investment in SC education makes sense

By Ginger Bromme

Maybe "bargain" is the last word you would think of to describe Southern—but think again. According to a cost analysis comparing Southern College with eight other SDA colleges in the U.S., Southern College has the LOWEST total for tuition, room and board. It's true. The following chart lists the totals from the most economical to the most expensive.

SCHOOL	TOTAL	DIFFERENCE
Southern College	$ 8,922
Union College	$ 9,270	$ 348
Southwestern	$ 9,412	$ 490
Pacific Union	$ 9,760	$ 838
Columbia Union	$10,220	$1,298

Walla Walla	$10,380	$1,458
Atlantic Union	$11,000	$2,078
La Sierra	$11,116	$2,194
Andrews University	$11,406	$2,484

This is not even taking into account that some of these colleges have additional fees that are not included in the above totals. Southern does not have any of these added fees.

Southern College is the best buy for your money—it's a bargain.

An interview with Dr. Donald Sahly

By Sheila Draper
ACCENT Contributing Editor
August 31, 1989

Good afternoon, Dr. Sahly. Thank you for taking time to answer a few questions for the ACCENT. It looks like things are off to a pretty good start this school year. The big news is that the enrollment is up this year. How do you feel about this?

Well, I'm excited about the enrollment going up. That always makes life a little more pleasant, because the more students you have, the better the income and the more things you can accomplish during the school year. We have some projects that definitely need to be accomplished. We need some repairs done on this campus, particularly in the dormitories. We're using rooms that we haven't used for several years. Those rooms need refurbishing. They need furniture. They need carpets. They need paint. We've got to get to those things. The income from the additional students provides a means to accomplish these things, not just the dorms, but also equipment for laboratories and classroom facilities and so on. We can begin to look forward positively to accomplishing some things as we did last year. As you know last year we totally refurbished Summerour Hall and we need to look at the nursing building and other places this year and see if we can continue to improve the campus.

How much is enrollment up over last year?

We don't have a final figure because we don't finalize enrollment until the end of the week. The final count last year was 2,326 students. We're still building toward a final number but it's presently at about 1410 students, which is an increase of 84. I understand that there were about 12 more students, who have registered since registration, so we would be up to about 96 more students than last year. We also have more full-time students and fewer part-time students so the full-time student equivalency is up, meaning how many students you have—both full-time and part-time—and the hours that they registered for, and we've registered for 1,657 more hours than we did a year ago as a total student body, and that's what you based the budget and the income dollars on. It looks like in terms of a full-time students, we have just about an even number, based on 15 hours per semester, but with the extras registering, it looks like it may get up to 105 or even a little beyond that.

What is the total enrollment capacity of the college? How many students do we have room for?

Well, I understand that historically, in the 1978-79 and the 1979-80 school years, the highest enrollment of both community and campus exceeded 2,000. I really think that if we got all the dormitory rooms refurbished and the ladies started using the Conference Center as they did in those days as dormitory space, we would probably have no difficulty accommodating 1600 students in the dormitories and 400 in the community. That's not going to happen right away, but the capacity of the institution is probably an enrollment of 2,000. We would really be crowded at that pace. There would not be any more room available.

Do you see the enrollment increase as a continuing trend?

The demographic data that the Department of Education produces indicates a decline in the pool of 17-to-18-year-olds, the high school graduates. Across the nation, starting in 1991-94 or '95, there's supposed to be a three-year dip. However, the Southeastern United States is growing rapidly. The population is in transition. The North and the Midwest are moving to the Southeast area. So we have a chance of riding through that slump without feeling the significant decline that will be felt elsewhere. However, there's no question that some of our Adventist academies are showing a decline in enrollment. I know that Georgia Cumberland Academy, in our own conference, is down a number of students this year, which means we will have fewer students to recruit as we move toward the future. The positive side is that we have more students coming from outside of the Southern Union and that's where we're showing our biggest gains. The closing day of enrollment, we had 49 more students from outside the Southern Union than we had last year. I think students from other places are finding this an attractive college, mainly because we have several things going for us. First of all, we have a better price structure on room, board, and tuition than other Adventist colleges. Secondly, we have a nicer climate here than they have in Bernier Springs or Boston or Columbia Union College. I think these two factors have attracted students in the past few years.

What are your hopes and your goals for this school year?

We have a number of projects that we're working on. One is to see the completion of the Lynn Wood Hall restoration. That has slowed down somewhat because it's an alumni-funded project. We're hoping to stir up some interest and enthusiasm so we can keep the money moving and complete that project. The main floor and the auditorium are now usable. It was used during campmeetings and freshmen orientation this year and we've pleased that we are at least able to get the doors open and start using the building. I hope to see it completed by Alumni Weekend. Secondly, I would like to continue making improvements in the men's and ladies' dormitories. We also have to give some consideration to our cafeteria. The carpet is becoming badly worn and coming loose in places and I don't know if we can make it through the year without seeing some significant problems. So we're looking to see how much it's going to cost to redecorate. I'm not sure if we'll do it this year, but at least it's on our agenda. We're also talking about purchasing a new bus. I believe our bus is a 1966 or '67 model. It's small and worn out, and we need a new one. So there's a lot of things that we're looking at, and we'll try to keep the paper informed so you can inform the student body as we decide to move ahead on these things.

We need to tell all the good things that we can. Do you have any major changes in mind as far as policies or rules?

There have been no real significant policy changes from 1987 to this year. The dormitory rules, the dress codes, and so on have not been altered significantly at all. In fact, I don't know of any real changes myself—the deans and their committees may have expressed some changes in the dormitories, but I think things are much the same as they were.

It looks like we have a pretty good system going right now.

I think so. It seems like things are going well. I was impressed today when we went to assembly. I was told that there were 1,200 chairs on the floor and I counted nearly 100 students standing in the back. That's a good start when we have about 1500 students on campus, including part-time and community students because some have work programs and other things where they're excused from assembly attendance. Another area of interest is the cafeteria. I was told that 700 students showed up for supper on Tuesday night after registration. That's the largest supper group in the cafeteria in along time. All these things make for a good student body and a good school year.

Along a different line, how do you see Southern with other colleges in terms of student finances?

Southern is the first college to hold registration. Our registration is two or three weeks earlier than the other colleges, so we're the first to start and we're also the first to have graduation. As I have talked with the others, they are experiencing situation similar to ours although they haven't had registration yet. We went into registration with about 280 more applications than we had last year and we were anticipating an increase. However, students often apply to more than one college—sometimes three or four more—to see which college offers the best scholarships and the best financial aid packages. That directs them, so we always know we have more applications than that actual students coming. Most of the other colleges are reporting that they have more applications than they did a year ago, and they're anticipating some modest increases as well. As Dr. Barrows, who heads the Admissions program, says, you always consume a couple fistfuls of Roloids during those days because you just never know how it's going to turn out. We're really pleased and think that it's a positive program.

How is Southern itself doing financially or is it really too early to tell?

In looking at the financial statements, which all college business managers and presidents share from month to month and year to year, we can get an idea of what's happening at La Sierra, PUC, or the other schools. We had a good year last year. We had an increase in enrollment and we kept our budget as tight as we could, so the school showed a small net gain. However, we have some debts to pay. When they built the dorms back in the late 70s and Brock Hall in the early 80s, they took mortgages on them and so we have a 2.5 million dollar debt. A sizable portion of our net gain that we get from ancing a budget because of smaller income and greater debts. However, when I look at Southwestern's financial statements, they haven't built buildings like we have. Financially, they're quite stable as well, though they have a much smaller program and a much smaller school. We at Southern feel very comfortable in that we have a good enrollment, and our debt load is moderate and we're able to manage well with the finances we have. We're able to maintain the lowest tuition, room and board package in the denominational system, and I think that we offer the most for the educational dollar on this campus than you're going to get anywhere.

What is the most satisfying part of your job as president?

I think that the best thing about being president at Southern College is that I think it's the best college in the system. It's nice to feel that you have a nice place to be and a good campus to work with. The most exciting thing for me is always the first week of school, seeing the new students coming and the other students returning, and getting things wound up and ready to go. I really enjoy the first few weeks of school. After that, it gets really busy and I have committees and meetings to attend, both on and off campus, and things really speed up. But the first few weeks are really exciting. I like graduation, too, because it's wonderful to see kids who have worked hard and studied hard finish up and succeed. The first week and the last week are always the best. The middle weeks go by at a speed you don't even like to calculate.

It does go by in a sort of blur. What do you think is Southern's greatest strength?

I think Southern's greatest strength is its students. We also have a great faculty, but if we didn't have the students, we wouldn't have the faculty. Three years ago, when I came here, we were down to 1,100 students and we had to let some faculty go—some very good faculty. If the students are satisfied and happy and the enrollment numbers are increasing, you can build programs and add faculty and you build the strength. The assets of any college aren't the buildings or the campuses but really in the students and the faculty. These are the things we've got going for us, and we have a great student body and a great faculty.

On the other hand, what do you see as Southern's greatest weakness?

I think our greatest weakness is the fact that we sometimes try to be too much. A college trying to accommodate 1,550 students can sometimes try to do too much. To have 31 or 32 different majors and degrees to satisfy everybody is a real struggle. Compared to our neighbor, Lee College, the Church of God college, we have about the same enrollment but they only offer 20 majors. Instead of having 130 faculty as we do, they teach those 20 majors with only 75. That gives them more financial stability. Our weakness is that we try to stretch ourselves so thin trying to accommodate so much with what we've got and that kind of puts us in a stretch all the time. We talk enrollment and solid budget but we always have it stretched out like a rubber band, barely covering its necessities. It's a plus for the students because we try to do as much as we possibly can, but in some respects, it's not the best.

It's something for us to work on and improve, then.

Right, but if you cut majors, you're not really giving the students what they want.

That's true. Now, you were a missionary in Singapore for some time. We as Adventists always consider the world our mission field. How do you see Southern as a mission field?

The whole world is a mission field in terms of the Christian perspective. Sin is sin, and that's what "mission" is all about. It's providing man with a way out of the predicament that he's in. It doesn't matter if you're in Singapore or Bangkok or China or Southern College. The thing that's different is the standard of living, the cultural environment that you find yourself in. However, there's as much need to do good and to help others right here at Southern College as there is in Africa. There are as many people in need here. There are students who come here whose backgrounds, homes, and lifestyles are in as serious a situation as you will find anywhere else in the world. They have plenty of clothes and they're not starving. The problems are different, but the need is still there. It's an inside need, the human need. It really doesn't make that big a difference. The difference is the cultural environment you find yourself in, but the mission is the same. That is to teach young people, whether they're Singaporeans or that's or whoever, what it means to be an Adventist, what it means to be a child of God and what the plan of salvation can mean in their own lives and in their own careers. It's teaching them how to combine their Christianity with their professions and make a contribution to society. That's the mission, and it's the same wherever you go.

Right now, many Adventist feel that the youth of the church are in trouble. From what you've seen on this campus, how do you view that observation?

I would say that the youth of this church are in trouble, but I think that the Adventist Church is facing some problems and looking at some statistics that it hasn't dealt with before. The use of drugs and alcohol is becoming a significant problem in the church. A recent survey from the Andrews University Health and Nutrition Department shows that perhaps as much as 20-25% of the Adventist church is using alcohol to some extent. That's a problem for the church. If that percentage of the church is using alcohol to some extent, when it's a long-standing principle that we don't use it, obviously a percentage of those families are sending their young people here. So we have a group of young people on campus who at one time or another or presently have or are using alcohol to some extent. And the same thing applies with the drug situation. Our church is facing the reality of that problem. How do we deal with that in our Adventist culture and our Adventist society when we have a health principle that says we abstain? How do we deal with people who are caught with the problem? Sending them away from school doesn't solve the problem, it just puts it elsewhere.

However, we do have to discipline and we do have to deal with it. It's a struggle knowing how to handle the problem. We have an alcohol and drug policy here on campus which I think treats the students fairly and also gives a measure of protection to the campus as the church views it. This is not a rehabilitation center. It is an Adventist college to teach what the Adventist lifestyle is and how it should be lived in all aspects: spiritual, social, health, personal, and so on. We don't have the facilities to cope with rehabilitation. If someone has a real problem, we try to help them get the assistance they need. It's probably not the best solution to the problem, but it's the best solution we can find in dealing with what we have. It's a financial situation. Should we provide rehabilitation? Who's going to pay the bill? It's not part of the educational process. Should every student be required to pay more money so we can hire professional drug counselors? My thinking to that is no, we shouldn't. The student who is not caught up in that problem should not have to pay to solve it. If we hire counselors, they become our expense and they've got to be paid with part of the budget. We focus on teaching, and the rehabilitation is going to have to be done somewhere else.

In closing, is there anything else you would like to say?

I think that we have just had a very good summer in terms of recruiting and enrollment. A number of faculty and administrators were involved, myself included, going door-to-door, visiting families and recruiting. More applications came in than we anticipated. We have a good student body arrive on campus and the numbers all look good. The faculty had a good colloquium and some inspirational meetings. We recognized some faculty for their achievements. We've had a good time and we're off to a great start. I'm looking forward to a very, very good school year. There's an upbeat attitude amongst the faculty, and there's a good spirit that I sense among the students. I'm happy to be here and hope everyone else is as well.

year to year helps to liquidate those debts. The other colleges around the circle have borrowed more heavily than we have, so their debt loads are heavier, some significantly. In that regard, we find ourselves in a little better picture in terms of financial stability. Our student body carries a smaller debt load than some other colleges. I understand that Union College has a debt load twice the size of ours, and they have about 500-600 students to carry that. Obviously, they have a tougher time bal-

Softball facilities improved

By Steve Watson

If anyone has been down to the softball fields lately, he has probably noticed the large gray building centered at the front of the two fields. Those students who were here last year may remember that broken down shed that we called our equipment room, and will realize this new building is a very big improvement. The old shed was hardly big enough for our equipment. The new building now holds a riding lawn mower, sports equipment, a concession stand and restrooms. That's right! No longer will people have to run to the V.M. at a crucial point in the game to use the restroom. The concession stand will be open during most games and will provide soda, candy bars, and chips for hungry players and spectators. The building was donated by Byron DeFoor of DeFoor Developments, with the primary goal of enhancing the Little League Baseball program and the college intramural program. This new building will prove to be a great asset to the playing fields.

This year the All-Night Softball Tournament will feature new electronic scoreboards. These new scoreboards, donated by Coca-Cola of Chattanooga, have been positioned at the meeting point of the two fields. So, when one wants to know the score, all he has to do is look out to right or left field (depending on which game he is watching), and get all of the information he needs.

For the home-run hitters, there are new distance markers on each field. These larger and brighter signs will enable one to discover just how far he can really hit. New and improved signs have also been added to the backstops.

Another improvement is also planned. An 80 foot fence will be installed along the tree line to reduce the number of lost balls and associated game delays caused by powerful home-run hitters like Dean Qualey and Dan Plank.

SPORTS BRIEFS

VOLLEYBALL

If you like to play volleyball, a net will be up every evening in the gym. If one is not up, just ask one of the P.E. teachers (Steve Jaacks, Phil Graver, and Ted Evans) and they will be glad to provide one. Come on out and play!

P.E. CENTER ACTIVITIES

The schedule for P.E. Center activities is up in the gym. Drop by and have a look or call the gym to find out what is going on. New this year are badminton and ping-pong Monday's and Wednesday's from 8:00 pm to 10:00.

SOFTBALL PARTICIPATION

Participation in the intramural softball leagues is up considerably from last year. This year 15 men's teams and 7 women's teams are competing. This is up from 12 and 4 respectively last year. "I'm really pleased with the participation level this year," said Steve Jaacks, intramural director. He continued by saying, "We've gotten off to a good start and it looks like we will have a very competitive All-Night softball tournament."

As the Softball season is just getting underway, there are no standings to report as yet. However, our photographers have captured some of the early action on film.

Destiny

Drama Co.

Audition applications for the Destiny Drama Company are now available at the Thatcher Hall reception desk, the Talge Hall front desk, the student Center, and the Chaplain's Office.

All Southern College students with an interest in creative Christian theatrics are invited to fill out an application, turn it in to the Chaplain's Office, and prepare for the auditions which will be held September 14, 15 and 17 in Lynn Wood Auditorium.

Audition appointments can be made, after completing the application, by visiting or calling the Chaplain's Office, 238-2787.

The Destiny Drama Company is a Southern College's Christian drama troupe which performs for high schools, youth rallies, and colleges throughout the Southeastern United States. They strive to portray the power, permanence, and personality of Jesus Christ and His gospel.

For more information regarding the Destiny Drama Company, call the CARE office, 238-2724, or Allan Martin, Student Director, 238-3033.

CARE 1989-90: Setting our sights on the Savior

CARE

This is what Southern College is all about!

September 7-10 will bring the chance for everyone to get involved in an activity that will draw him closer to God, and others, as well as promoting physical fun and fitness. There will be something for everyone.

This year, S.C.'s theme is "Setting Our Sights on the Savior." Commitment Weekend will introduce this new theme.

Thursday, September 7, will begin Commitment Weekend, sponsored by CARE (Collegiate Adventists Reaching Everyone). Ted Wick will be the speaker for chapel, Friday night vesper, and the church service. Sabbath morning (7-30) students will meet in front of the Student Center and hike through the woods, returning in time for Sabbath School in the gym. CARE will present its programs during Sabbath School and give students the chance to sign-up. Sabbath afternoon activities will include Sunshine Bands at 2:30 and at 6:00 p.m. and a lawn concert in front of Summerour Hall.

For those who enjoy a big Sunday morning breakfast, or just socializing, there will be a Pancake Breakfast in Student Park from 9:00-11:00 a.m.

Southern College is not the only participant in Commitment Weekend. Sabbath, September 9, is a Union-wide Prayer Day. Through the coordination of CARE, Sabbath Schools throughout the Southern Union will join in this special day, praying for the continuing spiritual growth at SC. This will be a time for consultants to focus on Christ.

September 9, Prayer Day, is the most important part of Commitment Weekend. In order to "set our sights on the Savior," God must be placed number one and through prayer SC will ask the Holy Spirit to guide. From sunset to sunset, someone will pray every hour. Students can sign-up to participate in this activity (more information will be posted).

Commitment Weekend is only one of the many programs sponsored by CARE. There are three main divisions: Campus Ministries, C.A.B.L. (Collegiate Adventists for Better Living), and C.M.C. (Collegiate Missions Club).

Ed Santana is in charge of Campus Ministries an organization with more than 35 programs. A few of these include Adopt a Grandparent, Bible Marking and Study Programs, Big Brother/Big Sister, Clown Ministry, Destiny, Soup Kitchens, and Story Hour. Three programs developed for this year are Morning Group Worship, Project Overcast, and Silverdale GED.

C.A.B.L., headed by Stan Dobias, will encourage students to live better lives. They will sponsor many athletic clubs such as camping, caving, scuba, and running. It will also be involved with Blood Assurance and Drug Awareness.

Students interested in the Student Missionary program will want to contact C.M.C.'s leader Kyle Robinson. C.M.C.'s activities will include a retreat and a Spring Break mission trip to Honduras.

CARE has organized its 1989-90 program to fit the personal interest of each student at SC. There is something for everyone and Commitment Weekend will be the time to become involved with what SC is all about.

S.A. soars into a new year with annual mixer

By Earl Gensolin

On the night of September 2, a different kind of party, the SA Mixer was held. It was a chance for all students to mix and mingle.

In accordance with the high flying theme of the party, the mixer was given a pistachio bag donated by a major airline, and a Little Debbie as they entered the gym via a simulated runway.

The first portion of the evening's entertainment was short, but well planned slide presentation. The humorous narration and the upbeat soundtrack helped set the mood for the evening.

Then came the mixing. Each person received a sheet of paper which listed different characteristics. They were encouraged to find people with characteristics matching those on the list. There was mass chaos as everyone rushed to find people with holes in their socks, colored contact lenses, and bad breath.

While everyone collected new friends, some collected wonderful prizes as well. Next on the agenda was the raffle. About half of the ticket numbers called didn't have a matching ticket, so it was one of the slower moments, but the pent up energy soon found release during the balloon drop.

As the money-filled balloons came down, the confusion was unbelievable. It could have been a film-dancing scene in a punk rock concert, or a soccer game in England. But in reality, it was just a bunch of college students crushing each other, trying to get enough money to do their first (and well overdue) load of laundry.

As the confusion died down and a semblance of order was restored, the Mixers were directed to the field, where an attempted aerial candy bombardment awaited. Afterwards, refreshments were served. Students, teachers and insects congregated around the food-laden tables and talked with old and new friends.

The Grand Finale of the night was a fireworks display set to patriotic marches and songs. Flashes of red, white, green and the occasional blue, illuminated the night sky. It was an exciting climax to the evening. Altogether, it was a pretty good night. Some came away with new friends, others came away with laundry money, but everyone left with good memories. ■

Speeding expensive in more ways than one

By Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

On the opposite side of the road, a deep blue 1985 Honda Prelude lay in the gutter. As it had swung out of control, the car rolled and with a brief hesitation, rested on its roof. When all was silent, the driver unleashed himself from his seatbelt. With enormous effort he pulled himself out of the car through the open sunroof...and passed out.

This is the story which Jason Rivera, a freshman at Southern College, will tell you. He will tell you that the loose gravel on the side of the road was partly responsible for his accident. But, he will also tell you that he was speeding as he turned the curve that day.

Rivera, is probably only one of the many who speed on the rural roads of Collegedale every day. Every licensed driver has read or heard about the dangers of speeding. But how do drivers act on the information they receive? Authorities have posted speed limits to remind them. Yet, even with the clearly posted speed limits on both rural roads and major highways, speeding remains a problem.

Statistics tell us that speeding is the biggest factor in fatal accidents throughout Tennessee. Other research shows that your chances of being involved in an accident are much greater when your speed exceeds the posted speed limit; however, few heed these warnings.

As a result of Rivera's accident, he spent the night in hospital with five stitches in his head, a broken wrist, and multiple scrapes. He also faced court, a $40 fine for reckless driving and $41 in court costs.

Martha Cislter from the City Hall said speeders in the Collegedale area are watched carefully, and the penalties are "strictly enforced."

Author, Henry Gregor Felton said, "When you understand and respect the limitations of a situation that has no visible or legal limit, you can regard yourself as a good driver in every sense of the word. For then you will keep all the public and private faiths that are placed in you when you get behind the wheel." It is then that we become safe drivers. Are you one? ■

VOTE! STUDENT SENATE ELECTIONS TODAY!

By Andrea Nicholson

Mixing, mingling, and a lot of talking about Southern College politics was the scene in Room 336 of Brock Hall, Monday night, September 11, where the student association hosted a mixer for those interested in running for student senate positions.

Tim Kroll, S.A. executive vice president, brought the meeting to order shortly after 8:30 p.m., and gave some background on the role of the senate. He mentioned that students haven't been informed about the senate in former years. "This is due to lack of interest and lack of communication," says Kroll.

"The senate was not used to its potential in the past. I have big burden to make it succeed," Kroll told those present. "Here at SC, the voice of students needs to be heard," he said.

"The senate was not used to its full potential in the past, I have a burden to make it succeed." -Kroll

K.R. Davis followed Kroll's remarks with an overview of the senate's responsibilities, and urged potential candidates to keep in mind that being a senator requires a lot of time and commitment. Senators are expected to make frequent contact with their constituents and be open to concerns and suggestions. The senate meetings, which all senators are required to attend, will be held twice a month.

Next, Carlos Romero, who served on the student senate last school year, expressed his desire to see this year's senate function as a team. "I invite all of you to run and see what you can do. The need is out there. We have a chance to be more active than in years past," he said. Romero spoke of the senate as "not just a social club, but a functioning body to better the campus and deal with student concerns."

Craig Lastine, S.A. president, spoke next, expressing his personal view of the senate. Linking it to a circle of communication between faculty, students, and senators, he said, "Communication is our word for success in the senate."

"If you don't want to see things happen, and if you don't want to see things change at SC, then don't fill out that petition," Lastine told the students.

Kroll closed the meeting by sharing his goals for the senate and reviewing the senate election campaign packet that each prospective senator received. He called attention to the increase in the number of precincts from 16 to 20, including 2 new village precincts. He explained that each one represents 5% of the total student body.

According to Kroll, candidates don't have to reside in the precincts they run for. "But guys, I'm sorry to have to tell you that you can't run for those Thatcher precincts," he said with a grin.

The campaign will begin September 15, and elections are scheduled for today, September 21.

Thoughts: early Wednesday morning

By John Caskey

"Our lives are what our thoughts make them." - Marcus Aurelius

"I just can't get that song out of my head," said my friend as she dabbled with her homework. "I heard it on the radio this morning and it's been buzzing around in my brain ever since." Have you ever experienced this phenomenon?

The brain is a marvelously complex organ that controls every aspect of our lives from life sustaining respiration and circulation to flawlessly executing Beethoven concertos and double plays on the softball field. The brain is also a vast biological storehouse of information. It catalogs each moment of our lifetime, and uses this information to choose the best possible course of action in a given situation.

Many of the functions of our brain are beyond our conscious control. It's normal processes can be disturbed by the most mundane outside influences: chemicals in our food, the weather, the mess in our dorm rooms, the changing seasons. We cannot regulate the secretion of our hypothalamus to voluntarily raise or lower our blood pressure. Some of us even move in our sleep! We can, however, regulate our attitudes and the data that we provide for our brains' decision making processes.

The information we provide our brains determines the way we think. The way we think determines the way we live. Keep track of what you put in your vast biological storehouse. You may find that it is easier to put things in than to get them back out.

Bits and Pieces

An Open Letter to the Phillip Morris Tobacco Company

Dear Phillip Morris:

Just wanted to drop you a line expressing my thanks for the special offer I received from you in the mail. Well, to be honest, it was addressed to my mother, but she is unable to respond so I took the liberty of responding for her. I'm sure you understand.

I expect people will certainly be excited by this new cigarette product you've developed. After all, what could be more enjoyable than a cigarette that produces much less smoke than the average cigarette? Truly, this innovation will shake the tobacco world.

I am sorry to tell you, however, that my mother will not be taking you up on your offer of a free sample of this new cigarette. She has given up the enjoyable pastime of smoking, and I don't think she's going to be interested in taking the habit up again in the near future.

By the way, I'd like to congratulate you on the fine magazine you send to my mailbox every month or so. It is truly heartening to know that there is a company out there which cares about its customers enough to stay in touch with them. Your magazine keeps me informed of all that's going on in the nation affecting smokers (and former smokers, like my mom).

For example, it was encouraging to read how, as a tobacco company, you are standing up for the rights of smokers. I really can't understand how some of those left-wing liberals in Congress could accuse a company of your magnanimity of being self-serving. I'm convinced that the fact that you produce tobacco products is totally unrelated to your efforts on behalf of the smoker.

I'd like to pass along best wishes from my mother, but I can't. She's dead. She died last December, just before Christmas.

You'll be pleased to know, I'm sure, that up until a month or so before her death she was a loyal customer. Forty years and who knows how many cigarettes.

I didn't mean to brag. I just thought you'd like to honor her or something, maybe put a plaque with her name on it in your Smokers Hall of Fame.

"Lois Jean Denton," that's how her name is written, if you are interested. That's how it's written on her death certificate, too, along with the cause of death: lung cancer.

If you decide not to give her a plaque, that's all right. I understand. But, if I could, I'd like to ask one favor. Please stop sending me your magazine—I don't smoke, and mom doesn't read, not anymore.

Letters To The Editor

Congratulations

September 11, 1989

I want to congratulate you on your recent edition of the "Southern Accent." It is truly one of the most positive editions of the "Accent" that have come up in my time here at a Southern College. Therefore, I want to let you know how much I appreciate the positive upbeat that rings from the paper. I do not say this just because you featured me in the center spread, but the entire edition was filled with positive articles and comments about a great beginning of the school year, and I want to say to each of you, thanks for being a part of the positive spirit here at Southern College.

Sincerely yours,

Donald R. Sahly
President

Consistency Needed

Southern College has certain rules by which every student must abide; however, sometimes these rules are only partially enforced. A student came to class one day wearing a pair of shorts, and the teacher immediately reminded her of the no shorts to class rule. That same student has come to class many times wearing a mini skirt, yet the teacher failed to bring her attention to the rule against minis.

The student handbook probably does not say anything about caffeine. The cafeteria does not serve Coca Cola because of the caffeine it contains, but it serves chocolate pies, chocolate cake, and other caffeine containing substances. The Village Market does not sell Coca Cola either, probably sharing the cafeteria's reason. Interestingly enough, one can purchase Vivarin, an anti-drowsiness medication, which contains caffeine equivalent to the amount in two cups of coffee.

I do not propose an amendment to the dress code which would allow students to wear minis and shorts, and I am not encouraging the cafeteria to rid itself of all caffeine containing substances. I merely think it is time for the students and faculty to be consistent.

Covenant Players to Perform and Instruct at Southern College

The Covenant Players, an international repertory theatre, will be performing for Thatcher Sabbath School, Sabbath, September 23, at 9:45 p.m. The public is welcome to attend this special feature to be held in the Thatcher Hall Chapel.

The California based group, since its inception in 1963, has performed close to a million times in 65 countries around the world, in 12 languages. With 115 touring units, they have stirred and challenged people to take a closer look at themselves and the practice of their faith.

The Sabbath School performance, is a special engagement for the covenant Players who are on the Southern College campus for the Destiny Drama Company Intensive Training Weekend, September 22-24. Southern's Christian collegiate drama troupe, will be receiving instruction throughout the weekend from the covenant Players.

For more information regarding the Sabbath School performance of the Covenant Players, call the CARE office, 238-2724.

I'm So GLAD...

By Isaac Feagins

GLAD, a contemporary Christian band will be featured in concert at the Iles Physical Education Center, Monday, September 25, at 7:00 p.m.

GLAD started in 1972 when, in Philadelphia, a group of college students auditioned for a new Christian band. Among the hopefuls were Ed Nalle and his brother, Don, and other promising musicians.

Presently, the group consists of five members who have been together for more than fifteen years: Ed Nalle, lead vocalist and percussionist who has a music education and vocal performance degree, Chris Davis, lead guitarist and vocalist who joined in 1982; Tom Beard, keyboardist and vocalist who toured internationally with the Sparrows; John Gates, drummer and vocalist who toured with Gladys Knight and the Pips; and Mark Wilson, bassist and Vocalist who is GLAD's most recent member.

A music major, Ed Nalle wrote most of GLAD's material and produced most of its popular albums. Don, who has a degree in media, coordinated the group's media appearances and interviews.

After 1976, the group became a success singing and playing at more than two-hundred colleges, festivals, churches, and concert halls around the country.

Myrrh Records released their "GLAD" album in 1976. And in 1988 Benson Records released "The Acapella Project" album.

The group will perform "The Acapella Project" album, which includes songs such as, "A Mighty Fortress," "Be Ye Glad," and many other songs on campus in the P.E. center.

Arthur Gibbs, freshman religion major says, "I can hardly wait to hear their live performance."

Dr. W. Wohlers, Vice-President for Student Services is responsible for GLAD's upcoming performance at Southern. He said he chose the group because of the quality of its music.

Admission is $4 for adults, $10 for families, and $3 for senior citizens and children under 12. SC students are free with ID card.

Student Association News

Campus Chatter has a new format: the front page is a chronological calendar of events, and the back page contains more information about those events. Messages to be put in the Chatter should include relevant dates and times, and should be deposited in the message box in the student center across from the S.A. office, before 5 p.m. on Monday. If you have any suggestions for the Chatter call editor Valerie Brown at 2723.

The Recreation Room is temporarily closed while renovations are under way. The Grand Opening will be soon, at which time the infamous LOVE CONNECTION results will be revealed.

If you have messages for the WALLSIDE JOURNAL put them in the box in the student center, and please include the date, or dates, you want them displayed

Have you seen the lounge in the Student Center recently? New tables and chairs have arrived, and it has been redecorated and recarpeted. The renovation of the lounge was an S.A. Senate project last year. Also, a big thanks to Helen Durichke for her hard work in the Student Center.

Saturday night, September 23, is the S.A. Scavenger Hunt—Don't miss it!

Assembly on September 28 will be in the P.E. Center at 11:00. It will be a General Assembly of the Student Association of Southern College. A number of S.A. Officers and S.C. Administration will questions from the student body.

The Student Association welcomes ideas, questions, information, and suggestions. Please call the office at 2723 or speak with an officer. YOU can make a difference.

Ladies and Gentlemen, it's the Doug Martin Show

By Warren Downs

How do you decide on your sermon topics?

I don't know, things that move me. If I find them interesting, or—if I don't think it's interesting or if it doesn't touch me, I don't think others will probably find it interesting. If it's not important to me (that isn't saying that what's important to me is important to everybody), but I have to talk about what interests me and what's important to me or I can't even put any enthusiasm into it.

How do you come up with illustrations to match your theme? A lot of times, most often, I come up with different illustrations of things and put them together when I'm praying.

On a less serious note, I've heard about your Jello trick. Could you describe it?

You have to use the cubes of Jello like they serve in the cafeteria. (It's not my trick. I want you to know that I learned it from Doctor Sahly.) And, you let the Jello just—instead of swallowing—you just put it in the back of your mouth and it just starts to go down by itself you know by the laws of gravity. And then you open your mouth wide and then everyone looks to see why you've open your mouth so wide. You just kind of squeeze your throat together and it pops back up into your mouth and. People are very surprised, especially when Dr. Sahly does it.

Your main job is recruiting. How many schools do you usually visit in a year?

Well, there are 15 academies in the Southern Union that I visit for recruiting. And then I visit other schools outside the Southern Union for like youth rallies and weeks of prayer and things like that. So, I don't know how many. Last year I went to I think about 6 or 7 schools outside the Union. There are 7 academies in the States that are outside the Union and then I went to a couple of academies in Asia and I think about 5 colleges last year. But, that's not recruiting that's just visiting. We would never recruit outside of our own Union.

What do you do on a recruiting trip? There are two types of recruiting trips. On the one in the fall we go to academies and we visit the junior and senior classes and talk to them about what college is like and try to let them know that college isn't nearly as terrifying as academies kids seem to think it is. We talk to them about finances, social relationships and classes and some of the basic things about college like what is a semester hour or what are CLEP tests. All those things—terms—and just help them relax when they are thinking about college. And then in the Spring when we go to the academies, we interview every senior and try to help them make a decision for Adventist education and make applications. This fall when we go, we're taking students to help answer questions and help them feel comfortable about college. And then in the Spring we take advisors who can give them some academic information.

Do you change your program for different schools?

There are difference just because each school has it's own personality. That's not something that comes down on paper, you just kind of feel the situation once you get there.

How is the SC of today different from the one you attended?

I don't know, it's really quite similar. The campus looks the same. There are a few more buildings. They put up the new protonator along the back. A lot of the teachers are the same. A lot of them are new, but they are the same type of people and so I just felt really at home when I came back here.

Who was your childhood hero? Who inspired you?

I remember when I was in the 5th or 6th grade I went to a youth rally in Minneapolis and there was a minister who spoke. I don't even know who he was but, I remember that he really inspired me. I decided then that I would like to go into the ministry. So, I guess he was my hero even though I don't know who he was.

Who is your hero now?

Naturally, the one we all look up to—Jesus Christ.

Up to the students again, Video Yearbook 1989-90

By Mark Morton

In 1922, at the administrative council I Southern Junior College, two students, Merwin Thurber and Robert Cowdrick, took their places among the administrators. They had come to present the student body's desire: to have a printed yearbook.

This was not the first time the subject had shown up on the Ad Council's agenda. During the Lynn Wood administration, the proposed annual had been rejected on the grounds that such a project would be "copying the world." Now, with the college under the progressive leadership of the new president, Leo F. Thiel, the students again attempted to make their wishes known.

It is often said that history repeats itself, and if one takes a second look, it is clear that the events of 1989-90 are becoming strikingly similar to the historic 1922-23 school year. Again Ad Council has met to discuss a yearbook idea initiated by students, this time a video yearbook!

As in 1922, this year's administration has been very supportive of the idea. Yet, as in the past, money remains a problem. In 1922, it was voted that the yearbook project not be funded by the college, but rather by the students themselves. Jesse Cowdrick was one of those students. "We all pitched in our own money, two or three dollars, which was a lot back then... It wasn't covered by the tuition or anything."

Now it is up to the students again. The Video Yearbook '90 production budget is solely funded by up-front student sales. Its success is up to us.

My main man from the mainland (China, that is)

By Andrea Nicholson

He sits attentively, his eyes dancing behind thick glasses, and a broad grin dominating his features. He appears eager to share, and even more eager to learn.

Meet Zhu Kong Dao, otherwise known as Geoffrey Church. He was born 26 years ago in Wenzhou, Zhejiang China, and is now majoring in communications at Southern College.

Leaving his home just days before unconfirmed numbers of Chinese student protesters were killed by government troops in Beijing, Geoffrey arrived in the United States on May 29, 1989. He was assisted by the Eastern Asia Administrative Committee of SDA, the organization that made arrangements for him to attend Southern College on a scholarship.

Geoffrey taught himself the language by listening to American radio programs, chose an English name from a British textbook (that explains the spelling), and set out with the goal of receiving an Adventist education in radio broadcasting.

Having already earned a degree in physics from a college in his hometown, Geoffrey says he had very little choice about what he chose to study. Based on his top scores in physics on the college entrance exam, school authorities assigned all of Geoffrey's classes for the 3 years it took him to complete his degree.

"I had the same classmates for every subject I took," he says.

Taking a 15 hour class load and working for the service department 4 hours a day keeps Geoffrey busy this semester. "Most of the time I have to study hard," he says. But when time permits listening to the radio, photography, swimming, and volleyball are some of Geoffrey's favorite hobbies.

How does Southern compare with college in China? Geoffrey says he enjoys being able to choose the classes he wants to take. "In China, the school authorities decide what you will study and when," he adds. He's also intrigued by the installation of air conditioners in every room, a luxury to him.

"Maybe only the professor's room has an air conditioner in the college," he explains. He adds that SC has more equipment (computers and lab facilities) than Chinese classrooms provide.

"This is a nice place for me. People here are special. I've met lots of people who are kind and helpful," he says.

Geoffrey has 2 brothers and 3 sisters, each born well before the Chinese government initiated the "Family Plan," a policy limiting each family to one child. He adds that in China, family units remain intact longer than in the U.S. "In your country, many children leave home once they turn 18 or 19 years old. In China, most children live at home until they are married," he explains. The main reason, he says, is lack of adequate housing.

Due to expense and distance, Geoffrey will not be able to return home to visit his family while he is in the states attending school. And because many homes in China, he notes, have no telephone, he relies on mail to keep in touch. "Every once in a while I will call my neighbor and tell him to go get my parents. Then I bang up immediately and call back in a few minutes to talk with them," he says.

Radio being his primary interest, Geoffrey will return to China after completing his education and hopes to work for Adventist World Radio Asia. Presently, he says no one from mainland China works for AWR, but he's quick to point out the change that's taken place in China in the last 10 years. "I believe everything will change even more. I don't worry about it now," he says.

South Seas exhibit sails into Southern

By Suzanne Lettrick

Kim Fuqua, a senior art and journalism major, wants to share something with Southern College. But she can't take the entire school to the Marshall Islands, Truk Island, Fohpei, or Yap to see the Micronesian handicrafts that the natives have made.

But next week (exact date not yet set), she is going to bring these things to Southern College for the first Micronesian handicraft exhibit to be shown in the gallery, on the second floor in Brock Hall.

Fuqua, who is in charge of this exhibit, was a student missionary to Truk Island in 1987. She said she received permission from Robert Garren, Chairman of the Art Department, to hold the exhibit in the gallery last year, but there was not time. This year is different.

As a missionary, Fuqua taught eighth grade classes. She said the students were highly talented and creative. "The reason I'm having this exhibit is because I think the natives are very artistic, and I want people to see for themselves," Fuqua said.

Items to be shown include: woven baskets and wall decorations, beaded necklaces, a grass skirt, a story board made by natives in jail, carved fish, masks of men, etc.

Fuqua said that the handicrafts were donated by nine student missionaries, including herself, who have visited these places within the past two years. "The natives' source of income is in selling the crafts that they have made. Things that would cost $50-$100 in America cost $12-$15 on the islands." Generally, she continued, the men do the carving and the women do the weaving. Most of the exhibits took about two days to make, not counting the time the crafts have to be soaked to prepare them for weaving.

Fuqua ended by saying that if enough students express a wish to buy items made by the natives of the islands, she may be able to have handmade crafts sent to Southern College for those people.

After the exhibit, which will last about a month, the crafts will be returned to the owners.

WSMC brings 'Good Music' to town

By Laura Harner

WSMC FM, Chattanooga's classical radio station, will bring internationally known radio broadcast host, Karl Haas, to Chattanooga.

On October 15, the pianist conductor, will appear for the first time in Chattanooga at the Choo-Choo Imperial Ballroom for a dinner concert. The Chattanooga symphony, including 60 musicians, will perform under the direction of Haas.

Haas has hosted the daily radio broadcast, Adventures in Good Music, for the past 26 years. It is the nation's most listened-to classical music program. Adventures is presented daily over 175 stations in the U.S. and over 650 stations world-wide.

Adventures in Good Music may be heard weekdays on FM 90.5 at 11:00 a.m., and again at 7:00 p.m.

Born in Germany, Haas arrived in the U.S. in 1936, and has since become the recipient of eight honorary doctorate degrees in music, fine arts, and the humanities; and has been honored twice with the George Foster Peabody Award for excellence in broadcasting.

In January 1989, Jann Gentry, development director for WSMC, began organizing the scheduled budget and advertising campaign for the event.

"Including the appearance, as well as all other aspects in completing the total operation for the evening, it will cost WSMC approximately $22,600," says Gentry. According to Don Andrews, Chattanooga Symphony director, a tentative repertoire will include works of Beethoven, L'Arle, Mozart, Copland, and Wagner. Tickets can be purchased for $50.00 by contacting WSMC FM. For reservations, call 238-2905.

Germans invade Collegedale

By Julie Jacobs

The Chamber Choir of the Hochschule fur Musik und Theater Hanover will perform on Friday, September 22 at 8 p.m. in the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The Choir, under the direction of Professor Heinz Henning, comes to us from Hanover, Germany. The 44-member choir is composed of students who show a special interest in both the "Church Music" and "School Music" departments of the Hochschule. The choir allows these music students to experience various techniques and problems they will encounter and problems in their own futures as choral directors.

The choir will perform several Bach motets, a psalm (137) by Kurt Thomas, as well as compositions of Brahms and Mendelssohn.

According to the Westfalen-Blatt newspaper of Germany, the Chamber Choir is "distinguished by astonishing suppleness and agility..." The West-Kurier newspaper claims that the Hanover Chamber Choir meets "even the most exacting demands."

Heinz Henning, the director, visited Southern College when he toured with the Hanover Boys' Choir two years ago. In addition to being Professor of Choir Conducting, Henning is also vice-president at the Hochschule.

The Hanover Chamber Choir will also perform for the church service on Sabbath, September 23.

Check out Southern's various campus clubs

By Randal Gilliam

Campus Clubs are among the extracurricular activities available at Southern College.

In the Biology department there are three interrelated organizations. Tri Beta Kappa Phi, The Biology Club, and The Pre-med Club. According to the club sponsor, Dr. Marcia Woolsey, Tri Beta is an honors society for biology and other closely related majors. She listed the club's two main functions as, a social club providing an opportunity for fellowship, and an organization responsible for providing its members with current information relevant to the field of biology.

Tri Beta is an international organization. The club officers of Tri Beta are: President, Kevin Toppenberg, Vice-president, Andrea Achenbach, Secretary Stefanie Servoss, Treasurer, Sherie Burk, and Historian, Eileen Lopez. The Biology Club is a separate organization, although, according to club president, Jeff Vian, both clubs coordinate many of their activities. Among the activities he mentioned were campus tours, and meetings with guest speakers lecturing on topics in biology. Jeff is also a member of the newly formed Pre-med Club. He said that the primary function of the club was to provide an opportunity for its members to be exposed to the medical profession. He said a possible activity could be witnessing a surgery. Other Biology Club officers are: Vice-president, Darryl Wilkins, Pastor, Matt Jones, and Secretary/Treasurer, Millie White. The Biology club will have its first meeting September 22 through 24 at Abrams Falls.

The theme of the Student Ministerial Association, according to club president Steve Durkac, is "developing spiritual leadership". The S.M.A. is open to all Religion Majors and Minors. Steve stated that the primary goal of the club "is to develop the attitude and skills necessary for spiritual leadership which would be a combination of both natural, and spiritual, abilities." Club activities include social functions such as dinners and potlucks. Practical functions, include prayer emphasis weeks, "power hour", a devotional meeting held at 7:00 a.m. every Wednesday morning, and leadership opportunities like club sponsored literature evangelism. During the club's first officers' meeting, Steve said, "In this club we are going to be making sacrifices...if we are going to be spiritual Club officers are: Vice-president, Jerry Rimer, Secretary, John Turk Music, Bob Cundiff, and Public Relations, Evan Valencia and Terry Lynch.

James Robertson, president of the Southern Mathematical Society, says that the only membership requirement for membership to his club is an interest in math.

He states the primary purpose of the club is "showing people that math can be interesting." "Most people say math? I'd rather eat my broccoli." The Society sponsors a lecture each month by either a professor from this campus on by a touring speaker. Other club officers are: Vice-president, Sabrina Robbins, Secretary/Treasurer, Scott Puckett.

A club for communications majors is being introduced this semester. The club's objective is a charter membership with the Society of Professional Journalists. According to club sponsor, Dr. Lynn Sauls, "the club is going to focus on the mutual interests and concerns of broadcast journalists, corporate communication specialists, and print journalists. We are hoping that no one area will dominate this new organization." Proposed club activities include: discussions with professional journalists from the Chattanooga area, workshops on seminars on topical journalistic issues, and a program on the First Amendment and/or Freedom of Information Act.

The Southern Memories announces the fourth annual Gallery Contest. The Gallery was established to display student talent in the area of photography. This year, we are expanding the Gallery to include student works of art. This contest is open to all Southern College students.

Photography Division

Photographs must be submitted approximately 3.5"x 4.75". All entries must be previously unpublished. Because the yearbook is designed by, for and about Southern College, we request that all photos be taken within a 50 mile radius of Southern College. Categories for submissions include College Life, Still Life, & Natural Life. Photographers may submit up to 6 photographs total, with no more than 2 per category.

Art Division

Any painting or drawing may be submitted regardless of size and colors used, however, all works will be printed in black & white. All works must be previously unpublished.

All entries must be delivered to the southern Memories Office by November 1 at 12:00 noon.

By submitting an entry in the Southern Memories Gallery, the enterant releases his/her work for reproduction in the 1989-90 Southern Memories.

The editor and/or the judging board reserve(s) the right to disqualify any entry.

All entries must be submitted with a label on the back stating the title, enterant's name, address and phone number. Photographers must include the place the photo was taken and the category which you wish the entry to be judged under.

Cash prizes will be awarded. $25. to each first place winner, $15 to each second place winner, and $10 to each third place winner.

In years past, the Southern Memories has done profiles on students and faculty, as a "Who's who" way of getting to know the people on the campus of Southern College. Our college would not be the same without the diverse assortment of people we work, play and study with on a daily basis. To capture their great diversification, we want you to nominate someone to be featured in the 1989-90 Southern Memories.

To be eligible for nomination to be profiled, the nominee must be a registered student or a full time staff member of Southern College.

Nominations must be submitted by Thursday, October 5, 1989

The person making the nomination must complete the following form:

Nominee's name: _____
Tell us why you would like to see this person featured in the 1990 Southern Memories: _____
_____

Tell us what contributions (i.e. offices held) this person has made to Southern College: _____

Collegedale: improvements on crosswalk

Rochelle Bastione

Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists—located in the happy valley of Collegedale, Tennessee...sounds like a pretty safe place. Well—safe until you have to venture into the "land of high risk" simply to cross the street. Last year, one practically had to get out the orange flags and wave his arms wildly in hope that vehicles would notice him at the crosswalk, however, the law of "pedestrians have the right-of-way" didn't matter to most of these zooming cars. Many students complained about this lack of safety of the crosswalks—especially the walk from Thatcher Hall to the gymnasium.

No changes were made until an alarming incident occurred. Linda Wilson, a Southern College student, was walking to classes last year, when she was hit in the crosswalk by an oncoming car. Fortunately, she was not seriously injured, and was able to resume classes after a few days. As news of this accident was reported to Bill Magoon, the city manager of Collegedale, he immediately formed a committee for improving the safety of our crosswalks. Many considerable changes can be seen as a result of his efforts. According to Mr. Magoon, a little island was added to the main walk where Linda was hit. This island is supposed to be more visible to the motorists. There are also several signs located in all crosswalks which say, "Stop for Pedestrians". Other additions such as the expansion of the "No Parking Zones," placement of reflection buttons, and the repainting of lines have been made. Bill Magoon states that "the primary concern of these changes is to increase the safety of the crosswalk by getting traffic to stop as the pedestrians cross the street."

These are very significant changes, and the traffic has slowed down. There are still a few non-law abiding citizens who refuse to stop at these crosswalks. What can be done about this? Dennis Cramer, chief of Collegedale Police, states "if pedestrians are at the crosswalk and the driver refuses to stop, the pedestrian can fill out a complaint at the Police Department to issue a warrant for the driver's arrest. The pedestrian must bring with him the tag number of the car, and description of the vehicle and driver. The pedestrian must also show up for the court date."

Bill Magoon urges students to realize that they are not protected by this law if they are outside the crosswalks. Motorists do not have to stop for jay-walkers.

Just for the health of it

By Darlene Almeida

"For the Health of It" is a column featuring health topics and is set up, in a question/answer format. A box will be placed at the front desk in the Student Center where you can submit any health questions you may have. Or, if you prefer, you may ask me, Darlene Almeida, personally. I am a registered nurse and am presently finishing up my senior year in the Bachelor of Nursing program. Also, I am one of the nurses employed by S.C.'s Health Service department.

Names of those submitting questions will not be disclosed unless you have a burning desire to see your name in print. In this case, you must tell me specifically. Also, this column is NOT meant to take the place of a visit to Health Service or to your personal physician for personal medical care. On the contrary, this column is to explain topics like mononucleosis, strep throat, VD, AIDS, colds, exercise, sleeping habits, cancer, and other topics of interest to you.

So put on your thinking caps and submit your questions. Here are a few to begin with.

Q: Is peanut butter low in cholesterol?

A: Now, now...let's remember that cholesterol is found only in animal products. Thus, peanut butter has no cholesterol. However, there is a catch—it is high in fat. But it is a great source of protein and an even greater source of calories—95 per tablespoon. There is approximately 1.5 tablespoons of peanut butter in each serving given in those little cafeteria containers. That's 142.5 calories!

Q: Why is a high fiber diet related to a reduced risk of colon cancer?

A: First of all, for those who are not familiar with what a colon is, it is the large intestine. Certain foods such as red meats, fatty foods, and those with large amounts of chemicals and preservatives, including some artificially flavored and colored, have a "high transit time". This means that these foods remain in the colon for long periods of time before excretion. As chemical breakdown takes place so does something similar to decay. This process causes damage to the lining of the intestine, affects normal cell growth, and allows for absorption of carcinogens—cancer-producing agents. Dietary fiber helps our systems sweep out the poisons from the colon and reduces the time these particles remain there. This, in turn, reduces our risk of developing colon cancer, as confirmed by Nutrition in Perspective by Kreuter. According to Whitney & Hamilton's book, Understanding Nutrition, the following foods are rich in dietary fiber: peas, broccoli, cabbage, carrots, corn, whole wheat products, apples, and pears. And it just so happens that our cafeteria does an excellent job of providing us with an adequate selection of fiber to choose from.

Washington & Lee Recruiter on Campus

By Tamara R. Michalenko

Wednesday, September 27, Susan Palmer of Washington & Lee Law School will be on campus to counsel any students interested in attending law school. She will also be giving a presentation and discussing preparations for the LSAT exam—5:15 p.m. in the east end of the cafeteria (behind the curtain, bring your supper tray). Washington & Lee, located in Virginia, is known for not making the Sabbath an issue for exams. Dr. Ben McArthur, professor in Southern College's history department, feels students "would be comfortable" attending the law school coming from SC.

Scott Green and Greg Willett, graduates from SC are currently enrolled in Washington & Lee.

Dr. McArthur encourages anyone interested in law to attend the presentation and to see him about scheduling an appointment. "Susan Palmer is a very engaging, friendly sort of woman, very professional...we should utilize her time" while she is here.

Journalism scholarship fund increased 25%

By Lee Bennitt

The amount that the Francis Andrews Journalism Scholarship fund now stands at five-thousand dollars. Previously, the amount stood at just under $4,000; however, on the night of the Journalism Department's Open House, an anonymous guest gave the department a check for $1,104, bringing the scholarship's fund to exactly $5,000.

This afternoon, a Journalism staff meeting will be held at approximately 2:00 p.m. to discuss the details of the award and the eligibility requirements for recipients. The award will be presented at Southern College's Award Chapel on April 26.

Lynn Sauls, the Journalism department's current chairman, said that Francis Andrews, who retired in 1987, taught Journalism and Public Relations in the Adventist school system longer than any other Adventist. Sauls also said that the department's previous chairman, C.A. Oliphant, began to collect funds for the award after Andrews' retirement.

The award is directed to the print Journalism and Public Relations students; however, any Journalism student can receive it.

Campus Rape Prompts Concern

By Tamara Michalenko

She wanted to be alone, so she took a walk. Strolling in front of the apartments near the Conference Center, she thought about the day's events. Suddenly, she felt the coldness of a knife to her throat. A hand covered her face as she was dragged into the bushes. As one hand remained over her eyes and the other held the knife against her throat, a voice demanded that she remove her sweats. She complied, and her attacker raped her. She was lucky—she escaped with cuts on her neck.

No, this isn't a description of the movie of the week. It happened to a Thatcher Hall resident on the night of September 24, 1989.

Dean Engel confirmed the rumors Tuesday night during worship. She shared with those present that the victim wanted people

Rec Room Opening Draws Crowd

By Andrea Nicholson

Scores of anxious students piled into the student center Thursday night, September 28, to witness the grand opening of the new recreation room and to receive the results of the computerized dating service, "The Love Connection."

K.R. Davis did the honors at the ribbon cutting ceremony of the new facility, located at the far end of the student center where the Strawberry Festival headquarters was last year.

Once the doors opened, the fun began. Speakers piped jazz tunes, "GLAD," and "Take 6" melodies throughout the center as students mingled with friends and viewed the new attractions.

Video games lining the rear wall caught the attention of several students, and S.A. officers passed out free quarters to eager players. Paperboy, Tecno Bowl, Pole Position, Ms. Pacman, and Galaxian each had lines of eager players waiting to top the score of the last.

Others quickly paired off in teams for games of Ping-pong, pool, air hockey, and foosball. A soda machine, snack machine, and piano completed the furnishings.

Students enjoy new Rec Room.

Andy McConnet

Meanwhile, long lines formed into the student center lounge where the anxious crowd awaited the results of the "Love Connection." Those who played the computerized dating game at registration received a printout of 15 names, along with phone numbers, of individuals who answered the quiz questions similarly. Bursts of laughter mingled with whispers of, "Do you know any of these people on my list?" were among the reactions observed as students ventured out to meet their matches.

"I'm definitely interested in getting to know my top five," commented Stephanie Rauch, sophomore.

Ed Rooney, a junior, said, "I got a pretty decent hit list."

Asked what he thought about the "Love Connection," Michael Hawkins, a junior, said, "I think

Newly Elected Senate Holds First Meeting

The Southern College Student Senate held its first meeting September 27, at 8pm. Senate Chairman Tim Kroll says he is very excited with the choice of senators this year.

"It looks like we have some good people," said Kroll. "I feel confident in their abilities . . . that they will do a solid job."

During the orientation meeting each senator introduced himself and stated what he hoped to accomplish as a senators this year.

Skip Holley, Joker editor reported to the senate that completion of the joker has been delayed due to technical difficulties and other unforeseen problems. The joker will be available within the next two weeks, Holley said.

"Our main focus is to improve communication between students, senators and the faculty," Kroll said. "This way we can better reach our goals and accomplish certain projects."

Kroll encourages students to contact their senators regarding any problem or concern.

Lobby Policy Questioned

By Gene
Krishinger

I really don't understand, in fact I'm quite confused. What's the deal with barring women from the men's dorm lobby after 8 p.m. and vice versa? It seems ridiculous. After all, what's the purpose? Is there some magical time when hormones make visiting in the dorm lobby dangerous? Is there something which happens in dorm lobbies after 8 o'clock that members of the opposite sex shouldn't see?

I've heard women often come down to their lobby clad only in their robes. What a frightening thought! Do they also have curlers in their hair and green masage smeared over their faces? If this is the case I'd rather not visit after dark anyway.

I have tried to find a legitimate reasoning for this policy. My search has been in vain. It seems quite rude to make someone stand outside and wait in the cold. Why can't they come inside and sit down? Are we afraid that couples will get too close? Instead, those barred from visiting in the lobbies spend time steaming up our windows. And what if I need to come in and drop off a note, or make a phone call? Frequently, exceptions are made to the rule, especially in the women's dorm. Do not these exceptions invalidate the rule?

The dorm is our home. We should have the right to invite friends in the lobby, male or female, during the hours before night check. If the majority of the students desire to see this policy changed, I see no reason that the powers that be should oppose such a change.

Bits and Pieces

By David Denton

There are those of you, I'm sure, who will be a bit surprised that I am dealing with the subject of this article. I do not usually write about religious things, not from a lack of interest, but due to the controversial nature of the subject. Therefore, let me offer this disclaimer: This article was suggested by a faculty member (who shall remain nameless), and was suggested last school year. It has taken me nearly a year to decide I wanted to follow up on this teacher's suggestion.

It was pointed out to me (as I said, a year ago) that there is an interesting, and ironic, situation existing on our campus. To be more specific, in the "Garden of Prayer." For those of you unfamiliar with the "Garden of Prayer," it is a lovely spot, filled with trees and grass and benches, as well as squirrels and other assorted objects of nature, such as flowers and the like.

There are three points of interest in this garden. The first is a quotation from Ellen White's little book, "Steps to Christ," which is engraved on wood and stands at the back of the garden. Directly opposite this sign is a cross-section of a very old tree, upon which have been laced little markers showing how historical events stand in relation to the age of the tree. It's a very interesting exhibit.

The most interesting part of the garden, from the point-of-view of this article anyway, is the third point of interest, the Ten Commandments. Engraved on wood, as the "Steps to Christ" quotation was, the Ten Commandments stand tall in the most beautiful corner of the garden. All the Commandments are there, and, if you look closely, you'll see something else is too. Nailed right smack dab in the middle of the Decalogue is a small, wooden cross.

Now, I wonder. Could it be that unintentional though it was, this diminishing of the cross in relation to the Law is an illustration of what is happening in our church today? Those who insist on elevating the Law of God to a higher role than it was intended for are, in essence, acting out that scene in the "Garden of Prayer."

To the Christian who truly accepts divine grace, it should be, "...the Cross, first, last and always. And BECAUSE of the Cross, the Law has meaning." Too often we have fallen into the trap of believing that the Law has the final say as regards our salvation, and not the Cross. If the Law has the final say in my life, then I'm lost.

As Christians, particularly as Seventh-day Adventist Christians, we have been at the forefront of those opposed to the false doctrine which holds that the Ten Commandments were nailed to the Cross. Unfortunately, having rescued the Ten Commandments from the Cross, we have been busily nailing the Cross to the Ten Commandments. Somewhere in our little ignorant hearts we have continued to suppose that the Cross, and its salvation, is dependent on the Law and its observance. In truth, it is exactly the other way around. The Law and its TRUE observance, is dependent on the Cross and its salvation.

Perhaps I will get letters; others have. Perhaps some will see me as a proponent of "New Theology," or "Fondism" or whatever the term of the day is. But perhaps someone else will stop nailing the Cross to the Law and learn how to serve God as a RESULT of salvation, rather than to OBTAIN salvation. If that happens, I won't be so hesitant to do this the next time.

Men's Club Plans Cruise

By Suzanne Letrick

As the boat glides through dark water, stars gleam on the people strolling the deck. The sounds of laughter, mingled conversations, and Dixieland music float through passengers' ears, then are left behind in darkness as the turning paddles urge the Southern Belle onward.

This isn't an episode of the Love Boat, but it is "A good time to show the women that the men of Southern College have class other than third," said Dean Qualley.

This year, on October 15, the men's club reinstates its ten-year tradition of having a Tennessee riverboat cruise (Expenses prohibited this from happening last year).

Those on the cruise will enjoy a Mexican buffet for dinner. Entertainment will "probably consist of Dixie music played by the 'boat people', although most couples will supply their own (entertainment)!" said Dean Qualley. Faculty won't be paying attention.

For this event, both men and women can do the inviting but, Qualley commented, "I think the guys should ask the girls because it is a Mens' Club event, and the girls are always complaining that the guys never do the asking." He went on to say that those without dates are not excluded, but chances are that they will be left out.

Those wishing to go on the cruise, must sign up by October 8 with any of the men's deans. Tickets are $15/single person and $30/couple.

The boat leaves Ross' landing at 6:00, and returns around 9:00 or 9:30. No transportation will be provided. Attire is casual: jeans and a sweater.

Helpful Tips on College Finance

The cost of college tuition continues to skyrocket. Some of the nation's top universities are charging more than $85,000 for a four-year education. Landing financial aid is becoming more of a necessity than an option. Here are some simple tips on how to obtain money for a good education.

1. Contact your college financial aid office for a list of financial options. There are also credible companies, like College Financial Planning Service (CFPS), who provide lists of available grants, loans and scholarships for a small fee.
2. Analyze your financial situation honestly and apply for as many programs as you are eligible. Fill out the forms accurately.
3. After selecting a good financial aid package, negotiate improvements with your college financial adviser. Also thoroughly investigate alternative means for more support.

College Financial Planning Service has a data base of more than 180,000 listings of scholarships, fellowships, grants and loans. It offers information about donations from corporations, memorials, trusts, foundations, religious groups and other philanthropic organizations.

To enter the program, a student can call 1-800-346-6401 to request a "student data form." It must be completed and sent to CFPS with $45 for the research fee. In about two weeks, the student will get a personalized computer printout of financial aid resources that matches his or her background.

Many scholarships are based on academic interests, career plans, family heritage and place of residence. There are also many unique sources such as money for students who have been golf caddies or newspaper carriers.

In the words of one financial aid expert, unique opportunities for monetary support do exist, you just have to be creative and resourceful in finding them.

Covenant Players Perform at Southern College

By Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

Crash! In what appeared to be an embarrassing fumble, a young man lay on the platform of Thatcher Sabbath School. However, the audience soon realized the accident was only a bit of impressive acting which introduced The Covenant Players to Southern College, and taught them a lesson as well.

Comprised of Donna Oglesby, director, and three other members, the group performed a series of four short plays. Each play prompted the audience to ask themselves, "What does it mean to be a Christian?"

Enjoyable though it was, performing at Thatcher Sabbath School was not the main purpose for the group's visit to Southern's campus. Allan Martin, director of the Destiny Drama Company, invited The Covenant players to help instruct for Destiny's first workshop of the year. Over the weekend, Destiny and The Covenant Players spent many hours a day working together as they learned the seven basics in drama ministry. This was Destiny's first time together as a troupe since auditions closed.

"I've been very happy with what The Covenant Players have been able to do for us," reported Martin.

Based in Oxnard, Los Angeles, The Covenant Players work year-round, traveling worldwide to spread their ministry. They are a nonprofit organization and are not affiliated with any church or other organizations. Their only financial support comes from performing engagements and occasional donations. Any money earned must then pay for all expenses.

Because the players try to keep expenses down, they often are not sure how their next meal will be financed. Yet money does not seem to be a major concern; each member works on a full-time basis for the group.

The Covenant Players enjoyed their stay, in fact, one member was so impressed with the attitudes of the students on campus that he expressed a desire to take some time off to work with Southern College.

Rape Causes concern . .

to know what happened. Monday night a suspect was arrested but had to be released due to lack of evidence.

When asked about the Sunday night incident, Dr. Bill Wohlers, Vice-President for Student Services, gave this reminder: "You can never take anything for granted, even in Collegedate."

In a special program on sexual abuse for Thatcher residents, professionals from the community shared their stories and suggestions for getting help. Ironically, the program was scheduled previously. It had no relation to Sunday's events.

A film, "Shatter the Silence," was shown, portraying the life of a girl who was a victim of incest. The film emphasized that there is help available. According to the film, the victim needs to realize that she isn't at fault and shouldn't be embarrassed in discussing what happened. Also, victims should talk to someone, and not give up if the first person they approach doesn't respond to their cries for help. They need to look for someone who will believe and be willing to help them. Group therapy is also helpful by showing the victim she is not alone in being abused. Shattering the silence in talking about what happened can start victims on the road to recovery.

Laura Nytrady, director of Nursing, shared thoughts and suggestions during this special program from a radio program entitled, "Victims of Rape." The program pointed out that victims feel helpless, hopeless, and angry as they go through the stages of dealing with the anguish. Three suggestions from the radio program were: let go of the bitterness, because keeping it inside destroys you, become grateful to God for making good out of evil, and give God permission to forgive the perpetrator. Until you work through these steps, the hate and anger will not leave you.

"There is no shame in having been abused," Robbie Robertson says, "but I have never worked with anyone who didn't feel ashamed, or guilty... It was not your fault that you were abused!"

"If you have been abused and are in college," continues Robertson, "congratulate yourself—you are a survivor." The healing process is different for each individual. Each is affected in a unique way and heals at her own pace. Talking with a counselor will start the healing process.

*****
EDITORS NOTE:

Robbie Robertson will be offering individual counseling to those interested, and group therapy will soon be available. If anyone is interested in either or both of these therapy sessions, call Robertson at 265-2271 ext. 341, or see Laura Nytrady in the Nursing Department.

After nightfall S.C. campus takes on an ominous appearance.

A Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Because the 5th Annual Southern College Triathlon was held totally off campus, not many students were exposed to the quality race that was put on this year by the Physical Education Department working with race coordinator, Chris Mitchell. The planning and preparation was evident from the starting gun, which went off exactly on time at 8:00 a.m.

The swim course was well marked with buoys as well as paddle boats. Plenty of life-guards patrolled the course in both canoes and ski boats. The biggest improvement was the centralized transition area, which had bike racks and space for changing. Although the running and biking courses were somewhat shorter this year, the roads were well chosen. They had very little traffic and excellent road surfaces.

Tips for Awareness:

- * Don't be out alone at night, even for a walk.
- * Keep keys between your knuckles as a precautionary measure.
- * Call security to accompany you if you need to be somewhere on campus after dark (i.e. Brock Hall, music building, library, etc).
- * Walk with confidence, with a specific destination in mind.
- * Check under your vehicle before getting near it.
- * When returning to your vehicle, have your keys ready in your hand and check inside the vehicle before entering, especially in the back seat.
- * When going on a date, be sure you know the individual well.
- * Never be afraid to say "NO!" if someone asks you to do something you feel uncomfortable doing.
- * If someone does harm you in any way, seek help immediately. Don't try to handle it by yourself.

Thank you for a good race!

Sincerely,

Sheri Green, Richard Moody,

it's good if it gets me wild and crazy dates."

Regina Clark, freshman, said she would ask out guys on her list, but, "Not until I know who they are."

When asked what the "Love Connection" had done for him, Kyle Robinson, sophomore, replied, "I'm a religion major and I do need a wife. I think I found her."

"Am I on anyone's list?!" Monte

Murdoch, a junior, wants to know.

S.A. Social Vice-President Harvey Hillyer and his helpers served popcorn, punch, and cookies to the socializing crowd.

"I'm watching our student body seek out their prey as they receive their list of victims," Hillyer said. "Everybody's matching up."

S.A. President Craig Lastine commented on the new rec room while mingling with the crowd and passing out handfuls of candy. He said Dr. William Wohlers approached him last year after S.A. elections with the idea for the new facility.

Wohlers himself commented, "I'm glad to see it [the rec room] is open again. It makes the student center more of an activity area."

According to Lastine, the S.A. worked closely with Helen Durichek throughout the project. She arranged to have a hole in the wall repaired and the walls painted. She also hung the posters.

Lastine said K.R. Davis was the main man behind the scenes of the new rec room. "It's been a pleasure to work with someone as dedicated to Southern College as K.R. Davis," he said.

Observing the evening's events, Davis said, "I thought it was a great success and I think this year's S.A. officers are the most progressive group I've ever worked with."

The rec room will be open from 11 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. on weeknights, and until midnight on Saturday nights.

Making the Grade for your Peak Performance

By Robert J. Kriegel, Ph.D.

Editors note: Robert J. Kriegel, Ph.D.—best selling author, former All-American athlete, and mental coach for Olympic and world class athletes—lectures and consults with major corporations worldwide on peak performance, leadership and strategies for dealing with change. Kriegel recently took part in a national tour of college campuses sponsored by the makers of Nuprin Pain Reliever.

The alarm sounds. "6 a.m. I've really gotta hustle. I've gotta finish that outline, talk to Professor Jones, stop by the lab, read 100 pages for my moon psych class and be at work at 3 p.m."

Today's college campuses are pressure cookers. In fact, the Nuprin Pain Report, the first national study on pain in America, documented that more people 18-24 suffer from stress and pain than any adult age group.

As I've toured the country visiting college campuses, students tell me the most common causes of their stress are: too much to do, too little time, exams, money, relationships, interviews, family and career choices.

So, get rid of stress. Right? Wrong.

Stress is neither good nor bad. How you handle it can be. Learning to make stress work for you can help you concentrate better and think more clearly under pressure, have more energy, be more creative and make college more enjoyable.

But many of us handle stress poorly.

Some people panic and work too fast under stress. Others procrastinate. Neither response is productive and both are caused by what I call "sabotage thinking"—common reactions to stressful situations that work against rather than for you.

Two common types of sabotage thinking are: "the got-tas" and "the can'ts."

Let's look at the got-tas and methods to overcome them.

The got-tas usually occur when you think you have too much to do and too little time to do it. "I gotta study for two exams...I gotta read two chapters...I gotta call financial aid about my loan...I gotta get a date for Friday night..."

The got-tas make everything seem harder than it really is. You get into the panic zone, rushing to get it all done. You walk too fast, talk too fast, think too fast, write too fast, eat too fast. You can't concentrate or think clearly. You make careless mistakes, blank out on exams and forget things you already know. Everything seems like a life or death proposition.

I was talking to a junior at U-C Berkeley who had a bad case of the got-tas about a forthcoming exam. "I gotta get an A," he said. I asked what would happen if he didn't.

"If I don't get an A, I won't keep up my 4.0 average. Then I'll never get into a really good graduate school, and then I won't get a top job, and then I'll never make a lot of money..."

"Overcoming the Got-tas"

By the end of his discourse, not getting an A on this test was akin to his life being ruined.

When he stopped and thought about what he'd just said—that if he didn't ace this test his life would be down the tubes—he started laughing, "I must be crazy."

He was not crazy, just not thinking clearly or realistically. Many of us get that way under pressure. This type of desperation thinking makes us overreact and causes panic. The cure is to shift from irrational to rational thinking. Do a reality check. When you get the got-tas take a deep breath, exhale slowly and ask yourself, "What is the worst thing that could possibly happen?" and "How likely is that to happen?"

This type of reality thinking puts the got-tas in perspective. Sure, not getting an A would be a drag, but it wouldn't be the end of the world nor would it land this A student in the ranks of the homeless.

Looking at past wins helps, too. After all, he already had a 4.0 average, and had done well on difficult exams before. Reminding himself of his past success on similar exams helped him relax and restored his confidence.

Gaining control of your thinking will help to turn desperation reactions into peak performance actions. Learning this early in life will be invaluable in the future, because no matter what you do or where you do it, there's always going to be things you gotta do.

For the Health of It

By Darlene Almeida

I thank those of you who submitted questions for this week's printing. However, I will only be answering those which are directly related to health and medicine. So for those of you with a serious interest in your health I invite you once again to drop your questions in the green box placed at the front desk in the student center.

Q: Can you explain a little more about the measles and the possibilities of TN becoming involved in the epidemic?

A: As the announcement in the Chatter said, various counties in TN have already experienced outbreaks. Bradley county, our neighbor, is presently being affected by the ten day measles. And as of August 6 there have been 8,941 cases of measles reported in the U.S. Seventy colleges and universities have also been affected with this highly contagious disease.

The main symptoms of measles are as follows: cold symptoms for about three days with fevers up to 104 degrees or even higher, white patches in the mouth, and finally a hairline rash that will eventually spread down to the feet. When this disease is contracted, you will be isolated until the rash disappears. This may be 1-2 weeks. Please don't think this is solely a childhood disease because you may be in for a surprise. Those who get the disease at a later age tend to get a more severe type of measles.

Besides the previously stated symptoms of the disease there are various complications that may arise: pneumonia, swelling of the brain due to infection, even death.

What can be done about this? Get vaccinated; if you haven't already that is. The Ootewah Public Health Department located at 5520 High St. (behind the Baptist church) is providing the community with vaccines any week day until 3:30 p.m. for a mere $2.00. I must say those $2.00 will be the wisest investment you will ever make if you are not vaccinated yet.

More information about measles is being compiled right now and will be given to all the students here at S.C. So expect some very important papers in your boxes this week and take the time to read them. Your lives may depend on it.

C.A.R.E. Provide Numerous Activities

The following is a list of the programs sponsored by C.A.R.E. Take action and give us a call.

ADOPT-A-GRANDPARENT

Students will adopt an elderly person and visit them at least once a week.

AFTERGLOW

Every Friday evening following vespers students stay by for a special time singing, sharing, special music, readings and prayer.

BIBLE MARKING PROGRAM

Students who are interested in studying their Bibles will go to Grandma Battle's house to learn Bible marking.

BIBLE STUDY PROGRAM

Groups will be set up to study the Bible together.

BIG BROTHER/BIG SISTER

Every week students spend time with their adopted brothers and sisters. They play games, tutor the kids and plan special activities.

C.A.R.E. WEEK

Special time in which each day provides a unique opportunity to reach out and touch someone's heart. See listed schedule of events.

C.A.R.E. DAYS

This will be a special day once a month. Keep your eyes open and C.A.R.E. cards will be distributed.

C.A.R.E. PRAYER

Twenty-five names are selected from the student body weekly. Five names are prayed for daily by a group of students. A letter is sent to those being prayed for.

CANDLE MEDITATIONS

Special time before vespers when students can come to the church early and meditate.

CHRISTMAS CAROLING

Groups of singers go out during the Christmas season to share the spirit of Christ and pass out loaves of bread to community people.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM

Special Christmas program to celebrate the birth of Christ.

CLOWN MINISTRY

After applying make-up and clown attire, students visit the local children's hospitals, orphanages, and nursing homes to spread a little cheer and laughter with their skits and plays.

DESTINY

The Destiny Drama Company is a collegiate drama ministry troupe which performs for high schools, youth rallies, and colleges throughout the Southeastern United States. Through Christian theatrical arts, they strive to portray the power, pertinence, and personality of Jesus Christ and His gospel.

DORM MINISTRY

This is a program to encourage prayer and fellowship in the dorms. Small prayer bands meet once a week in both dorms to pray with and for each other.

FILM FESTIVAL

On a dreary Sabbath afternoon once a semester all the chairs and tables in the cafeteria are pulled aside to make way for bean bags and blankets. Then the show begins—the best Christian contemporary films available.

HELPING HANDS

A community service program where once a month a group of students help with painting, small repairs, raking, etc.

INTERCOLLEGIATE BIBLE CONFERENCE

Those interested will leave Wednesday night and join Southwestern Adventist and Union Colleges at Camp Yorktown Bay for a spiritual weekend.

LAWN CONCERT

Come out on the lawn of Summerour Hall to enjoy some Christian music.

LIFE OF CHRIST-MUSICAL

A presentation with narration and music of the birth, life, death, resurrection, and second coming of Christ.

MORNING GROUP WORSHIP

A group of students will get together for 15-20 minutes to have worship. One dorm worship credit will be available.

PROJECT OVERCOAT

Overcoats will be collected to give to homeless people in the winter time.

SABBATH SCHOOLS

Under the C.A.R.E. umbrella there are three different weekly Sabbath schools: International, Lynn Wood, and Thatcher. All are very good!

SABBATH AFTERNOON ACTIVITIES

Different times during the semester, activities will be available for students on Sabbath afternoons.

SILVERDALE GED

Once a week students will go to Silverdale Prison to help prepare inmates for their GED test.

SINGSPARATION

On Sabbath evenings when the weather permits, a group of students gather on the steps of Lynn Wood Hall for a time of good ole' fashioned singing.

SOUF KITCHENS

Once a month students will go help serve food to the homeless.

STORY HOUR

Every Sabbath afternoon students tell stories to children. The college students try to teach them moral and spiritual lessons through the stories they tell.

STUDENT WEEK OF PRAYER

Once a year C.A.R.E. runs a special Student Week of Prayer. Students do everything—even the preaching. All meetings take place in the Collegedale

SUNSHINE BANDS

A group from Southern College goes to the local life care center on Sabbath afternoon to sing and talk with the residents. It's a great way to share God's "Sunshine."

TABLE TALK

Table talk is a service that daily gives the students a "thought for the day" and any pertinent announcements by means of cards on all the cafeteria tables.

TARGET EVANGELISM

The second Sabbath of every month is set aside for target evangelism. This is a program where students distribute Christian literature in the Chattanooga area.

TEACH-A-KID

A tutoring program for elementary students who are in need.

Patricia To Appear In Sacred Concert

Patricia White, songwriter/singer, will be appearing in sacred concert on October 13 at 8 p.m., at the Southern College church of Seventh-day Adventists in Collegedale.

Patricia's talents are well displayed in both the lyric and music of her original songs. Her first album, WHITE ROBE, received airplay on Christian radio stations all across the United States. An enthusiastic response followed with comments like "A refreshing new sound!" and, "One great LP!"

Her new album, LOVE WILL, was produced in Nashville, Tennessee, with such top studio musicians as Shane Keister, Larrie Londin, Don Potter and Jon Goin.

In concert Patricia shares herself and the stories behind her music. She is an effective communicator, drawing her audience into the joy of praise as they learn to do such songs as the "Praise Rap." Her rich vocal sound has developed over years of experience (beginning at 4 years of age) in performing with a number of groups including the Heritage Singers of California.

Juggling a family, writing, performing, and recording are several full-time jobs; but she seems to take it all in stride and pulls from the difficult times the humorous incidents she shares with her audiences. "I think people today relate better to someone who sings and shares in honesty instead of a euphoric type of presentation. I simply share the truth about how trustable the Lord is. If people are blessed, then I've done my job." People ARE blessed. Don't miss Patricia.

Here I Am...

by Izzar Feagins

"Lord, help me!" was the cry of him who had no desire and no will to become a student missionary, but he heard an inner voice speaking to him anyway. His name is Kyle Robinson, and the voice was the Holy Spirit.

After Kyle decided to become a student missionary, in the Spring of 1988, he went to the student center to look at the call book and was moved by the Spirit to accept a call to Palau as a pastor.

Several months later, on August 11, 1988, Kyle was at the William Hattfield Airport in Atlanta with no plane ticket or passport. He had thought these items would be there waiting for him. They weren't. What could he do but go home? At his arrival there, he found his ticket and passport on his front porch. That's when he realized that the Lord wanted him to go to Palau.

After arriving in Palau on August 18, 1988, Kyle was exhausted. However, the people of the island weren't tired, they were excited about his coming and wanted to take him on a tour while they got acquainted. While on this tour, he saw many needs and people whom he could encourage and teach.

Soon he settled in, teaching Bible, history, U.S. Government, P.E., and more.

As a missionary, Kyle had to deal with many new situations. On one memorable occasion he spoke with a student whose parents had died a month before school started. Alcohol and drugs became the only family he knew. Kyle saw the need and asked for the Lord's help. After much prayer and effort, the student overcame his addiction and accepted the Lord.

When Kyle preached his last sermon and gave a call, thirty-four students between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one accepted Christ. These results reinforced Kyle's belief that the Lord wanted him to be in Palau to preach His word.

Even though Kyle's year has ended, he will not give up the work; in fact, after he graduates, he plans to return to Palau for six years.

Improvements top P.E. Center

Tim Chism

Tennis anyone? Or would you prefer a swim, followed by a nice run? This has been the focus of attention at the P.E. Center, entering the fall semester at Southern College. Increased enrollment last year and money donated by The Committee of One-hundred has freed up funds to improve the P.E. department.

The Committee of One-hundred donated the money necessary to fix the roof of the gymnasium, "which is a huge job," says Phil Garver, department chairman.

Kevin Snider, a freshman and one of the better tennis players on campus is very impressed with the quality of our newly surfaced courts. Also, "The new rubber track is fantastic to run on," says Chris Case, a junior Nursing major. Chris continued, saying, "The soft springy surface allows for a pleasant exercise without the pain of hard surface running."

Swimming is also more enjoyable since new lanes have been painted in. This makes swimming laps much easier with increased visibility. Finally, for those students who play basketball, volleyball, and/or sports which have potential for sprained ankles, there is a new ice-machine in the gym for your convenience.

Garver's main goal, now that everything is completed, is "To maintain the department," keeping everything in tiptop condition for all the sports minded people trying to stay in shape.

Image Index

Rate Your First Impression

What kind of first impression do you make when you walk into a roomful of business associates? Are you perceived as authoritative and reliable? Or, are the impressions you leave behind sabotaging your chances of getting ahead?

The "IMAGE INDEX" is designed to enable people to calculate their prospects for getting ahead in situations where first impressions are important. This includes getting a new job, earning a promotion or completing a successful sales presentation.

Recruitment experts tell us there are a number of elements that contribute to an executive's image, including clothes, grooming and various aspects of body language. If one of those elements doesn't fit in with the overall look, it can throw off the person's entire image.

The IMAGE INDEX was developed in conjunction with Donald and Karen Kaufman of Kaufman Professional Image Consultants of Philadelphia. It is based on the likelihood of making the best impression on the greatest number of people in most business and professional situations.

"Too many intelligent, up-and-coming people undermine their best efforts because their overall appearance projects the wrong kind of image," said Karen Kaufman. "The IMAGE INDEX can give people a sense of what they're doing right and wrong," added Donald Kaufman.

The IMAGE INDEX lists 11 elements that make up a person's overall image. One Index is tailored for women and one for men.

After taking the test, you can add up your score, and immediately determine how your image measures up.

Machado Wins All Night Softball Tournament

by Dan Plank

The All-Night Softball Tournament was held Saturday night October 7 after being delayed due to rain the previous weekend. The format of the tournament was double elimination as it has been in previous years. However, some of the rules were changed this year to speed up play.

Perhaps the biggest change was the reduction of the number of outs per inning from the traditional 3 to 2. This rule may have changed the outcome of some of the games. For instance, John Machado's team, the eventual tournament champion, was upset and sent into the losers bracket by Angel Echemendia's team. "If it hadn't been for the two out rule, we probably wouldn't have beat them," said Echemendia.

Another proposed

change was not enforced. The rule in question would have denied home run hitters the reward of circling the bases.

The rain delay imposed another unusual change in play. A section of field B's outfield fencing had to be removed because of flagball season. The fence was replaced with rope for the tournament. Ground balls which rolled under the rope were ruled ground rule doubles. This may have handicapped teams that depended on speedy base running.

These changes and the "Fates of Softball" conspired to produce a night full of surprises and upset victories. One big surprise was Jeff Wood's team eliminating Monterde. During the regular season they had been soundly trounced by Monterde. Chris Gloudeman's team put on an impressive show, winning one game 11 to 4. This is surprising considering that Gloudeman failed to win a single regular season game. "My team was hyped up. We had nothing to lose and the only way to go was up," said Gloudeman.

Another major upset was of a different type altogether. Ben Kessler's team was

Police Investigate Attacks

by Gene Krushinger Jr.

(Due to the sensitivity of this article the names and description of the victims and suspects involved are not included.)

In the wake of a second attack on the campus of Southern College in a four week period, students as well as the community are being careful. Both victims are Southern College students. This brings the number of attacks that have occurred in the last seven months to four.

Collegedale Police Chief Dennis Cramer who has launched a full investigation said that three women reported they were raped while on school grounds. Each victim was grabbed from behind and forced to go to an isolated area. One of the victims managed to escape before being raped. At least two were slightly injured when they tried to fight back.

according to Collegedale police.

No one has been arrested in connection with the sexual attacks but at least one person has been picked up and taken in for questioning. "We do have some suspects," said Cramer, "and things are coming in every day regarding the case."

Cramer said that one of the suspects was identified in a photo line-up but when the victim saw the suspect in person she was not sure if he was the assailant or not.

The Opium of the People

by John Caskey

Constant exposure to dangers will breed contempt for them."

-Seneca

We have no choice but to expose ourselves to danger. Every time we get behind the wheel of a car, we place ourselves in an environment which is statistically more dangerous than any battlefield known to man. As we all know, walking alone on the campus of Southern College at night can be dangerous. Yet we seldom pause to consider the danger inherent in such actions.

I have heard that the baseball fans in San Francisco's Candlestick Park laughed and joked as a first response to Tuesday's earthquake. They have lived so long in the shadow of a killer earthquake that they no longer fear such a tragedy.

As Christians, we constantly face the danger of sin. We even laugh and joke about it sometimes. Yet the danger it poses to us is even more perilous than threats of auto accidents, earthquakes, or the actions of deranged men could ever be. These things can only effect our feeble earthly existence. Sin, on the other hand, places our very souls in peril.

Karl Marx said, "Religion is the opium of the people." He would have us believe that religion dulls our senses, but to say that sin is the opium of the people would be closer to the truth. Through constant exposure to sin we often fail to recognize its dangers.

Bits and Pieces

by David Denton

Six years is a long time on a college campus. A graduate, returning to school for a visit six years later, is likely going to feel a bit out of place. School, life has gone on and forgotten him. His face has been replaced a hundred times over by new, young faces. The hallways he once walked are now recaptured and covered by new, young feet.

Four years, maybe five, usually marks the passing of a student from freshman to graduate. Those who stay longer are considered to be "professional students" in no hurry to leave.

Myself? I've been here going on six years now, only four of those as a student (The rest of the time I've spent catching up on the costs of being a student). I haven't regretted my time here at the college. I've always been able to keep myself busy, sometimes too busy, as my grades can attest.

In my six years at Southern, I've seen a lot of things change. New faces arriving, the Morrises, Mathises, and others; old faces departing, the Wagners, the Christmans, etc. I've seen the demise of buildings that were here and now aren't; like Jones Hall, which became a parking lot. I've seen buildings restored like Lynn Wood; and brand new buildings being constructed, like Brock Hall. This isn't the same school I remember from 1984.

Destiny Drama Co., my one constant over the years, has changed as well. Since I joined the group six years ago, there have been four student directors, counting myself, five or six (depending on who you count) sponsors, nearly fifty different members, hundreds of performances, and thousand of miles of travel. There have been uncountable rewards: new friends, embarrassing moments, items of indescribable unity, and spiritual fulfillment.

Who can understand the absolute stillness that fell on academy audiences as Allan Martin and I finished the last few lines of "It's a Very Cold Night." And what, if not the movement of the Spirit, can explain the reverent contemplation and reflection that invariably followed last year's performances of "Light of the World?"

I have seen the Father working in the lives and ministry of my friends in Destiny.

I have experienced the down side as well. The long van trips, the wrong turns, the poor performances. I've seen members leave in the middle of the year because of personal differences, or poor grades, or because they simply had to rearrange priorities. But through all of the mundane and discouraging, I've learned to love the people.

To me the essence of Destiny's personality is found in people like Kevin Rice, who was director during my first two years and Rochelle Battistone, about whom I like everything. People like Allan Martin, the current director, who is also known as Mr. Vocabulary, and Gary Bradley, whom I wish had been my brother. People like Shannon Born, a beautiful, concerned Christian, and Dawn Patton, to whom we said goodbye with heavy hearts the day she lost her battle with a terminal disease.

But we're working for the Lord, and we are striving to be there when He calls us all home. Dawn included, to be part of that great unending performance of Glory expanding throughout the universe forever.

When that happens, six years won't seem very long at all.

Government Loan Policy Explained to Students

by Izear Feagins

As of August 24, 1989, the U.S. Department of Education is requiring all schools to announce to their students the importance of not defaulting on student loans. Almost a billion dollars worth of loans are currently outstanding. Last month a meeting was held during which S.C.'s financial advisors explained this new policy to students.

When a student borrows money using the Perkins Loan, Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL), Supplemental Loan for Students (SLS), or the Plus Loan, the student must repay the loan. The obligation for repayment after graduation or cessation of enrollment exists regardless of job situation, continuing education, or satisfaction with school.

If he does not make payments, he will then go into default. The default will be reported to credit bureaus and any school he has attended, is attending, or will attend. Also, he could be sued by the government and be made ineligible for future financial aid. Moreover, his state and federal income tax refunds may be withheld or his checks may be garnished. The government gives a student six to nine months to begin his payments. He must continue to repay until paid in full.

If an S.C. student has any questions, he can contact the financial aid office in Wright Hall at 238-2835.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

In the last issue of the Southern Accent, I wrote an article entitled "Campus Rape Prompts Concern." The format was designed to stress the seriousness of the incident. I had hoped that it would be taken seriously by all, and that the tips would be followed.

Monday night, October 9, I was bothered by the news that an attempted rape had taken place Sunday night, October 8. The girl was walking alone at night by the playground at the elementary school.

What needs to be said or done to stress the importance of using common sense? Don't go out at night if you don't have to. If you must be some place, PLEASE take someone with you.

Dear Editor,

As supper hour hostess I would like to express my personal appreciation for your cooperation in maintaining a friendly, responsible, attitude in your lovely dining room away from home.

I receive many positive comments due to your friendly conversations with visiting guests during supper, especially from folks not of our religious persuasion, and Elder Hostel guests.

-Evelyn Moore.

Dear Editor,

I am writing in regards to the recent lead article in the Southern Accent. I think it is good that the story entitled "Campus Rape Prompts Concern" was run since it was the focus on campus for quite some time, but I feel it was written in a totally tasteless manner. It was not necessary to publicize the details of this girl's experience across the entire campus. Think of how she must have felt when she read the article. No one in their right mind would want to find a story about themselves of this nature published in the school newspaper. And really, think about it, these details were not anyone's business.

I feel the appropriate follow-up to this article is a written apology in the next issue of Southern Accent. Let's try to make her life easier, not more difficult.

Sincerely,

Lorena Wolff

Attacks

"It's such a traumatic experience for the girl that often times the description is very vague," explained Cramer who is using the help of Chattanooga authorities to draw a composite photo of the man.

Meanwhile the alert is up. "We've increased our usual patrol quite a bit," Cramer said, "and we'll continue to do so for some time."

According to police reports all the attacks have occurred between 8 p.m. and 10 p.m., and within an eighth of a mile from each other. Also the description of the assailant is similar in all cases. The latest two attacks both happened on a Sunday, two weeks apart.

"One thing we're doing is checking out any and all leads," Cramer said. "At least until we can prove otherwise."

Dean of Students, Bill Wohlers, said the administration is trying to speed up the program of improving lighting on the campus and is encouraging the organization of a student escort service.

"Our concern is the physical safety of all the students," said Wohlers regarding the recent attacks. "We can try to protect ourselves and others," he added, "since we can't apprehend the person ourselves."

Cramer also discourages students from attempting to apprehend or "catch" the rapist. He said it could ruin the case because of technicalities involving the rights of the accused.

Cramer warns students to be careful. "Stay in lighted areas," he said. "No matter what you're doing, act like you're going somewhere. Statistics show that you will be less likely to be accosted if you follow these suggestions."

The Collegedale police department is encouraging anyone with information to report it.

Journalism Club Elects Officers

Tamara Michalenko

The Journalism department has formed a new Journalism Club for all majors and/or minors in public relations or journalism. There are 19 charter members. Officers have been elected. Their names are below, as well as the offices they hold, with a brief sketch of their accomplishments.

President: Randall Gilliam. Randall is a junior journalism major from Florida. He previously attended Seminole Community College. There he served as co-editor and reported for SCC's Journey Magazine. Randall feels that the Journalism Club has a great future and encourages anyone interested in journalism or public relations to join.

Vice-President: Jim King. Jim is a senior public relations major. He has attended SC for two years. During that time he has been a student missionary in Taiwan and an account executive at WSMC. Currently, he is the promotions assistant for the radio station. Jim enjoys photography, layout, and talking with diverse types of people.

Treasurer: Andrea Nicholson. Andrea is a junior public relations major with a minor in business. She is currently working in the public relations office at SC. Her responsibilities include writing press releases for local papers such as the Chattanooga Times, News Free Press, and East Hamilton County Journal. Andrea is also a regular reporter for the Southern Accent.

Secretary: Tammy Wolcott. Tammy is a junior public relations major from Florida. She has attended SC for three years since she graduated from Forest Lake Academy in 1987.

Tammy has been a feature editor and news reporter for the Southern Accent, covering McKee Library. Also, she was a photographer for the 1989 Strawberry Festival.

Modern Language Department Offers Adventures Abroad

by Suzanne Lettrick

Southern College is a student's ticket to experience foreign countries.

If interested in traveling, a student might want to consider American Colleges Abroad. ACA is an association of eleven North American SDA colleges and universities, including Southern, which gives students a chance to study in other countries while continuing their home college programs.

Laura Putnam, a junior who went to France with ACA, said, "I think it's a growing experience. Everyone should take the opportunity to spend time abroad because it changes the perspective on life."

Although this program especially benefits those who want to major in a language and/or are majoring in the humanities area, people with other majors are welcome, too.

When a student decides to go to a foreign college under the ACA plan, he has a choice of three colleges. Fees for these colleges, including tuition, room, and board, are paid through Southern College.

While away, the student is still considered a member of Southern College.

If interested in the ACA program, see Dr. Helmut Ott or go to the admissions or records office. Students should apply the spring previous to the year that they want to go.

Another travel opportunity for students, which is not yet fully approved, is hosted by the Modern Languages department.

Helmut Ott, chairman of this department, has received permission from Southern College to take intermediate level Spanish students to Mexico to take the Spanish II course.

If plans work out, the students will be staying at the SDA University of Montemorelos and will be taught by Dr. Ott.

Ott said the only thing that needs to be done before these plans are definite is to get the OK from the university in Mexico.

If approved, the program will begin this summer and last for approximately six to eight weeks—six weeks for school and two weeks for sightseeing. Only ten to twelve students will be allowed to go on this trip.

The cost for the program is not settled, but the final cost will include tuition for six hours credit, room and board in the university dorms, and traveling costs.

Ott said that the trip will be "A good opportunity (for the students) to sharpen their Spanish speaking skills and to become familiar with Spanish customs."

Expository Writing Class to be Added This Spring

Advanced Expository Writing, a new upper division three-hour writing class, will be introduced next semester. Designed for students headed for professional careers such as medicine, law or business, or for anyone wishing to sharpen writing skills, the class will be taught to meet the needs and interests of the particular students who enroll.

David Smith, English Dept. chairman, said the class helps fill a "huge gap in the curriculum."

"In the past, no instruction in expository writing has been provided beyond college composition," he said. "Any student planning to enter a job where writing skills are important would find this course invaluable."

Pam Harris, of the Journalism and Communications Dept., will teach the course. She has written for a wide variety of publications.

"Students can expect a workshop format," she said about teaching style. "We will read and analyze a variety of writing—especially periodicals in the fields of individual students."

"Producing a piece of writing for publication will be one of the projects of the course," she said.

Because of its interdisciplinary nature, the course is creating enthusiasm among many departments across the campus.

"This class should be required of all upper-division students," Smith said.

Tentatively scheduled for 2 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday, the class is limited to 15 students.

Journalism Department Offers Second Semester Seminar

Dan Rather, Sam Donaldson, Edna Buchanan, and Linda Ellerbee will make appearances in the Journalism Department's Seminar Room second semester, according to chairman R. Lynn Sauls.

"Not in person, but in their best-seller books," he said. "The entire Journalism faculty and students who register for the one-credit course, Communicator's Bookshelf, will meet six evenings during the semester to discuss the books selected."

Sauls will lead the first discussion of Pulitzer prize winner Edna Buchanan's The Course Had a Familiar Face.

The book is an account of police reporting for the Miami Herald.

Pam Harris will lead the discussion on Sam Donaldson's Hold on Mr. President!, Frances Andrews on Linda Ellerbee's And So It Goes, Volker Henning on Dan Rather's The Camera Never Blinks, and Sauls on the Poynter Institute's anthology of prize-winning pieces, Best Newspaper Writing of 1988.

The course has two purposes, said Sauls. "To provide opportunity for students to read some well-written books about communicators and communicating and to give them a chance to interact with teachers and classmates in discussing the content, meaning, and significance of some books important to the field of communication."

Communicator's Bookshelf is open to students who are not in the department, said Sauls, but space priority will be given to broadcast, news-editorial, and public relations majors and minors. "The ideal number for this kind of course is eight to 12," he said. "But we will allow up to 15."

Students who want to reserve a place should sign up at the Department of Journalism and Communication in Brock Hall.

English Club Views Shakespearian Comedy

by Sheila Draper

The English Club held its first official function on Saturday night, October 14. About forty-five people from Southern attended the Shakespearian production of "Twelfth Night." The play centers on a twin brother and sister who are separated in a shipwreck and eventually reunited after a series of mishaps. It was presented by the North Carolina Shakespeare Festival at the UTC Fine Arts Center. David Smith, English Club sponsor, said, "I thought the characters were very well-cast. I especially enjoyed hearing Shakespeare's songs put to music. Sometimes that isn't often presented."

Amanda Sheffield, who also attended, commented, "I thought Malvolio (one of the characters) was very well-cast. This was my first Shakespearian play and I was very impressed."

Karen Alvarez continued, "I really like the stage setting. It was simple but versatile. The plot was easy to follow, too."

Rick Mann remarked that even though he had seen the play before, seeing it again had been very enjoyable.

Overall, those who attended seemed to have a good time. Having such a high-caliber performance available to us in the Chattanooga area was very rewarding.

extremely upset when it was forced to forfeit both of its games. Keppler was unable to attend the tournament and not enough of his players showed up to field a team.

Machado was the acknowledge favorite going into the tournament. His team won the tournament the past two years and was undefeated during the regular season. Despite the untimely loss to Echemedia, Machado defeated Hayes twice in the finals to win the championship. Thus, he is able to claim back to back to back championships, something his beloved Lakers have been unable to accomplish.

The tournament ended about 3:30 a.m. Sunday morning, leaving the victors to celebrate and the vanquished to plan for next year's revenge. The general consensus according to participants was that the tournament went well. Tensions were high, upsets were abundant, play was of high quality and everyone enjoyed the competition. Everyone, that is, except Keppler's team.

"I was a stone-cold atheist in Viet Nam," DeGraw said. "I knew more about Buddha than Jesus."

He said as a prisoner he was blind, bald, and looked like a survivor of the Nazi death camp Auschwitz. "I knew I was going to die in that cage."

Invited to the White House to lunch with then President Jimmy Carter, DeGraw was decorated for heroism in combat and for valor for his work in the Middle East.

He was also nominated for the Congressional Medal of Honor by his commanding officer and received the Army Commendation.

"I went to Southeast Asia for my class trip," he jokes. "I'm not the likely person God would present Himself to."

DeGraw said his purpose for telling his story is to "Lift up the Greatness of the Lord, His love and His forgiveness, and His willingness to provide salvation for everyone regardless of what you have done."

SM Writes from Puerto Rico

by Laura Mann

Do you like adventure, traveling, and hours of hard-work? If yes, I have the perfect job for you—be a student missionary.

For instance, I came to Puerto Rico two months ago to be an English teacher, but when I arrived I found another surprise. I was going to teach the two subjects I hated the most "math and science." What an adventure!

Besides unexpected surprises an SM gets a chance to travel to many places. Although Puerto Rico is a small island, there are lots of beautiful places to see. I found the beaches quite nice.

Finally, you have all the hard-work of teaching thirty, hyper-active children. But, even after you've screamed and punished them, they still come and give you a nice big hug.

This is my life as an SM in Puerto Rico. Come join in the fun, doing God's work.

Just for the Health of It

by Darlene Almeda, R.N.

Q: Is there a sure cure for acne?

A: The phrase "sure cure" is pretty powerful. First let's discuss what acne is. Acne vulgaris occurs when the ducts of the sebaceous (oil) glands get plugged with bacteria, sebum (oil), and dead cells. When this material is oxidized it takes on a black color. This is not dirt. We call them blackheads or comedos. Pimples will then form when continuous pressure from the oil breaks through the walls of the ducts and escapes into the tissue to cause swelling and redness. Scarring takes place depending on the extent of damage to the duct.

As far as acne control is concerned you will be relieved to learn that no relation has been made between acne and diet. So if you do not mind the fat, sodium, sugar, calories and chemicals in junk foods go right ahead. But do remember that a balanced diet is the key to health maintenance. Nevertheless, allergies to chocolate look very similar if not identical to acne. So if you break-out after eating chocolate products take the possibilities of allergic reactions into consideration. Also hormone imbalances will affect oil production thus increasing the risk for acne. This may be triggered by stress, puberty, and menstruation.

Frequent and vigorous scrubbing and washing of affected area should be avoided especially during the cold and dry winter months. Once or twice a day with a mild soap will suffice. Also abstain from squeezing pimples. Yes, I know I am asking alot from you but this may cause permanent scarring and further infection. Another vital factor, ladies, is make-up. By trying to cover up pimples with make-up and concealer you may be aggravating matters because of their oil base. If you absolutely cannot do without make-up give water based cosmetics a try.

Useful medications include antibiotics. These must be prescribed to you by your physician not your roommate's cousin who just happens to have some left-over from his pubescent years. Retin-A is another frequently used prescription medicine which suppresses the sebaceous glands and yields and anti-inflammatory effect. Widely known over-the-counter remedies such as those containing benzoin peroxide will help increase the rate of new cell growth thus aiding the dead ones to slough off. All these methods of control should be supervised and approved of by your physician or dermatologist.

And last but not least be aware of the fact that acne is not related to uncleanness, dietary discrepancies nor aberrant social behavior as much of the uneducated public wishes to believe. Now you know better.

Q: Which is better for you: walking or jogging?

A: Walking and jogging have both been labeled as great forms of cardiovascular exercise. Yet many authorities agree that between the two, walking is the better. The main reason for this conclusion is that walking does not jar the ankles, knees, or hips as jogging does. Our joints were not designed to receive the high impact caused by each bounding step in a job. Have you heard of low impact aerobics? Well, walking holds the same principle that doing the optimal amount of cardiovascular and high endurance exercise with the lowest risk of injury or damage to the joints.

Walking is indeed an aerobic exercise. I am not referring to the leisurely strolls one takes at the mall but rather to a brisk walk with arms swinging at the sides and torso aligned with the legs. To make the most of your walks and to get maximum cardiac results, authorities suggest that you walk for 30 minutes 3-5 times each week. The regularity, my friend, is the key. One can only reach his highest level of health through regular exercising.

Because walking is aerobic it will burn not only fat on your legs but throughout the entire body. When walking, the back and abdomen get an excellent workout by keeping aligned with the legs. Since mile for mile jogging burns only 20% more calories than brisk walking, why take the risk of joint injury when a good brisk walk will do the job? Regardless of which one you choose to do, walking or jogging, remember not to do it after dark or by yourselves, ladies.

S.C. Students Affected by Hurricane

by Andrea Nicholson

For many of us, it was just another newscast and one more disaster report to add to the countless number we hear daily. But to several Southern College students, hurricane Hugo meant personal disaster and devastation.

Alinda Martin, whose home on the island of St. Croix was among those that were damaged by Hugo on September 17, said she heard about the hurricane on the news.

"The bad winds and rain started about 2 o'clock in the afternoon," she said. "By 6 o'clock, all the phone lines were down, and I couldn't get through."

Dean Rose tried to contact the island by phone to find out any information about the families of the ladies in Thatchter, but she couldn't get through, either.

Alinda said she worried constantly and looked at the news every day for some clue of how much damage the hurricane had done to the island where her family lives.

It was two weeks after the hurricane struck that Alinda finally talked to her family. Her mother had tried to get through to her sooner, but there were long lines to the only phone in the area.

"I can't really explain it. You have to see it to believe it," her mother said of the damage to the island. "People are running out of food, and every house has something wrong with it."

Alinda's house was located on a high elevation of the island, so her family didn't evacuate. She said her parents and brother watched as the roof was blown off three quarters of the house. They had to bail water out the windows as it rose inside.

"Compared to the other homes, our damage was minor," Alinda said. Her father is a carpenter, so he will be able to repair their house.

Alinda's mother, who worked for the bus company, will be out of work for some time. The hurricane destroyed all the schools, and it will be a long time before they can be rebuilt.

Dahlia Hodge called home early that Sunday morning when she heard the hurricane was going to hit near her home. Her family didn't think it would do much damage in the area where they live, so she and her sister, Juliet, didn't worry at first.

But when news reports told them the damage to the island was extensive, the two sisters said they just cried and prayed that their families and homes would be spared.

It was two weeks before they heard from their mother. "I started screaming when she called," said Dahlia.

The Hodge's live in an apartment near the sea, so their family had to evacuate to a shelter during the storm. Dahlia said her mother was injured when the shelter caved in, and her brother got food poisoning from the canned foods that were provided.

The winds shattered the glass windows in their apartment, and the furniture was blown all over the rooms. Juliet said their apartment will be repaired and her family can move back in, but they lost all their belongings in the hurricane.

Daphney Ramsey also lives on St. Croix. She talked to her family a week after Hugo struck her home. The roof blew off her house while her mom, stepdad, and little brother and sister huddled in the closet for protection. "It sounded like a bomb when the roof went," her mother said.

Daphney's stepdad fixed the roof, and she said an insurance agent will be coming soon to assess the damage. She will be going home for Christmas.

There were more S.C. students whose homes were damaged in the hurricane. They said they were all a support for each other during the weeks following the storm, watching the news, crying, and praying. All are thankful that their families are alive, and they continue to pray that their island home will slowly be restored.

UTC Professor to Address Journalism Club

by Tamara R. Michalenco

The Journalism Club will hear Tom Griscom on Thursday, October 26. He was formerly in charge of communication and planning at the White House during former President Reagan's first term.

Griscom is currently holder of the West Chair of Excellence in Communication and public Affairs at UTC. He will speak on crisis communication including Exxon, Tylenol, Eastern Airlines DC10, his function at UTC, and Dan Quayle.

"Everyone is welcome to attend, but reservations need to be made.

There is a sign up sheet at the Journalism department," encourages Randall Gilliam, President of the Journalism Club. Sign up by Thursday, October 19.

Griscom will speak at Churchill's restaurant. Hors d'oeuvres will be served at 5:30 p.m. Griscom will begin his presentation at about 6 p.m.

Transportation will not be provided. If you will be needing a ride, indicate so on the sign up sheet.

There is no charge. The event is sponsored by the Chattanooga chapter of the International Associate of Business Communicators

Missionary Relates Chinese Experience

by Julie Jacobs

Towering head and shoulders above the rest, Peter Luchak, 6'2", has a unique view of the people of China. Having lived in the People's Republic of China for only 15 months, he stated during the assembly program on October 12 that he is ready to go back.

Sponsored by Eden Valley Institute of Colorado, Luchak was commissioned to teach at an English language school. March of 1988 found Luchak and his wife, Rachel, at Yanbian Teacher's College.

Situated in the northeast corner of China, Yanbian Teacher's College is found in the city of Yanji. This small city with the a population of 250,000 is part of the Korean Autonomous Region which encourages Korean independence. The two-year government college for training high-school level English teachers has 100 students.

The Luchak's stay in China was short-lived since they were sent home last June. The Democracy movement at Beijing made it unsafe for them to stay. Five days after the Tiananmen Square Riot, the Luchak's packed their bags and flew to the United States.

The Luchak's are anti-rating their return to China. On November 7, the family will fly back to China, to complete the work they've started.

Foreigners have not always been allowed to live in China. The Luchaks feel privileged to be allowed to serve in this country. "The thing I am most impressed with," said Luchak, "is the friendliness and openness of the Chinese people."

Besides teaching classes in English, the Luchaks plan to set up a Health Reconditioning Center. The people are curious to discover the health message practiced by the Luchak family. Healthy eating habits and personal cleanliness are not always practiced by the Chinese.

The arrival of the Luchak's first child, Ellen, born in July, 1988, aroused the curiosity of many. Many questioned Rachel's care of the child. They marvelled that the child grew despite the fact she wasn't fed meat and kept heavily bundled.

"Out of the 1.4 billion people who live in China, only 60,000 are estimated to be Seventh-day Adventists," said Luchak. "There's a lot of work to do, and we just want to do our part."

The Southern Accent/McDonald's Trivia Quiz

The Southern Accent and McDonald's have joined forces to present this new feature. In every issue you will find five trivia questions. The first five correct entries received in the Accent office will win a free meal at McDonald's consisting of a Large Sandwich or Entree Salad, Large Fries and a Large drink. Entries will be judged every day at 10:00 p.m. In the event that more than five correct entries are received on the same day the winners will be determined by a random drawing. Should no entries with all the correct answers be received within seven days of the date of publication, the entries with the most correct answers will be declared winners. Members of the Southern Accent Staff, their families, significant others and pets are ineligible.

This weeks trivia questions:

Destiny: Makes Christianity Fun

by Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

This time the stage was desolate. The rows of seats in the auditorium were empty except the first few where the actors sat. The lights were turned up and the strings of the guitar played lightly to the singing voices of those present. A lively worship talk began and a rehearsal followed. It was 7:00 p.m. on a Thursday night—time for the 90 minutes practice for members of the Destiny Drama Company.

Southern College's drama group was started by two students and campus ministries in 1979, making this year its 10th anniversary. Through Christian theatrical arts the group tries to convey the pertinence, power, and personality of Jesus and His gospel. It has performed throughout the southeastern United States at academies, colleges, youth rallies, the streets of Gatlinburg, and Hamilton Place Mall in Chattanooga. "Destiny is probably one of the more recognized Christian theatrical groups in the denomination," says director Allan Martin.

Martin and the audition committee, which is made up of faculty specifically from the speech and English departments and C.A.R.E. ministries, chose this year's 15 members. The group is limited to 15 members because it is a "very functional number," says Martin. This makes the audition committee's job very difficult because "There are a lot of talented people on this campus." Members are eventually chosen because of good citizenship records and good academic standings. The committee also observes each auditioning student's display of commitment and dedication.

Each week for 90 minutes the members meet in Lynn Wood Hall to take care of business matters and to rehearse for upcoming performances. Because Destiny is an outreach ministry, it schedules off campus performances twice a month. This explains why they rarely perform on campus.

Tricia Green who joined Destiny for the first time this year says she wanted to be a part of Destiny because it "Makes Christianity look fun." Destiny offers each member something special. Rochelle Battistone who has been a member for three years says, "The one thing I like about Destiny are the friends I make." For David Denton, who has been in Destiny for six years, it has been the source of emotional growth, "The unity you have with fourteen different people who love the Lord just rubs off on you," says Denton. Destiny has also provided sharpen his creative writing skills. This year's home show will be written and directed by Denton and George Turner. Denton adds that when the group first began, all of the material was original but gradually the group stopped writing original skits; however, this year "Hopefully we will have an original play for the home show."

Destiny is financed solely through C.A.R.E. ministries. Public Relations and other exposure has helped it financially. The group also receives a stipend for traveling accommodations and expenses. The group's tour advisor is Elder Jim Herman, and its administrative sponsor is Dr. Don Dick.

During the mid-term break Destiny will perform at Andrews University, in the Pioneer Memorial Church and in the Crossroads Sabbath school. There, the seats will fill with an audience. The lights will dim. The stage will come alive as Destiny presents the Holy Spirit though its dramatic abilities and Christian commitment.

Community Service Center Aids Hurricane Victims

by Kerri Healey

The Seventh-day Adventist Community Service Center works with other Chattanooga area agencies and denominations to help people in need. Although it's services are mainly devoted eastern Chattanooga, they were recently extended to residents of Bishopville, South Carolina.

On September 22, Hurricane Hugo struck the South Carolina coastline with full fury. Charleston was devastated, and many surrounding cities received considerable damage. A tornado emerged from the storm and flattened the town of Bishopville, population 3,500. According to Lee County administrator Barry Hickman, 589 homes were severely damaged, and another 102 were beyond repair. The tornado caught up many mobile homes, and scattered them about. 236 of them were destroyed, and 214 suffered major damage. All of the major businesses in town displayed moderate to severe damage. The cotton crop was spread far and wide giving the fields a snow covered appearance.

When the news of this calamity reached Chattanooga, many people pulled together to prepare necessary relief for the victims. The Adventist Community Service Center was chosen as the central point to bring the supplies. Channel 12 News and WDEF picked up the story, and appealed to the public for food, paper products, and other needed materials. The response seemed slow at first, but as the days passed, the provisions began to pour in. Some volunteers stood at the doors to help bring in the donations, while others organized and boxed the supplies. The names, addresses, and goods were recorded. Even with all the commotion, there still appeared to be an atmosphere of order, as each volunteer did his or her job tirelessly and cheerfully.

At the beginning of the last week in September, the upstairs classroom at the Adventist Community Service Center exhibited only one lonely pile of donations. However, as the days went by, the pile increased, so that by the middle of the next week, the once vast expanse of floor space was now covered with a tremendous mountain of boxes.

In order to lessen the confusion when the workers arrived at their destination, each box of goods was prepared to supply adequate food for a specific number of days.

After a week of fast-paced organization, vans from Southern College and the Adventist Community Center

Greater Love Hath No Man Than This . . .

by David Wingate

"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

I met Jesus at a confused stage of my adolescence. I did not desire to be close to him for we had nothing in common. But He persisted and showed me letters He had written.

Through these writings I found the love, counseling, and generosity of Jesus Christ—who has completely changed my world.

On the road to self-destruction, I found detoured through His compassion. Unlike other friends, Jesus was not shy about expressing love.

He shows me adoration through His patience and warmth-heartedness. On occasions I will push Him aside, and though this must hurt, He always seems to understand.

Whenever I am in a bind, my Friend and I determine plausible solutions. His amazing wisdom helps to keep my life on steady ground.

Through His counsel, I have come to love and forgive my enemies. During my childhood my stepfather and I did not get along. Many times I expressed hatred toward him. But a Presence comforted me and silenced my cries of anguish. I learned that this Presence was the warm embrace of my dearest Companion, Jesus Christ. He taught me to behold others with eyes of compassion.

Along with this new outlook, my Friend has given me many more cherished gifts. He helped me to purchase a car, handed me money in times of need, provided me with resourceful books, and at present is helping to finance my education. His extreme generosity has prompted me to pursue the same quality.

My greatest gift from Jesus puzzles me, but I know He sacrificed a lot for it. I committed a crime—one deserving of death. He, however, was innocent and worthy of eternal life. But my Best Friend took my place! He paid the price of death and suffering for me. Thus, I became guiltless and no longer required execution. He gave me life and told me this gift was for everyone.

Many years have passed, but our friendship grows stronger. I continue to learn and depend upon Jesus and try to introduce Him to others. If you are not yet acquainted with my Friend, I know He desires your company. Call on His name. He is eager to express His love and heal your heartaches. Surely, greater love hath no man than this...!"

Earthquake Shakes West Coast Students

By Steve Stilson

Claire Gonzalez, an 18 year-old Business major at Pacific Union College, chats with her friend Darren Dee as he drives onto the lower level of the San Francisco Bay Bridge.

The time is 5:03 p.m.

They had attended PUC's SA Fall Picnic that day in Golden Gate Park, and had left early to go shopping in San Francisco. Just that morning, Claire had said she didn't feel a part of any big events in the world.

Suddenly the car swerved out of control. Claire glanced up in time to see a wall fall in front of them. "It took me a few seconds to figure out that this wall, which I hadn't seen before, was the bridge!" she says.

The time is 5:04 p.m.

Darren pulled over and stopped, saying "It's an earthquake!"

Angelica Fisher, the passenger in the back seat, got out and ran ahead. She saw water spraying up from a broken water main. "I really thought the bridge was sinking," she says. "I thought 'This is it, guys!' Let's get out of here now!" she screamed. They grabbed everything out the car and sprinted back to Treasure Island, the island in the middle of San Francisco Bay. There another aftershock hit them. Angelica thought about the people that were important to her. "Oh man! I really didn't get to say good-bye!"

In another vehicle, Camille Hogaboam, a junior nursing student and sister of Walla Walla College senior Jeffrey

Grammy Nominee Phipps to Perform

By Andrea Nicholson

The Collegedale Church will house some powerful preachin' and gospel singin' on Thursday, November 16, when Wintley Phipps visits Southern College.

"He's very dynamic and good with young people," said Craig Lastine, Student Association president. Lastine invited Phipps to Southern after hearing him speak at an Adventist Intercollegiate Association National Leadership Convention in Washington, D.C. last April.

Phipps will speak at the Student Association's 11 a.m. assembly program in the church November 16. That evening, Phipps will perform a sacred musical concert in the church at 7 p.m.

A 1988 Grammy Award Nominee, Phipps has performed before audiences across the United States, Europe, Australia, the Caribbean, and Africa. He accompanied Jess Jackson on his peace-seeking mission to several countries in Southern Africa in August, 1986.

Phipps became acquainted with Black American Gospel during his college days in Alabama. It was then that he first began writing Gospel music.

Since earning a Master's of Divinity degree from Andrews University, Phipps has devoted his life to reaching out to mankind. His life-long love for music has evolved into a unique multi-cultural form of Gospel music he both writes and performs.

Born in Trinidad, West Indies, Phipps grew up in Montreal, Quebec. He currently lives in Columbia, Maryland with his wife, Linda, and two sons, Wintley II and Winston. He is the pastor of the Capitol Hill Seventh-day Adventist Church in Washington, D.C.

Editors Note:

Until about 4:30 a.m. EST, this was the best issue of the Accent put out to date.

At that time, a series of incredible human errors and even more incredible computer failures resulted in the complete, total and irrevocable loss of the entire sports page. I wish to express my sincere apologies to Jim King, our new Sports Editor, and to all those interested in the sports section. You may crucify me at will.

David Denton's: Bits and Pieces

In the last issue of the Accent there appeared a letter to the editor written by a disgruntled reader. This reader's main concern, if I understood her correctly, was the free use of details in the report on the rapes that have occurred recently on campus.

Now, unlikely as it seems, the letter has been read and considered thoughtfully by the Accent staff. In an effort to forestall any further criticism of their handling of sensitive news stories the Editor and his assistants have agreed to drop all details from any future news articles that might be offensive to someone.

I applaud this decision as a dynamic step forward in reporter-reader relations. As an intrepid (if I do say so) reporter myself, I have uncovered a working model of the style of writing we are likely to see in future Accents. As a public service, I am reprinting this model for you, thereby promoting even stronger reporter-reader relations. Mind you, this is only a model, and it may or may not refer to any particular event.

Something Happened, Somewhere

Someone today reported to an unnamed source that something had happened to someone at an unknown site between the hours of 12 a.m. and 12 midnight.

It is still unclear as to whether the event was good or bad, but unconfirmed reports indicate that someone was either apprehended or not apprehended. Someone is at work on the case, if indeed something did happen.

The person in charge of the investigation was quoted as saying that due to the nature of the event that might or might not have happened, a "certain class of people should refrain from certain activities during certain times of day."

In an effort to clarify the confusion surrounding this unconfirmed possibility of an incident which might have been good or bad, an official with a certain amount of authority from an institution involved in some way with the potentially positive or negative occurrence spoke to an approximate number of people who were involved with the institution which was involved in some way with the incident.

No names have been released due to concern for the families of those affected by the event.

At the end of each story, the editors plan to insert a disclaimer which will read as follows:

It is the sincere hope of this paper that the preceding article did not offend any of our readers. If you found this article too detailed please feel free to let us know.

The Southern Accent is the official student newspaper for Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists and is released every other Thursday during the school year with the exception of exam weeks and vacations. Opinions expressed in the Southern Accent are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the editors, Southern College, the Seventh-day Adventist church, or the advertisers.

The Southern Accent welcomes your letters which must contain the writer's name, address, and phone number. Letters will be edited for space and clarity. All letters must have the writer's name and phone number for verification, although names may be withheld at the author's request. The editor reserves the right to reject any letter. The deadline for letters is the Friday before publication of noon. Place letters under the door of the Accent office in the Student Center or mail to: Southern College, Southern Accent, P.O. ## A Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Dissection has become a painful dilemma for many students and professors who object to killing or mutilating animals. The Animal Legal Defense Fund, a non-profit organization, has launched a national campaign to advise students and professors about alternatives to dissecting frogs, rabbits, cats, fetal pigs and other animals in the classroom.

A Dissection Information Hotline, 1-800-922-FROG (3764), provides callers with information on educational alternatives to dissection, guidelines for negotiating with college officials, and suggestions for overcoming obstacles students may face as they exercise their legal rights.

A free Student Handbook outlines an eight-step plan to help students "say no" to dissection and includes a list of alternative teaching aids.

I encourage you to investigate Joyce Tischler the issue of animal dissection on your own campus and to alert your readers to the availability of the hotline to help them find alternatives to dissection.

Animal dissection has been controversial for many years, but the issue gained great prominence two years ago when teenager Jenifer Graham refused to dissect a frog in her high school biology class. Jenifer's experience, resulted in a state law giving students in grades kindergarten-12 the right to refuse to dissect.

Biology, physiology and anatomy should be life sciences, not death sciences. But dissection teaches students that animal life is expendable and unimportant. All students have the right to study animal life without desecrating it.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Food Fair Draws Crowd

by Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

The aroma of festive food greeted the guests at the door as they came to participate in the sampling of foods from around the world. On Sunday, October 29, the annual International Food Fair was held in the Spalding Elementary gym. Vendors composed of students and local church members situated themselves behind small booths and sold a variety of foods typical to the particular country their booth represented. At the Mexican booth, guests could purchase a plate of rice and black beans and a crispy burrito. Italy offered a helping of spaghetti and salad with a piece of garlic bread. The Orient offered a sizeable plate of fried rice, noodles and wontons. For those who were more adventurous, India was selling curry and rice. But for those who couldn't break themselves away from good 'ole American food, the Western American booth had tasty corn-on-the-cob dripping with butter and seasoned with a pinch of salt. The Islands provided an oasis if pina colada or fruit punch drinks for the tender palate not yet used to the hot spices of other countries. If some guests were not yet filled to their brim the Dutch and the Danish had something real sweet. Large danishes and assorted cakes could be purchased from the Danish or a heaping scoop of soft serve ice-cream topped with popular toppings could be bought from the Dutch. For some, this was still not enough. After finishing his entree' and desert, Wayne Stevenson, a sophomore at Southern, got up and began round two. "It was a real international experience," he said. Others were more conservative their first time around and purchased food from two selected booths and came back later in the day and bought their supper from two other booths. Others sampled one of everything all in one meal.

While guests sauntered slowly around to each booth soft pan flutes played in the background. The first piece of live entertainment was performed by Jackie James who accompanied himself on the piano singing the theme song, "All Are Precious." Edwin Disla received a lively applaud for the romantic Spanish song entitled, "Promise Love." Shannon Born who coordinated the entertainment said it was all performed by students from Southern.

The annual International Food Fair is sponsored by the local SDA churches. Each sponsor is requested to bear all the costs of representing a country and providing the food. The money received from each booth is then donated to a fund for Student Missionaries at Southern College. Arleen Tolentino who is ## Toradze, Bravo!

On Tuesday evening, October 24, Ackerman auditorium welcomed highly acclaimed, Russian pianist Alexander Toradze.

His concert program included selections from Ravel, Mussorgsky, Babadjanian, and Scarlatti, all of which he played with high emotional intensity. The audience received his interpretations of these pieces enthusiastically, and invited Toradze back onto the stage for several encores.

Toradze, a Soviet defector, has won numerous international contests including the prestigious Van Cliburn Competition. He has appeared with virtually every major North American orchestra.

Born in 1952 in Tbilisi, Georgia, U.S.S.R., Toradze has not returned to the Soviet Union since August, 1983, when he went to Spain on tour with the Bolshoi Symphony Orchestra of Moscow. At that time, the pianist made a spontaneous decision to remain in the West and was granted asylum for two months at the American Embassy in Madrid. Since his arrival in New York in October, 1983, Mr. Toradze has made his home near Manhattan's Lincoln Center.

the coordinator of the fair said that the money is given to student missionaries who are raising funds for their air fares. "If there is any money lacking for their air fares, the fund makes up the difference, this money is for them," said Tolentino.

Dennis Golightly who went to South Korea three years ago received $75 toward his air fare as a result of the funds from the International Food Fair. "The fair," says Cheryl Magnant, a returned student missionary, "really rakes in the dough."

Behind the booths of strong smelling cuisine, students, church members, CMC, and the International Club, busily worked on keeping the platters of food replenished. Meanwhile guests, who themselves represented different nationalities from the local area and the college, flittered back and forth, torn between their favorite booths.

New Marketing Program Seeking Majors

By Suzanne Lettrick

The business department wants people to inquire about the new full marketing program, which offers a BAA in marketing.

Although the program has been going since the beginning of fall, not many people have heard about it because it was added after the course catalog was published.

Cliff Olson, the new business teacher, said that he hopes more students will look into this program.

There are now 15 marketing majors.

One reason he thinks people should inquire is that it will help people in every career because "People always have to market themselves...everyone should take a marketing course." He quoted Fortune magazine saying, "Out of the Fortune 500 companies, more chief executive officers come from a marketing background than any other area in business."

"More CEO's come from a Marketing background than any other."

Olson said the field of marketing is "a hot area for students. The forecast is for the job outlook to increase."

Among careers that can be reached by majoring in marketing are advertising, marketing management, market research, and sales.

"Marketing courses will give students experience in the field," Olson said. In the marketing management course the students will do a real marketing plan for a real business," and in the sales management course, the students are video taped to see how they can improve their selling skills.

Within a year there will be a total of eight marketing courses offered. Olson, who has his masters in marketing, and Vinita Sauder, a new teacher, make up the marketing faculty.

For more information about the marketing program see Cliff Olson.

C.A.R.E. Week Appreciated by All

Often, during the hectic days of sleeping, working, and studying, many students don't get the chance to let their friends and acquaintances know how much they are appreciated. C.A.R.E. Week gave everyone the opportunity to let others know just how special they are.

Monday was Balloon Day, and one could see brightly colored balloons printed with "We Care" dancing above backpacks and book bags. Many of the orange colored balloons were decorated as floating jack-o-lanterns with comical faces bringing smiles and stares from passersby. The balloons were also used as an innovative way of sending a message to a fellow student.

Tuesday brought about another way of expressing appreciation: flowers. It was neat to see the bright carnations given around campus. In fact, one student had bought a carnation to share with "anyone who looks like he needs to be cheered up a little."

Wednesday was C.A.R.E. Day, and it gave everyone the opportunity to send a little note of cheer to someone. "I think it's great that we can have something that encourages everyone to participate, since almost everyone has someone he appreciates," noted one freshman.

Thursday gave students the excuse to share their thoughts with buttons. Students chose and designed the buttons, and John Lazor and Ed Santana snapped the buttons together.

Friday was Warm Fuzzie Day, and it was great, according to one freshman, because "It gave me a chance to give people hugs." Another freshman was quick to add, "I thought it was a great idea since I'm a firm believer in hug therapy"

"I think it's great to show friends that you care about them and not have a special reason for having to, like a birthday or illness," Sandi Floyd reflected as she fondly smiled at the latest picture her boyfriend had drawn for her.

"I thought the flowers and balloons were the best ideas because you could give them to people and cheer them up while you also let them know you value their friendship," said Kevin Wright when he was asked what his favorite day was.

Overall, C.A.R.E. Week was enjoyed by both the givers and the receivers. Whether it be a flower, hug, balloon or a card, it seems that people enjoy being appreciated - no matter what week it happens to be.

Illuminating 'This Present Darkness'

By Andrew C. Nash

For most, this past Halloween was a time for thrills, trick-or-treating, and games; however, for devil worshippers, it was a ninth Halloween, prompting thousands of sacrifices to Satan across the nation. You can bet it was a festive night for demons everywhere, including those in the Chattanooga area...

Much of this information was given by former Satan-worshiper, Eileen (last name withheld) during a seminar in Orlando, Florida, several weeks ago. According to Eileen, who made her first sacrifice at age five, every ninth Halloween all of the devil's followers are expected to "celebrate" the occasion by making a human sacrifice. Eileen used to play a major role in these horrifying ceremonies. Then she met Jesus.

At the seminar, an audience of Orlando residents, including several Adventist school teachers, was astonished to hear that Eileen had been given, from Satan, the power to see demons and angels. When asked if she could see demons and angels in the meeting room, Eileen hesitated and then responded, "Yes."

The demons are about eight feet tall, according to Eileen, while the angels are slightly larger and holding massive swords of light.

Eileen cited the novel, This Present Darkness, by Frank E. Peretti, as a close resemblance to how it really is in the unseen world. In the book, a small town is inhabited and fought over by demons and angels of God. The primary power source for the angels is the ascending prayers of the people. Only with this "prayer power" are the angels justified in ridding the town of the demons.

As Christians, we sometimes get discouraged when our prayer requests seem to go unanswered. But knowing that our prayers are directly aiding our guardian angels' war against demons should make us even more excited about talking with the Lord.

"For we are not contending against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness, against the spiritual host of wickedness in the heavenly places (Ephesians 6:12, RSV).

Potter Preaches Here

Jon Mourglia (pronounced "Mor-Ya") of "The Potter's House" will be teaching at Southern College, Friday, November 10 at 8:00 p.m. in the church. Mourglia has been a potter since 1965 and became a Christian in 1970. His teaching of "The Potter's House" precedes "The Great Passion Play" in Eureka Springs, Arkansas and is a regular presentation of the Elna M. Smith Foundation which operates "The Great Passion Play". Mourglia is also a lecturer with The Thomas F. Staley Distinguished Christian Scholar

Lecture Program. "The Potter's House" is a unique ministry through the medium of pottery, which combines Mourglia's natural talent as a potter with a spiritual gift of teaching the Word of God. His teaching involves bringing a potter's wheel, along with a variety of finished vessels, and using them to illustrate the different points he teaches.

As he makes a form on the potter's wheel, Mourglia parallels the physical with the spiritual, using pottery as the example, much the same way that Christ used parables.

When Christ spoke to farmers He used elements they understood such as crops, seeds, soils and the seasons. When

He taught fishermen, He related to the things of the sea to explain spiritual principles.

When he teaches, Mourglia relates the Master potter with Father God, the potter's clay with human flesh, centering of the clay on the potter's wheel with truth, water with the Spirit, the forming of the vessel with the growth of the individual Christian, the fire of the kiln with spiritual trials, sealing glaze with baptism, a finished cup compared to communion, and ashes with humility.

Hogaboom, was driving with two of her friends on the upper level 100 feet past the point where the "wall" fell. She heard a repeating thumping noise and almost hit the side rail. "Oh no, not another flat tire," she said. She pulled over and checked the tires. They were OK. Then she looked back. There was nothing there, not even a lane of traffic, except for one car.

That car pulled up beside them, and the man inside yelled "It's an earthquake!"

Camille got back in and sped off the bridge at about 80 mph. Her wheel alignment was damaged because of the big cracks she drove over on the rest of the bridge, but otherwise, she and her car are okay.

Jill Smith, a sophomore, was talking to a saleslady in the glass counter in Nordstrom's in Union Square. "When it hit, the saleslady turned white, looked around and swore," she says. "Glass started falling everywhere. I remembered that I should look for a doorway, but there weren't any around." "Ann Angevick and I just stood there, clutching each other, and I cried. I remember thinking, am I saved at this moment? I knew the answer should be yes, but I wasn't sure, so I was real nervous."

Outside, she waited in line at a pay phone to call 911, and the operator told her to wait 45 minutes before driving, to avoid aftershocks.

Most people didn't. "There was panic on the streets. The traffic lights and electricity were out, and no one obeyed right of way," she says. "It took us five to six hours to get home."

"The whole way back, we talked about how trivial life is, and that brought us all together."

Jeri McMurray, the Social Vice-President of the SA who was responsible for the Fall Picnic, had a sleepless night waiting for two students who hadn't returned from San Francisco. "Who would have thought that the day most of the students were downtown would be the day it happened!" she says. "As each one returned, I went up to him and said, 'Oh, I'm so glad you're back!'" By 10 a.m. the next morning, everyone had returned.

John Collins, the PUC Vice-President for Student Services, was at the world series game which had to be evacuated. "You could hear the earthquake as the stadium shook. Many people thought it was going to collapse," he says.

The earthquake registered at 6.9 on the Richter Scale, and, according to the New York Times, the U.S. Geological Survey says there is a 60 percent chance of a 7.5-8.0 quake along the San Andreas Fault within the next 30 years.

There was no damage to PUC, except for some cracks in a condemned building. A staff member fainted in the Financial Administration Building. The Angwin Volunteer Fire Department was called to look for gas leaks in Santa Cruz County, says Louis Lique, a volunteer fire fighter.

Keith Wheeler, the Principal of Monterey Bay Academy, reported very minor damage. One cafe window fell out, and a chandelier fell from the chapel. Their electricity was out for 30 hours, and a number of dishes broke in faculty homes. No one was hurt. "A number of students stayed in faculty homes because they were scared of the continuing aftershocks, about 4.0 Richter, which were centered about 4 miles from our campus!" he said. "It appears the Lord's presence was very evident here."

Peter Ringering, a Walla Walla College freshman engineering major, reported that every single Amateur radio band and all five OSCAR satellites were used up to relay messages to San Francisco.

Nursing Dedication Slated for Sabbath

Nursing students at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists will be honored Saturday, November 4, during candlelight service at 6 p.m. in the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church.

David Smith, chairman of the English department at Southern College, will address the 59 nursing students to be dedicated. His message is entitled "The Healing Touch."

Coordinator of the program is Dorothy Hooper, associate professor of nursing. Students will hold dedication candles which will be lit by their nursing instructor. Representatives from the Gideon Society will present Bibles to the nursing students. The nursing class will recite the International Nursing Pledge and sing their class song, "I Am Willing." A slide presentation will show scenes from the students' classes and lab activities.

The public is invited to attend this special event.

Currently, 273 students are enrolled in the Southern College nursing program, 39 more than last year. Of that number, 151 are pursuing the associate degree (A.S.), while 122 are working toward a bachelor of science degree in nursing. Forty-nine registered nurses in the Chattanooga area are participating in Southern's Consortium program which allows nurses working full time to earn their B.S. degree over a 4 or 5-year period.

Pomp &amp; Circumstance

STEPHEN J. OEMPSEY, Ph.D.

Look to the Cross, then Look Again!

by Bill Kittle

Every time I open my Bible, I find it more and more beautiful. That may seem like a normal thing for a ministerial candidate to say, but for me it seems strange to be headed in that direction. For many years I fought against the One who had the power to transform my worthless existence into something valuable.

Many good people have put forth great efforts in my life so that I might obtain peace for my war-weary soul. Yet, not one person can match the greatest gift of all, Jesus. In Him I find rest. I can feel His love in the warmth of a hug or in the rays of the sun on my face. I can see His love in the kind deeds of people who care. I can hear His love in the kind words spoken by a friend. In all my life no one has so surrounded me in love as Jesus has. Jesus, what a beautiful name! I could say it a million times at His feet and never grow weary of His name or of His company.

I look back on my life and ask myself, "How did God ever make a somebody out of me?" I guess it was always the feeling that He was near, always at my side to support me and to lift me up when I was down. Inevitably I would look again at His broken body, and He would transform my life once again.

In Isaiah 45:22 God speaks to each need of our hearts. He says, "Look to Me and be saved, all you ends of the Earth! For I am God, and there is no other" (NKJV).

It is as if God says to me, "In Me only can you find peace for your life. In Me alone will your life be filled with joy! Look to Me and be saved." He also invites us,

"Come unto Me, all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" Matt. 11:28.

Rest for your souls, rest and peace in your life. We should look again to the cross of Jesus, to be saved. Look again! Look again! And look again!

Student Profile: Adrienne Zukovski

By Izear Feagins

"Will I know everybody at Southern? Will I make friends?" These were the questions of Adrienne Zukovski when she came to Southern in the fall of 1988.

Adrienne who was born in Sao Paulo, Brazil did not want to come to America because of racial segregation among blacks, whites, and hispanics; however, because her parents are missionaries who received a call to Miami, Florida, she had to go.

When Adrienne moved to America, she had to choose a college. She chose Southern. She said that although she spoke poor English, the students of all races were patient and kind to her. They came to sit and talk with her just like a friend. Because of this southern hospitality, she no longer doubted the friendliness of the people.

Adrienne is a sophomore Allied Health (nutrition) major. She wants to give lectures on how to eat and cook nutritiously. She Making people laugh is Adrienne's hobby. She said, "I like to make people laugh, they look beautiful when they pour also wants to give health tips on changing people's diets.

Adrienne has lived in Brazil and Mexico. As a result of living in these countries, she speaks English, Spanish, and her native language, Portuguese.

With Adrienne's speech and humor talents, she has had no problems making friends at Southern.

Student Missionaries Write Home

Dear friends,

It's time to snatch a few minutes for communication with you folks again! A big thank you to those of you that have written, especially Southern, who has been sending letters and the student paper—"The Accent"! I enjoy seeing the familiar faces!

The 1st quarter is almost over, only two more weeks to go. At the mid-term, September 21, we got a sneak preview of what the Rock Islands are like. On Thursday the 21st, the Student Association took the whole school on a Rock Island picnic.

We swam, ate, snorkeled, and relaxed on a little island probably only about 300 feet across. I say across because the island is made of rock that goes straight up from the water about forty or fifty feet, except for one sandy beach jutting out on one side. But the fun was only beginning. That weekend we camped at another island. It was great—sandy beach, coconut trees all around, warm water, and lots of beautiful fish and shells. We explored a rusty Japanese

Zero at low tide (it was sticking out of water two feet), and found many animals and plants that I've only read about before. For instance, sea stars, giant calms, angel fish, trumpet fish, sea urchins, starfish, moray eels, puffer fish, many kinds of hard and soft corals, coconut crabs, and even a small black-tipped shark. I'm looking forward to going again at the end of the quarter!

Back at P.M.A.—reality—life is busier than ever. I'm really enjoying teaching now. I'm getting along well with the students, which is one of the most important ingredients for success here. All the teachers are being together than last year, and some of the rules are new, so complaints about too much homework, etc. are frequent. My class load has changed a bit because now that John Norman has arrived, he teaches Remedial English, and I teach a section of senior English. I have many other responsibilities. One of them is having Friday night vesper every five weeks or so. Then on Sabbaths, I always have some responsibility to fill, whether it's playing the piano for Sabbath School, for church, teaching the lesson (every week!), calling for the offering, being the chorister for church, having the scripture and prayer, special music, or having the sermon, which I will on the 21st of this month! On Sabbath afternoons, we, the SM's, take the student for walks and will be involved in branch Sabbath Schools very soon. Sunday, we work three hours in the morning and take turns with "being around"—student supervision in the afternoon.

One evening a week after work, William and I have a chance to go to Koror and buy food, visit the SM's in town, etc. We get the use of the school truck, a small white Nissan pickup, free-once a week. With all of our schedules being so busy, you might expect us to have a hard time getting along with each other under all the stress. If it wasn't for the Lord, I'm sure that would be the case. Many times, at least for me, the task looks so big that I know I have to have the Lord's help. There aren't any other options!

If you are a young person, seriously consider the option of going somewhere as a student missionary. I recommend it!

Thanks again to those of you who wrote and for the prayers that I know some of you must be sending up for me.

David said, "Where does my help come from? My help cometh from the Lord!" Psalm 121:2.

Keep looking up!

Dear Southern Friends:

Yokwe! It has been good to hear about some of the things happening at S.C., but I'm so glad God wanted me here in Ebeye this year. He's teaching me so much, and it's only October!

I had heard before coming here that there was no physical beauty on Ebeye, but I have been blessed to see more than three palm trees, some beautiful flower bushes, a big cluster of lavender flowers, and green, leafy vines by our water spigot (we don't have to boil our water!). This was more beauty than I had expected. The sky always changes its awesome cloud formations, often adding brilliant rainbows. Ebeye is far from paradise, but sharp eyes will see the beauty and be blessed.

The people are wonderful. I'm getting to know my kids more and more, and love each one of them. I teach 34 fourth graders and a freshman English class. My little ones can be challenging, but God works little miracles often, and gives me wisdom and love to teach them. I was often overwhelmed at first, but now I have given my whole to God and it's no longer my burden. I must wait patiently for Him to work in my students. He is making changes in my class and me.

This experience doesn't just happen here on Ebeye. It happens any time one will sincerely ask God to change him and use him to touch others. Reaching out to others is the way to be the happiest wherever one is at.

Have a great year! KEEP IN TOUCH!!!

Yokwe Yuk,

Ashley Hall

Kaselehia (hello) from Pohnpei! Two months have passed since I arrived on this 60 mile island. I've adjusted well to the culture, and what an adjustment it was! After getting used to the fact that I am 11,000 miles from home, I've had to adjust to other aspects that have to be looked at humorously. Here, the roosters wake me up, church services are attended barefoot, and the weekly grocery trip takes 3 hours at 5 different tiny stores, which make a 7-11 look like a food warehouse.

Looking beyond these little "adjustments", I can see the breathtaking nature this island possess. While swimming in a clear lagoon at the bottom of a cascading waterfall, I'm awed by the beauty. To think that this is just earth, makes the beauty of heaven unimaginable.

As far as teaching goes, well, lets just say that teachers deserve a raise! I already realize that it takes a special person to dedicate his or her life to teaching. I spend 7 hours a day with 24 ten year olds. After explaining an assignment to the class three times, I'm often faced with explaining it again individually. By the 24th time I often want to scream. Sometimes I do. Most of the time I pray, and every time the Lord listens. I have to constantly remind myself that I'm here to teach them about Jesus and to show them His love. When I think that these kids are children of the King, teaching turns into my privilege!

Well, I must end. It's late, and I have lesson plans to review. Take care. And remember, in between all the classes and deadlines, Jesus is with you!

Much love,

AIA President Visits Southern

By Craig Lastine

Ivan Bartolome was the Student Association President at Southwestern Adventist College during the school year 1988-89 and is the current Adventist Intercollegiate Association President. He visited Southern College the weekend of September 23-24. This year Ivan is a part-time student at S.A.C., and a full-time employee of the marketing department at Huguley Hospital, in Fort Worth, Texas.

CL: What brings you to Southern, Ivan?

IB: I'm visiting as many Seventh-Day Adventists Colleges as possible in North America. I visited Oakwood before I came to Southern, and three weekends ago I was at Union College. Basically I'm just trying to get a taste of each of the different student associations and a feeling of what the individual campuses are going through. This way I can help transmit information between the colleges.

CL: Ivan you are the A.I.A. President this year? What does A.I.A. stand for? What does it do?

IB: A.I.A. is an acronym for Adventist Intercollegiate Association, and it's basically a governing group for all the different SDA Student Organizations in North America. The A.I.A. serves to facilitate information between the different colleges. In other words, if the Student Association at Walla Walla College is doing a project and it is very successful, he should be able to share that with all of our S.D.A. colleges and universities. The A.I.A. is a useful channel for distributing that information to other schools.

CL: Who makes up the A.I.A.?

IB: Student Associations from La Sierra College, Atlantic Union College, Canadian Union

College, and Southwestern Adventist College make up the A.I.A. And I add that the A.I.A. is also trying to become an international organization. We are sending letters out to all the Adventist Colleges overseas like Bogenhaffen, Cologne, Sagunto, and Newbold inviting them to join and attend the annual convention held in the spring at S.A.C. In addition to that, we will be inviting delegates from Weimar and Hartland.

CL: We have all been here at Southern for some time, and often we take our environment for granted. As a visitor, what are your impressions of Southern?

IB: I've visited your campus once before, but it was only for an evening. This is the first time I have gotten to take a look inside your campus and your student association. I have to be right up front with you and tell you I'm incredibly impressed. It's obvious that your college has had a long term plan of development, and it's obvious that your administration has stuck with that plan. It has paid off.

CL: This weekend you attended an S.A. event, the Progressive Party. Could you comment on the activity and the interaction between students and faculty?

IB: The kids here are very vibrant. The kids that attend were willing to speak out and participate. They were, for the most part, not inhibited at all. Seeing faculty and students actually sit together and have fun is something really wonderful. Southern College is a relatively small school in comparison to our state universities, yet that is an advantage. It gives you a "You're at home feeling." Your administration has been so cooperative toward the Student Association and has been willing to work with your students. It is a WIN-WIN situation everywhere you look!

Lynn Wood Hall Open for Business

By A. Lee Bennett Jr.

Lynn Wood Hall, on the campus of Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists, is once again housing classes and meetings for the first time in 4 years.

The old, wood-frame building, which is located west of Southern College's Wright Hall, was officially opened during the college's Alumni Homecoming on October 27-29; however, the extra rooms which are nearly completed on the main level have already been put to use. The chapel has been used for classes, seminars, workshops, and the Humanities Film Series. The north classrooms which have been carpeted and partially furnished are being used this semester. The south room is nearly completed and will house Southern's Alumni Heritage Museum, previously located on the second floor of Mabel Wood Hall, Southern's music building.

Public relations vice-president, Dean Kinsey, said that refurbishing Lynn Wood Hall has "proved to be a blessing." The college no longer has to schedule academic classrooms and Wright Hall conference rooms for special, non-student related meetings. Lynn Wood Hall contains rooms of varying size to house seminars. It has a 271 seat chapel for larger events.

The building is also used to house classes for extension programs. "Southern College has at least two masters degree programs that are extensions of Loma Linda (University) programs," said Kinsey. "They meet at Lynn Wood Hall...when they are here."

Lynn Wood Hall was originally opened in 1924 as Southern's administration and classroom building. In 1967, the administrative offices were moved into the newly built Wright Hall, the current administration building, which made room for even more classrooms in the building, and the WSMC radio studios. Upon the completion of Brock Hall in 1985, the classes and the radio station moved out, and Lynn Wood Hall was closed until it became the subject of refurbishing in 1987.

Southern's alumni association and Committee of 100 have spent $400,000 dollars on the main floor, which is nearly complete. Both the lower, and upper levels have yet to be completed; however, work on the lower level is under way, and already houses the Strawberry Festival studios, Southern's yearly multi-media slide show, and the college's security headquarters, previously located in the science and physics building, Daniels Hall.

For the Health of It

Q: What is the difference between a sprain and a strain?

A: A sprain is an injury to the ligaments around a joint due to a twisting motion. Actual tearing of the ligament may, but not necessarily, occur. This tearing will cause damage to the blood vessels and allow them to rupture. During the first 2-3 hours rapid swelling and increased pain take place due to the bleeding and seeping of fluids from the damaged vessels into the tissues.

A strain is a "muscle-pull" caused by excessive stress and over-stretching. These are usually microscopic and partial tears in the actual muscles tissue. Following a strain one will feel sudden pain accompanied by localized tenderness. Swelling as well as bruising also take place due to ruptured and damaged vessels.

Q: Is there any possibility of getting AIDS from coming in contact with body fluids on a toilet seat?

A: Well, it all depends on what it is you do with the toilet seat. As of now there is no direct evidence that AIDS is transmitted through casual contact with restroom facilities. Although the virus has been isolated in a wide variety of body fluids, transmission has only taken place through semen, vaginal fluid, blood and breast milk. To become infected with the AIDS virus remember that the virus must somehow enter your blood stream. Also we must take into consideration the fact that the AIDS virus is a very fragile one once it comes in contact with the air. So the answer is no., You will not get AIDS by sitting on a "sprinkled" seat. It's not a pleasant situation but neither is it a fatal one.

Don't Worry, Be Happy

By Robert J. Kriegel, Ph.D.

Editors note: Robert J. Kriegel, Ph.D.—best selling author former All-American athlete, and mental coach for Olympic and world class athletes—lectures and consults with major corporations worldwide on peak performance, leadership and strategies for dealing with change. Kriegel recently took part in a national tour of college campuses sponsored by the makers of Nuprin Pain Reliever.

Worrying is the negative national pastime. Everybody does it and very few find it is a positive experience. You don't think clearly or perform well when you worry. The fear of "What might happen if..." which overwhelms you, makes you feel depressed, reduces your energy, and prevents you from getting your work done.

Most of what we worry about is out of our control. You can't control other people's responses, the grade a prof will give us, whether someone will agree with us, what they think of us, the weather, traffic, roommates, money, how we look, grades, the future. The more we worry about things we can't control, the worse everything gets.

Remember this rule of thumb: You can't control other people or external situations. But you can control how well you prepare for and respond to them. In other words, you can control your information, attitude and actions.

Worrying is made up of two words: what if... "What if... they say no...I don't get the money...the professor assigns...the traffic...The key to beating the worries is to change the what ifs to "if...then's." "If they say no...then I will..." "If I don't get the money...then I will..." Always change the worry to anticipation. Concentrating your energy on what you can change, rather than dwelling on things you can't control increases your confidence and prepares you for any situation.

This strategy was used by President John F. Kennedy. Before his press conferences Kennedy and his aides anticipated any possible question or situation that might arise and developed answers for them. Whether a reporter asked about the Viet Nam War, the economy or civil rights, Kennedy was prepared.

Likewise, in a job interview, instead of worrying whether or not the potential employer will ask about your grades, anticipate that he or she will. Then mentally list wins, accomplishments and qualifications that your course grades might not reflect.

Get into the habit of anticipating prior to any pressure situation, whether it's an exam, an interview, a date or a tennis serve. Make a "worry list" then change each worry (what if) to an anticipation (if...then). Leaving your worries behind by focusing on what you can control enables you to concentrate your energy and perform at peak levels.

Religion Professors Deliver Papers in California

By Andrea Nicholson

Three professors in the Religion Department have written papers which they will present at a series of professional meetings in California hosted this week by various national religious societies.

Jack Blanco, Ronald Springett, and Norman Gulley will attend parts of each of the society meetings scheduled for November 15-19 to deliver their compositions.

Dr. Gulley has written four papers which he is scheduled to present at three of the professional societies in San Diego and Anaheim, California. One of Gulley's papers, "The Cosmic Christ of the New Age Movement

WSMC Holds Annual Pledge Drive

By Laurar Harner

WSMC-90.5 FM amassed $40,412 during its annual membership drive held November 5-10.

Jan Gentry, WSMC's development director, said the money raised during the six day drive will be used for program funding.

WSMC conducted five interviews with local businesses, supporters of public radio, and allied arts of Chattanooga, during its membership drive. These interviews included a visit from Mr. Pat Brock, President of Brock Candy, Chattanooga.

Gentry, coordinator of the drive, said that all donors this year received the FM 90.5 Classic Calendar, composed of full-color photos taken by Chattanooga area residents.

All donors were also eligible for the grand prize, a Super Party Package, in which the winner, along with 50 friends, would be treated to a private showing of one of the Little Theatre's 1989-90 season performances.

Other bonuses offered to those who pledged included free three month Chattanooga Times subscriptions, $20 Barrett and Company booksellers gift certificates, and Chattanooga Symphony tickets.

Reverse Weekend

By Suzanne Lettrick

"He's gonna think I'm a nerd!"
"He'll say yes just because he feels sorry for me!" "He'll get the wrong idea!" "He'll say NODOOI!"
"Forget it! I'm not going to ask him!"

These have probably been some of the thoughts of the girls in Thatcher Hall this past week. The reason? REVERSE WEEKEND HAS ARRIVED. AAAAAAAHHHHHH!!!
But the girls aren't the only ones on campus who know what's taking place on November 17-19. Some of the guys remembered too and said: "I don't care (about reverse weekend). I probably won't get asked anyway," "If I don't get asked, I'll be a hermit the rest of my life", "The only way I'll date someone is if she asks me...I'm too shy to do the asking."

It sounds like this weekend should be something to dread instead of an opportunity. Dean Hobbs, and Dean Rose have given some pointers on making the most of it.

To the women:

"If you're uncomfortable about having to ask a particular guy...don't ask him. Ask someone out who you are comfortable with, instead," said Dean Hobbs.

Dean Rose said, "If feel if you're unsure about asking him, ask him when you are sure. If it was me, and I didn't know him well, I would have thought it over once, twice, three and four times and then asked him out...in a letter."

Hobbs said one of the important

Editorial: What are we doing here at 5 a.m. and Why?

Several new features are making a debut in the Accent this issue. We are now utilizing the USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network. We hope that the articles gleaned from this source will be of interest to our readers. Also in this issue, the Sports page has finally materialized thanks to the efforts of Jim King and Gene Krishinger. We have a new Lifesites editor, Adrienne Cox, and a somewhat controversial Viewpoints question to inaugurate her editorship.

With regard to the previously mentioned Viewpoints question, members of the Accent staff placed a call to Walla Walla in order to clarify our understanding of their policy. We found that it is in fact not a "policy" at all but, rather an experiment being conducted this quarter. Visitation is allowed for a twenty minute period between 11:00 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. only with express permission of a Dean. Walla Walla officials have found that very few students are taken advantage of this privilege.

As you have no doubt noticed, this issue has come out on Friday rather than the traditional Thursday deadline. Does anybody care? Does anybody bother to read this thing at all or do Gremlins steal the stacks of newspapers off the dormitory desks and out of mailboxes in the wee hours of the morning? If any of you do read the Accent we would greatly appreciate your comments about what you like or don't like about. What would you like to see added or deleted? Do you like the cartoons? Is the Trivia Quiz a waste of space? (How can free food be a waste of space?) Would you like to see the new personal message column continued? Will you put it to us?

I am a history major, not a journalist. My staff has been drawn from the English, Computer Science, Nursing, and Psychology departments. Thus, the production of this newspaper has been an exercise in trial and error. Both trials and errors have been numerous. And by the grace of God, we have endured. "We stand today on the edge of a new frontier..." - John F. Kennedy

David Denton's: Bits and Pieces Last Rites for the Old Tabernacle

By David Denton

So the old Tabernacle is gone is it? It's at least half gone. Well, well, what a diversion for the folk on a lazy Sabbath afternoon!

I expect there are those who were sorry to see the old thing go. I know of one who was glad to see it burn.

"The only mistake they made," he said, "was putting the fire out!"

Me, I'm not going to jump into that debate. There's no use crying over spilt milk—or burnt buildings.

Question now is, what are we going to do with what's left of the structure?

Several suggestions come to mind. They could sell pieces of the building to college alumni who long for the good old days. Any alumnus who actually remembers participating in a worship service in the Tabernacle could be cut a special deal, buy one pic of charcoal, get one free.

Another closely related idea is to erect a solid fence around the building and charge a modest admission price for tourists and alumni. Anyone who could recall the original color of the sanctuary would, of course, be admitted free.

Another possibility would be to let Dean Qualley use the building for his office, in the event that his present office should prove to be inadequate.

If none of these ideas strikes your fancy, why not give the building to the S.A.? Instead of having to go off-campus for the barn party every year, we would just truck up to the Tabernacle, re-light the burnt end of the building, and use the other side for the barn. How efficient, a barn and a bonfire in one neat package.

Perhaps we should consider going ahead and tearing it down instead. In its place we could erect a huge billboard so that the Collegiate police would have a legitimate place to hide from motorists. After all, seeing up speed traps in the Sovex parking lot seems so unprofessional.

Another idea which seems to have a long going for it (especially since I came up with it), is to lease the Tabernacle to the Volunteer Fire Department and let them have it for practice every year or so. Besides the obvious benefit to the fire department and it's volunteers, it would give the school and community a welcome diversion on some lazy Sabbath afternoon.

Burning Old Glory: Crime or Free Speech?

In 1984 a protester burned a U.S. flag during the Republican National Convention in Dallas. That deed was wrong in the sense of being disrespectful, irreverent, and repugnant. But desecrating our symbol of freedom manifested that the freedom itself was genuine. True, in the short run, a judge convicted the malcontent of a crime. But the United States Supreme Court, acting uncharacteristically libertarian, threw out the conviction on grounds that a law prohibiting flag burning violates the freedom of nonverbal speech. The Court probably acted wisely: rights that encompass freedom should be emphasized over objects that symbolize freedom.

But President Bush seized the moment. With Congressional concurrence and popular support he pledged to seek a constitutional amendment rendering flag burning criminal once again. This extreme remedy seems unwise.

Opposing such an amendment may appear unpragmatic, and organizations choosing to do so (such as People For the American Way) will take the heat, but the case is solid for accepting and not reversing the Supreme Court's declaration. If, as already suggested, the Court found correctly, then the proposed amendment puts "an asterisk on the First Amendment," possibly starting the treacherous process of presuming to identify those "freedom" that the bill of Rights does not protect. Would this upset the delicate balance between the free exercise and establishment of religion?

But beyond the merits of a particular constitutional amendment lies the amending act itself. Of this the framers were skeptical. Use it frugally, they admonished—mainly to define institutional relationships, such as those of federalism and the separation of power, and only rarely to cure a social ill. And, they might have added, if a social ill must be drastically addressed, be sure it is not rare, isolated, and eccentric like the incident prompting the present controversy.

Whatever the case, a number of flag desecration bills are before Congress, and the President wants something stronger than a statute, namely a constitutional amendment.

The House has voted 380-38 to make flag-burning a federal crime. But the numbers are complicated by the fact that tactics rather than substance motivated legislators on both sides of the issue. Voting for the bill were not only people who want flag-burners in prison, but also people seeking to forestall a constitutional amendment. Opponents were split, too, with some fearing such a statute would undermine chances for a constitutional amendment and others resisting any form of legislative attack on the Supreme Court's sound position.

Psych Class Added

By Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

This semester psychology students returned from their summer vacations to discover that a required class would no longer be offered. Former psychology and education chairman, Dr. Gerald Colvin, took a call to another campus this summer leaving the Experimental Psychology class without a teacher.

The psychology students were unhappy about the fact that they would have to replace Experimental Psychology with Physiological Psychology. A few students got together and requested that Dr. Ernie Stevens, Ed.D., a contract teacher for the Introduction to Psychology and History and Systems of Psychology classes, would teach Experimental Psychology second semester. Last week he consented to teach the class, and the class was added to the schedule.

Dr. Ernie Stevens has been a contract teacher here at S.C. for three years. "It will be a challenge," said Stevens, when asked about his reaction to the students' request. Experimental Psychology is not one of Stevens' strengths, but he loves research and believes that teaching this class will be a learning experience for him and his students as he brings "humor and fun into the subject and presents it as a valuable field and tool for people to look at and enjoy," said Stevens.

Stevens obtained his degree at Andrews University in education and counseling psychology. He is a certified professional counselor and marriage and family counselor in the Chattanooga area. He is also a clinical member of the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapists and a Diplomat of the American Board of Sexology. His field, he says, is probably the "most lonely field to be in," but his favorite thing about it is "to watch lives change, to see people live successful lives and reach their potentials."

Stevens also works closely with the state on a pilot program for study skills of high risk children. The program is designed to help educationally disabled children. "I describe educationally handicapped as anything that keeps that child from learning," said Stevens. The program has been nominated as the program of the year.

"He's a very talented man," says Junior psychology major, Kristie Brown. He has hands-on experience, and he can bring the class alive by the examples from his own experience. Stevens enjoys his chance to come to the college and teach because "it's almost a vacation from my regular routine." He also finds it a privilege to teach among "very talented teachers and students."

"My favorite thing about teaching," said Stevens, "is letting the student realize that the world of psychology can be a field in which a Christian can provide a much needed service to the general public in the correlation between faith and learning." Many Christians have looked down upon the field of psychology, said Stevens, but "psychology is the study of sinful man, and if you are able to bridge that gap of understanding, then you are able to give someone hope."

Computer Science Department Unveils NeXT

By Izcar Feigins

This past summer the Computer Science Department purchased a UNIX computer, NeXT, for academic purposes.

The NeXT computer is new and was purchased by fund-raising. Last spring, Americom, a computer company in Atlanta, donated a similar five year old UNIX computer called Dual to the Computer Science Department.

Linden deCarro, a senior computer science major, said that the NeXT computer can store over 250,000,000 bytes of information, the complete works of Shakespeare, and the Webster's Dictionary and Thesaurus. It can also do any math problem a student punches into it. It can send characters on the computer screen and recorded voice messages. This computer can also play games like chess and billiards with an opponent. It is also able to do things like playing music while a student does his homework on it. Lastly, the NeXT computer has the best possible laser printing. What appears on the computer screen appears on the print-out sheet. Linden said, "What you see is what you get...it's an art."

Monte Mittelzell, sophomore computer science major, said that it is essential for a computer science major or software engineering major to know how to use a UNIX computer, primarily the NeXT.

The NeXT computer which has eight megabytes of memory and a 330 meg hard drive is used by the Physics and Math Departments, and is very regular. Linden said that we need more UNIX computers on campus because of the great demand. He also encourages non-computer majors to use the computer. He said that this computer is becoming standard around the nation.

Steve Jobs, co-founder of Apple Computer when the Macintosh Computer came out, is also the founder of NeXT computer.

Chamber Players Get Mixed Reviews

By Julie Jacobs

The Atlanta Chamber Players performed for a double credit assembly last Monday evening at the Collegiate Church.

Considered the "epitome of making music" by director, Melanie Cramer, the players perform only chamber music. "Chamber music is very democratic," said Cramer, "There is no conductor which makes each piece a personal experience. Performing chamber music can be very intimate."

said Cramer

Feeling there was a need for a chamber group in Atlanta, GA., Melanie Cramer, flutist, and Paula Pice, pianist, founded the Atlanta Chamber Players 14 years ago. "I had no idea the group would do so well," said Cramer.

Performing more than 100 times each year, the players present subscription concerts, radio and television broadcasts, college and university residences, and touring programs.

Included in the quintet of players are: Thomas Jones, violinist; John Ravnin, violist; and Ian Ginstourg, cellist.

Student response to the concert was varied. "The music was very relaxing," said Tracie Wolcott, Public Relations major. "The whole program was quite entertaining."

Robert Fetters, Biology major, said, "The concert was a most impressive performance. It gave me three things, namely two assembly credits and one sore tail bone."

"Explaining" the Inexplicable?

By Dave Goodwin
©Copyright 1989, USA TODAY

Nature could have been responsible for some of the Ten Plagues of Egypt, which the Bible says God inflicted through Moses to free the Hebrews from slavery.

The Nile may have only seemed to run red with blood—it could have been reddish silt or microorganisms like red tide.

According to "Mysteries of the Bible, the Enticing Questions of the Scriptures," (Readers Digest, $26.95)

As for other plagues, frogs were common when the Nile receded, and dead frogs brought flies and gnats, which in turn brought diseases to people and cattle, the book suggests.

But what about the plague that finally did the trick? What about the Great Destroyer, the Angel of Death, who slaughtered the first born of man and beast alike, unless a house was marked as that of a Hebrew?

How do you explain that one? "Mysteries" doesn't attempt to answer that, or the greatest mystery of all—whether God exists. The book is not intended for scoffers, but instead it's for believers to use as a companion to the Bible. And the faithful do not wonder about the existence of God.

The book takes its best shot at explaining and "explaining" mysteries, based on the Scriptures, theological interpretations, historical texts, archaeological discoveries and anthropology. Biblical scholars did the writing, assisted by specialists in such things as biblical agriculture, ancient weights and measures and the role of music in the Bible.

Often at the book, mysteries remain mysteries. Still, the text in some places doesn't seem as poignant or questioning as it might, probably because the author "wants to step on the beliefs of any groups."

But in some instances, like that regarding the story of Noah and the Great Flood, it is the detractors who come off looking silly.

Bible beginnings

It's on hotel bedside tables across the U.S., but did you know these facts about the Bible?

- The English word "bible" is derived from the Greek word "biblia" for "books."
- The original language of the Old Testament was Hebrew, then later Greek.
- The first ink used for the Bible was papyrus, then later vellum, which is a fine parchment made from the skin of lambs or calves.
- There is no surviving first edition of the Bible
- The oldest surviving written Old Testament is in Greek
- The proper way to discard an old Bible is to wrap it up before throwing it away.
- The first mass printing of the Bible was in the mid-1400s, when the Gutenberg printing press was invented.
- The first English translation of the Bible was in 1380-82 by John Wycliffe.
- The United Bible Society distributed 692 million Bibles last year worldwide, making it the most widely distributed book in the world; in the U.S. 43 million were distributed.
- As of December 1988 the Bible has been translated into 1,907 languages, out of 5,000 known.
- The most popular version of the Bible, the King James, was translated into English in 1604. (It was published in 1611).
- The Bible contains love poetry in the eight chapters of the Song of Solomon; the poems are intended as guide to love and sex according to the laws of God.
- The Dead Sea Scrolls are the oldest known biblical documents existing today, found in 1947 by a goat herder in the caves of Qumran near the Dead Sea where they had lain for nearly 2,000 years; today, they are in the Museum of the Book in Jerusalem.

Just Do It... Today!

*Denise Foster
Adapted from the Catalyst
Sept-Nov 1988*

You can make a difference—yes, even you. You do not have to have the voice of Sandi Patti or the intelligence of Einstein, for God especially designed you just the way you are, and He has a specific purpose in mind just for you. Of Jeremiah the Lord said, "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, before you were born I set you apart" (Jeremiah 1:5). Even so, the Lord knew you before you were born, and He instilled within you talents or characteristics which can be used to glorify Him.

The mission of Christ's church is to spread the good news of man's salvation. This gospel is to be shared with all the world, and each of us, to the extent of his talent and opportunity, has a role to fulfill.

You need not wait for that right opportunity. In our daily lives we can touch those around us with the character and love exhibited by Christ. Jesus himself spent thirty years faithfully fulfilling His humble trade while ministering to those about Him. As Ellen White said, "With a loving spirit we may perform life's humblest duties 'as to the Lord.' If the love of God is in the heart, it will be manifested in the life. The sweet savor of the heart, it will be manifested in the life. The sweet savor of Christ will surround us, and our influence will elevate and bless" (Steps to Christ, p. 82, 83).

Friends, the Lord is coming soon! The signs of the end surround us, and it is very likely that we will be the generation to behold our Saviour in the clouds. The time in which we live is both urgent and exciting. Of all the generations that have come and gone, we have the opportunity of finishing God's holy work. This will not happen with a few well speaking preachers. It's going to take a united effort on our part, you and me. Christ is waiting on us. Therefore, let us live a life dedicated to Him for that is all He asks. He will bring the witnessing opportunities to us, and the Holy Spirit will be by our side. Let us not deny the power of God, but grasp it and move steadily forward. Let us make a difference!

and Ecumenism Among World Religions," was submitted to the Evangelical Theological Society. On the basis of his submission, the Society asked Dr. Gulley to make a presentation to the plenary session in response to a paper given by Russell Chandler, the religion editor of the Los Angeles Times who is also the author of a best-selling book entitled, Understanding the New Age Movement. Dr. Gulley's response paper is entitled, "The Function of the Cross as Strategy to Assert the Biblical World Views."

"It's a great opportunity and I praise the Lord for it," Gulley said of his upcoming presentation. The ETS is a non-Adventist organization with few Adventist members. For that reason, he views this opportunity as "a little feather in the cap for Southern College."

Dr. Gulley will also present a paper, "The Battle for the Bible in Eschatology," at the Adventist Theological Society, and one at the Andrews Society of Religious Studies titled, "A Tribute to Edward Heppelstall: The Rise of an Intellectual in the Life of the Church and His Influence on Adventist Theology."

Dr. Springett will be presenting two papers at the California society meetings. The first will be delivered at the Evangelical Theological Society. It deals with the New Age Movement and is entitled "Mysticism, Magic, Mysticism, and Medicine." His second paper, "Paraphrase and Katharsis in Romans 1" on the subject of homosexuality in the Scriptures, will be presented at the Adventist Theological Society.

A book by Springett, Homosexuality in History and the Scriptures, was published in 1988. After reading it, the publishers, Christianity Today, asked Springett to condense some of the material in his book to be used as a chapter in a large volume they will be publishing in early 1990. The volume will deal with the topic of homosexuality. Authors who are experts in various areas of the subject will contribute chapters to the book. Springett has been asked to write a chapter on the Biblical view on homosexuality.

Dr. Bianco will present his paper, "Mysticism's New Challenge to Adventist Christians," at the Evangelical Theological Society. As president of the Adventist Theological Society, Bianco negotiated with the ETS for permission to meet in their facilities in San Diego. "The ATS has developed an excellent relationship with the ETS and looks forward to continuing that relationship, not only nationally, but regionally," he said.

Dr. Leon Mashchak, another professor in the Religion Department, will also attend several of the society meetings in California, including the Evangelical Theological Society, the Andrews Society of Religious Studies, and the Society of Biblical Literature.

WSMC was also offered to donors who pledged $150. This year the goal was accompanied by a Green watch.

The amount of the largest single donation was $1,200.

Present announcers and student volunteers, including freshmen Brian Miller and Alison Watkins, helped answer telephone pledges and call past donors for membership renewals.

Various directors and announcers helped coordinate and operate the shifts during the drive, including David Barasoun, Dan Landrum, Doug Walter, and Jan Genay.

Morning Music host, Kerr Stout, found the membership drive fun. "One of the disadvantages we had to cut into programs; however, we raised a lot of money, and listeners showed they cared by pledging their support," said Stout.

Competition also added to the pledging participation. Crown America Corporation offered to double their gift, if five other carpet related industries would pledge support.

considerations is to realize a lot of guys get apprehensive when they are asked out by a girl, because they aren't sure of the girls intentions. He said that keeping this in mind might reduce some of the "trama" associated with reverse weekend.

Dean Rose gave a final word on how to accept rejection from a guy. "I would have been upset at first, but my ego would have said 'sorry, your loss.'"

To the guys: If you are asked by a girl and you aren't sure if you want to go, "Go anyway and remember, it's just a date-not marriage, and you're not going steady," Dean Hobbs said.

Dean Rose said to get a girl to notice you and ask you out you should hang out in places she does so you can get to know her—a table in the cafe, a bench at a game, etc. Then pray.

Girls, if you are still unsure of asking a guy, listen to a Charlie Diamond thought. "Go for it. Life is too short to be fearful of the opposite sex."

Southern College students during membership drive also.

Although the projected $55,000 goal was not met, the event was declared "a success just because people responded," said Genay.

According to general manager, Doug Walter, the goal should be met within the next two weeks, as call-outs continue to receive pledges.

SC Symphony Orchestra To Be Televised

The Southern College Symphony Orchestra may be seen on television, Christmas day, 1989.

Recorded on December 3, the orchestra will perform in the First Presbyterian church with Glen Draper, choral director.

In the future, there are more special performances planned for the orchestra. The Tivoli Theater will host the college orchestra along with the combined choirs of Lee College, Covenant College and University of Tennessee at Chattanooga on December 14. This coming summer, the orchestra will be the host orchestra for the second weekend of General Conference taking place in Indianapolis, Ind.

Orlo Gilbert, director, is proud of his performers. "I feel I have a very good orchestra," said Gilbert. "I am very fortunate to have such an unusual blend of woodwinds this year. I also have a fine horn section," he said.

Some Southern College orchestra members also involve themselves in the Chattanooga Symphony which is primarily made up of professional musicians. Sheri Peck and Daniel and Ellen Ashton play in the violin section this year. Two of Southern's faculty, Dr. Orlo Gilbert, violin, and Bruce Ashton, viola also play in the Chattanooga Symphony.

Students from Southern College may become involved with symphony performances by ushering in exchange for admission. For information about ushering for future performances call the Music Department, ext. 2880.

Collegiate Adventists Reaching Everyone 40%

CARE Ministries, the collegiate, religious life organization at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists, Collegedale, Tennessee, is run by student leaders and volunteers. The acronym CARE stands for Collegiate Adventists Reaching Everyone, formerly Campus Ministries.

The former director of the program, Bill Dubois, developed CARE as an umbrella organization covering Collegiate Missions, the organization responsible for student missionary activities in the United States and abroad, C.A.B.L. (Collegiate Adventists for Better Living), the health and positive lifestyle organization, and Campus Ministries, the student religious life and outreach branch. Since 1985, CARE Ministries has been functioning on the Southern College campus serving students in a variety of ways. CARE sponsors over 40 different activities, clubs, and programs for students ranging from the Biking Club to the Christian Lawn Concerts held each semester.

A recent survey studied campus awareness of the C.A.R.E. organization and found some interesting facts. A random telephone survey questioned three separate groups on campus, male students, female students, and faculty/staff members.

Sixty percent of the male students and fifty percent of the female students knew the meaning of the acronym CARE. Twenty-five percent of the males and forty percent of the females had no idea or clue as to its meaning. Of the faculty and staff members, only fifteen percent knew the acronym in its entirety.

When asked to name the three subdivisions of C.A.R.E. (Collegiate Missions, C.A.B.L., and Campus Ministries), students and faculty/staff named Collegiate missions and C.A.B.L. Guesses at the third branch incorrectly indicated the Destiny Drama Company, Southern's Christian collegiate drama troupe, as the third division of CARE.

The survey asked participants to indicate the most visible CARE programs and activities. The top three programs were the Destiny Drama Company, Collegiate Missions Club, and CARE Week. Sunshine Bands, the violation of shut-ins and hospital patients, received honorable mention as fourth in FR visibility.

Involvement (classified as active participation beyond mere attendance in at least one CARE activity, club, or program) of male students, female students, and faculty/staff members proved surprisingly low. The female students were the most involved with 40% of them citing involvement in at least one CARE activity. Eighty and seventy-five percent of the faculty/staff members and male students respectively cited no involvement at all with the CARE program.

Low Mid-term GPA Excuse #37

By Mike Hernandez

When I received my mid-term grades last week, my first reaction was to change my name and move to Canada where I could start a new life for myself. I quickly decided against this plan when I realized that Canada is populated mostly by Canadians whose major form of entertainment is hockey. Hockey is much like soccer because the final scores are always 1-0, or in certain riveting games, 2-1. But, let's get back to my grades. As you may have guessed, my G.P.A. was a little below the 4.0 expected by my parents and the Academic Dean, Dr. Floyd Greenleaf. Parents and Academic Deans have no sense of humor when it comes to grades. The reason my G.P.A. was so low is not because I did not study (I didn't study, but that is not the point). I feel that it all started the first week of school when my air-conditioner was broken. The heat in my room that week was almost unbearable. You could not lie still for more than 20 minutes without patches of fungus growing on your skin.

During that week I developed several strategies for beating the heat, which I will reveal to you so you can use them when your air-conditioner breaks.

1 - Make use of your refrigerator. Sleeping is very difficult when the room temperature is over 107 degrees. I dealt with this by turning my refrigerator up to "HI" and sleeping with my head inside the freezer compartment. This worked very well until the cockroaches, which are abundant in every men's dormitory room, also discovered the freezer.

2 - If you do not have access to a refrigerator, I suggest you perspire. Perspiration is Mother Nature's own natural cooling system. When your Central Nervous System realizes that your air-conditioner is broken, it sends a message to your sweat glands (perspirus odiferus), which are located in your armpits. The sweat glands immediately start pumping perspiration and making your shirt smell like a dead hamster. To counteract this, you should put on anti-perspirant. But this forces Mother Nature to re-route perspiration to the mouth where it forms bad breath.

My final strategy for beating the heat is to stay out of your room altogether. This is what I finally had to do until the repairman came and installed a new air-conditioner, which brings me back to my G.P.A. Since my air-conditioner was broken, I was forced to stay guy of my room, which is where my books were located. Obviously I could not study.

I tried to explain this to my parents, but they suggested the obviously impractical solution of taking my books out of my room to study. Parents can be so illogical sometimes. So, if any of my teachers (Drs. Williams, Kinsey, Worth, Richards, and Cline) are reading this, please take this into consideration when you are making out the final grades. I may let you borrow my American Express card for a week or two, if you know what I mean.

Humanities Film Series Shows The Seventh Seal

November 18, 8:00pm

Lynn Wood Hall

Ingmar Bergman's films have never been popular successes in the United States. This is because American audiences have traditionally assumed that the primary purpose of a film is to tell a story—and director Bergman has other interests. Despite the fact that Modernism in the other arts (painting, music, and literature) had long since abandoned such a simple and simplistic means of reflecting a complex and at times incomprehensible reality, film (particularly in the U.S.) continued to do what most people assumed it did best—tell a simple story.

There are, however, a number of directors who attempt to go much further and do much more. These directors feel that the elemental power of cinema—the combination of strong visual impact accompanied by sound—contained the potential to investigate and illustrate the increasingly problematic human condition. One of the most famous of the cinematic innovators of the 1950's was the Swedish director Ingmar Bergman.

The Seventh Seal opens peculiarly. A medieval crusader returning to his Scandinavian homeland encounters the black-robed figure of Death. When the crusader is told that it is indeed for himself that Death has come, he protests that he is not ready—to which Death replies: "No one ever is." In an attempt to literally play for time, the crusader challenges Death to a game of chess. As long as the crusader prevents Death from beating him, the crusader is allowed to live.

The crusader has a specific reason for asking for more time. Having spent years on a crusade experiencing much suffering while witnessing even-more, the crusader wants to observe a brief interlude of human happiness before Death claims him. Yet everywhere the crusader looks, he sees death: death on the American beaches from the plague, death caused by superstition. Much of this suffering and death is instigated by the one medieval institution supposedly dedicated to alleviating suffering—the church. It is the church that calls the crusades, that encourages superstition which results in flagellation and burnings at the stake. Where is human happiness to be found?

The crusader finds happiness in an unlikely place. He happens on to a family of traveling minstrels (not insignificantly named Mary and Joseph) and their infant son. Reveling in outdoor living and life's simple pleasures, they generously share their simple food with the crusader, thus displaying the joy and happiness after which the crusader has searched. The viewer should not miss the irony of this encounter. The church (ostensibly the source of charity and love) causes death and suffering. The entertainment industry (symbolized by Mary and Joseph and officially frowned upon by the church for its laughter and frivolity) provide examples of happiness and love.

After a nocturnal journey through a forest, during which the crusader prevents Death from taking Mary and Joseph and their baby, the crusader and members of his household are summoned by Death. This time there is no postponement.

In Bergman's allegory we all play chess with Death. Life and Death are inseparably close. It is not a question of whether or not we will win. In this life, Death always wins. The question, for Bergman at least, is how long the game will last and how well we will play the game.

Southern Siblings: Something In Common

By Debbie Clark

Skip and Cason Holley

Skip, who is 23, and Cason, 19, have many things in common: the same major (accounting), they both drive Volkswagon Dashers, they favor their mother, and they're stubborn. But as for differences, Skip says he's more erratic and likes to take bigger risks.

Cason says he can talk to his brother "about anything" and spends a fair amount of time doing things with him on the weekends. He says what he likes best about his brother "is that he's here."

skip says what he appreciates about Cason is that he's persistent and "he lets me borrow his car." As the middle member in his family, Skip says it's easier to identify with Cason than with his older sister, who is married.

Wayne, Jo-Anne, and Cindy Stevenson

When asked what he likes most about being the oldest of his siblings, Wayne says, "They're all girls."

"Our family is very close and openly affectionate towards each other," he says. "We try to see each other as often as we can and mealtimes is the best time to be together."

Cindy, the youngest, says that when they were small, "Wayne always protected us. I always wanted to be like Jo-Anne and would do anything for her. But know I know better and have my own individual ideas!"

Jo-Anne, who has roomed with her sister for two years now, says Cindy is her best friend. "We know everything about each other," says Jo-Anne. "We are almost like twins we're so very much alike! And the best thing about Wayne is that he looks out for me. I like knowing that I can go to him for unconditional advice and see something through a male's world. He is a loving brother."

Robert and Ronnie Pittman

"When we were younger," says Ronnie, "we were both competitive, didn't fight very much, and both very accident prone."

Now, rooming together for the first time, Robert and Ronnie are very close. Robert says of his brother, "I can always depend on his support whenever I need it. He is easy going, while I worry about the world."

going to music stores together, playing volleyball on the beach, and playing sports are the things they like to do together. Ronnie says they're both perfectionists, despite the fact that he calls Robert "slob" or "ugly."

As the older brother, Robert says he never had to worry about Ronnie beating up on him—until now!

Ronnie says what he liked most about being youngest was that "It was never my fault."

Kim, Tony, and Jillian Theofrod

This is the first year since their elementary years that Kim, Tony, and Jill have all gone to the same school together, and so far they like it. "We're very close," all three agree.

Jill, who is youngest, says, "They are always there for me when I have problems or if I need someone to talk to. They are like my best friends."

As the middle member, Tony says he identifies with both his siblings, but in different ways. "I can talk to Kim about one mature thing, but Jill and I have more fun because we do more together."

All three look very much alike, but Kim says she and Jill are most often confused as twins. As for differences, Kim admits, "I'm the oldest and sometimes I tend to be bossy!" She adds, "I got a car first. I got everything first. Mom lets me take charge."

Ingrid and Heidi Skantz

Ingrid, who is 21, and Heidi, who is 18, both love food, sleep, and spending money. Although they have a totally different taste in clothes and never dress alike, people are constantly asking them if they're twins.

"Ingus," as Heidi affectionately calls Ingrid, says "We were not close at all when we were younger but we get along great now." She says they are both messy, so neither compalins about a cluttered room.

Heidi, known to her sister as "Ugino," is one of Ingrid's best friends. "I can tell her anything," she says.

"Plus, I can act like an idiot and she still respects me!"

Dale and Cheryl Estep

Although they don't spend a lot of time together because of very different class and work schedules, the time Dale and Cheryl do spend together is quality time.

"We play tennis or racquetball together, and go hiking or study. That helps keep us close," says Dale. "We both love sports and Mexican food," he says.

Cheryl says what she appreciates most about her brother is that he is a very caring person. "He is always willing to help me in school work or anything," she says. "Another thing that is very special about Dale is that he treats me like a normal person. He picks on me as much as he does my younger sister. He also doesn't let me get out of doing anything just because my arms are short. I really appreciate him doing that for me."

Dale says his favorite thing about Cheryl is that she is always willing to be of help whenever he has a need.

The Kwangju American Cultural Center

By Chang Young-Gil
Poet and graduate student
Chonnam Nat. Univ., Kwangju, Korea

The vacant building of the American Cultural Center, now an abode of silence, reluctantly receives a visitor, unlocking two padlocks and an iron-barred gate; a strip of empty air is hung at the flapole where the Star-Spangled Banner had been fluttering forty-two years. What then has America left here, 80 Hwangkam-dong, very near the 5.18 Square where the citizens in the bloody whirlwind screamed for democracy and Liberty? The dust sifting mute on chairs in the reading room, the iron bars stark at attention in window frames, bricks, closed doors, panes of bulletproof glass, and some questions unquenchable in everyone's mind.....

Ah, the land's old cries several sparrows are scattering in the quadrangle of the American Cultural Center; I gaze up into the deep blue heaven through the shadows falling to pieces, One heaven of five thousand years the Korean paulownia branches support.

To where winds this road along now?

Rise on wings the prophetic songs above the scars and separate land, braking the heavily-built white silence, turns the history its hidden dark face above the amicable bands that have been shaking forty-four years. Yet you would say:

Self-reliance doesn't lie in blaming others for your own sores nor in isolating yourself. We'd better learn from a tree how to be in touch with winds and how to grow without depending to a seasonal wind. Then as we might open Korean Cultural Centers in any city of the U.S., why can't the Americans open theirs here?

The vacant building of the American Cultural Center in the heart of Kwangju City, drearier than ever, utters monosyllables in metallic voice, hardly understood, closing its iron-barred gate and two padlocks as a visitor goes out.

Measles Epidemic Feared at Southern College

For the past several weeks, Eleanor Hanson, Director of Student Health, has been gathering information about the vulnerability of the student body of Southern College to the measles virus. At the writing of this article, less than half of the student body have turned in the information requested by the school's Health Services Department regarding their measles immunization status.

The student who continues to disregard the requests for this information when it is time to register for classes in January. "We are only asking them to let us know whether they have been vaccinated or not," says Hanson. She suggests that students turn in the information before Christmas vacation because she fears that otherwise "there will be a line of five hundred students with restricted registration passes." If, at that point, a student does not wish to volunteer the information, the student will be required to sign a release.

Although there have been no reported cases of measles on Southern's campus for the last nine years, there have been four reported cases in neighboring Bradley County this year. There are both students and faculty who reside in Bradley County.

The main objective of the information program is, according to Hanson, "to learn how vulnerable the campus is, because if we are very vulnerable we are going to tell the students that, and they will see the necessity of being vaccinated."

If a student were to contract measles, the student would be placed immediately in the infirmary, and the Health Department of Public Health would be notified within the hour. Public Health would then come and investigate.

Once the case is officially determined to be measles, a list of the names of unprotected students would then be posted in both dormitories with directions as to where and when they should go to be vaccinated. If an immunization program were instituted on campus, it would probably cost each student requiring service, twenty-five dollars to be vaccinated.

If detected early, a student who has contracted the virus could be kept in isolation for a period of four to six days. The sickness usually lasts ten days.

The seasons which, according to Hanson, seem most conducive to measles outbreaks are Fall and Spring.

According to Hanson, "when the college sees a real and eminent threat to the health of the student body, it will act more decisively. If this is necessary, the previous cooperation of the students will help the Health Services Department to act more accurately, more quickly, and with less confusion and hassle."

FOR THE HEALTH OF IT

Darlene Almeda, R.N., answers your questions:

Q: Please explain why we shouldn't eat sugar when we're sick.

A: A study was conducted several years ago to test whether sugars decreased the function of the phagocytic cells (white blood cells which engulf and destroy bacteria, protozoa, and other foreign particles in our blood) in our bodies. It was discovered that after eating or drinking high amounts of simple carbohydrates or sugars, the engulfing capacity of the phagocytes was markedly decreased for at least five hours after eating the sugar (sources released upon request).

Also, because sweets are more filling than other foods, one tends to neglect nutritious foods such as fruits, vegetables, and grains. This causes the body to miss out on essential vitamins and minerals which play a major role in helping the body recover from sickness.

Monday Night's Fabulous Football

By TIM SULLIVAN

©Copyright 1989, USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

HOUSTON — House of Pain, indeed. Football doesn't get any more agonizing than this. Bruises and blood and broken bones you learn to tolerate, but last-second losses to weak enemies are torture. One of the most stirring games in two decades of Monday Night Football ended excruciatingly for the Bengals. Houston kicker Tony Zendejas made a last-play field goal to give the Oilers a 26-24 victory on what amounted to the fifth lead change of the fourth quarter.

It was fabulous football, terrific television, and a terrible blow to the Bengals.

"Those are the kind of games," Bengal coach Sam Wyche said, "that eat you up."

Six games from the end of the regular season, the defending AFC champions have fallen to 5-5, third in the AFC Central Division and two full games behind front-running Cleveland.

If they are to return to post-season competition, it will likely be as a wild-card entry. And this prospect is not particularly promising. Monday's defeat dropped the Bengals into a sixth-place tie with the Los Angeles Raiders in a conference that will award five playoff positions. The Raiders have already clinched the relevant tiebreaker by beating the Bengals last week.

Brawling out of the gate

"This puts us in a tough situation," running back Stanford Jennings said,

"We're 5-5 and we're looking to be 11-5. It's going to be hard, but we need to win every game."

This does not look particularly likely. The Bengals' defense has declined dramatically from its early-season success, and their special teams remain suspect. Monday night, the Oilers scored one touchdown by blocking a Lee Johnson punt and they set up a field goal by tackling Johnson on a fake punt attempt.

At stake Monday was not merely second place in the AFC Central Division, but a measure of respect the Oilers have so far withheld from Cincinnati's defending Super Bowl squad. Houston had talked too much trash in advance of the game that the Bengals were fairly bursting with vengeance.

The brawling began half an hour before the first kickoff, with Cincinnati safety David Fulcher exchanging shoes with Houston cornerback Cris Duhman.

The regulation brawling began on the Bengals' second play from scrimmage and offending personal foul penalties were assessed one play later. It also happened on the Oilers' first offensive play.

"They might have to go to their respective corners to get re-taped and put Vaschne under their eyebrows," said ABC's Gene Dierdorf, observing the pupapacious proceedings.

Ultimately, the Oilers suffered for their excessive zeal. A foolish unsportsmanlike conduct penalty against Houston cornerback Richard Johnson pre-empted a Bengal punt and, as it happened, satisfied the first Bengal touchdown drive.

"We have to play a lot faster on defense," Oilers quarterback Warren Moon said, "especially on defense."

No one ever called the Astrodomes the House of Brum.

The Oilers specialize in gratuitous violence, in needless taunts, in pointless provocation, and in avoiding Super Bowls. It would appear that there is a cause and effect relationship here.

"This team has a history of being aggressive, sometimes overly aggressive," Bengals' Assistant General Manager Mike Brown said of the Oilers. "They think it sets the tone. ... We want our guys to play football, period."

The Bengals did not always comply with Brown's wishes. James Brooks and Lewis Billups were equally as obnoxious as their opponents, attempting their own intimidation with infuriating gestures.

Four plays following Johnson's penalty, Brooks broke through the line for a 58-yard touchdown run. As he neared the goal line, Brooks turned to cornerback Steve Brown, giving chase, and motioned to him to try to catch up.

At best, this was tacky. At worst, it was trash league. Later, before and after a failed fourth-down play at the goal line, Billups ran over near the Houston sideline and suggested with his foot that a field goal might have been sounder strategy.

"These two teams don't like each other very much," Houston coach Jerry Glavinville said, "and that's probably why they play so hard."

That's probably why the horses hurt so much.

BJ Boles Sends Greetings from Chile

Dear friends,

Saludos desde el gran país de Chile. I hope this letter finds you and your families doing well. Life for me is very busy, but also very exciting and challenging.

It's hard to believe that I've been here over two and a half months. Time sure flies doesn't it? It's springtime in Chile now. There are many beautiful flowers blooming and the hillsides are starting to turn green. Snow but surely all the snow on the Andes mountains is melting away. Chile is very beautiful and at times I feel like I'm in Switzerland. I guess about now in the States all the trees are beginning to change colors. I bet it's really pretty there.

I'm sorry for not writing this letter sooner, but my life has been very hectic getting used to everything. It's quite a shock when you're dropped into a strange country, with a different language, a new job, a new culture, and not knowing anyone. The shock has subsided now, and life is becoming more usual to me. I'm learning and adapting quickly to the language and ways of Chile. In fact some of my friends call me the Chileño Gringo.

I'm living with the secretary of the Chile Union and his family. They are good Christian people and have been a great help to me. They are Argentinians, so I'm learning a little about that culture as well. I'm living in Las Comas, which is a good section of Santiago. My work is not too far from my house, so I ride the bus to and from the Union. It seems like everybody and his brother rides the bus here. There are over 8,000 buses in Santiago alone.

My main obligation in Chile is to teach English to the officials pastors and workers of the Seventh-day Adventist Chile Union Mission and of ADRA/OFASA (a food and relief agency). On the average I have 25 classes per week. My students range from Union presidents to janitors, and from pastors to secretaries. In other words, I teach everyone. They are all at different levels. Some are first level beginners and others are ready for conversational classes. I have some private classes and some group classes. Needless to say, it is a challenge teaching but I enjoy it. They are all good people with a desire to learn. I use an array of different material. The whole situation is fun and challenging, and over all a good learning experience for everyone. myself included.

My other obligation in Chile is to work with the youth of the country. Right now, it is difficult to do a lot with this because my Spanish is not that great yet, and I'm learning quickly though, and I'm sure it won't be too much longer before I'm doing more with this department. At this point I can only sing, so I'm singing a lot at different churches and other youth meetings here in Chile. Even though I don't have a large part in the programs I've been traveling to different parts of the country for youth congresses and Pathfinder investitures. In this way, I can become acquainted with the youth and learn more of the country. I've been to many different parts of Chile and met many wonderful people.

Throughout my day I assist the workers in writing and translating letters to and from the United States. I also help people translate forms that are in English and understand different items of material from the General Conference of S.D.A.'s in Washington D.C.

Last month (September) was a big month in Chile because we had three national holidays. September 11th marked the anniversary of General Pinochet taking control of the country in 1973. September 18th was Chile's Independence day and September 19th was the celebration. It seemed every house had a Chilean flag. There were a lot of traditional dances (the "cuecas") and a whole lot of "empanadas". Empanadas are a favorite traditional food in Chile. It was very interesting seeing all the shows and learning how another country celebrates its independence.

Each day I am met by new challenges. I am learning a lot in Chile and I'm sure that when I'm done here I will look back and say I was glad I came. Every day is a class for me. I thought I was going to get a break from my classes by becoming a Student Missionary, but I was wrong. Every day I learn new things. I'm learning a new language, a new culture, new customs, a different geography, how to teach, how to communicate, how to travel, how to have patience, and so much more. The most important thing I'm learning though, is total dependence on God. I have good days and I have bad days, but it's the Lord that carries me through them all. Anything that is accomplished here, and anything I learn is a direct result of the support and prayers of you, and God's leading and helping hand in my life. Thank you so very much for your letters, prayers, and support; without it I don't know where I'd be. I think of you often and I hope to see you soon (a year isn't that long).

Take care, and God bless. B.J. Boles

Richard Moody: A Wild and Crazy Guy

By David Barasoain

Life around Richard Moody is like a well directed comedy. One of his best known attributes is his humor. It's comprised of good timing, smooth delivery, and much improvisation. As Richard would say, "It slays me." The other day in the cafeteria I found Richard eating with a group of what he calls Frauleins. They're what everyone else calls babes. It's easy to tell when Richard is trying to impress these women of German persuasion. He usually sits erect, with a cocked eyebrow and a voice several octaves lower than usual.

In addition, his stories become more distinctive. For example: "Yes, well that must have been the time I was in Europe. I remember it as though it were yesterday. I was harvesting wheat in the south of France for the poor. Of course, I had to do it by hand because all the farming equipment was destroyed in that flood. No one needs to remind you that the flood would have been much worse had I not pushed those two huge boulders in the path of the rampaging water." The girls aren't naive, but they do humor him. A common response from the Frauleins is, "Richard, you're such a man. You saved that entire village from impending doom, not to mention harvesting their crops singlehandedly."

The reaction to his narratives is usually followed by Richard sitting back in his chair, buffing his knuckles against his shirt, and assuring them "it was nothing."

Spontaneity is another of Richard's attributes. One Sunday a group of us decided to take an afternoon drive with him in his truck. What started off as an uneventful commute turned into a four-wheeling episode.

"Where are we going?", one girl asked.

"Oh, just out for a ride. Yep...just a leaned over and switched the blazer into high gear. "Yep, just a simple ride," he reassured us.

Sitting up in his seat he slammed his foot against the gas peddle and secured a grip on the wheel. Staring straight ahead, Richard searched horizon for the first obstacle he would conquer. We drove to the edge of a cliff, one that I wouldn't have descended with a ladder, but one which Richard felt he could descend in the truck.

As the front tires left the top of the mountain the conversation went as follows (not direct quotes): "Whooooooaaateeee." said Richard.

"Eeeeeeeeeeeeeeeaaa." said the girls.

I simply crumpled into the fetal position and began praying. Richard looked over at me. "Isn't this fun!" I gave him a reassuring smile and tried to remember my last confession was.

What started off as a simple, twenty-minute drive lasted six hours. We traveled the rest of the afternoon looking for places to test the stamina of Richard's vehicle.

Episodes like this are not uncommon around Richard Moody. If you do not know him, don't worry, he'll be around another semester. If you do know him, you may have heard the rumor that he's related to Doug Martin—untrue.

In just a single cafeteria visit with Richard you might fall victim to his humor. I can't guarantee what your reaction to that humor will be, but it slays me.

simple ride", said Richard.

The word "simple" made me wary. Any time Richard uses it in a sentence, the planned activity is bound to frequently.

We turned onto a dirt road and headed toward "the power lines." This is the area where the locals test the stamina of their 4 x 4's. Huge dirt mountains, ten foot mud puddles, toppled trees and tire treads mark the area. Richard stopped the truck,

Book Review page 3

Archaeologists have found evidence of massive flooding covering earlier cultures in ancient Mesopotamia, the land between the rivers Tigris and Euphrates, where much of the Bible's history takes place. Also, the story of a great flood recurs in cultures around the world—and in each, only one lucky man or family is saved.

"Many people today believe that the very universality of such sagas proves that they are based on fact," says the book. "Others suggest that the existence of these traditions among so many different cultures illuminates a deep human fear of nature's destructive power."

Some of the Bible's miracles do have plausible explanations:

—The burning bush of Moses could have been flaxmella—a plant with such volatile oil that it can be ignited by the sun. The oil quickly burns off, and the bush itself is not damaged.

—Manna from heaven could have been excretions from insects that burrow into the bark of the tamarisk tree, a desert shrub. Greek monks living in the region believed so. The excretion is a sugary substance that dries into a sticky solid. "To this day, desert Bedouins eat it."

—A storm may have parted the Red Sea for Moses, and an earthquake may have parted the River Jordan for Joshua.

But the book doesn't deal only with miracles. It also gives a look at people and their lives in biblical times:

—Why did the ancient Hebrews keep burning away from God, despite proof through miracles, a winner-take-all contest between Elijah and the priests of Baal, and punishment for worship of other gods and idols?

—Because people in that day thought all sorts of gods were responsible for everything that happened. A one-God approach was virtually unheard of. The God of Abraham might prove his superiority and claim to be the one and only, but at planting time it couldn't hurt to pray to the Canaanite god of agriculture.

—Philitines were sea people from perhaps Crete, who invaded and fought Sargon, King Sarg and David, and were finally routed by Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar II. Later, Philitine cities were occupied by mixed populations.

—A woman's life was one of toil. One of the few outside jobs she could take was as a professional mourner, where she orchestrated grief and made sure "the cries of woe were rendered at the appropriate time." If a woman was lucky and her husband rich, he would have concubines, over whom she was mistress, and they would take over many of the chores.

The New Testament occupies about one-third of the book.

—The name Jesus was common in the first century and comes from the Greek form of the Hebrew word Meshiah (Messiah), which means "the anointed one."

—Early Christians had trouble making sense of Jesus' crucifixion. "There was something never any expectation that God's Messiah would suffer such degradation."

—Ancients didn't see the miracles of Jesus as contradictions of the laws of nature. Because they already believed God controlled everything, miracles simply confirmed it and gave a clear demonstration of his powers.

Eastern winds of change

In the month of November, the cold breezes of autumn have been winds of change through Eastern Europe, bringing down the Berlin Wall and stirring talk of an end to world communism. The upheaval had touched every nation. Here is a status report:

POLAND

Population: 38 million
Leader: Tadeusz Mazowiecki, since August 1989
The once-outlawed Solidarity union began a nationwide strike against economic conditions last year, leading to the legalization of the union, which in turn resulted in "round table" talks with the Communist Party and eventually power itself. But Solidarity inherited a crumbling economy.

EAST GERMANY

Population: 16.7 million
Leader: Egon Krenz, since October 1989
Having torn down the Berlin Wall and flung open its borders, East Germany's leadership was embarrassed to find its citizens seized the invitation to leave. Since January 1989, 175,000 East Germans have left. Now the country must deal with fresh economic crises caused by the exchanges with West Germany.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Population: 15.7 million
Leader: Gustav Husak, since May 1975
Friday, the Communist Party leadership resigned after more than a week of huge protests, saying the party had seriously underestimated the pro-democracy movement in East Europe. At the same time, hundreds of thousands of people in Prague cheered Alexander Dubcek, the former party chief whose attempts to institute reforms in 1968 were brutally crushed by a Warsaw Pact invasion.

HUNGARY

Population: 10.6 million
Leader: Miklos Nemethi, since June 1987
Leading Eastern Europe in political and economic reforms, Hungary became the first Warsaw Pact country to dissolve the old Communist Party, renaming it the "Socialist Party." The new organization condemned the policies of the past.

YUGOSLAVIA

Population: 23.7 million
Leader: Branko Mikulic, since May 1985
Opposition groups have called for a multiparty democracy and for amnesty for political prisoners. The ethnically diverse nation has been a cradle for a host of small nationalist movements.

BALTIC STATES

ESTONIA, LATVIA, LITHUANIA
Population: 1.5 million (Estonia), 2.63 million (Latvia), 3.25 million (Lithuania)
Leaders: Valno Vajais (Estonia), Anotols Gorbunovs (Latvia), Algirdas Brazauskas (Lithuania)
The Baltic states, annexed by the Soviet Union after World War II, have nearly succeeded, energized by a rebirth of their nationalist movements.

U.S.S.R.

Population: 287 million
Leader: Mikhail Gorbachev, since March 1985
The nation has moved from gridlock to "glasnost" and "perestroika," but Gorbachev approaches a fifth year in power trying to calm growing internal discontent. He and President Bush meet Dec. 2-3 for a summit off the coast of Malta, and changes in Eastern Europe likely will dominate the talks.

ROMANIA

Population: 23.2 million
Leader: Nicolae Ceausescu, since March 1965
Ceausescu, the East Bloc's longest-reigning leader, was reappointed Communist Party chief for five years in a lavish show of support for his rejection of change sweeping the region. Ceausescu told delegates he would "continue to be a soldier fighting for socialism and Romania."

BULGARIA

Population: 9 million
Leader: Petar Mladenov, since Nov. 10
Thought dead to Gorbachev's appeals for change, Bulgaria's Communist Party chief, Todor Zhivkov, stepped down in favor of Mladenov, who promised change. However, this year alone, Bulgaria has driven out about 350,000 Turks under threat of a harsh assimilation.

WASHINGTON — Months ago, when he proposed a get-acquainted meeting with Mikhail Gorbachev, President Bush could not have dreamed that his first meeting with the Soviet leader might turn out to be the Summit to End the Cold War.

But the Dec. 2-3 summit has taken on momentous dimensions because of the far-reaching historic changes sweeping Eastern Europe.

As the Soviet-dominated empire disintegrates and the possibility of a new order emerges in Europe, the meetings aboard Soviet and U.S. warships in the Mediterranean off the island nation of Malta come at a crossroads of history, full of unforeseen potential, packed with high hopes and high stakes.

They said he couldn't do it

by DAVID LEON MOORE

©Copyright 1989, USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Bill Curry rises at 8:30 every morning. Time to himself, for reflecting and thinking clearly. He calls it "my sanity time."

Things become less sane a little later, when Alabama football fans begin to snore.

By, do they sit? Of course, Curry, in his third — and, by far, happiest — year as the Alabama coach, knows all about that. He's survived a death threat, a brick thrown through his office window, plus innumerable angry letters and phone calls demanding his firing.

Suddenly, however, it seems Bill Curry is an OK guy. Funny how everything changes with a 10-0 record, a No. 3 national ranking and, with a victory Saturday again Auburn (8-2, No. 10), a shot at a national championship.

Listen to the folks calling in to his weekly radio show:

Caller: "This is Jim from Opelika, and I would just like to say that I apologize for not supporting you from the beginning. I'm with you now, and I'm sorry it took so long."

Curry: "No need to apologize. Jim. The thing about our business is you have to prove yourself."

It has not been easy. Curry's hiring in 1987 to replace Ray Perkins was met with outrage from Crimson Tide loyalists who couldn't believe a guy who had never played for or coached under demigod Bear Bryant, who named Bama football into a religion, would get the job.

They quickly mobilized. There was a death threat aimed at Curry, plus one for Josh Thomas, the then-school president who went out on a limb to hire a guy better known for his playing career (a center for Vince Lombardi's Green Bay Packers and Don Shula's Baltimore Colts) than his coaching career (11-43-4 in seven years at Georgia Tech).

A 7-5 record in 1987 calmed no one. Then came a homecoming loss to Mississippi last year, and a brick through his office window.

"It bothered my wife a bit, and it bothered my mom," Curry said. "I guess a's stupid, but it didn't really bother me. I don't know why."

Since then, Alabama has lost just two games, finishing 9-3 last season and going 10-0 so far this year.

So, as Alabama fans nervously await the Crimson Tide's historic first trip to Auburn, Curry is breathing easier about his own future.

Caller: "Coach, I was in your office some time ago and asked you for an autographed picture. I just want to say that it came. I began to insist you when I got that picture."

Curry: "Glad you got it."

At the beginning of the season, Alabama pessimists — Curry calls them "The Fellowship of the Miserable" — figured they'd be running him out of town about now. Nothing forecast a season like this. Especially not when, early in the season, the quarterback, Jeff Dunn, and top running back, Murry Hill, went down with injuries.

But lightly regarded Gary Hollingsworth stepped in at quarterback and junior college transfer Brian Stacy took over the running chores. And, in the fourth week, something strange and wonderful happened.

At Mississippi, the Tide got ambushed. Alabama trailed 21-0 just 7 1/2 minutes into the game.

What happened next, Curry says, "was the pivotal point of our season and the highlight of my 15 years in coaching."

Hollingsworth got hot, Alabama's defense stiffened. The field tilted the Tide's way.

Says Curry: "We were in a hostile stadium against a hot team that was beating us into the dirt. But I saw resolve, and I saw this calm in Gary Hollingsworth, and I saw our defense just set its jaw and go back to work. I said, 'By golly, we're gonna do something to win this game.'"

Hollingsworth score: Alabama 48, Mississippi 21. Final score: Alabama 62, Mississippi 27.

Running off the field at halftime, Curry bumped into Larry New, his defensive line coach. "He's got these years in his eyes, and he says, 'We got us as a football team.' I said, 'Yeah, we do.'"

Three weeks later came a pivotal victory at Penn State, when 67 defensive end Thomas Rayam blocked an 18-yard field goal in the final seconds to preserve a 17-16 Alabama win.

Caller: "Coach Curry, I'd like to give a little credit to Thomas Rayam's parents. You know, they really deserve credit, 'cause if Thomas was 6-4 instead of 6-7, we'd be 7-1 right now. 'Wed of 8-0.'"

His biggest fault as the Alabama coach is that he was never one of Bryant's boys.

Curry, 47, fashion model handsome, deeply religious, a bit of a fitness freak, has always fought long odds, starting his pro football career as an undersized 200-pound pick at the Packers.

"That was in 1965, and every year since then, I've gone to work not knowing if I'd have a job the next year," he said. "So I don't feel threatened. If you've lived on the edge, and have gotten satisfaction out of that, you don't allow it to keep you from an 'A' grade."

Says former Alabama center Gaylon McCollough, a Birmingham plastic surgeon: "The average man would not have been able to stand up under the pressures that were put upon Bill his first couple of years. But what's happened to him at Alabama is just another chapter in his life. People have told him over and over again that he couldn't do things. And he's proved them wrong."

The Southern Accent is the official student newspaper for Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists and is released every other Thursday during the school year with the exception of exam weeks and vacations. Opinions expressed in the Southern Accent are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the editors, Southern College, the Seventh-day Adventist church, or the advertisers.

The Southern Accent welcomes your letters which must contain the writer's name, address, and phone number. Letters will be edited for space and clarity. All letters must have the writer's name and phone number for verification, although names may be withheld at the author's request. The editor reserves the right to reject any letter. The deadline for letters is the Sunday before publication at noon. Place letters under the door of the Accredited office in the Student Center or mail to: Southern College, Southern Accent, P.O.B. 370, Calhasset, TN 37315. (615) 288-2721.

Letter to the Editor

To the Editor of SOUTHERN ACCENT:

I am proud of the students of Southern College. In general they are friendly, cooperative, and courteous.

There is, however, an area of behavior in which too many show a lack of courtesy and understanding of proper decorum. I am speaking of the behavior I have observed at concerts in Ackerman Auditorium, the P.E. Center, and the Church.

Unlike TV, concerts are live events where performers and audience are interacting in an aesthetic and spiritual experience. This experience is largely negated when talking, studying (with its inevitable rustle of paper) and "entertainment" other than that which is on stage takes the spotlight. Individuals who attend these events have an obligation of courtesy to both the performer(s) and their fellow audience members.

Let me make some suggestions that will enhance everyone's enjoyment of these events, every, by the way, which lead to a complete college education.

1. Come to enjoy the program. You may not understand or enjoy it all, but try to learn by actual listening. Whatever you do, don't come just to get chapel credit. You won't enjoy it and neither will those around you.

2. Leave your studying at home. When you study during a concert the effect is the same as trying to carry on a conversation with someone who is reading or writing while you are trying to tell them something important.

3. Dress so you feel like you are going to something special (which you are). Think of how you might dress for a concert in the Tivoli or the Atlanta Symphony Hall. Jeans and T-shirts are not necessarily appropriate.

4. Come prepared to listen NOT talk. Save your talking for intermission. Those of you who have performed solos or in a group know how distracting talking is when you are on stage. It's equally disturbing in the audience. (By the way, turn off your watch before the concert.)

5. Finally, if you don't know when to clap, depend on the musicians in the audience to start. Clapping between movements of works is generally not acceptable.

By observing these five suggestions concerts will become more exciting to you. They will be more enjoyable to those around you, and this will identify Southern as a place where students are courteous and know what is proper decorum under many different circumstances.

Yours for more enjoyable concerts,
Marvin L. Robertson, Chairman
Music Department

Senate seeks to stiffen security at Southern

By Isaac Feagins

It is done because of anger, power, and sadism. It happens every six minutes. And one out of four women will become a victim. The victim's scream of "fire" or attack of "kick" has no effect upon the assailant. This action is called rape.

Gregg Graham and Adrienne Battstone spoke to Talge and Thatcher residents November 20, 1989 about rape.

Gregg Graham, Executive Director for Addiction Recovery in Chattanooga, giving statistics on rape and physical assault, said that 84% of the victims reported knew their assailants. He also said that research has shown that 700,000 women have actually been raped.

For example, Graham said out of 3200 women, 15% of them reported rape, 11% reported attempted rape, 11% reported sexual cohesion, 14% reported that they were touched against their will, and 49% reported no problem. Furthermore, he said that rape will happen to 25% of college women in America. These statistics were provided by The National Institute of Mental Health.

If Southern College women are not to become a part of the 25% raped, who will take the preventive action? Administration? Senate?

As a result of the rape near SC, a self-defense class is in the making. A Chattanooga police officer has told Dr. Wolters that the class will be given. Students will receive more information as the program develops.

The Senate, a body of representatives for students at SC, invited Target Hardening, a security service company in Chattanooga, in October to discuss SC's need for proper lighting. Sherrill Long, security supervisor, said, "Security lights are needed around all building, sidewalks, [and] back of property...the lighting is very, very poor." Senate agreed that lights are needed on the sidewalks between Brock Hall and both dorms, the ladies' as well as the men's parking lot, and the Conference Center. The Senate has also said that a fence, which would seal off the courtyard, needs to be behind the girls dorm. The senators added that we need an official patrol car with a recognizable paint job and lights.

The Senate has not yet spoken to administration about these suggestions. So far, the Senate has only asked the administration to inform students about the rape and to squelch the rumors circulating around campus. Dr. Wolters did so in an October assembly.

Adrienne Battstone, an activist against rape spoke to Thatcher residents. Her objectives were to develop an understanding of sexual assault and rape, to practice preventive action, and to enhance coping skills.

She said that rape is never the victim's fault, and that sexual assault happens to children as well as adults. She also said that rapists become progressively violent.

For preventive action, she encourages one to:

- Watch for potential rape sites. Keep away from them. Public restrooms are not a good idea. Do not go alone.

- Watch while walking, even during the day.

- Do not advertise your single life.

- Do not hide the key outside.

- Keep emergency phone-numbers by the phone.

- Glide in and around the car.

- Avoid carrying too many packages.

- Do not pick up hitch-hikers.

- Call the police if the car should get stalled.

- Drive with locked doors.
- Make sure that the car is in good working condition.

- Stay out of notorious hotels and motels.

- Scream.

- Run.

- Call the police

If raped, Battstone encourages the victim to enhance coping skills by realizing that she has done nothing wrong. She said that one should focus on the identity of the attacker so she can identify him if he is apprehended by the police

Poetry contest

December 31 is the deadline for entering the American Poetry Association's contest. Entry is free and everyone is welcome to enter.

The Grand Prize is $1,000, and the first prize is $500. In total 152 poets will win cash and publication prizes worth $11,000.

"Every student who writes poetry should enter this contest. Our latest $1,000 winner is a student. Students also won 24 of the other prizes," said Robert Nelson, publisher for the association. "December break should give students the chance to enter before the deadline."

Poets may enter the contest by sending up to six poems, each no more than 20 lines, name and address on each page, to American Poetry Association, Dept. CT-90, 250-A Putnam St., P.O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, CA 95061. Entries should be mailed by December 31. A new contest starts January 1.

Each poem is also considered for publication in the American Poetry Anthology, a leading collection of today's poems.

During eight years of sponsorship the American Poetry Association has sponsored 34 contests and awarded $165,000 in prizes to 3,100 winning poets.

Young Americans exhibit at Hunter Museum

Young Americans 1988

opened at the Hunter Museum of Art Sunday, November 19, 1989. The exhibit will be on view in the Hunter's temporary galleries through January 7, 1990.

The Young Americans competition and exhibition is one of the oldest and most highly esteemed traditions within the craft field. Since its establishment in 1950, the competition has brought to the forefront of public attention many of the vanguard figures in American craft.

Young Americans is a traveling exhibit which is the result of a national competition dedicated to handcrafted work by Americans between the ages of 18 and 30. The competition was introduced in 1950 by the American Craftsmen's Educational Council with two objectives: to offer craftsmen under thirty an opportunity to present their work to the public and to give these artists an avenue through which they can compare and analyze their work with the work of their contemporaries. The exhibition features 98 works by 62 artists: 24 in clay, 18 in fiber, 14 in glass, 24 in metal, 8 in mixed media, and 10 in wood.

Young Americans 1988 was organized by the American Craft Museum in New York. The exhibition was made possible through the generous support of the Collectors Circle of the American Craft Council and the Jerome Foundation.

MUSEUM HOURS: Tuesday through Saturday 10:00 a.m. until 4:30 p.m.; Sunday 1 until 4:30 p.m.; closed on Monday.

New M.A.S. computer being tested in library

By A. Lee Bennett Jr.

"Oh great, now the library has another machine I have to learn how to use!" was the phrase overheard by one of many McKee Library patrons.

The Magazine Article Summary computer has found a temporary home in the library's periodical area, on a 60 day trial period, with just over two weeks to go. Students will not "have" to learn how to use it, but those who do will find it extremely beneficial when looking up magazine articles.

If the library decides to keep the index after the trial period, the computer supplier, Ebsco, will replace its CD-ROM "beams" once a month, essentially teaching it every magazine and every article the library carries, as well as a few the library doesn't carry. The semi-current CD-ROM disc currently used by the index contains over 200 general magazines from January 1984 to the present.

Upon sitting at the machine for the first time, all one has to do is enter a title of an article wanted, an author, or the most popular category, subject. The computer will then quickly search the CD-ROM for all articles pertinent to the user's entry. It will even cross-reference two additional entries. A few seconds later, a list of articles fitting the search pattern will appear on the screen.

A user may then select one and use the index to its greatest potential by viewing the article's subject, title, author, source, issue date, page, and even a short summary of the article. The summary is probably the best feature of the index because a user can immediately see whether or not the article is relevant to what he or she is looking for.

If the user is not sure what to enter for either the subject, author, or title, a topic browse can also be done, which will give an alphabetical list of every subject the index recognizes.

Once a decision is made to keep the computer, Ebsco will replace the CD-ROM disc monthly for nine months out of the year. A lack of use is the reason the remaining three summer months will not be updated.

By keeping up-to-date with the monthly disc replacements, the computer will have reference to all of the library's periodicals, and also tell if a given article is even contained in the library.

Terri Lynch: female religion major

By Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

Her eyes darted from seat to seat as she walked into the classroom. With quick precision, she scooped out the room which was already filling with students. With certain composure, she sat down. "Gentlemen," the teacher said, "you will notice we have a rose among the thorns today." She had entered Homelitics class.

Anna Theresa Lynch, a Junior at Southern College, is a religion major. She is also the only female majoring in religion and pursuing the ministerial track in the department this year.

Lynch, who is better known as Terri, was born in Lake city, Florida in 1969. She is from a fifth generation family of Seventh-Day Adventists. Interestingly, only the females in her immediate family have been SDA's. Coming to Southern College in 1988, Lynch originally majored in Religion and Behavioral Science. As she progressed into the year she felt as though she was pursuing the wrong field. After several visits with various professors in the department she decided to take the ministerial track. Lynch wants to preach.

"I felt like God was calling me," said Lynch, when asked why she decided to go into this field. Since deciding to pursue the ministerial track, Lynch has become very aware of the obstacles involved in this field because she is a female.

When she sits down in her Personal Ministry class, taught by Dr. Jack Blanco, the Chairman of the Religion department, and her Homelitics class, taught by Dr. Douglas Bennett, she is always reminded that she has entered into a field which has traditionally been dominated by males. In these classes, Lynch is the only female.

While the idea of women preachers has not been widely accepted, there have been several recent moves toward change. Some states have taken an encouraging approach to the issue by putting in recommendations that would enable women to become licensed. While the ordination of women is still long in coming, there is certainly evidence that the attitudes of our churches are beginning to change by accepting the ministry of women.

Despite these changes there are still obstacles that only time will change. Dr. Blanco explains that there is a sociological problem. "What husband is going to be willing to reverse roles with his minister wife and choose a career that would be flexible with hers?" This is one question the aspiring woman minister must ask herself. The beginnings of this very problem are evident even here on campus. "It tends to make guys uncomfortable," said Chris Miller, a religion major, when asked what men think of women studying to be ministers. "It's intimidating," said Greg Phillips, also a religion major, "what guy wants to be a minister's husband?"

There are other obstacles which Lynch faces as she attends classes. Being in a classroom of 30 male students makes her feel alienated. She feels as though she will be critiqued harder, thus, she works harder. Her teachers and fellow students have made her feel welcome. "All women ministerial students have been warmly and graciously received and have excelled greatly," said Bennett. "Some of my best preachers have been the women in my classes."

Until the ordination of women becomes an accepted procedure, there is a great need for women's ministry in other ways within the church. Bennett believes that with an increasing need for counselors among women in the church, an area he feels women could fulfill very effectively. "There is a wide open field for women in the church," Bennett explained.

Lynch is in agreement. She says she is happy with the amount of acceptance existing now among the churches. "I will probably remain an assistant pastor for a longer period of time than would a man," said Lynch. Yet, she is optimistic that even such a position will still provide her with an opportunity to be an effective worker for the Lord.

The beginnings of this very problem are evident even here on campus. "It tends to make guys uncomfortable," said Chris Miller, a religion major, when asked what men think of women studying to be ministers. "It's

Joe Ellsworth, Student Missionary, writes from Korea

Dear friends at Southern:

Greetings from Pusan, Korea. It doesn't seem possible that I've just finished my first term. It seems like just yesterday that we arrived in Seoul rather unsure of ourselves. The first day of teaching was on September 4. That entire first week was rough. I was getting used to teaching and my students were getting used to me. Now that I know them, it's time to start another term with new classes. There are 8 teachers at my school. Six are English and two are Japanese. My school is located on the fourth floor above a department store. Three of the teachers are from Walla Walla. One is from Berkeley, and the other one is from Loma Linda. Somyon, where the school is located, is in the drug dealing area of Pusan. I live about 30 minutes from the school. I share an apartment with 5 other guys. The school where Chris Lang, Mark Cox, and Vanessa were at is down the mountain from where I live. The view from our apartment is awesome, especially at night. We overlook the city and harbor. I really like where I live because a park with mountains, streams and trails is only about 25 steps away. It's great! I like getting up early and watching the sun come up over the harbor. I have some great pictures.

Every weekend since I've been here it seems that I've gone on some sort of picnic. Last Sunday, all of the teachers and our two pastors went on a picnic together. It was a lot of fun. We went to a resort called Tae Jong Dae. It has a lighthouse, a rocky beach, and many cliffs. Some of the cliffs have interesting names like mother waiting rock, where mothers would come and wait for their husbands to get back from the war.

Another rock is called suicide rock, where people have jumped. My students told me not to walk around the park with a lover because the spirits of the dead people will make you separate. In class after that one, I asked if it was true—one student said no and the rest didn't know.

When I go on picnics with my students, the food can be quite interesting. The normal picnic food is tuna soup, beef, rice, and kimchi. On my Book 1 picnic, they fixed that menu. I ate only rice, kimchi and the onions and potatoes from the tuna soup. They asked me if it was because of my church—I told them no, that it was a personal choice. For my health I avoid eating meat, and I don't like the thought of eating dead animals. Each day as I walk through the market it reinforces my decision.

Usually Sabbaths keep us quite busy helping with the church. I have preached, had scripture reading, led song service, had Bible meetings, and had special music three times. Every Sabbath afternoon we have a children's story. We sing lively songs and teach them a new dialogue each week. I enjoy helping with that because it makes me feel like a child again. In my Bible class I taught them "Family". Sometimes it was very funny when we would sing it because my voice would change, and we had a different tone.

We studied articles from Signs magazine. My class was at 8:00 p.m. so class attendance was not very consistent. One evening I couldn't talk, so I had the me look for interesting articles to study. One lady picked the article "Should Sunday be put back into Sabbath?" I was really surprised. I had two athletes, one S.D.A., one Presbyterian, and two nothing believers. It made for a very interesting discussion and class. The last week we studied about the New Age Movement. They hadn't heard anything about it before. In one article it mentioned something about the Moonies and they recognized the leader from Korea.

This past term I taught classes from 7:5 a.m. and from 6:9 p.m. I taught one less class than the rest of the teachers because my Book 1 class was canceled due to lack of students. During my free time two days a week I help at the high school on the army base. I help with home economics and health classes. Being able to go to the army base is like being in a mini-America. If you want to send any packages to me, please send them to this address:

More women in the pulpit

The number of women in the clergy rose significantly between the years 1977 and 1986. Here are the five denominations that saw the largest number of women become preachers in their pulpits:

	No. in 1977	No. in 1986	Percent increase
Assemblies of God	1,572	3,718	136 %
Salvation Army	3,037	3,220	6
United Methodist Church	319	1,891	493
Presbyterian Church	370	1,519	310
United Church of Christ	400	1,460	265

Lisa Young, Gannett News Service

The meeting will bring together the careful, prudent Bush with the self-confident, unpredictable Gorbachev from the Kremlin, who has made surprise his hallmark.

In two days of meetings — some with aides and some alone — they will take a measure of each other and seek common ground to deal with a changing world.

"Neither Bush nor Gorbachev could have foreseen what the state of the world would be in early December when they agreed on this meeting," last summer, said Raymond Garthoff, a former State Department official now at the Brookings Institution, a liberal think tank in Washington.

"Now the meeting has acquired a good deal more prominence and greatly raised expectations, because of these momentous changes in Europe," he said.

Indeed, historians and scholars are reaching back a long way to find similar moments of historic transformation.

Historian Richard Barnett compares the Malta meeting backdrop to the period after World War II, when victorious Allied powers were trying to envision and shape the world.

"What could come out of this meeting," said Barnett, a senior fellow at the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, "is a recognition on both sides that for the first time in 55 years, Europe is not in a condition of preparing for war. The crisis in Europe now is what to do about the economic consequences of the collapse of the communist regimes."

While no agreements are to be signed at this summit, the superpowers will approach it with certain goals, wish lists and hopes. A wide range of authorities on East-West relations say Bush and Gorbachev will come to the table with differing aims and needs — though not necessarily conflicting ones.

Bush, the experts say, comes from a position of strength. The United States is economically prosperous and militarily strong, leading a successful Western alliance that virtually has won the Cold War. Gorbachev, on the other hand, reaches this summit burdened by severe troubles on all fronts. The Soviet economy is a shambles; his Warsaw Pact alliance is crumbling, and his popularity at home is waning.

"Gorbachev is an impatient man who likes big public-relations successes," said Dimitri Simes, a Russian-born Soviet scholar at the Carnegie Endowment of International Peace.

"His situation at home is sufficiently desperate that he needs to come back with something significant when he meets with the U.S. president."

Bush will be prepared for a Gorbachev surprise — such as some grand design for Eastern Europe or a plan for a demilitarized, neutral Germany — but he will not be drawn into any talks on such ideas, administration officials said.

"We are not meeting to determine the future of Europe," Bush himself vowed in his Thanksgiving eve speech.

What will the Soviet leader seek at the Malta talks? Soviet specialists suggest a variety of likely agenda items.

"Gorbachev's main needs are economic," said Marshall Goldman, head of the Russian Research Center at Harvard. "He wants to cut his military budget" so money can be reallocated to domestic consumer needs.

Goldman and other experts list economic items Gorbachev likely will seek:

— Waiver of the Jackson-Vanik Amendment barring the Soviet Union from receiving favorable tariff treatment on exports to the United States. Lower tariffs would not be a major boon to the sick Soviet economy, but ending U.S. trade discrimination would be important symbolically to Gorbachev.

— U.S. support, or at least sympathetic consideration, of Soviet desires to join the world economic club; the World Bank, International Monetary Fund and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. U.S. officials have opposed Soviet overtures to join those bodies.

— Some U.S. consideration of longer-term economic cooperation, to help the Soviets modernize and restructure their economy.

On the political front, experts say, Gorbachev will want assurances that the United States will not seek to exploit turmoil in Eastern Europe — a promise.

Bush made in Wednesday's speech. Gorbachev also may propose accelerating talks to cut conventional ground that students who have already used the Magazine Articles Summary "like it very much." Students who use it for the remainder of the trial period are encouraged to fill out a small card, telling what they think of the system.

Bennett recalled the InfoTrac index which was tried last year, and said that the cost of the computer, printer, etc. for the M.A.S. is only about $4,000, whereas the InfoTrac equipment was about $7,000; however, the M.A.S. will cost $18,000 each year to keep up-to-date with its periodicals by the CD-ROM technology.

Bennett also said that this index appealed to the Student Association Senate as its project. The senate's annual budget is around $4,000, and this system would fit their budget very nicely.

There are three major reasons for going with the Magazine Articles Summary system, according to Bennett. "It indexes more of the journals we subscribe to. It provides a summary of each article, ...and it costs less" than InfoTrac, Bennett said.

forces, strategic forces and chemical weapons.

In his Wednesday speech, Bush said the Malta summit will begin "the work of years," and he appealed to Gorbachev to "once and for all, end the Cold War."

It is the same phrase Soviet officials had used to express their hopes for this meeting. Thus, the Malta summit assumes great expectations as a chapter in history.

Thanksgiving New York trip enjoyed by students

By Andrea Nicholson

While most of us spent Thanksgiving with family, gathered around a table of homemade fixin's, two bus loads of SC students spent the holidays touring museums, feeding the homeless, and sightseeing in the grand metropolis of New York.

The trip was sponsored by the Art and Behavioral Science Departments. The groups left on Sat. evening, Nov. 18, and arrived in New York on Sun. the 19th. Students enrolled in Art Appreciation, taught by Bob Garren, followed a different itinerary on the trip than those who signed up for Ed Lamb's behavioral science tour.

Both groups stayed at the YMCA on E. 47th St. "The rooms were incredibly small," said Lea Sparks, a junior art major who went on the Art Appreciation tour. Other than sharing accommodations, the two groups followed separate itineraries during their stay. The art trip emphasized the cultural aspects of the city. Students toured six museums, attended the NY City Ballet at Lincoln Center, and a play entitled, "Steel Magnolias."

"The play was wonderful—probably the best part of the whole trip," said Gayle Miller, a senior accounting major.

Some attended the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade, the Bronx Zoo, and quite a few found bargains in Chinatown and in prestigious department stores. Angela Brackett, a junior accounting major, advised, "If anybody is going to go to NY, don't go shopping the day after Thanksgiving!"

The group boated the Staten Island Ferry Friday evening. "We could see the Statue of Liberty and the whole NY City skyline. It was just beautiful," said Lea Sparks.

Some students got tickets to talk shows such as "Late Night With David Letterman" and

They don't use real frogs...

By Mike Hernandez

How many of you have ever dissected a frog, earthworm, embryonic pig, etc. and actually found anything inside? That's what I thought - nobody. This is because the animals that are used for dissection are not real. I know this because I dissected a frog once in Biology class.

I was supposed to find over 400 individual frog parts and draw them on my paper. The lab manual had each of these frog parts separated and drawn in a different color. It was very neat. When I cut open my frog, all I found was a pinkish-brown substance that resembled very old Jello.

I prodded around inside of my frog for approximately 30 minutes, until I finally gave up and joined the rest of the students in tracing the pictures directly from the lab manual.

Viking Club: What is it and where do I get my horns?

By Julie Jacobs

It started as a prank. The ad in the Campus Chatter promoting the Viking Club was fictional. But today, the Viking Club does exist thanks to the interested persons who called for their free sets of Viking horns.

Brian Miller was elected president at the inaugural meeting, according to Andy Nash, founder of the club. "I think Brian will do a great job as president," said Nash. "He's always wearing his Viking horns around the dorm, and he's trying to grow a beard like the Nordic men themselves did years ago."

Future club activities include a slide presentation of the recently built replica of the Viking ship, Hjemkomst, a traditional Viking campout and a visit to a local Norwegian restaurant.

According to Nash, the goal of the club is to gain an appreciation for the rich heritage of the Viking people.

"Anyone can join," said Nash. "You don't have to be Norwegian."

Other Viking Club members include Mike Johnson, Lisa Wilsey, Russ Miller, Brad Emde, Rich Winget, and Lance Morlen. Anyone interested in joining should contact Brian Miller at 83377.

(Editors Note: The Viking Club is still a prank. However, the idea has potential.)

This brings me to my theory on why it is OK to dissect frogs.

1 - Frogs cannot feel anything.

Frogs cannot possibly have any sort of nervous system because they are filled with glop. Frogs are nothing but little bags of glop hopping around with eyes and a long sticky tongue to give the impression that they are actual living creatures.

2 - Frogs cause warts.

3 - Frogs have bad personal hygiene.

Have you ever seen a frog use a public toilet? No. This is because frogs go to the bathroom on mushrooms which many of you eat regularly on salads. Can you imagine how awful it would be to have warts on your tongue?

4 - Frogs are ugly.

5 - Frogs are a bad influence on children.

Every child has read the story of the princess who kisses a frog and it turns into a prince. After reading this story, my sister and I decided to see if this actually worked. The plan was for me to catch the frogs, and she would kiss them. We did not succeed in turning a frog into a prince. The only thing we succeeded in doing was getting about 20 frogs to go to the bathroom on my hands.

I felt compelled to write this because of the article in the previous issue of the Accent on dissection. I hope I have provided you all with enough information to make a mature decision on this critical issue.

If you would like more information, all you have to do is send $19.95 (plus shipping and handling; state, local and federal tax, plus a small donation, if possible) to:

STRESS!

While a little stress in your life is healthy and interesting, too much can cause many different illnesses. Dealing with stress and knowing how to spot the things that cause it are important.

Stress survivors stay healthy even in the worst of times. They consider difficult situations opportunities for growth. These may include anything from work stress, money problems, or lack of time, to misbehaving children.

Happy events cause stress as well, for example, a new position at work, getting married, having a baby, or moving to a new house.

To cope with large and small frustrations, one of the most positive things you can do is maintain an attitude that God is in control of your life, rather than feeling that you are a victim of circumstances.

Keep the goals you set for yourself within reason. If they are unattainable within the time you have set, you place yourself in a stressful situation. Whether it's the amount of work you want to do today, or what you hope to accomplish in a longer period of time, be realistic.

Develop relaxation techniques such as simple deep breathing, a good night's sleep, or visualizing pleasing scenes in your mind. A job, a brisk walk, or exercising to music does wonders for that stressed-out feeling.

For the Health of it

By Darlene Almeda

Q: Since you are one of the health service nurses, could you possibly explain why I have been given aspirin for three very different problems?

A: Aspirin is your good, all-around, multipurpose medicine. Aspirin or ASA, which stands for acetylsalicylic acid, has a wide range of functions besides curing headaches. Here are a few. It lowers fevers, and works as an anti-inflammatory agent. It also has an analgesic effect, and decreases blood clotting. Because of all of these actions, we at Health Service take advantage of the inexpensive, yet powerful, effects of ASA when treating sprained ankles, fevers, headaches, toothaches, muscular soreness, flu symptoms, backaches, menstrual cramps, and several other ailments.

Although you may feel you need something stronger for your specific problem when visiting Health Service besides ASA, please be aware that it is our duty to offer you that which will have the least side effects and still be therapeutic enough to help you out. It is not always feasible to give a strong prescription medication when something less potent has not even been tried. So next time you get ASA from Health Service, keep in mind all the potential effects of this greatly underrated drug. And whatever you do, don't take it on an empty stomach!

Mitchell races on Turkey Day

by Jim King

While you and I were home for the holidays snug in our beds, dreaming about the fabulous Thanksgiving feast, Chris Mitchell was pounding the pavement at the Atlanta Thanksgiving Marathon and Half-Marathon.

The starting gun went off at 7:30 a.m. and 30 mph winds had forced the temperature below 25 degrees. "It was freezing cold!" said Chris.

According to Chris, there were at least five thousand runners starting the 13.5 mile race, and the great push of humanity kept the pace high during the first part of the race. "It was like a vacuum," said Chris. "I ran 6:30 miles for five miles."

Things were going smoothly for Chris when he ran into a problem. Nature called. "Those post-race jobs sure come in handy around mile seven," he laughed.

Feeling the cold, Chris said he was shocked when a man who looked like he was in his seventies blitzed by him wearing only silk shorts and Nikes. "He really blew me away!" said Chris. "There was no way I could keep up with him."

Chris said he didn't get to train for the race as much as he had wanted to do, "around the eleven mile mark I ran out of gas." He was really struggling at the twelve and a half mile mark when a miracle happened. "A beautiful blonde came up on me and was threatening to pass. It really motivated me to pick it up and I stayed with her the rest of the way."

Chris ended with a total time of 1 hour 27 minutes. Not bad for taking one stop along the way! "The last two miles were the longest for me. People lining the streets kept yelling at me to keep going. I kept wondering, 'Where's the end!'"

Chris, who is the coordinator of the Well/Fitness program for Southern College is planning to run full and half marathons, and compete in tri/hybrid events. "I want to participate in as many sports events so I can to better the wellness program here at Southern," he said.

Mental athletics begin next semester

By Randal Gilliam

The seventh annual College Bowl will begin January 22. As an academic competition, questions for the contest will be drawn from ten major areas: business, current events, English/government/literature, geography, government and law, history, natural and physical sciences, religion, sports, and general knowledge.

Matches will be held in the cafeteria at 5:15 and 5:45 p.m. each Monday and Wednesday evening through February 19. The semi-finals will be held in Lynn Wood Hall Auditorium on February 21 and 26 beginning at 6:00 p.m. The Championship match will be held Thursday, March 1, at 11:00 a.m. in the P.E. Center.

Through a joint contribution of the Student Association, the Student Activities Office, and the History Department, a new buzzer system for answering questions will be introduced for this year's contest. A new clock, which for the first time will be visible to the audience as well as the teams and the moderator, will also be purchased. According to Stan Hobbes, Assistant Men's Dean and Contest Moderator, "We've been really trying to upgrade the College Bowl and make it better every year. I think that with the addition of these new buzzers, this will be the best College Bowl we've ever had."

According to the College Bowl's "Rules of Play", a match is begun with a ten-point toss-up question. The team correctly answering the toss-up question then has an opportunity to answer a bonus question. Toss-up questions will be worth ten points and bonus questions will be worth between fifteen and twenty-five points. Matches will be twenty-four minutes in length.

The competition will be conducted as a double elimination tournament with a championship and an alternate bracket. Each team will consist of four players plus an alternate. Team captains are: Linden DeCarro, Rhett Eklund, Jeff Grange, Benjamin Keppler, Gene Krushinger, Robert Marsa, Mark McKenzie, Richard Moody, Benjamin Moreland, Keith Nelson, Lisa Springett, and Jason Suddeth.

Jingle Bell Jog to be held here

The first annual Jingle Bell Jog will take place at Southern College, Sunday, December 10, 1989. A 5K race will begin at 2 p.m. followed by a 1 mile jog/walk at 2:45 p.m. There is a $7.00 registration fee for the 5K and a $5.00 fee for the 1 mile jog, if you register before December 7 (there will be an additional $2.00 fee for late registration). Proceeds will go towards Amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS) or Lou Gehrig's disease. ALS is a progressive disease that attacks specialized nerve cells called motor neurons, which control the movement of voluntary muscles. ALS causes upper motor neurons originating in the spinal cord to gradually disintegrate, preventing them from delivering chemical signals and essential nourishment that muscles depend on for normal development. ALS came to wide public attention when the Hall-of-Fame career of Yankees first baseman Lou Gehrig was cut short by the disease in 1939. Since then, many people use the term "Lou Gehrig's disease" when referring to ALS.

One of the exciting things about the race is that each participant will be given jinglebells which will either be tied to the shoes or pinned to the clothing. Also, encouragement is extended to the participant to dress up in Christmas Spirit Attire such as

Dale Deason WSMC's morning personality

by David Barasoain

He started working in public radio, at West Georgia College's WWC in 1976. Now, after a decade in the commercial radio market, he's returned to his roots and works at public radio station WSMC in Collegedale.

Dale Allen Deason, 32, currently resides in McDonal, Tennessee, just outside of Ooltewah. He is best known for his work announcing and producing commercials at various radio stations in Chattanooga.

He's worked at various radio stations such as Z-93 in Atlanta and lite-mix 105 in Chattanooga. But why would a man who, in 1988, was voted the most popular disc jockey in Chattanooga go back to public radio? Dale recently started his own business, which gives him little time for commercial radio. Instead, he works at WSMC from 6:00 a.m. until 9:00 a.m. and is the local host during National Public Radio's Morning Edition. The rest of his time is spent making commercials and talking with clients. "When you're doing commercial radio it's all consuming. You can't do anything else....this is a way for me to stay in radio and still do my own business too," says Dale.

His Chattanooga radio career got started when he was offered a job with WGOW/WSKZ, in 1980. There he produced commercials, programmed music, and was a talk show host for six years.

In 1988, he accepted a job at WLMX as the morning air personality. The station was launched in '86 with Dale as the morning d.j. After the first quarter, WLMX became the number one, adult-formatted radio station in Chattanooga.

In 1988, after two years with WLMX, the Chattanooga Times and Chattanooga Life & Leisure voted him Chattanooga's favorite disk jockey. He was the first radio personality to beat WDEF's Luther Masling for that title.

Shortly after his popularity peaked, Y-102 approached him with a "lucrative 3-year contract," says Dale. What looked like what was going to be a popular station with a good format went sour. "The owner interfered with daily programming and kept changing the format," says Dale. At first the station did well, but its popularity slowly tapered off. After hearing rumors that the station was going to be sold (it was, and is currently known to listeners as FOX 102) and that ratings were declining, Deason decided it was time to get out.

Before leaving Y-102, he had been making arrangements to start his own business. Since his expertise was in making commercials, he decided to begin his own commercial-making business, Deasonworks, Inc. To date he has done work with Mc Donald's, Coca-Cola, Computerland, R & R, Check Cash America, M.C.B., State Line Electronics, as well as Newton Chevrolet.

Overall, Dale says public radio is more relaxing than commercial radio, because it's not sales driven; however, he says when the bottom line is looked at, all radio stations are the same. He says a radio station is a radio station whether it's in Atlanta or in Collegedale. "When I sat down at the on-air board for the first time at Z-93 I said 'this is really nice, but it's just a radio station'," says Dale.

After watching and listening to Dale, it's evident that his goal is to simply make listeners comfortable. He describes radio as an individual experience. Says Dale, "You're just as important to somebody listening in Collegedale as you are to somebody who's listening in Atlanta. The only difference is there are two million people listening in Atlanta and only twenty thousand listening in Collegedale."

Mr. David Smith transformed into Dr. David Smith

By Lynn McFaddin

David Smith recently received his Doctorate in English from The University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. His 340 page dissertation took two and a half years to complete. Smith chose to write about Henry David Thoreau. Transcendental Sauntering was the title of his thesis. "The basis for most of my writing came from a Published Journal containing 16 volumes, written by Thoreau," said Smith. "Thoreau walked four to six hours a day and the Journal was written largely on accounts of his walks."

Smith has always been involved in teaching. "My grade teacher was a very good teacher and that got in my blood," he said. "I have always enjoyed an academic environment and have a real burden to work with young people."

Born in Illinois, he later attended Broadview Academy. He then continued his education at Andrews University. He majored in History and minored in English and later received his Masters in English from Andrews University.

Wisconsin Academy proved to be Smith's first teaching job. He spent six years there with his wife Peggy. While there, he served as assistant boys' dean, and a history and religion teacher. "Both of my children were born there," said Smith. Jacinda is now 16, and Kimberly is 13.

Laurelwood Academy would be his next stop. Smith taught English for one year there and moved on to Union College. He spent two years there and taught the same classes that he teaches here at Southern College, composition, literature, and speech. This will be Smith's ninth year at S.C. "I am very happy to be at the college level and enjoy it very much," he said.

When asked if he would do it all over again, he replied Yes. "I would be a dean in a dorm again, because there is no other experience like that. I would also teach at the secondary level because of the closeness between faculty and students."

The most challenging part of my job is the volume of papers that I have to grade. Psychologically, I strive to get them to perform and grade them. I repeat the process over and over again," said Smith. "I am glad to see that I have helped a student on a personal level, whether it be spiritual level or some other problem."

It took Smith six years to complete his Doctoral Program. "I feel that the courses I took have been very helpful in my teaching and have given me a much better grasp of literature," he said. "The experience of doing it, and setting goals to push myself on a daily basis made me more confident about taking on something challenging. It was the hardest thing I ever did."

Smith dedicated his dissertation to his wife Peggy. She is secretary to the Academic Dean here at S.C. "She was very excited when I told her," he said. "I appreciated her strong support throughout."

As for the future, "I plan to spend more time with my family and get reacquainted with them," he said. "I also want to have some articles published. Someday I want to turn my dissertation into a book."

To us, there's no such thing as a small potato.

A lot of financial institutions don't want anything to do with making small loans because the small profit simply isn't worth the paperwork.

Credit unions, on the other hand, aren't profit-oriented or profit-driven. To us a loan is a loan, whether it's for a new car or a new bike, a home or a business, a college education or a night course.

You see, our philosophy boils down to nine simple words: "Not for profit, not for charity but for service." That's why you, as a credit union member, can usually earn more when you save—and pay less when you borrow.

To a lot of financial institutions, our loans and services might seem like small potatoes. But to us members, it's all gravy.

We take care of our own.

"Donahue." A few found themselves in a crowd of onlookers watching the filming of "America's Most Wanted." The program aired Mon. night, and a handful of SC students identified themselves in the crowd on the program that is broadcast nationally.

Free time was spent shopping, sightseeing, ice skating at Rockefeller's, and checking out the famous Hard Rock Cafe. Some went to Radio City Music Hall and saw the "Christmas Spectacular" with the Rockettes.

Opinions about the museums varied, but a common consensus among the students was that the Guggenheim Museum was the worst. Gayle Miller described the exhibits as "neon numbers, wire mesh, and decaying fruit that was just atrocious."

"It's a dirty city," said Pearlle Reyes, a senior pre-physical therapy major, "and people are constantly asking for money in the subways. It's a fun place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live there."

The behavioral science group focused their attention on the people in NY City, particularly the homeless. They toured an Amish community in Pennsylvania on the way to NY. Tours of Midtown, Little Italy, Chinatown, Lower East Side, Belmont and Harlem were part of the daily events.

The highlight for most on this trip was a visit to see Mother Hale, an 84 year old black woman who cares for babies who have been born to drug addicts. The women are placed in rehab centers and get their babies back when they have overcome their habit. Students got to play with some of the babies, three of whom were AIDS infected.

"The trip really opened my eyes to how the world really is," said Lisa Hollinger, a junior behavioral science major. "I realized things are a lot worse than what they seem in this world."

The group fed 4,400 homeless people at the Salvation Army on Thanksgiving Day. "I thought they'd be a bunch of animals, you know, street people that don't know how to act, but they were very polite," Lisa said. "They kept saying, 'Thank you, God bless you, you're so nice.'" She said it was so sad to see that there really are people out there who don't have anything. "I was getting more from them than I felt like I was giving," Lisa said. "It was such a blessing."

The group attended the Macy's Parade, toured the Empire State Building, the Statue of Liberty, the Bronx Zoo, and had ample free time to shop, sightsee, and attend functions of their choice.

Both groups returned on Sunday with plenty of adventures and experiences to tell about New York. Art students kept a journal of the museums and exhibits they viewed, and behavioral science students kept a daily journal of observations about the people they came in contact with in the city. Each student will write a paper to fulfill their class requirements.

Students react to the crumbling of the Wall

By Jo-Anne E. Stevenson

Twenty-eight years ago, a symbol of division between East and West Germany was erected. For twenty-eight years East Germans were imprisoned in their own country by the wall which separated them from their fellowmen, family and friends. The wall "protected" them should they be tempted to discover a freer society than their own.

On November 9, this year, the wall crumbled, not physically, but emotionally for millions of Germans. "So far this year 225,000 East Germans out of a population of 16 million have entered West Germany through Hungary and Czechoslovakia at rates of 300 an hour," stated a recent issue of Time Magazine.

This week selected students at Southern College were asked to react to the aftermath. For many, it was of little concern. For many others, they had heard the news but knew very little detail. Some expressed positive emotion, but were not touched beyond that point. For some there was indeed a deep sense of emotion and reaction. "I have an Uncle in West Berlin," said JC Bellard. "I am glad to see this end during my lifetime. It is amazing how fast it all happened." "The end of the world is near," stated Leif Asgerison. "The Pope and the Russians have met which is a definite sign towards the second coming...[for the Germans] it seems like everything is getting better and it is really getting better?" Wayne Stevenson said, "I think

Democratic society, which is a sign of the end of time. The German Government is opening the doors to religious freedom. The Seventh-day Adventist church does not take sides in politics, and because of that they have been permitted to come in, which is a reflection on the state of time we are in. Our work is being taken into countries where before the doors had been shut." Tom Huntress felt more anxiety towards the event. "I feel both happy and anxious. I don't believe unification will take place. This freedom will cause more political and economical problems," he said.

Michelle Fried believes "our generation will witness Christ's coming." The new found freedom for the Germans is "only one added thing to show that Christ is and watch towers and armed guards. In East Berlin, I felt a strange sense of confinement and stagnation—nothing tangible, just an uneasy sensation. The difference between the two sections of the separated city is remarkable. There is a festive, almost reckless atmosphere in West Berlin, which comes from being surrounded by a hostile and repressive regime. The Wall's destruction will bring freedom to both sides. The West can breath easier, and East can observe and experience democracy and freedom of expression first-hand."

For some students here at Southern the events in Europe have little effect. For some, the headline was all they heard. But for those in Germany their new found freedom is absorbed with every effort. "They will learn to or already appreciate their freedom which we take for granted," said Robert Pittman.

The opening of the Berlin Wall suddenly gives the German people a freedom to do what the American society can do everyday. Richard Moody explains, "I saw dozens of rabbits in the fortified no-man's land adjacent to the Wall. Maybe this opening will allow them to do what dumb animals have always been able to do—go wherever they please."

coming. There is always a calm before the storm," said Fried. Keith Nelson was "shocked it happened without a revolution, ultimately," he said, "the people control the Government."

Richard Moody who visited Germany two summers ago reflected upon the feelings he had when he heard the news of the recent freedom for the Germans. "I'm particularly excited about the Wall's destruction. It was very sobering—seeing the barbed wire Younger people are more likely than their seniors to celebrate an old-fashioned holiday, say a new survey.

Eighty-eight percent of those aged 18 to 24 will decorate a Christmas tree, compared with 69 percent of all ages, according to a poll of 1,000 people nationwide by Alamo Rent A Car.

Younger people are also more apt to exchange gifts (90 percent vs. 83.2 percent), send cards (87 percent vs. 81 percent), and bake holiday treats (63 percent vs. 50 percent); and hang the mistletoe (50 percent vs. 42 percent).

"This is the first generation of kids where both parents worked," explains Ken Wilson, author of Kids on Board. "They're grabbing all the warm fuzzy things they can in this high-tech wacky world."

Other findings:
— 61.5 million of us will take an overnight trip between Dec. 22 and Dec. 25
— 49.2 million by car, 9.2 million by air, 1.8 million each by train or bus.
Another 615,000 will take a cruise.
— Average spent on gifts: $340.

Least-celebrated tradition: Roasting chestnuts, only nine percent.

"And if it weren't for Nat King Cole, there'd be even fewer people doing it," says Liz Clark of Alamo.

The case of the missing silverware

By Izar Feagins

Someone is stealing from the school cafeteria. The cafeteria has lost much silverware and many dishes because students take these utensils to their rooms and keep them there.

Before November 10, 1989, Mr. Earl Evans, Food Director for S.C., purchased 51 dozen spoons, 51 dozen forks, 24 dozen knives, and 16 dozen plates to replace the ones lost, stolen, or thrown away. Mr. Evans also had eight racks of desert dishes. Today, nearly half of those desert dishes have disappeared.

Evans said, "If the cafeteria can keep these plates, forks, knives, and spoons, it helps the students' pockets." He continued saying, "It's the principle. It's what we believe." As Christians, we should not take what does not belong to us.

Dr. Sably pleaded for the students to return the missing silverware and dishes to the cafeteria. If a student has silverware and dishes that belong to the cafeteria in his or her room, he needs to return them. For if the utensils keep disappearing, the cost of replacing them will be reflected in higher cafeteria costs.

Bits and Pieces

By David Denton

There are some very stupid people in the world. If you don't believe me read the following phone conversation I had one evening while working at Pizza Home Delivery. Every word is true, unless I made it up.

"Hello, Pizza Home Delivery, may I help you?"

"Uh, yeah...I was wonderin'...Do y'all deliver?"

"Yes, sir, we do" (What I wanted to say, but didn't was: "No, sir, I'm sorry, we don't. I know the sign says Pizza Home Delivery, but that's because Pizza Home Come-Pick-It-Up wouldn't fit on the sign. YES, YOU IDIOT, WE DELIVER!!!!").

"Okay, I want a pizza" (ten second pause).

"What kind of pizza would you like?"

"What kind?"

"I mean, what do you want on it?"

"Oh. Hold on. Hey, Mabel, what kinds pizza you want? What kind you got?"

"We have ham, sausage, pepperoni, ground beef, onion, ground pepper, black or green olive, mushroom and anchovies."

"Hey, Mabel, they got uh...sausage...pepperoni...um...onion...what else did you say you had?" Here I repeated the list to him, and he repeated it to his wife (I guess it was his wife), at which point he said to me: "We'll just take plain cheese."

"Okay, would you like white or whole wheat dough?"

"Hold on. Hey, Mabel, you want white or whole wheat dough?" Pause, then to me, "What's the difference?"

"Well, one's white dough, and one's whole wheat."

"Oh. We'll take white, I guess."

"Fine. Would you like anything to drink with that?"

"Uh, yeah." Another ten second pause. This time I nearly screamed into the phone:

"WHAT WOULD YOU LIKE TO DRINK?"

"Uh, what you got?"

"We have COKE! We have

SPRITE! We have DR. PEPPER and we have DIET COKE!"

"Hold on. Hey, Mabel, you want a Coke with that? Yeah, give us two Cokes."

"Good, now can I have your address?"

"Yeah. 14114 S. Seminole Dr., Apt. 3-B."

"Let's see, that's 14114 S. Seminole, Apt. 3-B?"

"Hold on. Hey, Mabel, are we 14114 or 41441? Yeah, that's right, we're 14114, fifth house on the right after you pass the third street on the left. We ain't got no name on the door, but they do three houses down.

"Course I ain't 'member what their name is...Hey, Mabel, what's the name of them folk live down—"

"Never mind, we'll have your pizza there in about fifteen minutes."

"Oh, no, that's okay. We're gonna pick it up."

I don't know if he ever picked his pizza up or not; I haven't been back to ask.

The Southern Accent is the official student newspaper for Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists and is released every other Thursday during the school year with the exception of exam weeks and vacations. Opinions expressed in the Southern Accent are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the editors, Southern College, the Seventh-day Adventist church, or the advertisers.

The Southern Accent welcomes your letters which must include the author's name, address, and phone number. Letters will be edited for space and clarity. All letters must have the writer's name and phone number for verification, although names may be withheld at the author's request. The editor reserves the right to reject any letter. The deadline for letters is the Sunday before publication at noon. Place letters under the door of the Accent office in the Student Center or mail to: One Church College, Southern Accent, P.O. ## Letter to the Editor

Recently a friend received a notice stating that she had skipped dorm worship ten times and would consequently be fined $25. Her I.D. card would also be deactivated. As it turned out they were able to make some corrections on the amount of workshops skipped, and she did not have to pay the fine. Her I.D. card was not deactivated.

This event however, caused me to reflect seriously upon the school's religious regulations and consequently come to the following conclusions.

As it stands presently, Southern College requires dorm students to attend four workshops a week, three dorm and vespers. Sabbath School and Church are also required.

Apparently, if ten or more skips from dorm worship are taken the students run the enormous risk of being fined $25 and being denied the use of his/her I.D. card. In essence, students are punished for not attending religious activities.

Those who enforce such regulations will suggest that if a student does not want to attend religious activities then they should choose an alternative educational institution.

Let's look at it this way. The difference between a Christian school and a public school is that a Christian school provides religious activities, a public school does not. Because a student chooses to attend a Christian school over a public school should that mean that he must be forced to attend the religious activities? A Christian school should provide the opportunities to attend religious activities but it should not require the attendance of such activities. By requiring students to attend worship and church we do them a disfavor. In actuality, the requirement is counterproductive. By forcing students to go to dorm worship we create a sense of hostility. The student no longer goes to worship or church from a natural desire for spiritual food, he goes instead to obtain "credit" or to prevent the stiff consequences.

Should we not instead rely upon the student's own spiritual motivation to attend the religious activities the school provides? Should we not leave the choice up to the student just as Christ leaves the choice up to us to follow him?

Let us not assume that if workshops were no longer required that students would no longer come. I strongly believe that if workshops and church were optional, many students would still attend. They would attend out of their own spiritual aliveness and desire to enter God's presence. Other SDA campuses have discontinued the requirement to attend daily workshops and have found a decline in worship and church attendance. Yet at the same time, this does not prove that the students who do not attend are not themselves conducting their own spiritual workshops.

Most students I am acquainted with conduct their own workshops. During the time that they are sitting in dorm worship, completely unadvised, they could be enjoying their own worship due because of their natural desire to learn more about Christ, not because they need the "credit."

College age young people should not be required to attend structured worship services. The mere fact that they have chosen to enroll at a Christian college should be a reflection of their spiritual aliveness. Thus, they choose an institution where religious activities are provided. In the event that they choose not to attend should not be an assumption that they are spiritually weak and need prompting towards a deeper spiritual level. Perhaps we should rely on each student's own religious motivation and desire where he will enter the presence of the Lord with an eager heart instead of one full of hostility and eagerness to fill the week's requirement of "spiritual food."

Girls dorm opens it's doors to guys

By Suzanne Lettrick

After a day of last minute door decorating, the halls fell silent. Women quickly scopped wrapping paper, tape, and garland remains from their pre-vacuumed carpets before the first deep voice vibrated down the corridor.

Before guests arrived, curious women previewed the Santas, Christmas trees, and snowmen, which were carefully applied to their neighbors' doors.

Then, the museum-like silence was gone as loads of men poured in from every entrance. Thatcher had opened its doors to Talge.

From 6:30-8:00 p.m., men were allowed to go past the "No Men Allowed" signs, to a world which they hardly, if ever, enter.

Christmas was the theme of this December 3 women's club open house.

Robert Garrea, one of the door judges, said, "probably about 75% of the doors had been decorated. I enjoyed it because I think this year more people took part in decorating than in past years," he said.

"Hey, cool room", "Look who's under the mistletoe", and "Ooh, look at that!", were some comments which sounded that night. Punch and cookies were served as refreshments.

Women's club officers picked three couples to judge the doors: Mr. Garrea-the art chairman, and his wife; Dr. Green-professor of education, and his wife; and Mr. and Mrs. Krause, his parents.

"Doors were judged on the amount of work put into them and the originality of the ideas," Garrea said.

Prizes went to the best 3 doors on each floor, the hall with the most Christmas spirit (1st East), and one room for grand prize.

When Patricia Snider and Arita Scott asked the deans when the contest results would be announced, they were handed an envelope. They had won the grand prize of $40.

"We put about as much money into making the door as we got back in the prize money," Snider said.

Felt, cotton, and satin, were shaped into the ski mountain, ice pond and sky, which was stretched out past the door onto the walls.

The idea for the door came to Snider in class. "I was bored in one of my classes so I was sketching. I drew this winter scene and thought it might look good on our door."

Like many of the women, Scott and Snider stayed up late to work on their scene. "We started at 11:30 p.m. (Thurs. night) and worked round the clock until Friday afternoon. Sunday it was finished," Snider said.

"I didn't really care about winning, I just wanted people to look," she said. "So much work to have it fall down the next day."

Garrea said that the door won the grand prize because "it was very unique and well-done."

Chattanooga Times editor visits Southern

By Randal Gilliam

Paul Neely, the Managing Editor of the Chattanooga Times, visited Southern College Wednesday, December 6, as Editor-In-Residence. Neely is a volunteer in a program sponsored by the American Society of Newspaper Editors. The program's purpose is to bring newspaper professionals into the classroom. "I think it's a good sign that Southern's Department of Journalism is interested and involved with the professional world," said Neely. "Some journalism departments recede into themselves. I think it's good that they are trying to maintain a program that is grounded in reality."

Neely spent the morning in Brock Hall speaking to three journalism classes in a row. He discussed putting out a paper, becoming a managing editor, and the editorial process of the Times. During a luncheon meeting hosted by the Journalism Club, Neely offered a critique of the Southern Accent. "What I like best about the Accent is the Viewpoints section. Ordinarily, I hate the man-on-the-street stuff," said Neely. "However, it seems to be a different paper with each publication...you need to spell out the focus of the paper and keep a consistent layout."

During the afternoon Neely lectured on the role of the press in shaping public opinion and conducted individual meetings with students.

Neely has been involved in similar editor-in-residence programs with the University of Tennessee at both the Chattanooga and Knoxville campuses. He has not, however, conducted an all day program before. "This is my yearly quota in one day," said Neely.

Neely did his undergraduate work at Williams College in Massachusetts. He received a joint Masters Degree in Journalism and Business Administration from Columbia University in New York. Neely has worked in California at the Riverside Press-Enterprise as a reporter, in Kentucky at the Louisville Courier-Journal as an assistant managing editor, and in Florida at the St. Petersburg Times as a features editor. Neely has been with the Chattanooga Times for six years.

When asked for his first impression of the journalism majors of Southern College, Neely said that "the students strike me as interested and diligent, and that's important for doing well in this business."

Photo Exhibition

By Suzanne Lettrick

The black and white photographs hang proudly on the white walls of the gallery in Brook Hall. Four photographers' creations were unveiled to the public on December 7.

The exhibit centers on work done by the remaining students of last year's photojournalism class, said Altan Martin, coordinator of the event.

Martin, Ervin Brown, Sean Terretta, and Kenny Zill are the exhibiting photographers.

The exhibit features photos they took in the photojournalism class last year and pictures from their personal portfolios.

The photos cover a wide range of subjects from friends, nature, and love, to politics, profiles, and sports. Martin said the exhibit is "a good thing, because we have worked hard in the photojournalism class, and it's a rewarding feeling to have our photos exhibited." He also said that he hopes the exhibit will get people interested in taking the photojournalism course.

The course teaches people to creatively produce pictures, essays, and gives the student a "news note," Martin said. "By the end of the course students are able to shoot, process, and print within an hour. They will also know how to take human interest pictures, which attract people's attention."

Brown is a photographer for Strawberry Festival. Martin has a photography internship with the East Hamilton County Journal. Terretta is the photo editor for the Southern Accent, and Zill is the Strawberry Festival editor.

A Russian scientist and his visit to Southern

By Monte Mitzelfelt

Born to an electrical engineer and a nurse on June 22, 1929, in Leningrad, Dr. Arseny Berezin lived a fairly normal childhood—playing the violin and going to school. He did, however, spend a year in a remote Soviet village not knowing whether his parents were alive or dead during World War II. After this year of uncertainty, he spent another two years in the orphanage before he returned home and continued playing his violin all throughout prep school. Before he finally decided on a career, he went to the preparatory school for Air Force cadets. By the time he was twenty-three, he discovered his first love, physics, and joined an A.F. Ioffe Physical-Technical Institute.

Academy of Sciences in Leningrad. Methodically, he rose from the ranks of ordinary technicians to become the Deputy Head of Physics, a position he held until he left the Institute in 1987. During this period he met Dr. Ray Hefferlin, whom he and his wife, Helena, also a doctor of physics, hosted during Hefferlin's two visits to the Soviet Union in 1979 and 1982. Dr. Berezin compared Hefferlin's work favorably with Dmitri Mendeleev, the creator of the periodic table. They and their families became fast friends, the single largest contributing factor to his visit to Collegedale, although he was, in his own words, "very glad to accept the invitation and share my knowledge in the seminars" as well. In 1987, he was hired by the Science Technology Corporation of the Soviet Academy of Sciences in Leningrad to be the head of its physics department. The Science Technology Corporation manufactures scientific instrumentation, maintains four factories in four different Soviet cities, and operates one research and development facility in its headquarter city of Leningrad. Dr. Berezin currently has three children—one a theatrical scenery painter, one graduating in January with a degree in biophysics, and a five year-old son who speaks a little English even though he can't read yet.

"How can we secure the development of the human race and the environment and keep harmony between man and nature?" Since 1970 when he joined the European Physical Society, Dr. Berezin has made this question the focus of his scientific endeavors. He has also made significant contributions in the areas of plasma and solid state physics. During the past nineteen years he has served on various committees facing such challenging issues as nuclear winter and other possible results of nuclear war, and the need for clean, renewable sources of energy. His current trip to the United States, which is his second, is as a Soviet delegate to the Center for International Security and Arms Control at Stanford University. Better known as CISAC, the Center involves nine nations—Great Britain, Ireland, China, South Korea, the United States, Israel, West Germany, Italy and the Soviet Union—and seeks to shift the emphasis of research and development from a military orientation to a civilian one. They feel that existing satellites could be used to monitor the environmental situation on Earth and provide the necessary information to help reverse the growing trends of ozone depletion, deforestation, soil erosion, and fresh water shortage.

Physically, Dr. Berezin said, "None of these problems could be solved by one nation. They require close cooperation and, I would add, a spirit of brotherly love as expressed by the commandments." And indeed, he is not only worried about the future of mankind in the narrow sense but also as this issue relates to the full scope of ethics and science.

When asked if there is room for God in physics, Dr. Berezin replied, "Plenty. The more we know the more room there is for God," which was apparently his main point in his lecture to the faculty. He also mentioned that "the way of atheism goes to nothing."

This marriage of science, nature, and ethics seemed to be his primary concern on this trip, but in the end, he did say a few words about the political situation in the U.S.S.R. The overall tide of political enlightenment has not been, in his mind, a straight-forward thing but has fluctuated greatly over time. The current favorable situation, however, is almost inevitable since, in his way of thought, politicians are mere reflectors of the will of the people, people who are becoming increasingly aware of the need to live in harmony with one another. As for the forthcoming McDonald's in Moscow, he felt that it will be "very much accepted and have the longest queues [lines] in the world." This he said was not so much that food is in short supply, but rather that feeling of "come to Americans, be closer" that pervades the Soviet people. In fact, he said that the Soviets tend to idealize American culture and literature despite any flaws our way of life might possess. In some of his final words, which I will never forget, he said, "Yankees, go home" is absolutely impossible. It would contradict the prevailing attitude. The feeling would be just the opposite. "Yankee, come here. Come here. You are very welcome."

Christmas Band concert

By Julie Jacobs

The song "Here Comes Santa Claus" performed by the Southern College Concert Band convinced Santa and his helpers to parade through the P.E. Center last Saturday night.

Not to be outdone by the band, Santa and his helpers convinced the audience of their musical abilities as they sang "Feliz Navidad."

Another guest performer for the evening was Joseph Brooks, clarinetist. Coming from Western Kentucky University, Brooks led the band in "Theme and Variations," by Gioachino Rossini. Mr. Brooks also soloed in "Rhapsody in Blue."

"I thought the program was terrific," said Barbara Keyser, faculty at Southern and mother of a band member. "I thought it contained a nice balance of music."

Patricia Silver, director of the concert band, is in her eighth year at Southern College. "Mrs. Silver is great," said Shawn Collins, bass clarinetist. "She does a good job getting our group to play decent-sounding music."

Bill Kittle, religion major said, "The music was uplifting to the Christmas spirit and Pat Silver looked groovy in her new glasses that Santa gave her."

Scientific Cramming?

Ron Orlick Software

Cramming for examinations has become an obsession for success-oriented students throughout the world. The higher your grades, the greater your rewards, in terms of academic achievement, recognition, job opportunities, career advancement and total earnings.

Every year, thousands of intelligent, fully-capable students fail by the wayside, because they never learned how to cram for exams. Many more settle for low grades who may have earned much higher grades for the same amount of effort.

For the first time ever, a modern, scientific, computerized, result-getting method of studying "to pass examinations" has been developed. The creator of this long-awaited, grade-boosting, modern miracle is Ron Orlick, a software developer, who sweated blood over dozens of crucial examinations "the old fashioned way" during his pre-computer, undergraduate and post-graduate years.

"There's got to be a better way," said Ron to himself, before, during, and after every examination. Finally, he found that "better way". He developed a revolutionary IBM compatible software program, which he calls CRAMBO. To introduce CRAMBO to colleges and universities across the nation, the regular price of $199.00 has been slashed by $114.00.

CRAMBO Users can input high-lighted textbook data, lecture notes, quizzes, past exams, into the computer in several question/answer formats. This is so easy that even a two-finger typist can use CRAMBO. Each entry is tagged to the page, chapter, textbook, notebook, where it originated. Through self-testing, students can pinpoint exact pages that need more study and by-pass those with which they are thoroughly familiar.

This exciting, new computer program is aimed at helping all CRAMBO users to dramatically improve their grades. It is expected to sweep through every college and university at which it is introduced.

Ron Orlick worked his way through college and has a special affinity to students with limited financial resources. This led him to develop CRAMBO into a "money-maker" as well as a "grade-booster" for college students. After a student uses CRAMBO on any course he is taking, he can copy his input on to a special copy-protected diskette, which he can sell to other students taking the same courses.

To order, write to Ron Orlick, 16815 Milhoun Landing Road, Brandywine, Maryland 20613, or call (301) 479-6054.

Destiny plans special Sabbath School

By Pamela Maize Harris

Drama is a reflection of our own lives, Allan Martin insists. It touches us so intimately because it talks to us about our relationships—neglected and otherwise.

Now in his fourth year with Destiny Drama Troupe—two of those as director—Martin has shaped a touring company in demand across the nation for performances at Adventist gatherings where young adults are present. He won't take all the credit, though. The company, in its tenth year, has tapped the talented and stretched them and given them stage presence, poise, and a fluid message.

"Christian drama is on a plateau above secular drama in that the purpose is beyond entertainment," Martin emphasizes.

"We try to take Jesus Christ out of the ethereal twilight zone to where we can touch him, feel him and develop a relationship with Him."

Martin calls drama the perfect vehicle for addressing relationships with God or anyone else. Relationships we've developed and relationships we've neglected.

"It shows us ourselves," Martin explains.

And that's where "Convicted to Commitment," this weekend's performance at Thatcher Sabbath School, comes in. Martin has selected from a repertoire of 20 sketches and vignettes he has written.

With a major in psychology and a minor in public relations, Martin is a master at targeting his audience, anticipating their anxieties and addressing them head-on. Using this sixth sense he created situations that cut to the core of his listeners' dilemmas.

Then he walks out into the aisle and talks directly with the audience. What are they seeing and feeling? Why? "I bring the big picture. What does all this mean? What does this sketch have to do with the whole program?"

"It's not just a sitcom," Martin says. "It's not the Cosby show. You can't just vegetate and not know what's going on."

And Martin insists the audience participate. "We feel the audience has to be involved with it."

The troupe strives for fluidity between stage and audience.

Actors are back stage praying. Praying that some message is getting through. Asking the Holy Spirit to spark whatever needs to be lit.

"No matter what sketch we're doing, we've committed that performance to the Holy Spirit. In one way or another, we'll light up one of those light bulbs in your head. 'Yes, I know how that feels' of 'I had a friend that happened to,'" Martin explains.

Destiny's upcoming tour dates include appearances at the Jacksonville Youth Congress, Florida; Hamilton Place Mall, Chattanooga; and the Youth to Youth Convention, Cohutta Springs Adventist Center, Calhoun, Georgia.

Auditions are held at the beginning of each year for new members. The company tours and average of twice a month and rehearses Thursday nights from 7:00 to 8:30.

Equality in Adventist Ministry

Since April 1988 a group of professional men and women living in the metropolitan area of Washington, D.C., have banded together to speak forthrightly on women's ordination in the Seventh-day Adventist Church. They call themselves TEAM—Time for Equality in Adventist Ministry.

"The church has set up a rather elaborate process to decide whether or not to ordain women," says Rebecca Brillhart, TEAM's project coordinator. "But just when church leaders and lay members need to be exploring the issue, the official church press has been asked to remain silent."

Recognizing that some of the most outspoken opponents to women's

Victory week

By Shea Bledsoe

"Our lives were deeply touched through personalities, power, and the Spirit of God revealed by our friends."

-Jackie James
Religion Major

In spite of a busy, academic schedule, students at SC slowed the pace a bit for the 1989 Student Week of Prayer. During November 27 - December 2 students challenged each other to victory—victory in being a Christian and Living a Christian Life. Each night at 7 p.m. the Collegedale Church became a welcomed home beginning with a call to worship and the theme song "Victory in Jesus," arranged and accompanied by Randy Burks.

Craig Lastine, a senior Biology major and SA President, began the week's sermons after "allowing" Ndala Gooding to create a worship atmosphere with a vocal solo. Personal experiences in cycling races and roller derby competitions with his mother contributed to Lastine's topic, "It Starts In Your Mind." Lastine was emphasizing a victory in the battle of the mind. Using II Corinthians 10:3-5, he suggested we "personalize and memorize Scripture to make it more meaningful. Overcoming mediocrity was Lastine's plea for students.

"Don't be different for different's sake. Be different for God's sake."

On Tuesday evening Marilyn Lamond gave special music. David Wingate immediately followed with his sermon, exclaiming "It's time to go home!" Wingate is a future medical missionary and a nursing major at S.C. His sermon was entitled "We Shall Overcome." Handouts of Spirit of Prophecy and Biblical quotes were provided so students could follow Wingate closely. He reminded those present that everyone is a royal son or daughter of God—heirs to salvation. Using elementary education major Shannon Born as an illustration, Wingate proved that with just "trying" we won't get very much accomplished. We need the grace of God.

Love was on Laura Putnum's mind. After a vocal solo by graduate Joy Pollock on Wednesday, Putnum, a junior nursing major, presented her sermon "It's Where Your Heart Is." She talked about three kinds of love: man's love for man, man's love for God, and God's love for man. Students were reminded by Putnum of preacher and singer Wintley Phipps' statement "The issue is the Cont. on p.6

ordination are preaching and speaking unrestrained throughout the week church, TEAM decided to do what it could to facilitate careful study of biblical principles which bear on the issue. TEAM members want to make an impact at the grass-roots level of the Church.

Beliefs

Up-front in its goals, TEAM publications state that the group believes that:

1. The Bible supports the ordination of women through the principles of unity, equality, and spiritual gifts.
2. Ellen White approved of women and men serving the Church with equal authority, recognition, and pay.
3. The fulfillment of the gospel commission by the Adventist Church requires the spiritual gifts of women in the ordained ministry.
4. By ordaining women the Church ensures true unity among believers, demonstrating that all are equal before God and one in Christ.

"For these reasons TEAM calls the Church to approve the ordination of women at its 1990 General Conference session," Brillhart stated.

Projects

TEAM has set in motion several projects. An ad which appeared on the back page of the Columbia Union and Atlantic Union papers in May was crisp and forthright. We know many people throughout the Church share our concerns but who are they? The ad has helped us get in touch." TEAM members say.

TEAM is also actively promoting weekend seminars on equality in ministry in churches. They themselves hosted such a seminar in cooperation with Silgo Church in Takoma Park, Maryland, last October. A video highlighting some of the presentations is available.

TEAM is also distributing scores of articles, scholarly papers, cassette and video tapes which support women in ministry in the Adventist church. Finally, the group is organizing a network of concerned people who can work together to reach church leaders and influence policy.

Will such programs affect the outcome of the ordination issue?

TEAM members say they know their effort will accomplish at least four things. It will affirm women in ministry, unite scattered voices of support into one voice for equality, and strengthen the hands of those church leaders who favor ordination but feel isolated in their efforts. They also feel their efforts will alert church leaders to the fact that serious Adventists are not willing to turn the clock back on this issue.

TEAM board-members admit their lead is heavy. "The best plans cannot be implemented without volunteers or without funding," Brillhart said. "We need support from individuals who are concerned about the future of Adventism."

Changes seen in religion for the '90s

By JAMES SCUDDER
©Copyright 1989, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network

"Its light and fire all spent and gone, like the dead moon, it still shines on." — T. S. Eliot, on the Christian church

Religion, which has survived the 1950s, will survive the 1990s and beyond.

Yet, as in every decade, some constants and some changes can be expected, and here are a few:

— Religious pluralism will continue and increase, with increased emphasis on the constitutional guarantees that give Buddhists, Muslims and other religious faiths the same rights and freedoms as Christians and Jews.

— Ironically, the controversial issues that arise in the debate over those constitutional guarantees won't abate but also will intensify, in part because the highest court in the country, the U.S. Supreme Court, is expected to hand down even more conservative opinions on the matter of mixing religious practice with tax-supported institutions.

— The big-time television evangelists, typified by Jim and Tammy Bakker and Jimmy Swaggart — all fallen from grace — aren't likely to enjoy the prominence that made them rich in the 1980s.

— The local church and synagogue, having suffered a decline in attendance and participation — in part, because of television — will experience some resurgence as both the seekers and the saved seek something more personal and less vanguard than the "boob tube" sawdust revival meeting.

Southern Baptists, the largest Protestant denomination in the country (and growing), will continue to grow. Why? They're intensely evangelical, come down hard on whiskey and gambling but largely and judiciously remain silent on a number of other controversial social or political issues.

The large-membership megachurch, just now coming into vogue, will become the local church of the 1990s, as the faithful flee the world and build a cradle-to-the grave refuge for themselves and their children, a church that provides the complete regimen of human needs — education from kindergarten through high school, family recreation and retirement housing. Within the local church or synagogue itself, several problems or needs of the late 1980s give an indicator of what might come in the '90s. Expect:

— Much more recorded music. Why? The accomplished pianist and organist is a diminishing breed, and large pipe organ is a particularly penny-pinching instrument to buy and maintain, and secular music and instrumentation make continuing odds in the traditional Bach-laden church repertoire.

— A greater global consciousness in the local congregation. If the 1980s have taught us anything it is that the planet has become a "global village," with events in Chernobyl or China having a real or potential impact on small-town United States.

— Better Bible preaching. The topical sermon, a creation of the prosperous 1950s when post-war optimism for the coming Kingdom of God was high, is in a blue funk. Preachers are learning that Christians want to hear from and about the Bible, and Jews want to hear from and about the Torah.

— Participatory worship. The hum-drum sit-and-listen service of worship is bankrupt, and more and more congregations are turning to services of worship that — among more fundamental groups — include personal, spoken testimonies and altar calls, and (among more liberal groups) include liturgical responses, congregational prayers and traditional expressions of grace.

Going into action

What can concerned people do? Brillhart suggests:

Circulate key papers and materials to friends, pastors, conference and union officers. Prompt discussion of the issue in small groups.

Make a contribution to TEAM and other groups supporting women in ministry so that even more people can be educated during this critical moment in the Church's debate.

"All of us would love to see our group dissolve," adds Brillhart. "The hours are long and progress is hard to measure. But someone must speak for the women who have no voice in their future."

tissue of love." Challenging all to victory, Putnam closed by saying "You can fill your life with victory by allowing your heart to overflow with love."

Thursday's 11 a.m. chapel time was filled by Destiny Drama Company. Five sketches were performed involving each member in the program, an important goal of Destiny. Member Maria Rodriguez sang "Upon This Rock," before the first skit about the foolish man and the wise man. Another sketch, "The Beatitudes," showed a T.V. newscaster searching the streets of Collegedale for love and Christianity and having a difficult time with it. Director Allan Martin spoke between skits, tying them together and provoking students to really think about their own relationships with Christ. At one point, Martin asked students if striving for a good GPA was "chaining them down to this earth," pushing out time with God. Destiny stressed that one must know God to have a relationship with Him.

Nursing major Cecelia Henry provided special music for Thursday evening's meeting. Then it was Kyle Robinson's turn, and he came, as his sermon was entitled, "Shouting the Shout of Victory." Robinson is a Religion major and director of the Collegiate Missions Club at S.C. His challenge to peers was to accept Christ's victory as our own, with three easy steps. Accept Christ's healing. Let Christ calm the storm in your life, and let Christ fill your life. Robinson explained that by taking these steps, "We, too, can shout the shout of victory."

Friday night was a dream come true for speaker Bob Cundiff. As a senior Religion major, Cundiff came to S.C. as a freshman with a dream to speak someday for a vespers service in Collegedale Church. In the next four years his dream became more specific, "To have Jennifer Eaton sing 'There is a Saviour' — and to embarrass the people I love." His dream came true. Jennifer sang, and his girlfriend and best friend were on the front row. "Your Relationship with Jesus" was Cundiff's topic, and he shared two things needed to have one. The first was "Recognition of the Lordship of Christ," and the second, "Set Christ Up as Your Saviour." Cundiff explained that no one can save himself, no matter how good he is. But, Cundiff warned, a balance between the two is important. "Unless Jesus is your Saviour, you'll never be motivated enough to let Him be your Lord. His definition of a relationship is a conscious awareness that He's right there beside you...It's time to say good-bye to your religion and say hello to Christianity," Cundiff told students.

Ed Santana, director of C.A.R.E., spoke for the Collegedale Church Sabbath morning, first and second services. He focused on being positive about Christianity and the fact that peoples' problems do not cease when they become Christians; however, their attitudes should change. A positive attitude comes from believing that God will work things out. "We have to be positive about ourselves, the situation around us, and about others," Santana said. "Can people accept another who comes to their church wearing torn jeans, a leather jacket, and an earring? Being positive may not be man's nature, but by believing God's promises, it does not have to be done alone. There is no victory without victory in Jesus." ■

Great Southern mysteries

By AMY L. WILSON

Apple College Information Network

The following article about strange things falling from the sky appeared in the Sept. 8 Arkansas Gazette. Apparently, this kind of incident has been happening all over the country for years:

"Fort Worth, Texas — Hundreds of bats descended on downtown in daylight, many diving on streets and sidewalks, and officials are not sure why.

"Jeff Derosa of the Humane Society of North Texas found 100 more bats on a sidewalk Wednesday and said at least 1,000 were hanging from the eaves of a building."

What caused bats to descend on Fort Worth? How did it public react? Had such a thing happened before?

These are the kinds of questions an author such as E. Randall Floyd would ask, and he has, by writing a compelling collection of stories recounting mysteries in the Deep South. Floyd's "Great Southern Mysteries," (August House, $16.95; 180 pp.) should be a big seller.

In the chapter titled "Gifts from the Sky," Floyd leads with the first documented "skyfall" in the United States: It was March 3, 1876, in Bath County, Ky., when pleasant weather plummeted down onto the home of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Crouch. The next year in Memphis, a "rain of snakes" fell on the city. In 1886 in Charleston, S.C., warm stones fell from the sky.

What caused these occurrences? What did newspapers say? What's happened in recent history?

Floyd raises these questions while informing the reader, and he does it concisely. Obviously, he is putting his journalistic talents to work.

A teacher of journalism at Augusta College and the University of South Carolina at Aiken, Floyd once was a foreign correspondent for United Press International. His style reflects that of a professional trained to pick through the material available on a subject and present the most interesting bits of information in the most succinct and entertaining fashion.

Thirty baffling stories are included. Floyd discusses the myth of Atlantis. To add to the lingering mystery of Atlantis, Edgar Cayce, the famous "sleeping prophet" of Virginia Beach, Va., in 1945 predicted that "In 1968 or 1969" a portion of Atlantis would rise from the sea off the Coast of Florida.

In 1968, an underwater structure was discovered off the Florida Coast — a structure exhibiting eroded marble, stone columns, a mysterious roadway.

Really, it was! Then there's the Surrency ghost that haunted the hotel-home of the Allen Surrency family in southern Georgia in the late 1870s, a tale that will bring to mind scary films based on stories by writers such as Stephen King.

Or the chapter titled "Thou Shalt Take Up the Serpent," a discourse on the history of snake-handling, and "The Devil's Brother Blackbeard, Scourge of the Spanish Main," in which we learn of Blackbeard's "strange relationship" with the governor of North Carolina.

And was the quiet North Carolina schoolteacher Peter Stuart Roy, who died in 1846 and is buried in Rowan County, really a soldier under Napoleon during the French Revolution? He said he was often enough, but was it ever proven?

A benefit of Floyd's book is that he is not concerned about proving or disproving anything. His aim is to entertain and educate.

Floyd has taken material that could have been boring and made it into an entrancing collection of tales and mysteries focusing on the South — tales and mysteries that are an integral part of the heritage of all Southerners.

Read in south Georgia, the author, who spent much time as a younger listener to his uncle, writer Henry Curtis Tiltman, knows how to tell a good story.

Popular gifts for a collegiate Christmas

By LAKSHMI ARJOONSINGH

Apple College Information Network

If you're tired of getting underwear or a book for Christmas, you might want to suggest one of the new gift items invading stores this season and become the trendiest college student on the block.

The top gift item to buy this holiday is the sweater — the more colorful and bright, the better.

Color is what attracts customers, says Patricia Spinelli, spokesperson for Benetton headquarters in New York. The new style is the ethnic look with the "Indian aztec sweaters" which come in colors including fuchsia, orange and a mixture of gold colors," says Spinelli.

The big attractions are "the reversible cardigan with zip front, which turns into two different sweaters (when) turned inside out and the Mohare sweater, which comes in colors (including) orange, red and gold," Spinelli adds.

Sweaters aren't the only fashionable items to make great gifts.

This year, colorful jackets have made a big entrance in stores near you. And Neon and Chambray are the stars.

Neon jackets contain blocks of neon colors (any color available) on them, while each Chambray jacket is encircled with a strip of neon colored nylon, says Susan Sienko, assistant buyer trainee for Gantos headquarters in Michigan. The jackets started being sold in stores only a few months ago, and quickly attracted customers, says Fred Meyers, vice president and half owner of the East West company in New York.

At the rate the jackets are selling now "they'll be sold out by Christmas," says Meyers. "They're phenomenon."

You can also see neon whenever you talk on the phone — that is, if you've got a neon phone.

There are two kinds of neon phones available in stores this season, Roxane and Ronda, both by Cicena. The Roxane, which comes in blue and pink, is a contemporary desk phone. Cont. on p. 8

New books at McKee library

By A. Lex Bennett Jr.

The McKee library is always receiving new books and wants to let students know that they are available.

Next semester, the Southern Accent will contain a list of the library's suggested books, along with a short summary. In the article one can also find the books' call numbers.

Library director, Peg Bennett, who is supplying the information, mentioned two books for the last weeks of the current semester. Five Against the Sea: A True Story of Courage and Survival, by Ron Arias, is a "true adventure narrating the experience of five Costa Rican fishermen suddenly overtaken by a violent storm in 1986. Adrift in the Pacific for an incredible 147 days, their adventure is an engrossing account of survival against what appears to be overpowering odds." Bennett also said that this book is "an exciting story to read!"

The library's second new book is It Was On Fire When I Lay Down On It, by Robert Fulghum, who was the author of another recommended best seller, All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten.

"Fulghum majors on the 'simple truths,' guaranteed to bring a smile," said Bennett. "Once as a Unitarian minister, he officiated at the marriage of a Jewish bride and an Irish Catholic groom. 'To be asked to perform such a marriage is to join two people trying to cross a mine field without getting blown apart.'"

Bennett said that the book is "filled with chuckles" and that it will "remind you of life's takes-for-granted truths." *

phone, (while) the Ronda phone, a lavender phone which just came out this year, is the contemporary version of a trainline phone hung on the wall or (placed) on the desk," says Sieffan Otto, senior buyer for the Spencer gift company.

They are each encircled with "a neon tube (that) blinks on and off when the phone rings," says Otto.

If you're the type to lose scraps of paper that happen to have immensely important phone numbers, you might want to consider Ronda's possible solution to your memory problem.

"(Ronda) has a 10 number memory," says Otto.

Rovanne and Ronda retail for $169.99 and $129.99, respectively.

They are unique in the respect that they're clear, so the inside of the phones may be visible, says Otto.

Aside from the comeback of noon, games are also making a big splash in stores this season. And, if you're a sumo wrestling fan, Abalone may be the game for you.

Though Abalone greatly resembles the popular Chinese checkers, it uses the concept of pushing to defeat the opponent.

Unlike other board games that use concepts of surrounding or jumping the opponent to win the game, such as in checkers or chess, this game "is the only game in history to use the pushing concept like in sumo wrestling," says Matt Meriani, national sales manager for Abalone.

The object of the game is to line up your marble balls diagonally, horizontally or vertically until one of your opponent's marble balls is pushed into one of the slots bordering the inner part of the game board. When all of your opponent's marble balls have been pushed off the board into one of the bordering slots, you've won the game.

Abalone, which has received its share of honorable awards for strategy, has only been on the market in the United States since February. But, it's been quite popular in Europe for a while.

"It originated in France at a camp for kids," says

Meriani. "The typical game only lasts fifteen minutes... and it's very challenging."

It's the new backgammon for college kids."

Abalone retails between $28 and $32, and is presently sold only in high quality stores.

"People say they love to play the game," says Meriani. "It's a gift for a person that (already) has everything."

Carnivores Beware

DAY/Apple College Information

US meat eaters chomped down a record-setting amount of meat this year and nutritionists say all the excess protein is fattening our hips and arteries.

A new Agriculture Department report says each of us ate a record-setting 218.4 pounds of meat this year. That's more than half a pound a day. And 1990 figures will be even higher.

"This is really troubling news," says Nancy Wellman, president of the American Dietetic Association in Chicago. "When you consider that we're eating less red meat and more poultry and still are eating too much meat, this (report) underscores that we're shoveling in far more food than we physiologically need."

"Americans ought to worry about eating too much," says Jane Hurley, nutritionist for the Center for Science in the Public Interest, Washington, D.C.

National health organizations recommend that only 15 percent of our total calories should come from protein sources. Americans typically consume double that.

"The obvious problem is that many protein-rich foods are fat too high in fat, which can increase our risk of heart disease," says Hurley.

Diets high in animal protein also can promote osteoporosis, obesity, kidney problems and may be linked to cancer.

And an excess of calories from any source can add unwanted pounds.

If you keep yourself to three-ounce servings of lean beef, pork or skinless poultry, Wellman says, "There's no reason you can't enjoy meat."

Mental Practice can improve performance

By ROBERT McGARVEY
©Copyright 1989, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network

When Chinese pianist Liu Chi Kung placed second to Van Cliburn in a 1958 international competition, his career as a virtuoso seemed assured — only to be thwarted a year later when the Chinese government put him in prison for a seven-year term.

But even though he never touched a keyboard in jail, he was on tour within months of his release and — according to the critics — playing better than before.

How did he do it without the rigorous daily practice that's a big part of the lives of world-class pianists?

Says Kung: "I did practice — every day (in prison). I rehearsed every piece I had ever played, note by note, in my mind."

This might seem astonishing, but according toANCES STREIB, a psychologist at Marquette University.

"Research shows that mental practice has the same effect as real practice."

Dallas Cowboys defensive back Bill Bates agrees: "The night before the New York Giants game, I had an image where I saw myself pulling in two interceptions. I saw it all in my mind — every play and my every move. The next day, I got those interceptions and both were crucial.

Would I have gotten them anyway? I don't know. But I do know I got them."

Backed by evidence like Kung's and Bates' experiences, researcher and "Peak Performers" author Dr. Charles Garfield flatly asserts: "There can be no questioning that mental rehearsal of future events brings results."

Another example of how just thinking about it can alter an event's outcome is an experiment that was conducted at the University of Chicago. Researchers, testing the concept of mind power, put together three teams to compete at the basketball free-throw line. One group was told to not even think about or go near the hoop for 30 days. A second group practiced shooting free throws every day for an hour. The third group was told to imagine sinking free throws for an hour a day, but not to touch the ball.

One month later, they were tested. The first group showed no change in accuracy. The second group, who had played daily, improved 24 percent. The third group of non-shooters who had only thought about putting the ball through the hoop did almost as well — they showed 23 percent improvement without ever dribbling a ball on the court.

"What's happening here," says Thornburg, "is that in mental rehearsal you're engaging your subconscious as an ally in pursuit of goals. With imaging reinforcing the goal's importance, the subconscious will put that goal very high on your priorities, making it far more likely that you'll unconsciously begin adjusting your actions in ways that will make that goal happen for you. The mind is a marvelous tool. When freed, it will find so many ways for us to achieve what we want."

This might seem a little far-reaching, but it's actually something that we all do. "Who hasn't projected into the future, to see where their career or company is heading?" asks Garfield. "Once we establish that mental rehearsal is just an amplification, a more systematic version of what we already do, it's not difficult at all for people to see the applications this technique can have in their own lives."

Before you start putting this powerful tool to work, the first step is to get relaxed. "That's essential," says Thornburg. "It frees you from the clutter of your day, from worrying about tasks that are ahead. Only when you're relaxed will your mind open to fresh ideas and techniques."

Although relaxation tapes are available in book and record stores, that type of assistance isn't needed to get the requisite calm. Los Angeles psychotherapist Allen Robinson offers this proven technique: "Sit in a chair, relaxed. Close your eyes and listen to yourself breathe. Put your attention on the sound of air coming in and going out. Then empty your lungs and slowly take a deep breath. Do that again and, as you exhale, feel yourself relax. Do it five more times, then you're done. It takes 90 seconds."

Then, says Thornburg, who teaches mental rehearsal in seminars and also hosts the nationally syndicated "Power Thoughts" radio show, "Let your thoughts wander through your mind. Stop paying attention to them. Now think about a happy period of your life — it doesn't matter what or when it happened. Really get in touch with that experience. Now slide into imagining what it is you want to achieve, from giving a great speech to turning around a corporate downsizing in profits, making the experience as real and as detailed as you can. Take it all the way from the beginning through successful completion. That's it. You're just mentally rehearsing."

Thornburg explains that the key is beginning the process with images of that earlier, happy memory. "The subconscious is getting two messages — first, that you're happy; the second message deals with the specific, future goal. The subconscious associates the goal with your happiness, so it determines to work towards it," Thornburg says.

Following Thornburg's technique, a session takes 15 minutes — 20 at most. But don't expect an instant transformation. "Positive ideas can be put into the mind — there's no doubt about that. But it doesn't take place overnight," says Thornburg. "It takes consistent effort and practice — dozens and hundreds of repetitions. In time, you can be sure it will have a very positive impact on your performance."

For The Health Of It

By Darlene Alameda, R.N.

Q: What are the symptoms of measles?

A: Once again here are the main symptoms of measles: first one gets classic cold symptoms such as a runny nose and sore throat. A fever of up to 104 degrees follows accompanied by white patches in the mouth, and finally a rash which begins at the hairline and eventually spreads down to the feet. Remember, this is a highly contagious disease and upon contraction one will be put in isolation for up to two weeks.

Q: I hear there is chicken pox going around this campus. How do you catch it?

A: True. There have been several cases of chicken pox among the students here at Southern College. Chicken pox, also known as varicella zoster, is transmitted through respiratory secretions and direct contact with new lesions. This means that one contracts it by breathing air or somehow ingesting the contaminated droplets. The varicella zoster virus incubates for 13-17 days before one can actually see the blistering lesions, and it is contagious until scabs have formed over all the lesions, usually a week after onset.

So, because one doesn't know how it's carrying the virus until the actual symptoms appear, it's essential to emphasize how difficult it is to avoid getting it once the initial droplet contamination has occurred.

Representatives from Loma Linda University will be coming to Southern College on Dec. 14, 1989, in association with the Southern Union Conference.

Dr. Jim Crawford, Associate Dean of Dental Educational Services, who is also involved with admissions and recruitment at the School of Dentistry, will be on campus all day for interviews and to answer questions concerning health related careers—i.e. Allied Health, Dentistry, Medicine, and Public Health. Please contact Beth Maguire in the Counseling Center if you would like to set up a time to visit with Dr. Crawford.

At 6:15 p.m. Dr. Crawford will be the guest speaker at a departmental chapel to be held in the Cafeteria Banquet Room. At the end of the chapel, there will be break-out groups according to intended professions.

Diana Valerucci, Secretary of Marketing, and a graduate of Southern College, will have a booth set up in the Student Center where she will be available to answer questions and pass out literature specifically about careers in Dentistry and Dental Hygiene, but will also have some brochures relating to the other health professions.

For any of you interested in a career relating to the health professions, this will be an excellent opportunity for you to get assistance on plans for your future.

Lifestyles for the '90s

10 skills for the 90s

The 90s will bring new challenges for all of us. Some survival tips:

1. Grow another hand. Or at least become ambidextrous. You have no choice. How else are you going to drive, talk on the phone and fax material from your car seat all at the same time?
2. If you've always been a good squinter, including TVs, will be getting smaller in the 90s. Get an eye exam.
3. You will have to learn a new sport: Football. The real football. Soccer, as we call it. If you continue to think Diego Maradona is a South American win, you'll be the laughing stock of any cocktail party. Learn everything you can about it, now that the U.S. team will be in World Cup competition.
4. Beat the biological clock. Learn to apply Retin-A without friends figuring it out.
5. You can no longer boldly boast of being a computer literate. If you do, you won't be able to bank, shop or even play with your kids. If you don't know who the Super Man Brothers are, it's already too late for you.
6. Now that the Japanese own most of Rockefeller Center, can their language be far behind? Learn it fast. Use it often. Impress your friends. Buy an office building.
7. All garbage is not created equal any more. You will need to relearn your materials. Plastic, for instance, is not paper. Recycling will no longer be a choice, but a standard.
8. Learn to withstand higher temperatures. Thanks to the greenhouse effect, summer (and winter, spring and fall) is getting warmer. Slip on the sunscreen.
9. Save money by becoming more self-sufficient. Take the I-can-fix-the-toilet-in-less-than-15-minutes course at your local community college. Follow up with Rerewing-your-home-on-your-lunch-hour.
10. Although one, Relearn to have fun at parties without alcohol. Which, of course, means the art of conversation has to be relearned. Suggestions: Talk about toilet repair.

Upcoming Events

By Andrea Nicholson

January is the bleakest month of the school year. Bitterly cold, wet, hazy days bring with them post-Christmas vacation letdown and dreary spirits. But as next semester slowly creeps into its third weekend, the Student Association will throw a party that will bring excitement and summertime back to the campus of Southern College.

IT'S THE 2ND ANNUAL SOUTHERN COLLEGE BEACH PARTY!!! Coming to the gymnasium on Saturday night, January 20. It will begin at 9 p.m. and continue until 2 a.m.

"If you had a good time last year, plan on an even better time this year," said Harvey Hillyer, S.A. social vicepresident.

Last year's bash attracted hundreds of students decked out in summer attire. Although temperatures were bling outside, the gym was transformed into an 80 degree party place, complete with sandy beaches, swimming pool activities, contest, volleyball and Twister games, refreshment stands, and Beach Boys music piped over loud speakers.

Hillyer said the theme for this year's bash will be "The Boardwalk." Instead of using a company to set up the party, the S.A. is planning all the activities themselves. Tentative plans include a dunking booth, dart throw, more pool activities, a lip-synce contest, and beach areas like last year. Also a pool of Jello, in which students can dive for specially marked golf balls that can be used to claim prizes, is in the planning.

"There will be more food and free ice cream this year," said Hillyer. So don your suits, grab a towel and some friends, and head to the gym on Saturday night, January 20, for a little unseasonable summertime fun.

Watch for promotional party T-shirts to be sold during second semester registration. Only a limited number will be available, so get yours while they last.

Southern to sponsor Opportunities '90

By Andrea Nicholson

On Friday, February 16, the Hamilton County Convention and Trade center will house "Opportunities '90," a liberal arts career/job fair coordinated by six regional Christian colleges.

The one-day event, beginning at 8 a.m., will provide opportunities for employers and students to talk informally about careers, distribute recruitment literature, and conduct individual interviews.

Southern College students may make arrangements with teachers to get their classes excused to attend the morning or afternoon sessions in downtown Chattanooga. The $5 registration fee, due no later than Feb. 2, includes transportation. No lunch is provided. Vans will depart at 7:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

"There is a tendency for students to step out after graduation with a college degree and say, 'Here I am. Take me,'" said K.R. Davis, Director of Counseling and Testing at Southern College. "Students need to market themselves NOW so when they graduate, they'll have better opportunities."

Students attending the job/career fair will have the chance to gather information from employers, conduct interviews, and participate in workshops on job search techniques.

Students may make contacts with more than 50 participating representatives from government and law enforcement agencies, school systems, social service organizations, health care providers, department stores, hotels, insurance and food service companies, financial institutions, graduate schools, and other businesses and organizations.

Bell South Corporation, Becker CPA Review Course, Hyatt Regency Nashville, Internal Revenue Service, Professional Psychology Program, Provident Life & Accident Insurance Co., Sovran Financial Corporation,

U.S. Air Force and Army, Emory University, and Vanderbilt University are among the employers and graduate schools tentatively scheduled to participate in "Opportunities '90."

Three forty-minute workshops will be conducted during both morning and afternoon sessions. These include "Opportunities With the Federal Government" at 9:10 a.m. and 1:40 p.m., "Graduate School Decisions for Success in the 21st Century" at 10:00 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., and "Interviewing: Why Should I Hire You?" at 10:50 a.m. and 3:20 p.m.

K.R. Davis encourages all S.C. students to take advantage of the job/career fair. "Start as a freshman looking into what's available, and asking questions," he said.

The fair is a chance to prepare earlier than other job seekers, to practice and fine tune interviewing skills with employers, and to learn what opportunities are available with a liberal arts background.

A bulletin board outside the Testing and Counseling Center at the Student center has information about participating employers, including which ones will be conducting interviews.

Southern has worked closely with Bryan College, Covenant College, Lee College, Tennessee Temple University, and Tennessee Wesleyan College to coordinate "Opportunities '90."

Each of these four-year institutions has a strong liberal arts tradition. Employers taking part in the job fair want to hire students from such an educational background.

"It's an exceptionally good opportunity for juniors and seniors to make some good contacts and to see what's going to be available in their field of study in the next few years," said Beth Malgady, secretary in the Testing and Counseling Office. "I know of at least one person who was hired from a contact he made at the job/career fair last year. That makes it worth going."

Computer thieves strike Daniells Hall

By Bradley Hyde

Last Saturday night between 10:00 pm and 10:40 am Sunday morning four computers were stolen from the computer systems lab in Daniel's Hall. The four systems have a retail value of roughly $30,000. The advanced lab had: 1) a NeXT computer with high resolution display, optical disk, keyboard with mouse, and a laser printer; 2) a Polywell 386 computer with VGA color monitor; 3) a Wells American AT computer with EGA color monitor; and 4) a Laser Turbo XT computer with CGA monitor. All the machines had hard disk drives.

The loss of this equipment leaves the lab with just one Laser Turbo XT computer and one Laser Turbo XT monitor for the 10 students in the graphics class to use. There may be an insurance recovery for the loss but there is a deductible and since the insurance is provided by the General Conference, it is a serious loss both to the SDA church and Southern College. Even if full replacement is made, it will be some time before students have the equipment they need to properly complete their class work.

Security checked the building at 12:00 midnight and 3:00 am but didn't notice anything missing.

The Times, they are a changin'

By John Caskey

...and now it is 1990. These are sad, strange times. Times of fear and horror, shame and degradation, squalor and filth. There is unrest in the streets all over Eastern Europe. The plague is in the Streets of San Francisco and in New York's West Jungle. Neo-Nazis roam the concrete terrorizing sheep and cattle. In New Orleans there are rumors that 49ers are sinking into town and preparing a SuperBowl ambush for the hapless Denver Broncos. Gangs from the cities with brains full of chemicals and souls full of hate. But, there's fear in their eyes and in the eyes of a lot of other people from Baku to Panama City and all points in between. There is something in the air. The natives are growing restless. Sometimes, late at night, I think I can hear the drum beat thumping out of the jungle. The sound is faint but distinct.

Garbachev has met with the Pope and Bush owes the Vatican Man a favor or two for letting us have custody of a cut-rate pineapple faced Panamanian dictator. Everybody is shrieking "Peace, Peace" at the top of their lungs and there is scintillating speculation in some quarters as to whether or not that thing on Garby's head is really the Mark of the Beast after all. Ronald Reagan said in 1985, "This generation may be the one that will face Armageddon." The former President makes no claim on the gift of prophecy, but the smart money agrees with the Gipper on this one. All over Arkansas, survivalists are deepening their foxholes and stocking up on canned goods.

And what of Colledge? More specifically, what of Southern College? Profound, dangerous things are happening all over the world at an increasingly rapid pace. "Nation will rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom. There will be famines and earthquakes in various places." (Matthew 24:7) Yes, verily. But, what of Colledge? Are we ready for Southern College? Are we ready for this? If not, what are we doing to prepare ourselves? "Therefore keep watch, because you do not know on what day your Lord will come." (Matthew 24:42) Are the watchmen awake?

A story is told of mad King Richard III of England. As he toured the camp defenses early on the morning of the battle where he met his death, he came upon a watchman who had fallen asleep at his post. Richard took out his dagger and slit the man's throat saying, "I found him asleep and I leave him asleep." The thing that inspired miserable old Richard is alive and well today. There may be worse things in store for sleepy morning day watchmen than mere throat slitting.

"The Park is always crowded on Sunday."

The Southern Accent is the official student newspaper for Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists and is released every other Thursday during the school year with the exception of exam weeks and vacations. Opinions expressed in the Southern Accent are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the editors, Southern College, the Seventh-day Adventist church, or the advertisers.

The Southern Accent welcomes your letters, which must contain the writer's name, address, and phone number. Letters will be edited for space and clarity. All letters must have the writer's name and phone number for verification, although names may be withheld at the author's request. The editor reserves the right to reject any letter. The deadline for letters is the Sunday before publication at noon. Place letters under the door of the Accreditation in the Student Center or mail to: Southern College, Southern Accent, P.O. Box 376, Colledge, TN 37315. 615/238-2721.

Adventist Physicists to meet here

Physics teachers probably have one of the most closely-knit communities of any professors on Seventh-day Adventist campuses. They have formed the Association of Adventist Physicists, which now also has members on faculties of other institutions and members who work for industry or government, and which is international in scope.

It is a long-standing tradition for the AAP to meet just before or just after the joint meeting of the American Physical Society and of the American Association of Physics Teachers, at the nearest SDA college. This joint meeting is always in New York, even if it takes place somewhere else. Thus, this year's meeting is the "New York meeting at Atlanta," and so the AAP will meet at Southern College Friday evening, January 19, through Saturday night, January 21. As of this moment, faculty from four Adventist colleges and from Duke University, and two former employees of the thermonuclear program at Oak Ridge National Laboratory, have indicated their intention to be present.

Faculty and students of SC Daniels and Hackmen Hall departments, faculty of the SC Theology department, and SC administrators—and spice—are welcome to attend the functions and urged to meet our guests. The scheduled events will take place in the "fireplace room" (DH 101). Please call the Physics department secretary, Mrs. Corrine Dann, at 2869, if you want more information or wish to know if any changes have been made to the schedule. Here is the schedule as now planned by the AAP officers (President, Dr. Ken Thompson, of PUC).

On Friday evening from 7:30 to 9:30, Dr. Rand McNally (who does not make maps) will present "A Matter of Pressing Concern," which deals with a physicist's search for the solution to a thermonuclear holocaust.

On Sabbath afternoon from 3:00 to 5:00 pm, Dr. Milo Anderson will make a presentation and lead the subsequent discussion on the interface between faith and scholarship.

On Saturday evening from 6:45 to 7:30 the Physics Department will host a reception, with refreshments, in honor of the AAP visitors.

On Saturday night from 7:30 to 9:30 or so, there will be a short business session of the AAP, and a couple of presentations about teaching physics (with computers?) will be given. Most Colledge natives will be at the Beach Party.

Joint meeting of APS/AAPT will be in Atlanta, January 21-25.

Physics students would benefit from attending some of this meeting. Seeing a crowd of physicists scurrying from session to session, or plotting something (and experiment?) a theory? a proposal for funds? a job interview?) in the halls, is truly a remarkable experience. Some of the talks are interesting, books and equipment are displayed. If a sufficient interest exists, perhaps transportation can be arranged. How about Tuesday? See Dr. Kuhlman.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor:

The last edition of the Accent contained an article about my receiving a doctorate. I appreciated the publicity, but the factual errors in the article proved to be a major embarrassment. In particular, the reporter stated in two places that my wife is Peggy Smith instead of Cheryl Smith (my real wife) and that I graduated from UTC instead of the right institution—the University of Tennessee (Knoxville). To save my marriage and my reputation, I would really appreciate it if you would publish a correction of these errors in your next issue. Thanks for your help.

Sincerely,

David Smith, Chairman

New deadly sins for the 90's

By JULIE HINDS

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

The original seven deadly sins are pride, greed, lust, gluttony, envy, anger and sloth. To top a phrase from George Bush, they're biased, they're biased.

That is, they're unwell recently. In the last 10 years, the seven deadlies seem to have shifted rapidly from venal to mainstream. Remember how "Wall Street"'s Gordon Gekko said greed is good? Have you asked a couch potato about sloth recently? Can a society with chocolate-covered Oreos retain any concept of gluttony?

In lieu of getting a major oil company to endorse them, we asked several social commentators for the top sins of contemporary times. Here's a septet of candidates (with special thanks to Donald Trump, who currently is guilty of them all).

— ACQUISITIVENESS

"Greed isn't a way of sin," says San Francisco Chronicle columnist Alice Kahn. "It's become a way of life."

But in the '80s, having a big bank account was no longer enough. It was more important to acquire the perfect wife, the cutest kids, the purest-bred pooch, the shiniest coffeemaker. "The drive to get objects to validate yourself — it means we want to leave the country," it moans writer Cynthia Heimel.

Think of acquisitiveness as super-unleaded greed. Donald Trump, poster boy for acquisition, personifies all that is bad about the sin, according to San Francisco-based writer Jean Gonick.

"Here is someone who could really make a difference for people. He could write a check and cure AIDS."

But he's like a 4-year-old. His name has to be on everything. He buys whatever he wants without even paying lip service. "Gee, I'll fix the earthquake rubble." I cannot think of a worse offender than him."

— SMUGGENESS

If the '80s had a human face, it would be sneering. In fact, it would look a lot like David Letterman. A smart-aleck fraternity boy with a white-bread outlook, Letterman took a camera crew into a store named Just Bulbs and milked a half-hour of material. Just Bulbs? What a crass, stupid, middlebrow name. We'd never think of that.

As the tide of smug humor grew, some comics took a stand against it. "It's not an honorable approach," says comedian Richard Belzer. Others, such as Spy magazine, thrived on making fun of stupid human tricks. When Spy took a look at small-town America, the headline was "Big, Dumb White Guys With Guns."

Eventually, smugness succumbed to the trickle-down theory, infiltrating every aspect of everyday life. Food was smug. Could any other word describe a blue corn tortilla chip? The smugness anthem was "Don't worry, be happy," which is very hard to hum along to if you're living below the poverty line.

— TRIVIALITY

It's not just a concept anymore. It's a pursuit. "It's sort of a way to disengage yourself from brutal realities," says Gonick. "You read Danielle Steel instead of something wonderful, because you don't want to be challenged. It's an incredible striving toward mediocrity."

Case in point: "Vanna White Speaks," the autobiography of Vanna White.

Case in point: Because they had been collected by someone famous, Andy Warhol's 175 cookie jars sold for $247,830 in 1988.

Court case in point: The people versus Zsa Zsa.

— SOUL-BARING

Many, many people were deeply troubled during this decade. How do we know? Because 50 percent of them admitted it in People magazine. At least 10 celebrities told all in an honest effort to help others. The rest did it as a cheap publicity ploy.

"There are all these talk shows where people are baring their souls about sex, drugs, alcohol, weight," complains syndicated columnist Ellen Goodman. "In a larger context, it's amazing that what happens to your life is of interest to anybody else. I'm interested in the fact that anybody would tell all. I can't figure out why."

Kicking a habit is now considered a career move, if you can get enough good press for doing it. Crack's Alice Kahn of the San Francisco Chronicle, "It's better to have been addicted and recovered than to have never been addicted at all."

— PACKAGING

There are no authentic impulses anymore. None. The minute you decide you'd like to wear a cowboy look, along comes Ralph Lauren to turn it into a fashion line. Tear down the Berlin Wall and what do you get? Footage for a Pepsi commercial and a $10 boxed chunk of rock on sale at Hudson's.

Packaging is the apotheosis of the Madison Avenue mentality. It makes the advertising more important than the thing that's actually being hawked. Take the Infiniti ads, those abstract photos that are so cool they don't get around to mentioning what's being plugged. Aftershave? Condoms? Mutual funds? Your guess is as good as ours.

"I know by experience that Absolut is a good vodka," said New York Times columnist Anna Quindlen. "But I'm really offended by the talking ad they put in Vanity Fair. If they would put in a black and white ad next year and send the rest of the money to the Coalition for the Homeless, I'd be a client of theirs for life."

— SHRILLNESS

Morton Downey, Terry Rakotta. Pro-choice versus pro-life. Animal rights. CNN's "Crossfire." Professional wrestling. Sam Kinison. Heavy metal. What do they all have in common? They're a few of the enchanting items that have turned public discourse into a shouting match.

It really didn't matter what George Bush knew about Iraq, did it? What counted was the verbal jab he took at Dan Rather during their much-publicized verbal spiff. Whether he was kicking ass with Geraldine Ferraro in 1984 or raising red flags with Willie Horton commercials in 1988, our kinder, gentler president managed to keep his discourse at the level of a

College Costs Rising

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network.

The cost for one year's room, board and tuition at four-year private colleges rose at a torrid 8.3 percent last year to $12,365, while four-year public college costs rose 6.2 percent to $4,733.

Even if costs rise only 5 percent a year, four years of private college for today's newborn would run you $128,260 in the year 2006; four years of public college, $49,094.60. But don't be intimidated: You could cover that full public college bill by socking away $88 a month at 8 percent, starting when your child is born and continuing through the four years your child will be in college. For private college: $28 a month would do it.

Or, if you figure that your income will increase as the years go by, you could start by saving $59 a month now for public college, $155 a month for private college, then increase your contribution by 5% a year.

Don't be discouraged if you have to start more slowly. "Keep in mind that your children may be able to get financial aid, and that they can also work during their college years," says Eileen Walker, president of Fortune Financial Inc. in Seattle. "The more you save, the less you'll have to borrow."

barroom brawl.

Quindlen has a solution. "I think all mean people should be put in jail," she says.

— PREENING

Vanity deals with caring excessively about your appearance. Preening is more like vanity life — all of the sin, but none of the moral calories.

"It's not your real appearance versus your possible appearance anymore," says Quindlen. "It's your possible appearance versus everyone else's possible appearance. It's competitive vanity. Everyone is looking out of the corner of their eye to see how they're doing."

Most icons preen before the media, not before mirrors. Using make-up and plastic surgery, they remake their public image as diligently as General Motors works on this year's model. Michael Jackson's nose is the ultimate preen symbol, as are Cher's costumes. The smaller they get, the more we pay attention.

Quindlen worries that the '80s justified preening. "I think we made showing off acceptable by making it part of the professional program, the dress for success."

Adds Quindlen, "To justify yourself at work, it's important to wear silk."

Folk Art exhibit showing at Hunter Museum of Art

The Hunter Museum of Art announces the opening of two exciting folk art exhibitions, "Life in the New World: Selections from the Permanent Collection of the Museum of American Folk Art" and "Access to Art: Bringing Folk Art Closer," on Sunday, January 14, 1990. "Life in the New World" is a museum-wide exhibition of American Folk art dating from the 18th century to present day, telling an informal social history of life in America.

What is folk art? It could be the face of a child, or a memory of home, the shapes of nature, or a lesson in virtue, weathervanes, whirligigs, decorated furniture, or toys - fanciful or fundamental. In essence, folk art is the art of common people, done with uncommon style. Over 100 examples of folk art will be on view at the Hunter Museum, including portraits, paintings, sculpture, furniture, quilts and coverlets, pottery, fractur, theorems, decorated tinware, shop signs, and more. These objects, some useful and some ornamental, are treasured icons of our cultural heritage.

Museum hours: Tuesday - Saturday 10:00 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. Sunday 1-4:30 p.m.

"Reel Civil War Stories"

Tuesday evenings in January and February, the Auditorium of the Hunter Museum of Art will be the setting for some of the most powerful films ever produced by Hollywood. "Reel Civil War Stories," co-sponsored by Friends of the Park and the Hunter Museum of Art, will celebrate the 100th anniversary of the creation of the Chickamauga & Chattanooga National Military Park. All films will be shown at 7:00 p.m. at the Hunter Museum, Bluff View, Chattanooga. There will be an admission charge of $1.50 for adults and $1 for children. The following movies will be presented:

Tuesday, January 23

SHENANDOAH

James Stewart and Deag McClure star in and Andrew McLaglen directed this epic struggle of the Civil War. Stewart plays what many consider his greatest role as a widowed Virginian who attempts to make his land an island, sheltered from the horrors of war. He successfully pits his bull-headed and almost arrogant belief in peace against all the forces attempting to draw him into the war, until it involves his own family.

FRIENDLY PERSUASION

William Wyler's sensitive direction of this 1956 film opens rich insights into those of the Quaker faith in Jessamyn West's beautiful story of a happy, warm-hearted Quaker family, committed by faith to non-violence, caught up in the backlash of the Civil War. The family is confronted with the need to choose between their pacifism and their belief in the need to preserve the Union. Starring Gary Cooper and Dorothy McGuire.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MISS JANE PITTMAN

Ernest Gaines' stunning novel chronicles and Cicely Tyson brilliantly portrays the growth of a young slave girl to a contemporary citizen of 110 years of age. The 1974 Emmy-winning TV movie represents one woman's preservation of dignity throughout the tumultuous years of change in black America. Also starring Richard Dysart and Katherine Helmond.

We live in an entertainment saturated society. But very often the entertainment leaves us a little "lasting value" behind. There is a great need for quality entertainment that also presents the truth. (G.M.N.I.W.)

Destiny Drama Company schedules mall appearance

The Destiny Drama Company, a Christian collegiate repertory theatre troupe from Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists, Collegedale, Tenn., will perform two 30-minute programs at the Hamilton Place Mall, Chattanooga, on Friday and Saturday, January 26 and 27, 1990.

Friday, the 15-member drama troupe will perform at 7:00 and 8:00 p.m. and Saturday at 2:00 and 3:00 p.m. on the center stage, located in the middle of the mall, in front of Profit's.

Utilizing pantomime, vignettes, plays, and street drama, the Destiny Drama Company performs throughout the Southeastern United States for high schools, colleges, and youth rallies. They strive to portray the pertinence of Christianity through this creative medium.

The troupe is sponsored by CARE Ministries, Southern's student religious life organization. Southern College is a coeducational, four-year, liberal arts college located just outside of Chattanooga.

For more information regarding the Destiny Drama Company and its tour schedule, call Allan Martin at 615-238-2724.

... Theft

It appears that the thieves forced their way into the building and the lab. They obviously knew what they were looking for and took the most valuable items. Any information that might lead to recovery of the stolen equipment should be given to security, the Collegedale police, and the computer science department.

Adventure in Europe

By Ginger Bromme

Sit back and think about yourself strolling along the Champs Elysees in Paris with your college friends. Or, if you prefer, imagine yourself riding on a train, seeing for the first time the majestic Alps, Vienna, Austria, which is your next stop. In Vienna you can ride the biggest ferris wheel in the world. The cars are the size of train cars! Or, if ferris wheels aren't your thing, picture yourself touring places, like the Louvre, Notre Dame, St. Paul's, Leicester Square, and many other famous European sites. Imagine listening to Scottish men playing bagpipes on the sidewalks of Edinburgh. Best of all, imagine getting up to six hours of college credit for this once-in-a-lifetime experience.

For 20 students at SC, the dream will become a reality this summer. Dr. Bill Wohlers will be leading the 1990 summer tour of Western Europe.

This summer's tour is scheduled in two stages. The main tour will leave Atlanta on May 30 and will visit six countries on the continent, Holland, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Austria, and Germany. The second stage of the tour will begin earlier, May 21, and will include 9 days in England and Scotland.

Those who visit Great Britain will meet the others in Amsterdam.

The tour includes visits to the cities of Paris, Amsterdam, Munich, London and Edinburgh. The tourists will be kept busy attending concerts and plays, visiting famous museums, and soaking up the European culture. Of course, there will be plenty of free time to visit sites, sample local cuisine, and my favorite: shop in all the outdoor markets (Paris has a gigantic flea market that could take days to explore).

In addition to touring, students may choose to earn up to six hours of either upper division or lower division credit. This may be in either history (C-1) or humanities (D-3). It may also satisfy W credit and European History requirements; however, students can opt to go on the trip without taking the credit.

The price of the trip is $2397 for the three week option and $2996 for both options. The price includes all transportation, lodging, two meals a day and entrance fees at tourist sights. There is no extra charge for tuition.

There are only five spaces still open for this tour. Fifteen students have made concrete plans to go this summer. Since time is running out, contact Dr. Wohlers immediately and get your place reserved with a $250 deposit. He will also be able to answer any further questions you might have about the trip.

Bon Voyage!

For the Health of It

By Darlene Almeda R.N.

This column will feature health topics of interest to you the students and faculty of Southern College. This is how you can submit your questions: you may either drop your requests in the labeled box at the Student center desk or you may ask me personally.

Q. During Christmas break I found out my sister has anemia. What causes this and what is the treatment?

A. There are many different types of anemia the most common being iron-deficiency anemia. This type is caused mainly by inadequate iron intake, chronic blood loss, pregnancy, and destruction of red blood cells.

Because of women's compulsive dietary restrictions, menstrual cycles, and pregnancies we have a high risk of becoming anemic. However, unless it is a chronic problem anemia is treated quite simply. Iron supplements, and an increase in foods rich in iron such as spinach, lima beans, broccoli, raisins, dried apricots and peaches is suggested.

CARE

Focus on . . .

Clown Ministry
Penny Whitsett 238-2390

"Clown Ministry meets about four times a month to practice and perform, usually in area hospitals where we perform skits, plays and talk to the children. We are planning to visit some area churches also."

Adopt-A-Grandparent
David Burnett 396-9215

"Adopt-A-Grandparent is a program with the purpose to bring happiness through friendships with elderly people in our community. Participants are expected to visit with their "grandparent" at least 2-5 times per month. The visits and activities can be as widely varied as the grandparents--anything from talking and table games to walking and gardening."

Destiny Drama Co.
Allan Martin 238-3033

"The Destiny Drama Company is a collegiate drama ministry troupe which performs for high schools, youth rallies, and colleges throughout the Southeastern United States. Through Christian theatrical arts, they strive to portray the power, pertinence, and personality of Jesus Christ and His gospel."

Bible Study Program
Troy Fitzgerald 344-9205

"The Bible Study program provides an opportunity for good Christian fellowship and spiritual growth. Sign-up sheets will be posted in the dorms and in the Student Center."

Sunshine Bands
Charles Kilgore 238-3165

"Sunshine Band will be continuing second semester. We will be leaving at 2:30 p.m. (participating Sabbaths, so watch for announcements). We will be bringing songs and prayers to four local nursing homes on an alternate schedule. All are invited to share in these events each week to bring sunshine to the elderly shut-ins."

Big Brother/Big Sister
Scott Wakefield 396-2601

"The Big Brother/Big Sister program is designed to allow students of Southern College to take an area grade school student and become a big brother or big sister to them. Weekly visits occur along with monthly group meetings."

Chambias Home
Robert Pittman 238-3028

"The new program at Chambias Home is twofold. First, there is a community day care service, and second, there is a shelter providing for children who are temporarily removed from their parents by the courts. We need many volunteers to work on Thursday evenings at the shelter and arranged times at the day care center. Please contact Robert Pittman, Jill McKenney, or Diane Butler for more information."

C.A.R.E. Prayer
Karen Alvarez 238-2288

"This club feels that it is important to pray for each other. Every week twenty-five students are selected from the student body and five students are prayed for by each member. A letter is sent out to those being prayed for."

Orange Grove Center
Lori Marchant 238-2225

"Visit in group homes for mentally handicapped people and share in games, entertainment and a chance to meet new friends for a few hours on a weeknight."

"The cold war has melted!" These electrifying words opened the talk of Elder W. A. Scharffenberg, executive vice-president of the American Temperance Society, who was guest speaker in chapel on Monday, November 8.

The "war," the students learned, was the beginning of the American Temperance Society's nation-wide fight against the manufacture and use of alcoholic beverages. The speaker stated that "given enough rope the liquor interests will hang themselves."

What is your opinion on the new hair policy for men?

I think it's a matter of personal taste; it doesn't affect academic progress.
-Maria Rodriguez

The administration shouldn't take away the students' individuality.

On the Boardwalk: Beach Party '90

By Allison Meyers

Saturday night, January 20, Southern College students were able to leave the dismal winter weather behind and experience a taste of summer by attending the annual S.A. beach party held in the gymnasium.

The students arrived at 10:00 p.m. decked out in sunglasses, shorts, and swimsuits. Tans were provided by the glare of heat lamps.

Plenty of activities kept everyone entertained. The favorite among the students seemed to be the dunking booth, where they got a chance to dunk some of their favorite faculty like Dean Rose, Dr. Wohlers, and even the college's president, Dr. Sahly.

Other activities such as volleyball, the basketball toss, the baseball throw, and the photo booth had a steady stream of contestants. Some chose to take it easy in the "giant sandbox," complete with lounge chairs and umbrellas.

Many students got the opportunity to reveal their amazing by participating in one of several contests. Bruce Austin, winner of the belly flop contest, demonstrated his high tolerance for pain, while Michelle Fred displayed her awesome flexibility and won the limbo contest.

The lip sync contest, which was the high point of the evening, featured impersonations of Phil Collins, Richard Marx, and Alvin and the Chipmunks. First prize went to Kyle Torner and friends for their impersonation of Louis Armstrong singing "What a Wonderful World."

The Beach Party, according to Deana Malek, "was the absolute, most incredible time I've ever had at Southern College."

Senators study improvements for Industrial Drive

By Darren Strang

The condition of the pavement on Industrial Drive has been a major concern, especially to village students who use the road virtually every day of the week. Many of the students, faculty, and alumni have voiced their concern. When is the road going to be repaired?

Some students raised this question in a recent senate meeting and many senators voiced agreement that there was a problem. By the end of the meeting, a three-man committee consisting of Darren Strang, Kenneth Neal, and Heather Williams was formed to pursue this issue.

After some study, the committee found that Mr. Lacey, the head of the Grounds Department, has a plan for Industrial Drive and an appointment was made with him to discuss it.

In our meeting Lacey showed us several projects related to the reconstruction of Industrial Drive.

The buildings along Industrial Drive have been painted and new signs and street numbers have been put on each one.

Another project has been started behind the So-Ju-Conian Hall. You may have noticed some fresh digging at for a new parking lot for religion professors and their secretaries.

Another parking lot with two rows of parking will be placed below that for the students. These lots will more than double the amount of parking spaces in that area.

Another project is the implementation of gas heating in some of the buildings along Industrial Drive, and some of the road will have to be dug up to place the pipes.

Mr. Lacey wants to be sure that no digging will have to be done after the road is paved. He also plans to put in large pipe sleeves so that other things can be pushed through later if needed.

He has not received word yet as to which buildings will get the gas ... Industrial Cont. on p. 2

Super Party, Boring Bowl

By Daryl Cole

Yells and shouts filled Brock Hall's classroom 147, while the other side of campus, students cheered in the Student Center. Both locations combined accommodated about 100 people for the Student Association Super Bowl Party on January 28.

Originally, S.A. officers planned for the party to be just in the Student Center. But because of cable problems, the party moved to Brock Hall. Shortly afterwards, the cable company fixed the connection at the Student Center, and the party started there.

The party in Brock Hall was complete with drinks, candy, popcorn, and ice cream. Unfortunately, most of the refreshments ran out before anyone from the Student Center party could enjoy them, therefore the Student

SuperBowl ice cream scramble

Center revelers only got ice cream.

Ken Stonebrook received an official NFL football for the closest guess of the final score. Harvey Hillyer, the Social Vice-President, said, "I think everyone had a ball."

At the end, excited 49er fans and disappointed Bronco fans left, taking with them left-over, melted ice cream in hopes that it would freeze again. And so ended Super Bowl XXIV.

Basketball: bringing out the worst in the best of us?

By John Caskey

"Everyone must submit himself to the governing authorities, for there is no authority except that which God has established. The authorities that exist have been established by God. Consequently, he who rebels against the authority is rebelling against what God has instituted, and those who do so will bring judgment on themselves. For rulers hold no terror for those who do right, but for those who do wrong. Do you want to be free from fear of the one in authority? Then do what is right and he will commend you. For he is God's servant to do you good. But if you do wrong, be afraid, for he does not bear the sword for nothing. He is God's servant, an agent of wrath to bring punishment on the wrongdoer. Therefore, it is necessary to submit to the authorities, not only because of possible punishment but also because of conscience."

—Romans 8:1-5

It's Basketball Season here on the campus of Southern College, and while the passage I quoted from Romans was clearly not intended for use in an intramural basketball program, I think it should be applied to us anyway.

There seems to be a lot of hatred and discontent welling up out there on the hardwood floor. I think that it's about time that we put an end to it once and for all. We started it after all, and therefore, we can stop it.

It's just a stupid game, guys. No one from Southern College is ever going to make a living playing basketball. So, why do we try to make intramural basketball such a life-or-death struggle? Three weeks after basketball season ends, very few people will be able to remember who won or lost or fouled out or fouled up. But if you consistently act like a jerk out on the court, the Big Ref may see fit to lay a MAJOR technical on you and throw you out of the Cosmic Game. Permanently. That, my friends, is a life or death struggle.

Far be it from me to assume a holier than thou attitude on this issue. I am one of the offenders. I freely admit it. I was worse last year. I will be better in the next game.

I challenge every player and every ref and Jaekes and Evans and the spectators and the people who don't care about basketball at all (but just happen to be wandering around in the gym) to follow this simple maxim:

"If you don't have something kind or beneficial or good to say then keep your mouth shut."

Don't try to call the game for the refs. Don't clap or cheer when the refs make a call against the other team. Don't bellyache and moan and groan when they make a call against your team. Congratulate your teammates and the guys on the other side when they make a good play.

When in doubt, shut up.

If everybody involved in the intramural program can't do this, then I suggest that we abolish the program entirely.

I don't want to see that happen. I think a little healthy competition on the playing field is good for the human soul. But, the spirit of "win at all costs" and "I'm better than you" and "the ref is biased against me" and "your ugly and your momma dresses you funny" does not have a place on a "Christian" campus.

We all need to sit down and have a long hard think about our priorities from time to time. If after doing so you find that your first priority is to win an intramural basketball then you don't belong here on the campus of Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

Rule you desires lest your desires rule you.

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I was reading through the recent edition of the "Accent" when I came to the viewpoint section ("What do you think of the new hair policy for men?"). I was greatly displeased at this question.

I would like to personally thank the deans of Talge Hall and all others responsible for this new rule. Thanks to you our fine, young men will now look like pre-pubescent ten-year-olds.

I have a friend (who shall remain unidentified to protect his hair's length) that I will call "John". John has hair a little past his collar, but it is neatly groomed and looks good on him. Now that he is being forced to have those locks removed, he will look like a little kid. Thanks!

I have another friend. Let's call him "Fred". Fred used to have hair the same length. He had to get his cut and does not look the same. Thanks again!

I say that if a guy wants to have his hair a certain length, more power to him, as long as it's kept neat and not a rat's nest. Some guys just look better with longer hair. So many times in high school we were told to be unique. Now, when a guy wants to have a unique hairstyle, he is "shot down", so to speak.

Why are they being told to cut their hair all of the sudden? Why not at the beginning of last semester?

I agree with the viewpoints of the students. Hair does not affect academic progress and it should be the guys' choice. Nobody has explained the rule.

Why all of the fuss about hairstyles? If Jesus walked on our campus, would the Deans make him cut his hair?

Stop worrying about the guys' hair and start worrying about more important things like whether they are getting good education. After all, are we here for an education or a hair grooming lesson? We are paying for a career—not a haircut!

Sincerely,
Brenda Caldwell

...Industrial

These are just a few of the projects that Lacey has on his overall plan for Industrial Drive.

Many things must be considered with a problem like Industrial Drive, the main thing to remember is that these projects take time. As Mr. Lacey said, "If you want to waste money, get in a hurry." To get a quality job at a good price, one must accept delays.

One such barrier is getting some buried communication cables located low enough to build the parking lot over them. This and other problems make it impossible to set deadlines or dates for the completion of Industrial Drive. No one knows how many more glitches will have to be dealt with. "We just have to confront the obstacles as they come," said Mr. Lacey.

Although it may take a while, the improvements should be well worth the wait, and all will be happy to know that action is being taken on Industrial Drive.

College Bowl kicks off, more exciting than the SuperBowl

By Amy Beckwith

The questions come rapidly. "Name the legendary South American city of superluous riches sought by the Spanish Conquistadores." Buzzzzzz "El Dorado!"

What appears to be entertainment to the onlookers is really quite strenuous for the players. What is the cause of all this excitement? The College Bowl!

The seventh annual college bowl commenced on January 22. In the first round the teams of Ben Keppler and Robert Marsa battled, Marsa was victorious.

This was the first game of many in the college bowl tournament. The back of the cafeteria was packed with students hoping to see their friends in action.

The college bowl consists of 12 teams, each with 4 members, who try to answer as many questions as possible to win points for their team. The team who accumulates the most points at the end of the round is the winner. The champion team of the double elimination tournament will be determined during chapel on March 1. Dean Hobbs organizes the bowl, and he, along with Drs. McArthur, Haluska and Woolsey are the moderators.

Everyone is invited to come see "the annual battle of the minds" this semester.

Careers in the Church, opportunities money can't buy

By Julie Jacobs

Working for the church means doing the same kind of job you could do elsewhere but receiving a lower wage for it, according to Dean Kinsey, Alumni Director. One does not work in our church for the size of the paycheck. Richard Erickson of the business department, used to work as a financial manager for a major industry. Although he took a deduction in pay to work for Southern College, he found that he enjoyed this working environment much better. "I sure appreciate a smoke-free working area," said Erickson. Now Erickson finds he now has something in common with his colleagues, whereas he used to have difficulty relating to his working partners.

"My enjoyment of the work environment and job helps me cope with the discrepancy in my salary," said Jeanette Stepanko of the education department. She continued by saying that sharing a common goal and a common philosophy with colleagues makes a job much more rewarding.

Some people do not feel the need for money or fame and are content with the rewards of working for God. "I've worked for the church all my life," said K.R. Davis, director of testing and counseling. "I've always had a roof over my head and bread on the table."

Jeanne Davis, K.R.'s wife and secretary to the president, added, "We've never gone wanting and have always had our needs supplied, plus much, much more."

Although offered other jobs outside of the church, Dean Kinsey has never worked outside the church. "When I believe that something is right, I want to be a part of it, and I am willing to spend my energy to perpetuate it."

Century II scholarship fund growing

By Melissa L. Farrow

The Century II scholarship endowment began a couple of years ago to benefit incoming freshmen and needy students. In December 1989, one of the biggest portions of the money to date was raised and added to the ten million dollar goal. It began with a challenge to Southern College board members from a group of anonymous families. The challenge had two parts.

1) The board members would give $500,000 in cash to the endowment and the group of families would match the contribution.

2) Board members would raise or give a total of $500,000 in cash by December 31, 1989 and the group of families would contribute $90,000 in a span of two years.

Part two of the challenge was successfully met by the proposed date with a 100% participation from all board members. Part one is still in progress with a total of $362,452 given by the board. When this challenge is complete, it will have added $2,400,000 to the fund, giving a grand total of approximately $7,000,000 in cash.

All donations are invested according to conference guidelines and the interest in turn is given as scholarships. "We can't give what is expected from this project until our goal is reached, for obvious reasons," said Jack McClary, head of development. "We have to invest at the current percentage rate and then wait a year to gain the interest. More money invested means more money for scholarships."

The goal is set for 1992, which will mark the centennial of the college's founding.

Students "reach out and touch" Alumni in phone-athon

By Gina McIntyre

Three cheers for students working evenings in the Alumni/Public Relations offices for the Alumni Association's phone-athon, which begins on January 14; they are raising funds with record progress. Students work five nights a week from 7-10 p.m., calling alumni across the nation to secure donations for the "Alumni Loyalty Fund," which will be used for scholarships and classroom/lab equipment.

Dean Kinsey, associate vice president of Alumni/Public Relations, projects the goal for the four-month drive at $200,000. The campaign ends in April, but the goal is not unrealistic. Last year, the phone-athon exceeded the goal of $180,000 by $15,000.

Students employed on this drive are trained in one night and begin work the night after. According to Kinsey, eight students average eighteen calls an hour, with only half of the Alumni being home. This may seem a paltry sum for eight students, but funds are only one of the requests. Address changes, interesting facts for Southerners, Columns, and other tidbits of information are sought as well. Kinsey, in a quick reminder, said, "Our goal is not just raising money. Fund raising (friend raising) are the objectives."

Jeff Lerman and Janene Burdick supervise and tabulate the funds. Lerman states, "It's a real employment opportunity that most people don't realize exists. Everyone gets a percentage of the pledges they secure. You also get bonuses for attendance, plus an hourly wage. The hourly wage goes on your bill, but a lot of money goes straight into your pocket. [This is an] opportunity for Public Relations majors. It's great to put on your resume."

Sahly: a man on the move

By Jonathan Malleck

Not many people realize exactly what being the President of Southern College involves. Just glance at his calendar and one would easily see that Dr. Don Sahly is indeed a national man. Appointments from Florida to California, France, Germany and Spain keep our president on the move.

Last weekend alone was undoubtedly a long and busy one. On Thursday morning, January 25, Dr. Sahly met with the Board of Florida Hospital. He has served as a member of this board since his election in 1986. Thursday afternoon and Friday he met his appointment with the Sunbelt to discuss a "Conference on Mission." On Saturday, Dr. Sahly was the guest speaker at the Cress Memorial Seventh-day Adventist Church in Orlando. The next day, he spoke at a brunch for Southern College alumni in the Orlando area. He concluded his weekend at Madison Academy, near Nashville, on Monday. But, "It's not always that busy," Dr. Sahly said.

Later this year, Dr. Sahly will be leaving the country and heading for France, Germany, and Spain. He is a member of Adventist Colleges Abroad (A.C.A.) and will be traveling to Cologne, Bogenhausen, and Sgumto to meet with American students, discuss some of the problems they face overseas, and work on possible improvement. He will also be meeting with faculty and administration of these colleges discussing problems and improvements they feel need work. The last weekend in Germany will be spent as a guest speaker at the American Servicemen's Conference.

"I serve on over nine boards and most of them meet at least twice a year," says Dr. Sahly.

Fund-raising is another area that he is involved in. "I spend five days a year soliciting donations from various businesses for the Tennessee Foundation for Independent Colleges. In return they give Southern College a $25,000.00 donation."

Although it seems like much more, Dr. Sahly says, "I'm only gone 25% of the time. It's my job to represent this institution, to build confidence in the institution."

Henning completes masters program

By Doris Burdick

Volker Henning, assistant professor of journalism at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists, recently completed a master's degree in communications from the University of Central Florida in Orlando.

His thesis, "Church Advertising: Views on Appropriateness Held by Clergy and the General Public," compared the attitudes held by clergy and the general public toward church involvement in advertisement. Henning's research revealed a more open response from the general public than from clergy toward general church advertising.

Henning gave an oral defense of his thesis over the phone to a committee of three professors at the University of Central Florida in early December. He graduated on December 16.

Before joining the journalism staff at Southern College in 1989, Henning was the Communications Director for the Florida Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. Prior to that, he pastored the Leesburg and Belleview SDA churches in Florida.

Henning completed his M.Div. at Andrews University in Berrien Springs, Mich. He and his wife, Linda Hanson Henning, have two children, Brian and Joia.

Concerto Concert scheduled

By Doris Burdick

Five student soloists from area high schools and colleges will be featured at the Southern College Symphony Orchestra's annual Concerto Concert Friday, February 16. The program will begin at 8 p.m. in the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church.

"This will be a very exciting program with outstanding soloists playing a variety of fine Baroque, Classical, and Romantic music," predicts Orlo Gilbert, symphony conductor.

The Southern College Symphony Orchestra will accompany these gifted high school and college student who auditioned for their solo positions.

Ellen Ashton, soprano; violin major at Southern College, will be performing "Meditations" by Glazounov.

Andy Hong, junior at Baylor High school, will be performing, "Concerto No. 2 for Cello," by B. Romberg. Sheri Peck, sophomore violin major at southern College, will be performing, "Concerto No. 2 in E Major," by Bach.

Lynda Magee will be performing, "Fantaisie Dialogue," by L. Beethoven for Organ and Orchestra. She is an organ major at Southern College.

Tim Evans, a senior piano major from Bryan College, will be performing, "Liszt Concerto No. 1 for Piano and Orchestra."

The public is invited to attend this special concert performance free of charge. For more information call the Music Department at 238-2880.

CI: helping students help themselves

By Shawna Dye

The Center for Individualized Instruction, or CI, was opened at Southern College this school year especially for students needing extra help with their college classes.

Sponsored by the Education Department, the CI offers tutors throughout the day in math and English. If students need tutoring in other classes, the CI will try to arrange for this additional help.

The CI is located on the second floor of the library and is open on Mondays and Wednesdays, 11:00 a.m. until 9:30 p.m.; Tuesdays and Thursdays, 9:00 a.m. until 9:30 p.m.; and on Sundays, 2:00 p.m. until 9:30 p.m. During these times, students may stop by or set up appointments before coming.

Presently there are 17 regular tutors working on alternating shifts.

So far, attendance at the Center has been very regular and the director, Dr. Carol Haynes, is excited about future plans for CI. One plan is to initiate a student survival course designed to help students who are new to college or who are on academic probation. The program would include topics like time management skills and better study skills which would help students adapt to college studies and the discipline it takes to pass them.

The Center for Individualized Instruction is specifically designed to help students help themselves, and is a beneficial additive to a student's college curriculum.

Expect the Unexpected in the All-New 119th Edition of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus

Handsome hotdog skiers zoom perilously down a four-story-high indoor ski slope, throwing caution to the wind and executing dangerous flips and twists. A super-charged, roller-skating trio twirls and spins at breakneck speed. Beautiful women maneuver scores of shining hula hoops from head to toe. Golden statues come to life before your very eyes. You've come to expect the unexpected at The Greatest Show On Earth, and this year, audiences are treated to unending surprises when the all-new 199th Edition of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus comes to the UTC Arena on February 22-25, 1990.

Among the many unique acts brought together from all corners of the globe are four young men from South Columbia who comprise The Royal Canadian Aerial Ski Squadron. Aerial skiing—mid-air acrobatics—is the hottest new sport in the world and was previewed recently at the 1988 Olympics. Now, these thrill-seekers bring their own power-packed, daring skiing spectacle to The Greatest Show On Earth for the first time ever.

For a spicy twist of new excitement, the 119th Edition features a rare three-ring display of whirling roller skaters and twirling hula hoopers. The Willers from England rock the audience as they split around at dizzying speeds, performing round-robin roller-skating hijinks atop a roller-skating platform no larger than a dining room table. Twirling simultaneously, the beautiful hula hoop specialist Marie Perry and Dessi Kehavova dazzle audiences with their championship skill.

Art comes to life as the perfectly-matched Living Statues display the power and flexibility of incredible acrobatic movements in time. Danger permeates the air as The Ayak Brothers perform a heart-stopping aerial display high above the arena floor. And for the first time, anywhere, female trapeze artists perform simultaneous triple somersaults. Hordes of hilarious harlequins, a bevy of beautiful dancers, ponderous pachyderms and amazing acrobats are all part of this shimmering spectacle.

The all-new 119th Edition of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus pays tribute to the man who in the past 20 years performed for more live audiences than any other performer living or dead. Now is your last chance to see the legendary Gunther Gebel-Williams display his mastery of training wild Siberian and Bengal tigers, Lipizzaner horses, and mammoth elephants. For ticket information call the UTC Arena Box Office at 615/266-7469. *****

New books recommended by McKee librarian

By A. Lee Bennett Jr.

The month of February brings two new books to the McKee Library. Library director Peg Bennett recommends Thunder Gods and Get Me Ellis Rubin! to any student who enjoys reading.

Thunder Gods, by Matsuo Naito, is "a riveting and haunting tale" of the Japanese in the second World War.

"For years, the story of the Japanese kamikaze pilots of World War II has been a Hollywood tale of rootless fanatics diving to their deaths for emperor and country." But this book explores the reasons behind such mindless suicides, as surviving pilots tell their stories. Bennett says that the "truth is both more dramatic and more fantastic." For those who enjoy World War II stories or are interested in how others think, this book is highly recommended.

Ellis Rubin

relates absorbing courtroom dramas from his personal experiences in his book. Bennett says that he gives "lively, often touching—glimpses of his clients and courtroom proceedings." This book is a must for those interested in reading about legal circumstances.

Midnight madness strikes Thatcher residents

By Tammie D. Mentzel

The film "Yours, Mine, and Ours," starring Lucille Ball and Henry Fonda in a Brady Bunch type comedy, was shown on January 27 in Thatcher Hall as this semester's first midnight movie. The story focused on a widow (Ball) with eight children and a widower (Fonda) with ten. During the course of the movie, Ball and Fonda fell love and married, combining their families to make a large "tribe." The hilarious mishaps and adventures of the family made it a film worth staying up for.

The next midnight movie, will be shown on February 17 in Thatcher Hall chapel—girls only—promptly at midnight.

The midnight movies have been a Girls' Club tradition for several years. While they have been rather irregular since last year, Laura

Denning has revived the tradition.

After being selected by suggestions during RA meetings, the movies are shown at midnight on occasional Saturday nights. So far there has been a good turnout. As many as 100-120 girls come dressed in their jammies, bringing blankets, pillows, teddy-bears and all kinds of interesting paraphernalia says Denning.

So, if you're female, if you like free movies and the early morning shows, then the Girls' Club's "Midnight Madness" is for you.

Just what every college student needs: A roommate that cooks.

Introducing the new B.M.O.C.—the biggest Macintosh on campus.

The Macintosh II computer. It's the perfect roommate for power hungry students who do high speed computing, video processing, engineering or graphic design.

Made with an open configuration that allows for special purpose boards, the Mac II is the fastest, best performing Macintosh ever built. Yet with all its sophistication, it still has the same point-and-click simplicity that Macintosh has become famous for.

Which means, of course, the Macintosh II and you will be the perfect roommates. It cooks. And you clean up.

"Setting our Sights on the Saviour"

CARE

What are you laughing at?

By Andrew C. Nash

An American family huddles in front of the television to watch an "I Love Lucy" episode ...

Two Mexican boys sit on a split-rail fence and exchange their favorite jokes ...

A foursome of Japanese golfers watch in amazement as a misguided ball careens off several trees and lands in a pond, driving away a flock of angry ducks ...

The class klutz, attempts to do a front handspring during recess, but she over-rotates and lands on her jaw. Jeannie is unhurt until she looks up to see the reaction of her "friends" ...

These situations do not have much in common, except that each will be followed by a high degree of laughter. Laughter is universal, and it sounds the same in every part of the world. We choose to laugh. No one can force us to laugh (an honest laugh). Laughter often goes hand-in-hand with happiness, but not always.

The gift of laughter was given to us by God for the purpose of bringing added joy to our lives. To laugh means to take a "vacation" from the distresses of the world. Most of us enjoy humorous things such as the comics in a newspaper and the sight of playful puppies rolling around in the grass. To laugh means to break down barriers and replace them with friends. Who can reach a group of first graders more effectively—the president of Disney World or Goofy? Laughter can mend, delight, and uplift.

However, laughter also has the power to cause a great deal of pain, more aptly termed mocking or ridicule, this type of laughter can hurt feelings and destroy self-esteem.

Several years ago in a small town in Minnesota, a twelve-year-old boy hobbled off the bus (he had broken his ankle and was on crutches) for his first day of junior high school. As he made his way up the rain-soaked sidewalk, he was excited about his initial taste of seventh grade. But, when he walked through the huge double doors, his crutches gave way to the slippery tile floor ... The next thing he knew he was sprawled out in front of "millions" of hysterical ninth graders.

No one offered to help me up, and I will never forget that feeling of embarrassment and loneliness.

Laughter is a weapon that has been around for along time. All but eight people on this earth mocked the flood warnings of Noah, but in the end, the disbelievers were sorry—they laughed themselves to death.

As we continue to laugh at the jokes, comical characters, and unexpected happenings of our lives, may we also remember to laugh at ourselves as we would have them laugh at us.

Behold the Lamb

By Chris Sepulveda and Alicia Phillips

The day was dark and cloudy as Christ hung in anguish on the cross, dying to redeem us from our sins and self-ishness.

Now we have the opportunity to understand this more fully through the remanent of His life - the ultimate sacrifice.

"Behold the Lamb," a form of the Great Passion Play, is a dramatic musical portraying the Miracle, the Man, the Messiah: Jesus Christ. Premiering at Southern College, this Easter production features the music of Amy Grant, Michael W. Smith, Steve Green and many other renowned Christian artists.

The best part of "Behold the Lamb" is that you, the student, get the opportunity to shine for Christ.

The production will only be a success with your help. A need exists for chorale singers, artists, set builders, lighting and stage crew members, costume designers, and dramatists. Come and help give the people of Chattanooga a new realization of what Christ sacrificed for us. If you are interested in lending your time and talent, please call either #3152 after 10:00 p.m. or the C.A.R.E. office.

Bud the Hamster defies death

By DAVID STEVES
©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network

SALEM, Ore. — Cats may not be the only critters with nine lives.

Take Bud the Hamster.

Bud defied death last week, to the delight of his 6-year-old owner, when he survived a night in the family food freezer.

"I thought he would go up to heaven, and my mom would buy me a new one," Bradley Snoddy of Salem said.

Bradley and his mother, Mary Ann Snoddy, were certain Bud was spending his last days on a death bed of wood chips in the corner of the cage. Bud was 4-years-old, far beyond the average life expectancy for a hamster, which is 1 1/2 to 2 years.

Snoddy and her son were looking for a way to put Bud out of his misery. She called a Salem pet store and was advised to put the sickly hamster in the freezer, where he would "fall asleep and not wake up," she said.

"I thought that was the best way to dispose of an animal without causing any suffering," she said, describing how she bundled Bud up in cloth Wednesday night, putting him in a paper bag and placing him in the freezer.

"We had a very rough night. We were totally devastated. My son was in tears all night," she recalled.

But Bud refused to lay down and die.

The rodent chewed his way out of the paper bag. The would-be death chamber became an arctic all-you-can-eat smorgasbord for Bud, who spent the night munching on frozen hash browns and a brick-hard loaf of bread.

The next morning, Snoddy went to dispose of Bud's body.

"I opened the freezer door, and flop, onto the floor fell the hamster. He sat up on his hind legs, and looked at me like 'why did you do this to me?'" she said.

Since then, Bud has had a new lease on life. In fact, he even has a new exercise wheel. "He's just fine. Just the regular, normal hamster that we had before," Snoddy said.

Salem veterinarian Stephanie Hazen said Snoddy got bum advice on how to euthanize a hamster.

"You can't kill animals putting them in a freezer. They live and live for days," she said.

Because it is a slow, often painful death, she recommended instead that people take dying animals to the Humane Society to have them euthanized painlessly.

Calaveras County contest threatened by mega-frogs

By BARBARA WILCOX
©Copyright 1990, USA
TODAY/Apple College Information Network

ANGELS CAMP, Calif. — This, folks are saying, is war. How dare anyone bring in foreign competition for an inherently American contest?

The Calaveras County Jumping Frog Jubilee since 1928 has commemorated the Mark Twain short story "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," in which a shiftless stranger bets locals that his frog can beat all comers.

But for this year's jubilee, Seattle animal trader Andy Koffman is threatening to escalate matters by entering 10 of his huge, rare Goliath frogs imported from Africa.

Koffman hopes to break the world's frog-jump record and win a $1,500 prize — but more important, he says, "It is the destiny of these frogs to win this contest."

Fair officials fear the Goliath frogs — which can be three feet long and weigh 8 pounds — not only will outjump common bullfrogs but also will discourage people from attending the popular event.

Virtually all entrants have been California bullfrogs, with the biggest about a pound, said interim county fair manager Diane Baumann.

Koffman said his superfrogs can leap as much as 20 feet in a single bound. The record is 21 feet 5 inches in three jumps by Rosie the Ribbitter in 1986.

Fair officials have not yet accepted Koffman's entry for the May 17-20 jump. The nine-member board of directors meets Friday to discuss the issue, "probably in executive (closed) session due to the possibility of litigation," said Baumann.

Baumann said at least one frog jockey has complained that the Goliath frogs could be unfair competition, and others are concerned.

"They think it's an unequal contest," Baumann said. "And if those frogs can jump as far as Andy says they'll jump, one of them could land in the middle of the crowd and hit somebody."

Basketball season in full swing at Southern

Going into week 3 of SC's Basketball season, one team in each division remained undefeated. That changed Monday night when King of A League fell to Gay, and B League's Caskey was defeated by Gettys.

Mathis, in the women's division, still holds on to its perfect record as of this writing.

In AA McKenzie remains the lone undefeated team at this time with a 5-0 record. It's been 15 years since a team went through the whole season without a loss. Can McKenzie pull it off this year?

Johnson, widely thought to be a major threat to McKenzie's hope for a perfect season, found a serious challenge Tuesday night in the form of Taylor. Taylor, the consensus whipping boys of AA at the start of the season had already proven to be tough competitors by whipping winless Young into the W column.

They trailed early by as much as 15 but fought back and held a one point lead at the half.

Steve Jacks, director of internurals, remarked at halftime that Taylor would be the team to watch in the second half of the season.

Taylor forced the game into overtime; however, Johnson prevailed. This sets the stage for the big showdown between Johnson and McKenzie.

New Wellness program offered

By Richard Gallagher

Fitness, the craze of the '80s, is moving into the '90s, and Southern is moving along with it.

Beginning next fall the Health, Physical Education and Recreation Departments will be offering a four-year Bachelor of Science degree in Corporate/Community Wellness Management. "One of the main reasons wellness programs are being initiated is economics," said Dr. Phil Garver, Department Chairman. "With the administration of these programs, corporations are finding that insurance costs drop and productivity increases as a result of fewer absence days."

Previously, students haven't had a vehicle to get into this field. The Physical Education degree required students to take unnecessary courses, and the Health Science degree basically prepared students for graduate school.

Dr. Garver went on to say, "We're very excited about this program. It's very marketable. Only two new classes are being added to the curriculum: Drug Education and Methods/Materials of Health Promotion."

Sunday morning--it's amazing how many activities go on in Lynn Wood Hall on Sunday. Soon after the seven o'clock whistle sounds, Mr. Harter is busy recruiting the boys in cleaning up the building. In no time at all one can hear some enthusiastic musician practicing an organ lesson, chairs being moved about, a telephone ringing and the clicking of typewriters in offices upstairs and down.

A Knight of Chivalry

The campus of Southern College was strangely quiet last Sunday night. The Student Center and Library were virtually abandoned. The parking lots, usually filled to capacity with illegally parked vehicles, sat empty. Happy Valley rested in peaceful seclusion.

High atop Lookout Mountain, the scene was very different.

There, at the Fairyland Club, scene of the annual SA Valentine's Banquet, over 150 SC couples had crowded into a large banquet hall for socialization, dinner and entertainment.

The couples were decked out in all manner of finery. Many of the men sported tuxedos, while their dates wore elegant evening gowns. A jovial mood prevailed. They were expecting a memorable and romantic evening, and they were not to be disappointed.

Upon their arrival at 5 pm, the couples were invited to have pictures taken to commemorate the event. Then, after much socializing and general milling about, dinner was served.

The buffet style meal consisted of salad, lasagna, broccoli and another tubular pasta substance, identified by some as Ziti which, according to Laurie Ringer was, "good, but not warm enough for my taste." After dinner, the entertainment portion of the evening began.

After a bit of unexpected sword play between Harvey Hillier and Daryl Cole, the Master of Ceremonies, E.O. Grundset, introduced the rest of the evening's entertainment.

Kathy Stewart and David Kolsadko sang first. Next, there were Shakespearean readings and an anachronistic musical number by a group called the Jesuits.

The next act, a juggler, provided some excitement. Due to the subdued lighting in the hall, he lost track of one of the rubber balls he was juggling. It promptly bounced onto the nearest table upsetting a glass of tea and sending part of its contents on to Andrea Nicholson's dress. Daryl Cole said that he 'spotted' Andrea's predicament immediately and rushed to her rescue keeping the the banquet's theme: 'A Knight of Chivalry.'

The piece d'resistance of the evening was the performance by Bob Martin's band. They played several contemporary love songs featuring Bob's widely acclaimed saxophone.

This brought an end to the evening's official entertainment. However, many couples lingered outside on the terrace where a nearly full moon, a starry sky and the lights of Chattanooga far below lent a romantic air to the evening.

College Bowl action heats up

The 1990 College Bowl season is now well under way. After Monday's matches, only six of the 12 original teams remain in the competition. Moreland has been eliminated. Kepler fell, after a valiant struggle, to Nelson who was subsequently crushed by Moody 260 to 100.

Mark McKenzie ran up the white flag on Wednesday, February 7, as his team fell to Ekland.

On Monday both Ekland and Suddeth were eliminated by forfeit. According to Stan Hobbs, the director of College Bowl, two matches have never been decided by forfeit on the same day in College Bowl history. Keeping with tradition, Springett and Moody, the teams which advanced by default, played anyway against a team selected from the audience. The Ad Hoc team won both games.

While the Accent is at the press on Wednesday evening, two crucial matches will be decided amongst the four teams which remain undefeated.

In the first game, Marsa, one of the pre-season favorites, will attempt to maintain its perfect record against upstart King. Marsa has yet to be seriously challenged in the competition. King has been consistent, but unimpressive in its two previous wins.

The second game between DeCarmo and Orange, both highly ranked at the onset of the season, promises to be the best game to date. DeCarmo struggled early in its game against McKenzie but finished strong and later swept to College Bowl... cont on p. 7

SA election drive gets underway

The election drive for 1990-91 Student Association officers is under way. Campaign posters began popping up all over campus last Monday as the candidates started trying to woo voters.

The original deadline for submitting petitions for candidacy was extended from February 6 to February 12 for the offices of Southern Memorabilia Editor, Joker Editor, and Strawberry Festival Director since these Election... Cont. on p. 7

The few, the brave, the candidates

By John Coskey

"If we take the generally accepted definition of bravery as a quality which knows no fear, I have never seen a brave man. All men are frightened. The more intelligent they are, the more they are frightened."

—George S. Patton, Jr.

This is a salute to the brave men and women who have stepped forward in the past weeks and volunteered to run for Student Association offices.

These people are brave because they have faced their fear of failure and rejection and decided to take the risk. They have placed fragile human egos in the path of the juggernaut of public opinion because they feel that their efforts can make a difference in the lives of fellow men.

Student Association offices are almost universally difficult, thankless and underpaid positions. They involve long hours, neglect of all-important school work and constant criticizing.

Thomas Jefferson said, "When a man assumes a public trust, he should consider himself public property." The public seems to take great care in the way they select their property. Once they have selected it, they should treat it with the care and respect it deserves.

In all contests there must be winners and losers. The losers will get over the "agony of defeat" in due course. The plight of the winners will be more prolonged and agonizing. I passed

Harvey Hillyer, this years Social Vice-President, on the sidewalk the other day and said, half jokingly, "Are you glad it's almost over?"

"I can't wait", he replied. I find myself in complete agreement.

The SA election process is an important responsibility for each and every student here at Southern College, but the responsibility does not end once the ballots are cast and tallied. If your SA officers are to be effective, they will need your support year round.

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in."

The Southern Accent is the official student newspaper for Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists and is released every other Thursday during the school year with the exception of exam weeks and vacations. Opinions expressed in the Southern Accent are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the editors, Southern College, the Seventh-day Adventist church, or the advertisers.

The Southern Accent welcomes your letters which must contain the writer's name, address, and phone number. Letters will be edited for space and clarity. All letters must have the writer's name and phone number for verification, although names may be withheld at the author's request. The editor reserves the right to reject any letter. The deadline for letters is the Sunday before publication at noon. Place letters under the door of the Accent office in the Student Center or mail to: Southern College, Southern Accent, P.O.B. 370, Collegedale, TN 37315. (615) 238-2721.

Letter to the Editor

Dear John and the rest of the Accent staff,

Although I'm at Newbold this year, I've still managed to obtain copies of the newspaper and I must say I'm impressed. I still love reading David Denton's satires relating to campus life, and I also liked several of the editorials, not to mention the VERY FUNNY Pump and Circumstance cartoons, the pictures, and the Viewpoint on the back page.

With your variety of backgrounds in the newspaper staff, you have managed to pull off a very challenging task. I especially appreciate it because here at Newbold our school newspaper is rather primitive. The issues are run off on the copier and hand-folded. They don't have an advanced computer layout, either.

Newbold is a wonderful place, and I have really "broadened my horizons" while studying and traveling here, but I definitely have a love for SC, and can't wait to return in the fall.

Keep up the good work!!

Sincerely,
Holly Miller

The cat and the squirrel: a parable

By Virgil Covel

As I was walking through the student park last week I noticed a squirrel. I've seen a lot of squirrels but this one was being a tad obnoxious. He was sitting at the tip of a ragged, broken-off branch, thinking his whole purpose in life was to look tense and scream.

I wondered two things: What was he screaming at and why was he screaming at it.

The answer to the first question quickly became plain. The squirrel was staring at a spot which contained a contented, sleeping cat.

The second question was not so easily answered. The squirrel was safe. He was 30 feet up in a tree that was 40 feet from the sleeping cat. The problem was merely that the cat was there.

Now, I bet in the past the cat liked squirrels, or at least tolerated them but I wouldn't be surprised if that cat was not becoming some what irritated at squirrels that sat and screamed at a peacefully sleeping cats.

As I watched I noticed that the cat continued to sleep. Although his opinion of squirrels had undoubtedly dropped several notches.

And the squirrel? Well, as he continued to look tense and scream he began to visibly tire. All for what? I don't know, but as he grew tired his screams began to weaken, his head began to droop.

Then I noticed. The squirrel had a mohawk.

Dream Alive

By Andrea Nicholson

"Dream Alive," a multi-media presentation by Kim and Reggie Harris, will be presented Monday, February 19, at 7 p.m. in the Physical Education Center as part of Black History Week celebrations at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

The husband/wife duo combine entertainment, education, and inspiration to bring to light the stories of significant black Americans from every walk of life. Heroes, artists, inventors, explorers, scientists, poets, and other important contributors to the life and culture of America and the world come alive during the performance.

Married since 1976, the Harries studied at Temple University where Kim earned a degree in radio, television, and film communications and Reggie majored in English. Both sing, play the guitar, and write much of their performance material. They have composed music for radio and television commercials as well as multi-media presentations. Their performances have taken them to more than 300 colleges in 37 states as well as the Kennedy Center, the Smithsonian Institution, theaters, museums, clubs, festivals, and schools.

The Harries released "Stranger in the Shadows," their first single, in 1981 on Ascention Records. "Music and the Underground Railroad," their first album, continues to be praised throughout musical, cultural, and historical circles.

The public is invited to attend this special celebration during Black History Week at Southern College. Admission is $4 for adults, $3 for senior citizens and children under 12, and $10 per family. SC students will be admitted free.

February is Black History Month

By PAM PLATT

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network.

In 1955, the black, expatriate American writer James Baldwin said, "The world is white no longer, and it will never be white again."

The world never was white — although it is hard to arrive at that conclusion after reading U.S. history books written from a mostly white, mostly male perspective.

But other voices have always told other histories, and in 1924, people started listening. That was the first year a week was set aside to observe the achievements of blacks in U.S. history.

Since 1924, the name of the observance has changed several times, and in 1976, the length was extended to a month. But the intent has always remained the same: to honor the rich and invaluable contributions of black Americans to this nation's history.

Here's a quiz designed to introduce the people and milestones of early U.S. history, in honor of Black History Month.

WHO WERE THEY?

— Benjamin Baneker

He was a black astronomer, mathematician, almanac author, and inventor. When he was 22, he was the first person in North America to build a clock. In 1791, Benjamin Franklin nominated Baneker to be a member of the commission charged with laying out plans for the city of Washington, D.C.

— Ebenezer Don Carlos Bassett

In 1869, he was named U.S. minister to Haiti, making him the first black to receive a diplomatic appointment.

— Ellen Craft

A 19th-century abolitionist lecturer, she escaped out of slavery with her husband. In 1868, the Crafts returned to Georgia, where they opened the Southern Industrial School and Labor Enterprise for blacks to study agriculture.

— Sarah Harris Fayerweather

In 1831, she applied for admission to an all-white, all-girls school in Canterbury, Conn., making her the first student to challenge racist admission policies.

— Margareta, Sarah Louisa, and Harriet Forten

They were the daughters of James Forten, a Philadelphia black who served in the Revolutionary War. The American Anti-Slavery Society was started at the Forten home, a popular meeting place for abolitionists.

The sisters became members of the Philadelphia Female Anti-Slavery Society and worked their entire lives promoting equality for all races and sexes.

— Matthew Henson

A black from Maryland, Henson was an adventurer who went with Admiral Peary to explore the Arctic in 1891. In 1909, Henson planted the flag on what was believed to be the North Pole.

— Oliver Lewis

A black jockey, he rode the horse Aristides to victory in the first Kentucky Derby in 1875.

— Mary Eliza Mahoney

She was America's first professionally trained nurse. She graduated from the New England Hospital for Women and Children, and her success paved the way for other black women who wished to enter the medical profession.

— Hiram Revels

He was the first black elected to the U.S. Senate, representing Mississippi in 1870. Revels was one of 22 blacks to serve in Congress between 1870 and 1900; 13 of them were ex-slaves.

— John Rock

In 1865, he was the first black admitted to practice law before the Supreme Court.

— Carter G.

Woodson

The founder of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History in 1914, Woodson is regarded as one of the fathers of the black history movement. The son of slaves, he received his doctorate in history from Harvard University. He was instrumental in launching the first black history week.

TRUE OR FALSE

Q. The first blacks came to the New World as slaves.

A. False. One of Christopher Columbus' crew members was a black man named Pedro Alonso Nino. Blacks also were members of the expeditions headed by Balboa, Ponce de Leon, Cortez, and Pizarro. The first black slaves were brought to the United States in 1526.

Q. George Washington never owned, bought, or sold slaves.

A. False. When George Washington acquired his Mount Vernon estate, 18 black slaves came with it. During the time Washington lived at Mount Vernon, the number of slaves grew to 200. However, his will called for the release of the slaves upon his death.

Q. The Declaration of Independence denounced slavery.

A. True and False. In the original document, Thomas Jefferson included a denunciation of slavery. An amended version of the declaration, without that controversial passage, was adopted in 1776.

Q. Blacks fought in the Revolutionary War.

A. True. Although the Continental Congress initially barred blacks from the Revolutionary Army, there were 10,000 black soldiers in the army by the war's end.

References used for this quiz were

"The Negro Almanac: A Reference Work on the Afro American," edited by Harry Ploeki and James Williams; "A Pictorial History of Black Americans," by Langston Hughes, Milton Melitzer, and C. Eric Lincoln; the Negro History Library's "Profiles of Negro Womanhood," by Sylvia Danneit; and World Book encyclopedias.

Black college enrollment

A college education and graduate school training are seen as important preparations for leadership, but black enrollment has not been marked by a steady upward trend. The number of black undergraduates actually has declined since 1980. The number of blacks in graduate schools only reached its 1976 level again after a 10-year period.

For the Health of It

By Darlene Almeida, R.N.

Q: Why is the gallbladder so readily removed? Doesn't it have a specific function?

A: Yes, the gallbladder has specific functions and they are to store, concentrate, and release bile when stimulated to do so. Upon removal of the gallbladder or a cholecystectomy, the patient is no longer able to store bile, a substance which increases the action of gastric enzymes and enhances the absorption of fatty acids.

The main source of bile is the liver which continues to function despite the removal of the gallbladder.

Instead of releasing bile into the gallbladder for storage, during surgery the liver's ducts are directly connected to the small intestine thus releasing bile directly into its destination point.

So as you can see, although the gallbladder does indeed have a specific function, we are able to exist without it. This is why when a patient arrives at the emergency room with positive gallbladder problems the physician will usually get right to the source of the problem without much hesitation.

Journalism students published in Insight

The year has only just begun and already Southern's journalism department is well represented in the Adventist publishing world.

Julie Jacobs, journalism junior, included one of her poems in a portfolio she sent to "Insight" magazine as part of her application for a summer internship.

She hasn't heard yet whether or not she got the internship. But the editor bought the poem, Julie received a check, and the poem will appear in a future issue.

Lori Pettibone, journalism freshman, was published in the January 20 issue of "Insight." Her story, "The Broach" was the first prize winner in the student short-story category of Insight's 1989 writing contest.

Candidates for S.A. President

4. To serve God's people in any manner that He asks of me to do.
5. To bring prayer activity into the lives of all SDA College.
6. To put the SDA back in front of Southern College.
7. To help maintain current projects and support them (i.e., CARE etc.).
8. I want and have prided myself on being a leader and to lead God's people is the highest calling and honor to me.
9. To experience leadership on a College Level.
10. If elected that God may use me how he sees fit due the office granted.

By Jeff Gang

Southern College is an awesome place to be! In my three years here at Southern I have seen it grow into one of the top schools in the SDA Denomination. Much of this credit can be given to the student associations and leaders who have dedicated themselves to serving their school. I want to continue this tradition while serving you next year as president of the Student Association.

I believe that Southern and you really are perfect together. We make friends and form relationships here that will go with us for the rest of our lives. We make memories that we will keep forever. We learn lessons and make mistakes that build our characters, while dreaming and reaching for new goals. The Student Association plays a major role in our lives while we are here. Because of SA's importance, my goals are to create a sense of school spirit and pride which will be a part of everything we do. I want everyone to feel like they are a part of Southern.

While I can not accomplish this myself I will strive to unite my officers so that the Student Association can promote a spirit of unity. No matter who you are you are a part of this school. Along with these goals I want to provide spiritual leadership as I work with C.A.R.E. in creating exciting spiritual activities.

I also want to be a voice to the Administration. I will voice your opinions and feelings while cleaning up misconceptions that arise at times. Most of all I want your input. This will be an Administration that will listen to you and get you involved.

If I can put these goals to work for us we can have a school we can be proud of. I am committed to Southern College and you.

I will be dedicated and responsible while putting my leadership and creativity to work. So, I'm asking for a chance to work for you as Student Association President and together we can make next year a year to remember. Don't forget—Southern and you are perfect together!

Kenneth D. Neal

Dedication to Service
The following are my goals for next year's S.A.

- I. TO LET THE STUDENTS VOICE BE HEARD. My ultimate duty goes to the students of S.C.
- II. To plan and promote activities aimed at increasing school spirit.
- III. To aid and promote the spiritual growth of the students and demonstrate God's desire to be a part of their lives. Also to plan activities where the students can participate in a spiritually productive event.
- IV. To improve student/faculty relations. Together we can make things happen.
- V. To plan activities based on what the students want to see happen. Communication is as vital to the S.A. as it is to any other human relationship. If we know what the students want, we can serve them that much better.
- VI. To work hard.
- VII. To be responsive to the students needs. To work to solve their problems as far as possible.
- VIII. To respond to all issues brought to my attention with equal dedication.

Woody White

As a candidate for S.A. President, it is important to have a vision of what needs to be accomplished and the determination to accomplish the things envisioned. My vision of the S.A. one year from now is simple: An S.A. that is working hard for the betterment of life here at Southern, and an S.A. that is committed to being exactly what it is supposed to be—an Association of Students. Here at Southern, we have a wide variety of students representing many different backgrounds, countries, and cultures, each with different desires and different interests. I believe the S.A. President's obligations go beyond only continuing social activities, and maintaining the status quo; I envision the S.A. President to be the spokesperson for each of these different sectors of students.

Having been here at Southern for three years, I have learned many things. One, is that the students of Southern want, not only an S.A. President, but someone who will be their representative to the sometimes arbitrary Administration; someone who will stand up and defend the rights of every student. As the S.A. President, I would be dedicated to defending these rights and to making next year the best year imaginable. How can I help make next year so good? Simply by working my hardest for you, the students of Southern College. I don't have a flashy slogan, or a campaign full of hype—only a platform that pledges change, a platform that is tailored to the individual student, a platform that promises a fun and exciting year, and a platform that expresses my desire to represent the interests and desire of the student body of Southern College. I want to help you run "Your S.A.—Your Way!"

Candidates for

Alex Bryan

Southern College and the students of Southern College are very important to me. As Executive Vice President I would help to make the life of the student better in two ways:

First, as Executive Vice President I will also be chairman of the Southern College Student Senate. I strongly believe that Senate is one of the most important ways for student projects to be accomplished and student views to be expressed to the administration and faculty. As a Senator here at Southern I have had the important opportunity to participate in the interworking of this representative body. As chairman of the Project Committee this year I have worked with many students and faculty members. I think this experience has been extremely important in my understanding of how to best get accomplished items which students would like. As leader of the Senate I will seek to make the Senate more responsive to the views of their constituents and more visionary in plans to better the life of the student.

Secondly, as Executive Vice President I will be an officer of the Student Association. I believe in continuing the good programs and activities we have enjoyed in the past. However, there is always room for betterment and improvement. The Vice President is of course a key advisor to the SA President. I am confident that I can work effectively with any of this year's Presidential candidates.

A better Southern College and a better life for the Southern student is my primary goal.

Dear Student Association,

I, Izear Feagins, III has chosen to run for Executive Vice-President of the SASCSA because I claim to have three ingredients. They are dedication, determin-

S.A. Vice President

tion, and dependability. And with these ingredients, I plan to bake a monstrous cake.

I want to strengthen the Senate by listening to the students' cry of change. Through the Senate and under my leadership, the cry of change will turn into a cry of strength whereby administration will listen and take action to what our cry of strength is.

However, the Executive Vice-President needs to be a strong leader, motivator, spokesman, teacher, instructor, and most of all a servant to be students. These are qualities or traits that I have to do this job. And I believe I have these traits to communicate with both administration and the students through the Senate which will be made strong, so that the ingredients of my cake will rise to the extent that everyone would want a piece of it.

Dear Fellow Student,

Southern College needs you and your input. It also needs leadership, the kind of experienced leadership I would like to provide for you. I have had three previous years of experience working with a student association. During these years, I've held various offices, the most prominent being president. The student association elections are approaching and I, Kevin Snider, am running for executive vice-president.

What I hope to accomplish as your executive vice-president are the changes that you, the student body, deem important. After talking with some of our fellow students, it has been brought to my attention that several issues need to be addressed. A few of them are the following:

1. campus safety,
2. revised auto parking
3. more weekend activities,
4. increased senior privileges,
5. the hair issue, and
6. classroom attire (shorts).

With the coming of the election, I would appreciate your supporting vote for executive vice-president. Help me to help YOU!

Sincerely,
Kevin A. Snider

Candidates for Social Vice President

Annette Crosier

As a candidate for the position of Student Association Social Vice-President I believe that it is my first responsibility to plan and execute social activities for the students that would be immensely enjoyable and well worth attending.

I believe that another foremost responsibility in filling the position of Social Vice-President is to make the students feel at home from the beginning of the school year at the Welcome Party to the very day of graduation. I feel that the time spent with friends in college is very important, and I would like to make it as fun for Southern students as possible.

One of my main goals for the upcoming year is to interest and involve more students in the weekend activities that the SA plans, as well as all other activities. I have many new ideas about parties, banquets, and other SA activities, and a lot of helpful information about the ones in the past. I am very open to any suggestions and comments that you would propose to me, and I would try to execute them to the best of my ability.

I have enjoyed being your SA Secretary this semester and working with the other SA officers. It has given me a lot of great experience in planning banquets, working with the Beach Party, and getting to know more of you as students here at Southern. I am already very interested in helping plan a new year and excited about getting started.

I, Deanna Moore, feel very qualified in running for Vice President of Social Activities. Considering my past experience with campaigning. Throughout my Senior year at Central Gwinnett High School, with a population of 1700 students. I was elected Executive Vice President. My Junior year, I was the President of "The Youth against Cancer Club." While working at United Parcel Service in 1987, I was elected Vice President of Social/Safety events.

I am currently a Junior here at Southern College, where I have attended for three years.

A couple of ideas I've come up with are ways to get the student body involved:

1. Senior Banquet (Recognize Honors, scholarship, entertainment)
2. "A Night in Venice" (Be imaginary, Dress, Decorate, live a night in Venice).
3. $1.98 Beauty Contest (Girls and guys look their worst, tell jokes, do tricks).
4. All Nights Festival (Activities, food)
5. Hand-shaking (Freshman get acquainted)
6. Game Night (Several types of games, entertainment, win prizes).
7. Faculty Family Night (Teachers wanting to get involved randomly choose students, planning fun outings and having worship with them).

As part of Southern College student body, I will do the best of my ability to make 1990 full of fun and excitement. To help make this year successful vote Deanna Moore for Social Vice-President.

Election ...

offices had not attracted any potential candidates by the first deadline.

Running for President are Woody White, Jeff Gang, Ken Neal and Robert Browning. Vice-Presidential candidates include Alex Bryan, Kevin Snider and Izar Feagins. The candidates for Social Vice-President are Annette Crosier and Deanna Moore. Tim Burrill is running unopposed for Southern Student Editor.

DeAnn Champion has submitted a late petition for Joker Editor. Daniel Potter has submitted one for Southern Memories and Ervin Brown has elected to run for Strawberry Festival Director. These candidates must still meet with approval from the Senate Publications committee before their names can be put on the ballot.

Upcoming election events include: speeches by the candidates in today's Assembly, Primary Elections on Tuesday, February 20, a press conference in the cafeteria at noon on February 22 featuring the two candidates who received the most votes in the primary, and finally, the General Election to be held Tuesday, February 27.

an easy victory over Sudduth. Grange crushed Moreland and Ekund in its two previous games. When asked about the game, Angel Echemendia, a member of DeCarmo's squad said, "This should be an exciting game. I predict that the outcome of this game will determine the weekend champion."

The winners of Wednesday's matches will have a place in the semi-final round to be held in Lynn Wood Hall Auditorium on February 21st and 26th. The time for these games will be 6:00 pm.

The losers will face Springett and Moody in the Consolation bracket in their attempt to win their way to the finals to be held in Assembly on March 1.

Candidate for Memories Editor

Daniel Potter

Being Memories' editor entails a lot of responsibility.

I am very familiar with such responsibility.

For the past seven years I have worked with all aspects of yearbooks and newspapers, including editorial positions, and am currently working as layout editor for the Southern Accent.

Having a quality yearbook is just as important to me as it is to you, and it is you, the student body, that will be the focus of the Southern Memories in 1990-91 if I am elected editor.

Let's make next year's yearbook a yearbook we can all be proud of! Help me to help you obtain that goal!

Osborne returns to Southern as Spiritual Emphasis speaker

By Wanda Yax and Andy Nash

Former Southern College student Dave Osborne returned to campus as Pastor Dave Osborne to speak for Week of Spiritual Emphasis, February 5-10.

Termed "one of the best speakers we've had" by J.C. Belliard and "very upbeat" by Lori Marchant, Osborne seemed to have a great impact on the students of Southern College.

Osborne's talks, nine in all, covered a broad range of topics, but his theme—the importance of a positive Christian attitude—was present throughout the week. According to Osborne, "being a Christian is exciting!"

Osborne's views on diet, social relationships, and the power of prayer were appreciated by many. Freshman Omie Hutchinson remarked, "He's very good at keeping the attention of his audience."

Other student descriptions of Osborne included: "vigorous speaker, direct and to the point, extremely humorous...seemed to really care."

Besides speaking at the church for worship and assemblies, Osborne visited the dorms and soon made a lot of friends on campus, or as he put it, "I reluctantly met the children of my former classmates."

For many, the highlight of Week of Prayer was Friday night vespers, when students and community people alike joined with Osborne for the communion service.

Pastor Dave Osborne concluded the week on Sabbath with a sermon entitled "Attitude of Gratitude," in which he once again challenged his listeners to "Praise the Lord in everything you do!" Shortly thereafter, Osborne left for his home in Loma Linda, CA but he can be assured that his message will remain in the hearts and minds of the students at Southern College.

Student missionary writes from Thailand

Student of Southern College,

What's happening? Did you have a good Christmas break? It went by fast, huh? Mine did too since I was only a total of 24 hours. I guess I really shouldn't mention Christmas because by the time you read this Christmas will have been over months ago. I just love the swiftness of the mail service.

I want to tell everyone that Thailand is the place to be. There is so much to do.

For one thing, I have done a lot of traveling here. Just last weekend I went to an awesome little island called Tarutao. Thanks to SC for sending some extra Christmas cash. I was able to buy a snorkel set and snorkeled my heart out. I should say snorkeled my nose in. Those masks sure can do a job on your nose. I almost look Thai now. Anyway, there is a lot to see in Thailand and traveling has definitely been one of the high lights.

As for our wonderful school here in Haad Yai, we have three teachers, Monica Herron, Glenn Carter, and myself. Actually we really need a fourth. So if there is anyone who would like to come immediately, please don't hesitate to call at (074) 246-102.

In this land of luxury we have—excuse me—we had two raids. But recently a disaster has taken place. One of our misad quit and the other one has been my I sa-by (sick) all week. Therefore one morning, that is all morning, Monica did the laundry. No, we don't have one of those fancy push button machines. She did it all by hand! I think she did a great job and I don't think Glenn minds too much that all his underwear are red.

That same day, I thought I would be the chef. It's rather difficult to make the same things here that I usually make in the States. Cookies, brownies and cakes don't turn out too well without an oven. But I did try to make cookies in the toaster oven once. Yes, I did say once. Anyway, in that day I thought I would make beans for our "Thai Haystacks". Has anyone ever had beans that are hard as peanuts on your haystacks before? After that incredible mile everyone has decided to just cook for himself.

Teaching? Oh, yes, I do teach here.

It's a real experience. I can't decide who understands English more—my students or the rats in our walls. But it's lots of fun and I wouldn't change it for the world. Maybe for some sleep, though. I am always yawning in class.

For a more serious note, I really want to thank SC for all their prayers and letters. Please continue to pray for us. There is a lot of work to be done in this 99.7% Buddhist country. It's unbelievable what little they know about God. Bible classes are a real challenge.

It's all such a new idea for them. And many find it hard to accept.

But if they only knew how happy they would be with Jesus in their lives.

Well, that's the scoop here in Thailand. For all those who haven't had a chance to memorize my address. Please let me be so kind as to share it.

Pomp & Circumstances

New books recommended by McKee librarian

By A. Lee Bennett Jr.

Never Too Young to Die: The Death of Len Bias, and My Traitor's Heart are this week's books recommended by McKee Library Director Peg Bennett.

A "tragic story of the #1 draft pick by the NBA's Boston Celtics in 1986," Never Too Young to Die reads more like a true crime story rather than a sports biography. "It details the events leading to Bias' death, a description of the police investigation, and the trial of Brian Tribble, a friend of Bias' who was accused of supplying the cocaine." The book is "a harrowing tale from which no one emerges unscathed."

Rian Malan writes his own life's story in My Traitor's Heart, a tale that will "rearrange our superficial ideas about South Africa." "As a young man, the author (Malan)—ashamed because he was a descendant of the architect of apartheid—fled to South Africa. After 8 years he finally went home to wrestle with the paradoxes existing there." South African blacks constantly face possible death because "Two civil wars wage [there]: in one, whites murder blacks; in the other, blacks murder blacks in tribal conflicts." "Malan looks behind the stories of vicious crimes—those distorted by the media and those ignored by it."

One Rambo is enough

By Mike Hernandez

rented Rambo XVIII.

I have always attempted to exhibit some of the characteristics of my heroes; however I have found that this is impossible and even potentially fatal in some cases. Rambo is a good example.

I usually do not watch Sylvester Stallone movies, but one night I was feeling particularly manly, so I went to the local World O' Video store and

I won't bore you with the plot of this movie if, indeed, there was one, but I will share some of our muscular hero's adventures as John Rambo.

He survived the crash of a helicopter that plummeted 100 feet from the sky and exploded. Naturally, he wasn't scratched. He single handedly defeated roughly 1,000 machine gun toting Russian soldiers. Rambo makes Indiana Jones look like Little Bo Peep. After watching this movie, I felt this strange desire to go outside and set fire to myself purely for amusement.

There is probably some sort of subliminal message in Rambo, like there is in the song "Another one bites the dust," which, as you all know, causes you to smoke marijuana and leaves you unable to have children.

It has been proven that 75% of all the violent crimes in this country are committed by people who have just watched Sylvester Stallone or Arnold Schwarzenegger annihilate a small country. If these movies cause this kind of reaction in the common people, what happens when the president watches one? Do his body guards have to hold him down until his urge to push the nuke button subsides?

If we support these movies in the box offices and video stores to produce them. They will still be around when our children are our age. I can see it now. RAMBO MCXIII. Rambo escapes from the nairting, g home, swims across the pacific, destroying two enemy submarines with his bare hands, destroys the entire Libyan army using only his walking cane and rescues his brother (played by Arnold Schwarzenegger) who had been taken captive.

What an utterly disgusting thought.

McKenzie beats Johnson, falls to Faculty

McKenzie played Johnson Monday night in AA league basketball in what Steve Jaacks, director of intramurals, described as "the most exciting game of the season." "It was nip and tuck all the way," he continued.

The lead shifted back and forth throughout the game. McKenzie held a slim three point margin at the half.

Team captain Alex Johnson said after the game that his strategy had been to keep Mark McKenzie out of the paint and force him to shoot from the perimeter. The plan seems to have worked since McKenzie was able to hit only 6 shots out of 22 attempts.

Johnson's team was handicapped by the absence of starting guard Kevin Pride.

McKenzie admitted that he was pretty cold from the outside. He also indicated that Johnson's team dominated the boards. Some of McKenzie's rebounding trouble might have been due to the absence of starters Ted Showalter and Scott Wakefield. Ivan Mitchell took up the slack with outstanding defense, according to Jaacks. Alex Johnson credited Mitchell's scoring ability as a key factor in McKenzie's success. "We just couldn't find anybody to guard him," he said.

With about three minutes left to play, the momentum appeared to be shifting in Johnsons favor after Sean Johnson's slam dunk. Unfortunately, Chris Harter suffered a severe mouth injury seconds later when he ran into Mark McKenzie's elbow. The game had to be stopped for about ten minutes because of Harter's injury.

Alex Johnson stated that the loss of Harter and the loss of momentum due to the suspension of play turned the tide against his team. "We went back out and took some bad shots after that," he said. "They were able to convert, and then it turned into a free throw shooting match."

McKenzie went on to win by five. The final score was 65-60.

On Tuesday, McKenzie's hope for a perfect season was dashed as it lost 66-65 to Faculty. This leaves the door open for Johnson to claim a share of the AA title by beating McKenzie in a possible rematch which has yet to be scheduled.

Get your hands on a Macintosh before your hands are full.

Homework has a nasty way of piling up, doesn't it? One day, you feel on top of it all—the next, you're behind on your notes, your research, your term paper.

Our advice: Get in front of a Macintosh® computer.

True, it may not turn a lifelong procrastinator into an overachiever. But it will make an enormous difference in how quickly you can write, rewrite, and print your assignments.

Not only will a Macintosh change the way you look at homework, it'll change the way your homework looks—with an endless variety of type styles, and graphics that'll make your professors think you bribed a friend in art school.

And as for all those classroom scribbles, research notes, and assorted scraps of paper that litter your desk, we give you HyperCard™—an amazing new program that provides an easy way to store, organize, and cross-reference each and every bit of information. (HyperCard is included free with every Macintosh.)

So come in and get your hands on a Macintosh today.

Before your homework slips completely through your fingers.

The Greatest Show on Earth Salutes the Legendary Gunther Gebel-Williams

"In imperial Rome, the crowd's accolade for him would have leaped over the rim of the Colosseum like a tidal wave; he would have been installed in public office."—Edward Hoagland, 1973.

In a lifetime of achievement and triumph, there ultimately must be a last, best performance. When the legendary Gunther Gebel-Williams steps into the spotlight at the UTC Arena, February 22 through 25, it will be the last time local audiences will see The Greatest Wild Animal Trainer of All Time in regular performance.

Producer Kenneth Feld's all-new 199th Edition of Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus is a stellar salute to the legend who for the past 20 years has held audiences spellbound with his electrifying and intriguing mastery of training wild animals. In this final performance the blond, tan, ruggedly-handsome superstar displays the unique training style that has made him Lord of the Rings. With masterful voice commands he controls 18 Siberian and Bengal tigers in the Giant Steel Cage, 17 Lippizaner horses, and three rings of African and Asian elephants.

To honor this Caesar of the Circus, the glories of ancient Rome are re-created in "Circus Maximus"—a majestic production spectacle that sparkles with visual delights. A golden pageant of gladiators, ancient gods, temple maidens and clown jesters—joined by Middle Eastern potentates on camels and soldiers on horseback presents a triumphant tribute.

Temple floats carrying the emperor, empress and the royal family parade regally around the hip-podrome track to the sounds of "Grand Roman Fanfare" and "The Glory That Was Rome."

Tickets are now on sale at the UTC Arena Box Office and other outlets. To charge tickets by phone, call (615) 266-6627.

Clean-air legislation

Here are the major provisions of clean-air legislation being considered by Congress to significantly curb air pollution by the turn of the century.

ACID RAIN
Coal-burning electric power plants would have to significantly reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by 2000, when emissions would be limited. Plants would be required to reduce nitrogen-oxide emissions.

19400
The legislation provides for tighter automobile tailpipe emission controls similar to California standards.

TOXIC CHEMICALS
Industry would be required to reduce the release of more than 200 toxic chemicals. The Environmental Protection Agency would be allowed to impose additional measures if it determines a continual health risk from toxic releases.

OTHER MEASURES
Industry would be required to obtain federal pollution permits for the first time, enforcement and penalties would be toughened. Federal and local governments would be required to promote mass transit, car pools and other measures to reduce automobile travel in the worst pollution areas.

Southern's first Yearbook of the '90's nears completion

By Gina McIntyre

The yearbook is nearly completed. With 89% of the pages already completed, Andy McConnell, Southern Memories Editor, still had a challenge ahead of him.

According to McConnell this yearbook is 24% larger than last year's book, jumping from 200 to 248 pages, those were the only secrets he would reveal.

The big word in yearbook circles is "DEADLINE". A deadline is a date which the yearbook company sets to receive a stated portion of the book. The Southern Memories had four. McConnell put in several 60 hour work weeks to prepare for his last two deadlines.

"Being in charge of the yearbook means having to juggle a lot of different responsibilities, money matters, budgets, job assignments, appointments, and time management," said McConnell.

Mike Magursky, Memories art director, has been working hard. "I've sworn after every year that I've worked on a yearbook that I'd never do it again. I guess I never learned my lesson." This is his fourth year of experience.

"One thing I've learned about myself during this project is that I survived on less sleep than my mom though I could," stated McConnell.

Janesta Bryant, Andy McConnell, and Mike Magursky put the finishing touches on the 1989-90 Southern Memories.

The general consensus stated by Magursky is "If you find any errors in the book, we put them there on purpose. Some people are always looking for the wrong... and we're just trying to please everyone!"

Anderson lecture series looks at Japan tonight

By Andrea Nicholson

"What are Americans Learning From Japanese Manufacturing Practices?" is the title of a lecture to be presented by Jack B. Sample Thursday, March 22, at Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists.

The lecture, beginning at 8 p.m. in Brock Hall Room 338, is the seventh in the E.A. Anderson Lecture Series, an annual feature of the business curriculum at Southern College.

Sample is presently the general manager of Komatsu Dresser company, a company which he joined in 1986 as director of human resources. Prior to joining Komatsu, Sample was employed in the area of human resource development with the electric Power Board of Chattanooga.

He holds a B.A. and M.S. degree from the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. He is an accredited personnel manager of the American Society for Personnel Administration and is a certified compensation specialist.

Sample has served in many leadership positions in various Chattanooga area organizations. He is a native of Chattanooga where he resides with his wife and two children.

The E.A. Anderson Lecture Series is made possible by the generosity of E.A. Anderson of Atlanta, Ga., for the purpose of giving the listener a broader understanding of the business world.

The community is invited to attend the lectures free of charge. Continuing education credit is available for a fee.

The subsequent lecture in the series will be March 29. William Peterson, Lundy Chair Professor, Philosophy of Business, at Campbell University in Buies Creek, North Carolina, will speak on "Our Second Democracy." For more information, contact the business Department at Southern College at 238-2751.

Senior Celebration Weekend starts today

By David Barasoain

Senior Celebration Weekend will officially begin March 29, during the 11:00 a.m. assembly in the Church. The Senior class will march in full graduation regalia for this assembly. Seniors can pick up their robes and gowns in Dr. Greenleaf's office on March 26-28. Class members will need to meet in the church a half hour prior to the assembly, in robes, at 10:30 a.m.

The speaker for this assembly will be Paul Conn, president of Lee College. This unique chapel ceremony is being conducted to boost the spirits of the Seniors. It will also allow underclassmen, who aren't staying for the actual ceremony, to see some of their friends graduate.

On Friday evening, March 30, at 7:30 p.m., an assembly will be held for Seniors in Lynn Wood Hall. The evening's topic will be the "Monday after the Sunday." Those attending will discuss several topics including what they will be doing the Monday after graduation and how they will conduct themselves in the "real world". The speaker for the Friday evening service will be Dr. Ron Springett.

On Sabbath, March 31, at 9:45 a.m., a Sabbath school and church service for Seniors will be held at Red Clay Park. If you need directions to the park, see the map below or meet in front of Wright Hall at 9:00 a.m. on March 31. The Sabbath school lesson will be taught by Senior militiam major Bruce Whitden. The sermon will be given by Senior Class sponsor, Dr. Derek Morris. Blue jeans and tennis shoes are acceptable attire for the service. If you want a sack lunch for the afternoon, be sure to sign up in the cafeteria by Wednesday, March 28. A nature hike will be directed by Mr. Heuck after church for those wishing to tour the area.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

This letter is written in response to the article titled "Basketball: bringing out the worst in the best of us." It was in the Feb. 1 issue.

I have sent this to offer an alternative perspective on athletics, which includes basketball. Basketball is not a "stupid game" and inferring that athletics are is ridiculous. Participation in athletics allows for the opportunity to grow in the areas of personal potential, teamwork, discipline, patience, overcoming obstacles, and decision making, to name a few.

To say that "no one from Southern College is ever going to make a living playing basketball" is probably an accurate statement. However, why should one close the door on an activity that brings enjoyment just because it is not perfect.

Dare I mention that other activities like singing or playing a musical instrument will hardly provide a means for support for the greater majority of Southern College students. These extracurricular activities are held in higher regard and to think the same competitive nature is not in their participants would be foolish. Pride, envy, frustration and jealousy are certainly present but because it is hidden easier and very subtle, public scorn is not levied as readily.

God has given and ability

The man who never alters his opinion is like standing water, & breeds reptiles of the mind.

The Southern Accent is the official student newspaper for Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists and is released every other Thursday during the school year with the exception of exam weeks and vacations. Opinions expressed in the Southern Accent are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the editors, Southern College, the Seventh-day Adventist church, or the advertisers.

The Southern Accent welcomes your letters which must contain the writer's name, address, and phone number. Letters will be edited for space and clarity. All letters must have the writer's name and phone number for verification, although names may be withheld at the author's request. The editor reserves the right to reject any letter. The deadline for letters is the Sunday before publication at noon. Place letters under the door of the Accent office in the Student Center or mail to: Southern College, Southern Accent, P.O. for sports to certain individuals and it is one that should be taken advantage of. Sports is a valuable witnessing tool that can be used to reach people. Let us take pride in individualism and be happy that differences and competition makes life exciting.

In ending, I would like to say that issues like premarital sex, alcoholism, drugs, racism, and cheating are topics that are more important and should be addressed more often. Or, would addressing these issues in public be an admission of their presence on our campus?

South Africa...

Dear Editor,

Considering the current affairs within the South African political arena, it is my objective in view of issues mentioned during chapel, February 22, 1990, to provide the Southern College students with the alternative point of view.

I respect the rights of individuals to hold opinions on any issue—social, religious or political; however, I expect the relevant facts, both negative and positive, before such a person attempts to address a congregation of people.

Addressing the issue of labour unions, the speaker gave the impression it was impossible for black workers to protest peacefully or to approach labour relations officials about working problems without being harassed or arrested by South African Police in the early 1970's. He did, however, fail to mention that until 1979, unions were illegal in South Africa, and therefore, any form of strike was illegal. Labour relations were only addressed by a commission of inquiry on legislation in the late 70's. Government statistics show labour union membership in 1979 as zero, growing to more than 600,000 in 1985. All unions prior to 1979 were unregistered and therefore, unlawful.

With regard to the African National Congress (ANC) having the support of all South Africans, he failed to mention Gataha Buthelezi, Paramount Chief of 6.4 million Zulus who constitute one third of the black population in South Africa. Buthelezi enjoys the majority of white support and is acclaimed by international communities. He also is fiercely opposed to the ANC.

Furthermore, the speaker stated the ANC only uses violence as a means of defense. How much defense is needed against innocent women and children of all nationalities? Limpet mines and plastic explosives placed in restaurants and shopping centres frequented by all nationalities are by no means a line of defense. The ANC by its own admission is a communist vehicle. The ANC's Radio Freedom on May 11, 1986 stated: "If Botha expects to buy time by appealing to non-existent, non-communist, ANC leaders, then Botha has missed the freedom boat" (Talking with the ANC, Perskor, 1986).

Since August 1985, 381 black people have died during South African Police action to quell riots as opposed to 496 blacks killed by black radicals (Talking with the ANC, Perskor, 1986).

With reference to education, (many of us were led to believe the Chapel hour would deal with the future of SDA schools in South Africa) he failed to mention the numerous private and governmental institutions which have been multi-racial for the past ten years. A new education dispensation was formulated in the White Paper on the provision of Education (1983) and established the National Policy for Education Affairs Act (Act 76 of 1984) to place education levels for all racial groups on a level footing. What of the five "black only" universities in South Africa? All so-called white universities are fully multi-racial and have been for many years. University of South Africa which is the largest correspondence university in the world has a predominantly black enrollment. The oppressed black school graduate also receives 67% of government scholarships to continue his education. The South African Breweries, largest company in South Africa, only awards scholarships to blacks. Black schools are burnt down and classes boycotted by students at the insistence of black radical leaders within the schools.

Nelson Mandela returned to the dusty streets of Soweto. I wonder how he will enjoy his $250,000 mansion constructed by ANC funds, as he lives in poverty with his people?

What place did all this misleading have in our church? Liberation Theologians such as Desmond Tutu, Professor Peyerls-Naude, Alan Boesak, and Desmond Hurley have split the theological community in half for preaching politics from the pulpit. Politics has its place, but not in church, and we at least expect a balanced, credible presentation from the rostrum.

What about Seventh-day Adventist schools in South Africa? How do labour unions, the ANC, Nelson Mandela, and recent political events have any bearing on decisions that lie solely with the SDA Conference? The speaker was too wrapped up in politics and forgot to mention it. I was too wrapped up in supplying the alternative view to ask. Nkosi Sikelele e Afrika (God Bless Africa).

Bits and Pieces

I watched the recent SA elections with much interest, and there were times I couldn't help thinking I was the only one interested. According to the official announcements posted the day after the election, less than half of the student body took the opportunity to vote. I find this fascinating. Mind you, I'm not so much concerned with why less than half of you voted, as I am with how this trend could affect future S.A. elections.

After considerable cogitation and a preponderance of pondering, I've reached a conclusion. One that is at the same time frightening and intriguing. Whereas in recent elections it has been fashionable to make student involvement the focus of a candidate's campaign (for example: Mark Waldrop's "You Belong", or Woody White's "Your S.A. Your Way"), in the future it's very likely some innovative student will attempt to capitalize on the general student body apathy by incorporating it into his campaign. Imagine someone running for S.A. President with the slogan "My S.A., My Way," or "Vote For Me, I'll Leave You Alone." It could happen.

If this trend toward non-involvement continues we might hear a campaign speech like this:

Southern College students, are you tired of student leaders continually hassling you to get involved in campus life? Are you tired of being told you should vote for this office or that office? Do you sometimes wish these student leaders would just disappear? Well, now you can do something to make these dreams come true.

As Candidate for S.A. President, I recognize that the majority of you couldn't care less about what happens on this campus, and I'm prepared to stand up for your right to be uninvolved. If I am elected S.A. president I promise three things:

1. I promise to do away with S.A. chapels. They're boring, and most students would rather curl up with a good chemistry or anatomy textbook anyway.

2. I promise never to try to get you involved in anything, at anytime, ever.

3. I promise not to solicit your opinions or suggestions, nor to listen to any opinions that are offered.

Southern College is a great school, and I believe it can become even greater as student leaders realize they weren't elected to coax regular students into doing their jobs for them. If you believe apathy is a virtue, then vote for me. It'll be the last thing you'll ever have to do. I promise.

Now, I realize that if my predictions are correct and most S.C. students really are disinterested in the S.A., then this column is an exercise in futility. Less than half of you will read it. But that's okay, those who don't probably aren't aware we even have a school paper.

Journalism department brings 'editor-in-residence' to campus

By Richard Gallagher and Lisa Rosasen

"A Picture Is Worth a Thousand Complaints" is the title of an evening assembly meeting with Alan Horton, chairman of the Ethics Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, 7:00 p.m. April 1 in Brock Hall 147. Hors d'oeuvres will be served at 6:00 p.m. Assembly credit will be given.

The meeting is the first editor-in-residence program held under the auspices of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and jointly sponsored by the Journalism Club, the Journalism and Communication Department, and the Southern Accent.

Horton's presentation will feature 20 slides of controversial photos recently published in the Naples Daily News (Fla.), a Scripps Howard newspaper where Horton has served as executive editor since 1987. The presentation will consider the ethics of pictures selection. "I get more complaints about the pictures we publish than about articles and editorials," he said.

Horton, a graduate of Yale University, has worked for a number of Howard chain, including the Scripps Howard Washington Bureau, where he covered the Pentagon during the Vietnam War. Before he became editor of the Naples Daily News, he was publisher at the Southern California Publishing Co., which produces 24 weekly newspapers with a circulation of 450,000 in the Los Angeles suburbs.

"The editor-in-residence program brings the workplace to students," said Luis Swais, journalism department chair. "It helps students become intelligent consumers of mass media."

This is the first year Southern has participated in the program. Editor-in-residence first semester was Paul Neely, managing editor of Chatanooga Times.

Other meetings in the program will be held Monday, April 2, and are open to the public:

8:00 a.m. Brock Hall 146—"Journalists as Niche-players" will explore how journalists are discovering what interests readers.

9:00 a.m. Brock Hall 146—"What Is News Today?" will explore the determinants of news in the 90s.

12:00 p.m. Cafeteria Banquet Room—"Southern Accent-Pluses and Minuses" will provide a critique of the three most recent issues.

1:00 p.m. Brock Hall 146—"Advertising and Reporting—Journalism's Separation of Church and State" will explore why editorial and advertising departments of a newspaper need to remain apart.

2:00-4:00 p.m. Brock Hall Seminar Room—Individual conferences with students about newspaper careers and journalism in general (A sign-up sheet is provided at the Southern Califor-

German Sabbath School organized on campus

By Richard Gallagher

"Guten Morgen! Herzlich Willkommen zum Sabbatschule!" (Good morning! Welcome to Sabbath school). These were some of the first words spoken 10:00 Sabbath, March 17 at the newly formed German Sabbath school.

"We've been thinking for quite some time about having one," said Dr. Helmut Ott, chairman of the Modern Languages department. Several students in Intermediate

German told him they thought it was a good idea to have a German Sabbath school, and they asked if one could be formed. Dr. Ott decided it was time to get the program started.

It follows a simple format so it is easier to understand. Song service is first, followed by scripture and prayer, then the special feature, and finally, lesson study.

The special feature in the first class was Briget DeMemmo's slide presentation containing pictures of East and West Germany. The special feature will be a regular part of the program.

Waldemar Ehlers, a retired minister, gave the lesson study. It discussed Matthew 24 and was taken from the Sabbath school quarterly for that week.

Dr. Ott had his students in Intermediate German study the 24th chapter of Matthew in class before the seventeenth. He also has the Intermediate Spanish class members read portions of the Bible during class.

The students of Spanish have an opportunity to attend a Spanish speaking church here in Collegedale. The opportunity to visit a German-speaking church is not available to students of German.

On thinks it is important for the students to read the scripture in the foreign language. The religious vocabulary used in the Bible is quite different from everyday speech, said Ott.

The class will meet two more times, April 7 and April 21. The meetings begin at 10:00 a.m. and are held in Daniels Hall. Anyone is welcome to come, but Dr. Ott cautions, there may or may not be an interpreter.

Measles feared to be reaching epidemic proportions on college campuses nationwide

By LUCY YOUNG

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/Apple College Information Network

Once on the brink of eradication, measles is striking back with a vengeance.

The disease has killed 15 people nationwide this year, and the cases are mounting faster this spring than last year, which ended with an alarming 16,240 cases and 45 deaths.

With schools across the country breaking for spring vacations, public health officials are worried that measles will spread farther, wider and faster.

"There's a good possibility that we will have spread where we have measles outbreaks," said George Seastrom, a consultant with the Centers for Disease Control. "If (students) intermix, they'll pick it up."

Spring break mecess such as Florida's Fort Lauderdale and Daytona Beach and South Padre Island, Texas, will literally become measles hotbeds: fun, sun and a hardy virus that can survive in warm humid conditions for three hours.

"Rather than keeping measles within certain college campuses, it's going to be spread to various schools this way," Seastrom said.

Inadequate immunization among students is just part of the problem; about half of the cases are pre-schoolers, many in immigrant or inner-city families who are not aware of the need for vaccinations.

As of Feb. 17, 52 outbreaks of measles have been found in 16 states: Maryland, Florida, Illinois, Wisconsin, Texas, California, Alaska, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Oregon, Maine, New York, Indiana, Ohio, Oklahoma and Michigan.

"It's everywhere," said

Judy Gantt, a CDC health education and information specialist.

The outbreak in Los Angeles County persists after an unusually long 2 1/2 years, making more than 3,260 people sick. Chicago has reported 2,370 cases since its March 1989 outbreak. Dallas has seen 1,200 cases to date over a similar period.

In Fresno County, health officials suspect that cultural misunderstanding of vaccinations contributed to the measles deaths of nine Laotian children. That spurred officials in St. Paul, Minn., to launch a door-to-door immunization program targeting Hmong children from Laos.

Both counties have heavy concentrations of Hmong who live in cramped quarters, making them particularly susceptible to contagious like measles.

All states require children to be immunized before starting school. Because the measles vaccine is considered 95 percent effective, the CDC recommends a two-dose immunization: one for infants at 15 months old and another before the child enters school. People are considered immune if they:

— Were born before 1957 since they likely had childhood exposure to the disease.

— Already had the measles.

— Are adequately vaccinated according to standards.

Inadequate immunizations have created an entire generation of young people who may be vulnerable to the viral disease.

People born between 1957 and 1976 may have been vaccinated too young for life-time immunity while those born between 1976 and 1980 may have gotten ineffective vaccine doses, the CDC said.

The deficiency is emerging nationwide on campuses like the University of Maine, where 400 students without current immunization records are being excluded from classes until March 19 because of an outbreak among 45 students.

Earlier this month, a 30-case outbreak in Allegan County, Mich., caused a high school basketball game to be played without fans. The University of Oregon, citing the growing number of cases among young adults, will require all new students next fall to have been vaccinated for the disease.

That requirement is fast becoming standard policy for colleges, Seastrom said. "An outbreak really upsets the whole routine of a university. After spring break, they have final exams coming out, seniors are going to job interviews. These people can't afford to have the disease at this time."

Outbreaks also have hit Amish communities in Canton, Minn., and Cattaraugus County, N.Y. In Canton, the measles struck 17 people in five families and curtailed visits until the outbreak subsided. Amish traditionally oppose vaccination for religious reasons.

Twenty years ago, hopes were high that measles would be vanquished. Public vaccination programs moved successfully toward that goal and in 1983, the number of cases hit an all-time low of 1,500. Since then, however, the number of cases has surged.

Number of measles cases

Measles cases in the United States hit an all-time low at 1,500 in 1983 before soaring to 16,236 last year. So far this year, there have been 1,150 cases, more than double the number reported by this time last year.

Protesting administration policies can backfire

Students should be aware of what they can expect to achieve

By CAROL BRADLEY

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network
WASHINGTON—It may be months before a true victor emerges from the two-week sit-in at Tennessee State University, but a rash of similar campus protests in the past year have yielded mixed results.

For every Howard University in Washington — where Republican National Chairman Lee Atwater resigned from the board of trustees last March after angry students occupied a building for three days — there is a University of Massachusetts. There, Pentagon-supported research rolls along despite a series of student demonstrations opposing it.

Last May at Stanford University in Palo Alto, Calif., 53 students seized President Donald Kennedy's office for a day to protest racism on campus and the security of minority faculty at the school.

Stanford is seeking minority hires, but had started the search before the protest, administrators say.

In the meantime, a judge convicted each of the students of trespassing and sentenced them to six months of probation and 40 hours of community service — on top of 75 hours of community service meted out by the university.

At TSU in Nashville, students ended their sit-in March 8 with an agreement to pay for damages caused to the administration building and for long-distance phone calls they made. They also agreed their behavior was "improper."

In return, the administration has promised to make financial records available to students, put greater emphasis on maintenance and repairs, and form a committee to monitor concessions — prompting both sides to declare victory.

The success of student protests is not always absolute, however.

The same month of the Stanford protest, black students at Michigan State University in East Lansing ended a week-long sit-in at the administration building after school officials agreed to consider the protesters' 36 requests regarding minority concerns.

Among their demands was that Michigan State appoint a vice president or assistant provost to monitor minority affairs. The school did create a position of minority adviser, though someone who lower on the flow chart.

The person who filled the new job,

Lee June, said that while some of students' remaining requests have been addressed — for instance, the school has held a conference on black issues — officials have been "generally slow" to respond to other concerns, such as hiring minority faculty.

Regardless, June said, the protest served a purpose: At a school where blacks comprise only 6 percent of the 42,000 students enrolled, "They got the administration's attention and moved along the agenda faster."

The key to a successful protest may lie in knowing in advance what concessions a college or university is willing to make, said Dave Cutler, a representative of the Washington-based United States Student Association.

"As long as students are aware of what they're capable of achieving, a sufficiently organized student body can get just about anything," Cutler said.

At tiny Paine College in Augusta, Ga., 300 of the school's 550 students staged a 27-hour sit-in last September to protest security conditions in the wake of an on-campus shooting. The school responded by installing high-intensity lights on campus, arming its five security guards at night and setting up security booths at both campus entrances.

The only demand not agreed to,
Paine spokeswoman Therese Griffin said, was to fence in the entire 54-acre campus.

At Gallaudet University for the deaf in Washington, students convinced the administration to replace a new hearing president with a deaf president.

The school overlooked a more minor request: that a majority of the university's board of trustees be deaf.
Though additional deaf members have been added to the 16-member board, the majority — nine — are still hearing.

Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles appointed an 11-member committee of faculty, alumni and community leaders to monitor race relations after five students walked into President James N. Loughran's office last April and refused to leave until he addressed racial problems.

Just last week, students at Morgan
State University in Baltimore ended a week-long protest by convincing the administration to install more lights and hire six more security guards.

No progress was reported, however, on the students' biggest request — for more state aid.

WSMC to host Adventist Radio Network Conference

By Lisa Rosaasen

The annual Adventist Radio Network (ARN) Conference will be hosted by affiliate WSMC March 28-30 on the Southern College campus in Lynn Wood Hall 206.

Dan Landrum, program director at Southern College's radio station WSMC, said he is excited not only about WSMC's renewed involvement but that they have been chosen as the host for this year's conference.

Approximately 30 radio stations representatives from North America with the farthest being from station VOAR in Newfoundland will attend, as well as representatives from it is Written and Adventist World Radio.

The largest topic of discussion will focus on the planning of the coverage of the General Conference Session to be held July 5-14 in Indianapolis, Indiana. The coverage team has already been appointed for this upcoming conference. Landrum will be working on the team as a reporter.

Another crucial topic will concern the structure of Adventist Radio Network and whether it should become a part of Adventist World Radio.

Additional topics of discussion will include network programming, new stations interested in network affiliation, and reports from current station members and officers of the network. There were also to be a station management problem-solving session with Lee McIntyre, the representative of KSGN in La Sierra, California. Officers for Adventist Radio Network will be elected.

The National Association of Broadcasting (NAB) meeting will be held in Atlanta the week before the ARN Conference. Steve Vistauert, current president of ARN, said they try to hold both conferences at about the same time and place so that representatives are able to attend both meetings.

Recycling: a fun, easy way to save the world from near certain destruction at the hands of uncaring Reagan administration environmental policy makers (really)

By MARY DOLAN

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network.

Most everyone agrees that recycling is a good idea, but few find time to do it.

People get sick of the newspapers piled in the basement and throw them out with the trash. Out, too, go all those empty cans and plastic soda bottles they planned to return to the store. Feeling guilty, they check glass in the garbage.

It's just too much of a chore to sort trash or spend the morning hauling junk to separate recycling centers.

But there are things everyone can do to make the recycling chore easier. First, get organized. There are many products to help get a handle on the mess. For example, tying a knot around a slippery pile of newspapers can be tricky. But not if papers are stored in a rack, available through catalogs.

A wooden model, decorated with carved ducks, can be ordered for $4.95 plus shipping from Svoboda Industries in Kewanee, Wis. Call (800) 678-9996.

Hold Everything, a subsidiary of Williams Sonoma, sells a wire newspaper rack for $7. To order, call (415) 421-4242.

The company also sells products to help recyclers get a grip on empty bottles and cans. Its recycling center, which sells for $45, holds three, 13-gallon plastic trash bags, useful for sorting returns and recyclables.

There's a space to stack newspapers, complete with spoils to hold string.

Rubbermaid also makes containers that make home recycling easier. Available locally at hardware and home stores, the company's squarish, 15-gallon bin stack to save space. Use one for newspapers, another for cans, a third for bottles. Handles and drain plugs make the bins easy to carry and clean. The containers are made of recycled plastic and sell for about $12.

Other Rubbermaid bins are sized to hold three grocery bags in a row, or newspapers spread flat. These range in price from $6 to $11.

Once those cans, bottles and plastics are organized, it's time to attack the organic garbage. Grass clippings, along with kitchen scraps such as coffee grounds, egg shells, fruit peelings and vegetable tops, can be recycled by throwing them in a backyard compost pile. Spread the deteriorated mixture over zucchini or roses and watch them thrive.

Annual Talent show scheduled for Sunday

By Daryl Cole

"The Few, the Proud, the Talented," the 1990 SA talent show, will occur in the gymnasium on Sunday, March 25 at 8 p.m. Entrants will perform their talents and compete for cash prizes. Winners will receive $100 for first place, $75 for second place, and $50 for third place. But all entrants that have passed the screening committee will receive $25 just for entering and performing.

Harvey Hillyer, the SA social vice president, and Daryl Cole, Hillyer's assistant will emcee the show. They will staff for time between acts by hosting "Amazing Gebit Tricks" and other time fillers.

The show is open to anyone who wants to come. "The young, the old, the married, the single, those in love, or those just casually dating, all are invited to experience Southern's talent," said Hillyer.

Joey Pollom to give vespers concert

Christian Singer, Joey Pollom, will appear in concert Friday, March 23 at 8 p.m. in the Collegedale Academy Auditorium.

Having previously appeared the musical groups Ecantour, Die Menzer, and Something Special, Pollom now solos.

Pollom's love for God motivates him to sing. "I like to sing songs that convey experiences that I've had in my spiritual journey," said Pollom, "They come from the heart, and people can relate."

Pollom graduated from Southern College with B.A. in Religion. Currently he is a Job Specialist at Soddy Daisy High School. Pollom's wife, Debbie, is presently in the nursing program at Southern College. They have three children.

The concert will focus on a practical life with Christ. Admission is free, but a love offering will be taken.

Ashton and Glass in concert Saturday night

By Andrea Nicholson

The Southern College Symphony Orchestra will join organist Judy Glass and pianist Bruce Ashton in concert on Saturday, March 24, at 3 p.m. in the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church.

"Concerto for Organ and Orchestra" by early American composer, Horatio Parker, will feature Judy Glass as the soloist. She will perform on the Anton Heiller Memorial Organ, one of the largest North American trackers built in this century.

Bruce Ashton, pianist, will perform "Andante," the third movement of Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2.

Two works featuring the Symphony Orchestra include "Symphony No. 8 in B minor," by Schubert, and three movements of "Brandenburg Concerto No. 1," by J.S. Bach. The latter will feature two horns, three oboes, a bassoon, a piccolo violin, and strings.

The 70-member Symphony Orchestra is conducted by Orlo Gilbert, professor of music at Southern College. The group will perform for a dinner concert on April 22. Tickets are $15 and may be purchased through the Music Department at Southern College.

Judy Glass has been associate professor of organ at Southern College since 1975. She studied with Anton Heiller at the Vienna Academy of Music, and has participated in the International Organ Course in Haarlem, Holland. In 1981, she was the guest soloist and lecturer for the Northwest Regional Convention of the American Guild of Organists. She is currently the organist for the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church and the First Presbyterian Church of Chattanooga.

Dr. Bruce Ashton has served

Southern College as assistant professor of music since 1968. He received his doctorate in music from the university of Cincinnati in 1971. Ashton is a member of the Southern College Symphony Orchestra and has composed works for significant college events.

Destiny Drama Company does California during Spring Break

By Rick Mann

It was raining the afternoon of March 1st when Destiny Drama Co. left Southern to head for the West Coast. It was the beginning of their California Spring Break Tour (March 1-12) that would include performances at Pacific Union College, seeing the Golden Gate Bridge, visiting numerous academies in Northern California, and concluding in Sacramento for the country's first ever Youth Summit. The schedule was full and everyone in the troupe was ready for a "West Coast Experience".

The first leg of the California Tour took Destiny to Pacific Union College. Everyone in the troupe was excited and nervous at the same time about being on the PUC campus; they were unsure how a group of "Southerners" would be received on the West Coast, so everyone remained on their toes.

Close to 1500 people attended the vespers program at the PUC church that Friday night. Destiny's program, which included the pieces "The New Christian" and "Soldiers of Light" was well received by the audience.

The fears of the troupe were relieved when they heard loud laughing and hardy "AMEN's". Also, many students came up and personally thanked the members for the vespers program.

Sabbath morning, the drama troupe put on a Sabbath School for 400-500 people in Paulin Hall (Ackerman equivalent). Destiny performed some of their street drama material which focuses in on "forgiveness" and a "strong foundation in Christ".

Later that afternoon, Destiny put on a 2 1/2 hour drama workshop emphasizing the seven precepts of Christianity. Learning such skills as projection, diction, and characterization, the participants not only learned about becoming better performers but also more about themselves and each other.

Before heading off to their first academy performance, Destiny visited such places as St. Helena, Elmshaven (Ellen White's House), and Calistoga. Also, they stopped by "Frisco (tourist lingo) to see the Golden Gate Bridge and Lombard St., the world's curviest street.

Throughout the next week, Destiny hit four academies in Northern California: Rio Lindo Academy, Golden Gate Academy, Monterey Bay Academy, and Lodi Academy. Everywhere the drama troupe went, they were well received. Stanley Baldwin, principal of Lodi Academy said, "You guys were right on...you addressed issues important to our school."

While performing for all those academy young people, Destiny took some time out between performances to take it easy and see the sights...it WAS Spring Break after all.

San Francisco was visited again, but this time it was to ride the famous cable cars and visit Fisherman's Wharf, where one can see street performers, "weirdos" and Alcatraz Penitentiary. Also, they stopped by a few Northern California beaches. Goat Rock was the favorite of most of Youth Summit rallies all over the country. "It was a real privilege to be part of the first one," commented Allan Martin.

When it was all over, Destiny and the leaders of Youth Summit talked about the day. "Destiny helped fill a void," said Steve Case, "You were there to bridge the gap between us and the kids." Blake also had several words of appreciation after the one-day rally was over.

In the span of only twelve days, the Destiny Drama Co. performed to over 4000 people. It's difficult to say if their performances had a direct effect on people's lives, but Destiny member Tricia Greene said, "If the Holy Spirit used us to help only one person grow closer to God, it was worth it."

Destiny sets "Eyewitness" performance for April 6

The Destiny Drama Company will perform the play "Eyewitness" at 8:00 p.m., Friday evening, April 6, 1990, at the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Students, faculty, administrators, and staff are invited attend this home performance. The Destiny Drama Company's home performance is an annual event which ends their touring season. "Eyewitness" is an original work commissioned to commemorate the troupe's tenth anniversary season.

"Eyewitness" is a stirring portrayal of a modern Christ and the significant effect He has on His contemporaries. Powerfully bringing the pertinence and personality of Jesus Christ into a 20th century setting, "Eyewitness" explores the relationships of 1990's men and women to living Messiah.

Co-written and directed by David Denton, Destiny's 6-year veteran, "Eyewitness" is sure to carry the exceptional humor, drama, and message characteristic of this troupe.

Utilizing pantomime, vignettes, plays, and street drama, the Destiny Drama Company performs throughout the United States for high schools, colleges, and youth rallies. To support Destiny's outreach ministry, a free-will offering will be taken following the performance.

For more information regarding the Destiny Drama Company home performance of "Eyewitness," call Allan Martin at 615-238-2724.

-the troupe because of its cliffs, rocky coast line, and its spectacular view of the crashing waves.

After a busy and relaxing week all rolled up in to one, Destiny loaded up the van and headed for Sacramento for their last exciting weekend.

To end the tour, Destiny took part in the country's first ever Youth Summit, a youth rally sponsored by Insight magazine to kick off their new evangelistic publication Insight/Out which was held at Carmichael SDA Church. Led by Steve Case, youth pastor at Carmichael, and Chris Blake, editor of Insight, the estimated crowd of 100-125 youth swelled close to 300.

The idea of Youth Summit is to bring youth closer to God by letting them know that being a Christian is a lot of fun. Blake's goal is to have

For the Health of it

By Darlene Almeda, R.N.

Q: Why do some people have such adverse reactions to caffeine products such as No-Doz and Vivarin and some of us don't?

A: I believe it all depends on how sensitive one is to caffeine. Many people are not aware that taking over-the-counter caffeine medications is not quite the same as drinking a Coke or Mountain Dew to stay awake.

Did you know that No-Doz has 100 milligrams of caffeine and Vivarin has 200 mg? One can compare those figures to the 46 mg in Coke and 54 mg in Mountain Dew. So as you can see, taking one Vivarin equals 3.7 cans of Mountain Dew.

Adverse reactions to caffeine products include rapid pulse, respirations with hyperventilation, confusion, irritability, nausea, hallucinations, convulsions, and in extreme cases, coma. It takes approximately 5-6 hours for the body to metabolize half the amount of the caffeine ingested by an adult. This means that the symptoms will remain with you for a while. The harmful effects of caffeine are quite evident, yet many not only choose to ingest it but go as far as sharing with their friends No-Doz and Vivarin as an aid for staying awake to study. That is a great responsibility to take into one's hands knowing that everyone reacts to caffeine differently. You'd be a fool for giving it to a friend and a greater one for taking it.

The G.P.A. Reaper claims another victim.

Suggested reading from McKee library

By A. Lee Bennett, Jr.

Author Denny Rydberg has written a book that should be of great interest to many college students. How to Survive in College is a "survival system" written in a comfortable style that makes reading about both work and play in college easy. Rydberg includes good general information on succeeding in courses, as well as specific advice on ways to review for various types of tests. This includes information on attending Christian colleges and generally has a Christian focus.

"Those of you interested in escape stories will like this one." The Longest Tunnel, by Alan Burgess, "focuses on the great escape" of World War II and its consequences. Burgess provides insight into the haphazard nature of the final months of the Nazi regime and a description of survivor's fates."

NCAA Tournament Sweet Sixteen filled with surprises

By MIKE LOPRESTI

Apple College Information Network.

Texas?
Ball State?
Xavier?

What if they gave an NCAA regional and nobody you expected came?

Bloody Sunday is over, and the NCAA Tournament is down to the Sweet 16. It doesn't have No. 1 seed Oklahoma. Or No. 2 seeds Purdue, Kansas or Arizona — a shocking 22-point loser to Alabama. Or Georgetown, Louisville or Missouri. One after another, the big names were carried out on their shields, while the little guys danced at midcourt. The NCAA bracket is beginning to sound like the NFL.

It doesn't have defending champion Michigan. Not anymore.

It doesn't have one team from the Big Eight, the league that controlled the top of the polls all season. The Plains went plooly.

Of the 16 teams seeded in the top four in each region, nine were upset. Last year? Only three took the early bullet.

But it is March, and drama has hit the ground running.

They played 16 games Saturday and Sunday. Twelve were decided by four points or less. The Super Bowl, this isn't.

"There are no easy teams left," Texas coach Tom Penders said after his Longhorns stunned Purdue. "But I didn't see any, anyway."

Nobody was safe. Michigan State, pride of the Big Ten, huffed past Murray State and puffed past California-Santa Barbara.

There is a 12th seed still running. Ball State is in the regional for the first time.

So is 10th-seeded Texas and 6th-seeded Xavier.

"The big thing was," Xavier coach Pete Gillen said after his team beat Georgetown, "our players believed they could win. We're closing the gap on these superpowers."

They all believe now. From Princeton to Northern Iowa.

Before this past week, Ball State and Xavier had each won one NCAA tournament game in history. Now they're both in the regional.

Proud old names of questionable current strength also moved in.

There is UCLA, which hasn't been this far since Larry Brown took the Bruins to the national title game in 1980.

There is North Carolina, which spent much of the season answering questions about why it was supposedly the worst Tar Heel team since either the Neanderthal era or before Dean Smith was coach, whichever came first.

"Now," said Rick Fox, the Tar Heel whose basket shook Oklahoma, "people will look at us differently."

Meanwhile, Loyola Marymount builds on a story for the ages. Emotion has driven the Lions to an unimaginable level — 149 points worth against Michigan Sunday. With each passing victory, another layer goes on a legend.

The Big Eight had the best rankings this season. The Big Ten had the most teams invited. Seven.

But now that we have a Sweet 16, mirror, mirror on the wall, who's the sweetest of them all?

The Atlantic Coast Conference. Five teams came in, four are still going. And Virginia just missed. The Big Ten, meanwhile, is down to two.

The bad-news league goes good. The league that gave an probation at Maryland and a cesspool at North Carolina State also gives us one-fourth of the remaining field.

An early look at the four regionals:

EAST — Connecticut is the one top seed that breezed through the first weekend, the Huskies' pressure defense is beginning to look like a ticket to Denver.

Next up for Connecticut is Clemson, which spent the weekend on the brink; winning only because BYU missed a late layup and rallying from 19 back to best La Salle.

"God gave us this game," Clemson's Rocky Jones said after the BYU scare. "The rest we have to win on our own."

In the other game are Duke and UCLA, who last met in the tournament in 1964, when a man named John Wooden won his first championship.

Duke has won three of the last four regionals played in East Rutherford.

SOUTHEAST — Top-seed Michigan State made its way through the early rounds with defense, but will have to turn things up to get past Georgia Tech in New Orleans.

Minnesota and Syracuse meet in the other game. This is the one region that went almost exactly according to form.

MIDWEST — This was a disaster area for the favorites. The top three seeds are gone.

No. 4 seed Arkansas is the favorite, but the Razorbacks have serious obstacles in Dallas, beginning with North Carolina, which may be just hitting its peak.

Or do the Tar Heels have a letdown after knocking off Oklahoma?

"Not a chance," guard King Rice said. "We've struggled a lot, and we're not going to lapse now. We want to make the final show."

The other game is the duel of the underdogs, with Xavier against Texas, which had the rotten luck of having to play Purdue in Indianapolis, but comes back to Texas for the regional in Dallas.

"A lot of people booted us there during the Southwest Conference tournament," Penders said.

WEST — All hearts will go out and all eyes will be on Loyola, which was dropped to 11th seed because of Hank Gathers' death. The Lions meet Alabama.

Nevada-Las Vegas would appear to be the favorite, especially in the first game against unheralded Ball State, the first Mid-American Conference team to get to this point in 11 years.

Egg controversy rages

Will an egg balance on end only on the first day of spring? Several Southern College students believe so.

Andy Nash, freshman PR major, Accent Religion editor and charter member of the Viking Club is one of the foremost proponents of this theory. He brought his egg balancing act to the student center Tuesday afternoon.

"This only works on the first day of spring. I challenge anybody to balance an egg Thursday," said Nash.

Greg Bush agreed, "It may have to do with the internal biorhythms of the egg. The yolk expands and sinks lower causing the egg to balance."

According to Daniel Potter, "the gravitational pull of the moon on the yolk causes the balancing effect."

However, there are skeptics. Jon Nash stated that the whole thing is just an old wives tale like the Groundhog Day legend.

In an attempt to resolve this controversy, the Accent staff contacted Dr. Henry Kuhlman, professor of Physics, by phone on Tuesday evening. Kuhlman stated, "I know of no relationship between the celestial happenings and the internal mechanics of an egg."

When told of Kuhlman's comment, Andy Nash replied, "Dr. Kuhlman hasn't seen my egg!"

Southern invaded by Music Festival participants

Academy students from all across the Southern Union, gathered here this past weekend for the 32nd annual Southern Union Music Festival. Nearly 350 kids began arriving Wednesday night, with their music memorized and ready to be directed by Southern College's professors of music.

Director of the festival choir was, Dr. Marvin Robertson. Accompanying on the piano was, Dr. Bruce Ashton. The festival strings were directed by Orlo Gilbert, and conducting the festival band was Patricia Silver.

"The kids really enjoyed their stay here at Southern. I got a chance to talk to some of the girls, and alot of them are considering coming to Southern because of the wonderful experience they had here," said Shannon Johnson.

Dr. Marvin Robertson said, "They were one the best groups as being prepared, and talented, considering past music festivals."

Bags were packed and buses were loaded Saturday night as all the kids left just as quickly as they came. Another Southern Union Music Festival come and gone, and everyone had a great time.

Collegedale SDA church was filled beyond capacity for Friday night's service

Wright Hall collapses forming large pile of rubble Tunneling C.A.R.E. workers blamed for damage to historic structure

By Edgar Allen Poe

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network

At about 2:00 am on Sunday, March 25, 1990, the residents of Collegedale were awakened by the sound of shattering glass and crumbling masonry. Talge Hall resident Ted Showalter rushed to his window to see what was going on. "It was amazing," he said. "I saw Wright Hall tumbling to the ground right before my very eyes."

Rescue workers, Joe and Jeremy Greenleaf were among the first on the scene. "We were able to determine fairly quickly that no one was in the building," said Joe. "However, we brought in Stan Hobbs' dog Butch to sniff the rubble anyway just in case." "We were hoping a fire would break out so we could ride around on the back of the fire truck and spray water on it but it wasn't to be so everybody just went back to bed."

On Monday, inspectors from the Service and Engineering Departments moved in to check on the damage. In the process, they discovered the cause of the collapse. A tunnel had been constructed under the building. An expert Spelunking team lead by Jo-Anne Stevenson ventured into the ruins of the tunnel and found that it lead to the room of C.A.R.E. director Ed Santana.

When questioned about the tunnel Santana confessed that he and Jim Herman had been attempting to tunnel into Thatcher Hall. "We got off course somewhere under Taylor Circle and abandoned the project about two months ago," he said.

Investigators were puzzled as to why it had taken so long for the tunnel to cause Wright Hall to collapse until they found out that Amy Grant's "Lead Me On" had been playing on the stereo in the Southern Accent office that night. According to Dr. Henry Elvis Presley, freshman Music major, shakes hands with former President Richard Nixon who flew in from San Clemente Tuesday to inspect the damage to Wright Hall.

Kuhlman, the harmonic vibrations of the Heavy Metal Rock Music combined with the high tides in southern Nova Scotia that night caused a weakening of the tunnel's supporting beams. When the beams gave way, Wright Hall went down with them.

Experts from the Department of Auto Body Repair have been at work on Wright Hall since early Wednesday. "With a little Bondo and some minor repairs to the trim, we'll have her fixed up good as new in no time."

Qualley suffering from rare disease

By William Blake

Apple College Information Network

Ron Qualley, Dean of Men, was rushed to Zoo Atlanta last Monday evening after suffering a severe attack of lycanthropy over the weekend. "He can be a real bear sometimes," his wife commented, "but I've never seen him get this bad before."

Doctors at the University of Georgia's Center for Lycanthropy Research and Control said that Qualley suffers from a rare mutation of the disease. "Most people turn into a werewolf when they have an attack," said Dr. Alfred Einstein, director of the Lycanthropy Control Unit at Zoo Atlanta. "Qualley turns into a bear."

The attack was apparently brought on by anxiety induced when Angel Echemendia failed to bring Qualley a cap from the NCAA tournament held recently in Knoxville. Qualley's wife reported that the dean had not been sleeping well for over a week because of the incident. "He would toss and turn and mumble to himself something about 'that dirty rotten Angel. First he breaks my basketball goal, then he doesn't get me a hat,'" she said.

Doctors expect that Qualley will return to normal within the next few weeks. "He's resting comfortably now. He attacked one of the handlers earlier today because he was wearing a Oakland A's 1990 World Champions T-shirt. But, we've all put on San Francisco Giants caps now and he's calmed down considerably."

Letter to the co-co-editor

I'm in charge here...

Dear Editor,

In light of the hectic events of the last two weeks, I would like to point out to those misanthropic individuals who feel the need to deride New Mexicans in order to uplift their own personal states, that, under the current state of martial law, the editor of the official voice of Southern College is also the official censor of Southern College.

I am therefore empowered to stop any and all public statements against the fair state of New Mexico and its inhabitants. Needless to say my emergency powers give me full right of summary suspension and arbitrary expulsion. Having said this, I would like to point out that supreme control is now within my grasp.

As new dictator/editor of Southern College and therefore of Collegedale, itself, I permanently expel anyone who publicly denies that the board of trustees fired Don Sahly and the rest of the administrative faculty for gross negligence during the past two weeks.

That formality out of the way, I would like to point out that all able-bodied Collegedale personnel who do not report to my personal army within the next twenty-four hours are also subject to summary expulsion from Southern College for action contrary to the military press.

Logically, the next step is to overcome the citizens of Chattanooga (who have no strong ties to the Union, anyway, since that Civil War fiasco) with our crack invasion team and forcibly enroll all of them in Southern College, thereby subjecting them to my ever-strengthening power.

This serves the two-fold purpose of lowering next year's tuition rate and swelling our ranks. Apply this method recursively, and I am, by default, the supreme ruler of the world. Ha, ha, ha, all mankind trembles at the thought. Bow low before THE EDITOR OF MANKIND. Death to the Bush tyrant!!! Long live Emperor...

Students placed on CP, expelled after school song incident

Elvis Presley, freshman music major, was expelled, and Edgar Allen Poe, Walla Walla transfer student, was put on lifetime Citizenship Probation last Sunday following an impromptu performance of the Southern College school song.

The duo set up their band in the middle of Taylor Circle and played to the homeless and the auto-body workers repairing Wright Hall. Students rushed from their dorm rooms to hear the music. This is the first time students anywhere have voluntarily attended a performance of a school song.

When asked why they chose this particular piece, Poe said, "This is a song we utterly loathed for fifteen long years, but now we resurrected it in a slightly more tricky form to make it a little more fun to play." Elvis agreed, "Yep."

Obviously, the students enjoyed the performance. Even the radical militant feminists left off their heckling long enough to listen in on the concert. But not everyone was happy.

Dr. McArthur, history department chairman, called the performance "an abomination... literally shame and degradation... worse than burning flags."

McArthur contacted Dr. Sahly who had been conferring with Richard Nixon on methods for student control. Sahly immediately unplugged Elvis' microphone, abruptly ending the concert.

Sahly said, "In light of the hectic events of last week, it would be prudent at this juncture to allow this sort of behavior. Before Sahly, rock. With Sahly, no rock. After Sahly, who can say? All I wanted was to be assured of my place in history."

Grates for the homeless

A Modest Proposal

In a desperate attempt to solve the homeless question once and for all, Clifford Olsen, instructor of business law, gave a rousing speech in support of "Ohms for the Poor," a conservative reformist coalition.

Calling on students, faculty, and the Committee of 42, Olsen said, "We have been ignoring the unfortunate long enough. It's time to stop talking and do something. Calls from the pulpit, appeals to our refined sensibilities, nothing seems to work"

Olsen went on to suggest a more permanent solution. He calls his plan, "Grates for the Homeless."

But there is a twist. "These are no ordinary grates," Olsen says. "New York has grates, D.C. has grates, and all well populated. But Colledge's grates will be different. Ohms for the Poor has discovered a far more Practical Solution... electrified grates."

Olsen went on to explain how this Practical Solution would be implemented in much the same way as the old self-clearing bug zappers in horse barns. He said, "Vagrants will be attracted to the heat, get comfortable on the grate, then each half hour—zap!"

Robert Merchant, Ohms for the Poor Treasurer in Chief, says this can be implemented at a cost of only $19.95 monthly per grate.

According to Elvis Presley, founder and charter member of Ohms for the Poor, "It's now or never. I ain't askin' much of you. Suspicious minds don't get all shook up about vagrants on local grates. People would rather see the jailhouse rock from overlooking than actually solving the problem at its source. Don't be cruel, give them bound dogs a break from the heartbeat hotel. These same respectable people who are so apathetic about a live bum will really get excited about a dead one. Take me for example..."

Olsen agreed. "It was this

1988-89 Accent Assitant to receive coveted Martin award

The 1988-89 Southern Accent has been posthumously selected to receive the coveted Martin award for excellence in assistant editorship. The American Society for the Protection of Mammals and Prevention of Cruelty to Small Furry Animals (ASPMPCSA) instituted the award only last Thursday during a heated session of the Executive Steering Committee for Deciding What Kind of Award We Should Give Out Every Year (ESCDWKAWSGOEY).

Brian Miller, former Viking Club president and member of the ASPMPCSA ESCDWKAWSGOEY, said, "Once we finally decided that we were going to give the award out we found that the only candidate which met all the requirements was the assistant editor of the now defunct '88-'89 Southern Accent. We carefully screened all the possible candidates and found he was the only one who faithfully adhered to the tenets of Martinism and was also extremely kind to small furry animals. Unfortunately, no one can remember his name so we're just going to have a kind of generic plaque made up in his memory."

Elvis Presley, acting Chair-posthumous-personage of the ASPMPCSA called last years paper, "the greatest college newspaper in the history of the whole world...really." "Don't be cruel, I just wanna be your Teddy Bear...Uh-Huh!" he added.

Edgar Allen Poe, executive assistant to the acting Chair-posthumous-personage, stated that he really liked, "the positive upbeat tone of the newspaper." "I'd like to say more about the truly outstanding nature of the Accent but there seems to be a gentle tapping at my chamber door."

The generic plaque will be awarded at a special ASPMPCSA awards banquet scheduled for April 31. Everyone is invited to attend. Please bring your own stolen silverware from the cafeteria to eat with as the ASPMPCSA Committee for Stealing Silverware From the Cafeteria has only been able to smuggle out three spoons and half of a salt shaker so far this semester.

Anyone who is interested in joining the ASPMPCSA should contact Ales "William Jennings" Bryan at 238-3174 and send $100.00 in small denominations of em-darned currency to the Southern Accent office.

A previously disregarded letter from a Southern College SM in Lebanon was translated early this morning by Dr. L. Hanson, former Lebanese mathematician. The letter outlines secret details of a joint Israeli-West German strike on the pipe organ which they apparently believe to be a clever disguise for a chemical weapons plant. When asked for comment, freshman pre-engineering major Dallas Morisette said that he suspected something like this.

Edgar Allen Poe, a post-graduate transfer student from Walla Walla College, and Elvis Presley, Jr., a freshman Music major originally from Memphis, have filed a lawsuit in Hamilton County District court against singer-songwriter Bobby McFerrin.

The multi-million dollar suit alleges that McFerrin stole the idea for his Top 20 hit "Don't Worry-Be Happy" from the duo.

At a preliminary hearing held last Wednesday, Presley said that Poe wrote the song sometime back in 1986, and Presley had been performing it on the sidewalk in front of the Red Food store in Ooliewah for over a year when they first heard the McFerrin version. "Edgar and I were shocked. He took the whole song from us—every word, every note. He did leave out the verse about the ravens and the teddy bears, but, other than that, the two songs are identical."

Poe was also asked to make a statement to Judge William "Wild Bill" Wohlers, but the billiff determined that he was too badly decomposed to take the stand.

Wohlers is expected to rule on the case sometime before next Friday unless there is a new moon on a Thursday any time during 1991, in which case he will not rule at all but just make some kind of marmby-pumby remarks and beat around the bush a lot.

Feminazis' attack on Accent repulsed

By George S. Patton, Jr.

Militant feminists and animal rights activists met with a bloody repulse last Tuesday when they attempted to seize the offices of the Southern Accent. John Caskey, editor of the Accent, and Stan Hobbs, the newspaper's advisor, are believed to be holed up in the office which is currently reported to be under a state of siege.

"We know they're in there," said Molly Yard, leader of the Feminazis. "We can hear them listening to the Rush Limbaugh radio talk show. We'll have them out pretty soon though; the Crack Environmental Suicide Squad members are strapping bombs to all over their bodies even as we speak. Death to male-chauvinist pigs! Death to frog-mutilators!"

When asked what Caskey had done Yard replied, "He's rude and wears a fluorescent green PING hat. What more do I need to say."

President Don Sahly has declared martial law on the campus of Southern College. The declaration includes a dusk to dawn curfew and provisions for arming SC's security police with rubber chickens.

In an appeal broadcast to the feminists over WSMC radio Sahly called for the Feminazis to pull back and allow UN peacekeeping troops to take up positions around the perimeter. "We want to work together peacefully for a negotiated settlement," he said.

No one is being allowed to go near the building, and there has been no independent confirmation of casualties; however, the feminist and animal rights activists have allowed the Red Cross to set up a first aid station near their encampments in front of Daniels Hall. A Red Cross worker who asked to remain anonymous said, "We've treated hundreds of paper cuts and verbal abuse here in the last few hours. I only hope the carnage will end soon."

Caskey had been holed up in the Accent office for over two weeks mulling to himself incoherently about the inconsistency of women and the merits of animal dissection. He had reportedly received death threats from women and animal rights groups all over the country.

Hobbs had gone to the office to attempt to convince Caskey to come out when the attack occurred.

Fiendish potato plot foiled by Chris "Indy" Indermuehle, unexpected Spanish Inquisition

By Salvador Dali

"Hello, and thank you for calling Dial-A-Meat! Today for dinner we're having baked potatoes, boiled potatoes, mashed potatoes, scalloped potatoes, tater-tots, french fries, curly fries, cottage fries, Mac-n-cheese, and potato salad. Our hours are eleven-thirty to one."

It was with this depressing message that Chris "Indy" Indermuehle, began what has, without a doubt, been his greatest adventure ever, uncovering a terrifying web of international intrigue, espionage, and why the cafe only serves potatoes.

The Accent Co-60-co-editor reports that Indy sneaked through a third floor Accent office window just after it started raining up. The militant feminists initial confusion due to this unexpected event gave Indy the time he needed to scale the outside wall and relay his story.

Indy said, "As I listened to that fateful message a cold chill ran down my spine. I could all but feel the insidious forces at work behind what I was hearing. For several months, I noticed a tuber trend in Southern's cuisine, but had passed it off as one of those oversights so often seen in collegiate cafes. But I had obviously been wrong, and now a terrible potato crisis has reared its bulbous head and tiny black eyes..."

According to Indy, Monte Mitzelfelt, sophomore computer science major discovered that the transcendent aura and focusing power of the common potato greatly resembles that of the quartz crystal, during his travels in Belgium. After several minutes of intensive study, he founded a new monastic order combining elements of Lutheranism with the potato, a down to earth source of powerful harmonic vibes. He called it "The Potato Head Groove Thing."

Committed to uplifting the Southern College intelligence quotient, Mitzelfelt abandoned his plan to build a pyramid over the campus and instead implemented potato power. He recruited huge numbers of converts who began performing daily rituals deep underground and cooking cold potatoes.

To meet his ever increasing demand for tuber products, Mitzelfelt eventually had to set up a smuggling ring. He sold Reuben sandwiches to Mark Peach, his agent in Germany, in exchange for potatoes and obscure Arab fruit juices.

To keep track of the finances, a group of his acolytes kidnapped Bradley Hyde of the computer science department and the NeXT computer, but Mitzelfelt ended up doing all the accounting by hand when Hyde spent every waking moment playing chess against the NeXT.

Most recently, Mitzelfelt's monks found Jo-Anne Stevenson exploring dangerously near their catacombs and captured her.

Indy explained that he had notified Dr. Douglas "Cardinal" Bennet of the Spanish Inquisition, and was on his way to rescue Stevenson.

When asked to comment about Mitzelfelt, Bennet said, "Amongst our weaponry are such diverse elements as fear, surprise, ruthless efficiency, almost fanatical devotion to Sahly, and nice red uniforms. If the infidel does not confess, we will first poke him with the Soft Cushions, and then force him to sit in the Comfrey Chair until lunch, with only an hour's break for a cup of tea around ten"

Bones found encased in bell tower believed to be remains of former teamster Jimmy Hoffa

By John Donne

Apple College Information Network

Late last Thursday evening, the remains of an unidentified body were uncovered in the bell tower's concrete base during repairs. Bob Heller, bell tower contractor, was working at the time installing a new amplification device for the Elder Hostel's retirement getaway. Heller states, "We were drilling out a hollow for the wiring when we hit some sort of metal. At first we thought it was a strut, but it turned out to be an old ring surrounded by bone fragments."

Prominent sources at the Collegedale Police Department report, "The ring was badly damaged, but it was still easily identifiable as a Teamster's signet." Investigating authorities are reluctant to jump to conclusions regarding the identity of the body; however, an anonymous source echoes the general feeling of the investigation committee. "It's Hoffa. It has to be. Look at the parallels. Foul play, Teamsters, for land's sake, the bell tower was built in 1978 (the year of Hoffa's disappearance). Everything matches. There's no doubt in my mind that the Hoffa case is going to be reopened." Dental prints are now being analyzed at the Tennessee State Crime Lab to positively identify the remains, and, in a joint effort, a special forensic chemistry lab is being run by Dr. Mitchell Thiel, Southern College Chemistry professor. Thiel states, "This is a very exciting opportunity for my students. Not often do we get access to a true specimen. I'm very pleased with the happenings."

Shirley Deveraux, Chattanooga Times columnist, shares in the spreading excitement. Deveraux feels that this incident "is a direct fulfillment of Nostradamus' 1658 prophecy which states 'Central standing stone of old raises ye Western Prince from his forgotten army.' I've always felt that the bell tower was actually a missing central monolith from Stonehenge." She is uncertain of the consequences of these events; however, she advises Southern students to be aware of the situation. "Look out for the worst. Don't be afraid to run if you see the tower emanating a swirling vortex of blue planar energy. That could be potentially bad." She strongly urges us to "not let the prophecy go unheeded."

Remarkably, Ted Naiman, Southern College freshman, claims to have made the same prediction over three hundred years after Nostradamus' death. "I know something like that was going to happen someday. That bell thing is just psycho. It bongs every hour, time after time. I just stay away from it." Other students express the same fears. Jon Nash, senior physics major, is worried. "It's really eerie at night when it's foggy, especially when you're late for worship. I never go through the parking lot alone."

A maintenance worker, who prefers to remain unnamed, is worried also. "I don't know anything about this woo-woo kind of thing, but we haven't been pumping power to that baby for ages. I don't see how it can run without electricity—maybe it's solar or something. Every once in a while I recharge my car battery by parking next to it. I hadn't thought about it before, but it's kind of weird."

It certainly is. Perhaps the matter will seem less unusual as more facts are uncovered. Until then, the Southern Security force assures us that, "Campus protection will be as good as ever. Whatever happened, happened a long time ago. Southern students can sleep secure tonight."

Secret security surveillance systems existence revealed by Thatcher deans

By Sigmund Freud

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Apple College Information Network

In an impromptu press conference on the morning of March twenty-third, Thatcher deans revealed that a hidden surveillance system is already in limited use in the women's residence hall. After the furor among the assembled journalists died down, Dean Rose said, "We hope to go full scale with the system within a month. No more night check, no more sneaking around. A computer will monitor all the cameras and ensure everyone's in."

John Beckett, installation manager for Project Godiva, declared that "computer services will be writing an artificial intelligence program to protect the girls' best interest by making sure they are in on time and that no 'Peeping Tom's' are in there with them. In our minds, the sooner we get this system up, the sooner thievery and terputide will disappear."

The Accident spoke to a number of the Feminazis who seemed to express the underlying sentiments of the student body. "We've been planning some sort of demonstration for the past couple of weeks," said one activist. "This is only the most recent outrage of many committed against us."

"Shouldn't this be unconstitutional?" whined one particularly distraught student. "We're old enough to regulate our own lives. We don't need this invasion of our privacy!"

When Dean Engel was approached with these expressions of student sentiment she retorted, "They don't have to go to school here if they don't want to abide by our rules. We are only attempting to provide a secure environment for our residents." On hearing this, Dean Hobbs is reported to have snorted, "How do we know what all these pictures are being used for? I think is a blatant infringement of the girls' privacy."

Shortly after the disclosure of the existing surveillance system, the Accident was unexpectedly contacted by an SC psychology graduate who has requested that she remain anonymous. In an unprecedented show of loyalty to the Feminazi movement, our informant revealed that the data used in her senior seminar paper had not been collected from a student body survey, but had been compiled from Thatcher Hall surveillance records.

When confronted with these new facts, Floyd Greenleaf, surveillance committee spokesperson, refused to offer a direct comment but asserted that any monitoring of the residence halls is not a violation of student rights. Greenleaf pointed out that it had recently enabled them to avert a potentially scandalous situation involving a prominent movie star. Although Greenleaf refused to disclose the identity of the star, sources for The National Enquirer have placed Rob Lowe in the vicinity of Chattanooga at the time in question. When contacted at his California home, Mr. Lowe had no comment, but did send his warmest greetings to the residents of Thatcher 207.

Approaching the investigation of the surveillance system from another angle, the Accident contacted John Negely, a sophomore business major who works for the SC accounting office. After being guaranteed total anonymity he revealed several purchase orders signed by Larry Williams which would seem to indicate an involvement in the surveillance system installation and maintenance on the part of the psychology department.

Acting on this piece of planned information the Accident unofficially sent a representative to the psychology department. Finding the building locked, alleged physics ninja, Robert Marsa, surreptitiously entered Summercort Hall. A thorough rifling of Williams' office revealed an automated digital video imaging work station, a collection of video tapes and a filing cabinet filled with pertinent research data.

Further investigations by the Accident staff unearthed a moldering maintenance worker who admitted to installing the system for Williams during his first year at Southern. "I wasn't sure what they were, but they seemed harmless enough. Now that I think about it, those things did look like ray guns."

In an unsolicited statement to the press, Marcie Woolsey admitted reading several of Larry Williams' most recently published papers. "Frankly, I found them highly fascinating."

Upon hearing of the fiasco, President Sably said, "I think more faculty should be involved in active research. I really don't know what the fuss is about."

sidewalks, and I'll give you these!" Nobody's eyes wandered over and rested on Wohlers. It grinned. "I dare say, my good fellow," it said. "You seem to have brought me a bloody delicatessen!" And a tentacle knitted itself around Wohlers' tie.

Wohlers, though in a state of shock, recovered enough to ask, "What's going on here, Reggie?"

"Nothing," I said, backing away slowly.

"Well, nothing's against school policy. And who is this creature?"

Wohlers followed suit, but Nobody

Unusual precipitation troublesome to area residents

By Paul Bunyon

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Appole College Information Network

It has been raining again in Collegedale, but this time even the natives were upset. Though past studies proved there are at least 358 rainy days a year at Southern College, this was not everyday rain.

It was raining up—literally. For the past five days, Collegedale has been subjected to the oddest meteorological phenomenon this side of Apison. A steady shower has been pelting upwards out of the ground and vanishing somewhere above in a cloudless sky.

This has caused a number of unforeseen problems in the dormitories. It seems the original architects constructed waterproof ceilings, but neglected to seal the floors. Five feet of water has collected in the upper half of most rooms, and the deans are at a loss on how the drain it as the windows only open at the bottom. Inspecting the water damage, Edgar Allen Poe, consulting engineer, said only, "Don't worry, be happy!"

Clothing is another fundamental problem. Most students' apparel is designed to shed water falling from above, but even the most expensive trench coat is at a loss when the rain falls up.

"It is particularly annoying," said Ginger Bromme, "when you're wearing a skirt. Somebody needs to do something." Dean Engel quickly proclaimed a temporary ban on skirts and dresses and commissioned Dr. Ray "Doc" Heiferlin to solve the problem.

Heiferlin promptly developed "Umbrellotts" as he calls them, a pair of tiny inverted umbrellas to be strapped under one's boots. "It's not convenient for walking," he said, "but they sure look neat!"

You can purchase them in fluorescent fuchsia at Daniells Hall for just $19.95.

Meanwhile, Thursday evening, Craig Lassine and Woody White formed a committee to study the feasibility of researching the probability of discovering viable options towards a working solution to the inverted precipitation and closed themselves in a deserted room of the old Tab.

Friday morning, Douglas Morgan of the History department took matters in his own hands and formed a splunking group to ascertain just what was causing this unusual weather.

Willard Scott of Today Show fame stood by as the group crawled into the tunnel Ed Santana and Jim Herman had dug months earlier. When asked what they hoped to accomplish, Poe said, "Maybe they'll get buried alive. I always enjoy that bit."

Dean Engel, however, was more worried. "Jo-Anne Stevenson is still down there. And Morgan is single!" she said. "And look what happened with Peach."

Damp and shivering, everyone waited through Friday and Saturday. Suddenly, Sunday morning, the rain stopped as a grey mist shot out of the tunnel and vanished over the hill.

Moments later, Morgan and his group emerged. All America watched, glued to their televisions, as Willard Scott asked him what had happened.

"Apparently," Morgan said, "a small rain cloud was trapped when Wright Hall collapsed last Sunday. It got lost in the labyrinth of caves beneath Collegedale, lonesome and frightened. Terrified at the sight of a blonde Amazon racing through a cavern, it started to cry. Disoriented in the dark, it rained up—quite simple, actually."

The cloud followed Morgan's directions, and found its way out.

Dean Madis says, "It is only a matter of time till the dorms dry out and guys can use their banks again."

As of this writing, nothing has yet been heard of either Jo-Anne Stevenson or Lassine and White.

Of Mice and Men

By Rock Hudson

©Copyright 1990, USA TODAY/
Appole College Information Network

This week the Accent takes a serious look at another growing social phenomenon in the world. The problem of Mice and Men. Just what is that makes a man want to be a mouse?

"Well, it's not a question of wanting to be a mouse...it just sort of happens to you. All of a sudden you realize that's what you want to be," says an anonymous Southern College student recently interviewed by an anonymous Southern Accent reporter.

Anonymous Reporter: When did you first notice these tendencies?

Anonymous Student: Well...my Freshman year I went to this party with some friends at UTC, and, er...we drank a lot of Doctor Pepper...and then some of the guys, uh...started handing cheese around. So...just out of curiosity I tried a bit...and well that was that.

AR: What else did these friends of yours do?

AS: Well some of them kind of dressed up like mice a little and then...when they got the costumes on they started...you know...squeaking.
AR: What was your reaction to this?
AS: I was shocked at first. But...er...gradually I came to feel that I was more at ease in the company of other mice.

This is a typical example of the Mouse problem. A problem which is sweeping over our campus faster than Michael Gorbachev can overturn Lithuania.

According to Larry Williams, of the Psychology department, at least 8 percent of the population will always be mice in all of us," he said.

Williams is trying to create an atmosphere of sympathy for mice on campus. "How many of us can honestly say that at one time or another in our lives we haven't been attracted to mice. I know I have. Most normal adolescents go through a stage of squeaking once or twice a day but they grow out of that," he says

"On the other hand, teenagers are attracted to the Mouse scene by the very illegality of it. It's like murder-make a thing illegal and it acquires a mystique. Look at arson...How many of us can honestly say we haven't set fire to some large public building or hospital or something at one time or another in our lives. I know I have."

However, students are clearly hostile to mice. "I understand that they can't help themselves," says Mike Hernandez. "But there's nothing we can do about it either. So I say we should split their nostrils open."

"I'm a conservative," says Alex "William Jennings" Bryan. "I think that these mouse offenders clearly deserve the death penalty."

Darin Stewart said, "I'm an Accounting major and consequently too boring to have anything of interest to say."

The Collegedale police also take a dim view of mice. "We know that these things (Mouse parties) are going on in the area," said Elvis Presley, temporary deputy. "We have undercover people working the mouse scene. They've made several buys in the area recently...Brie, Camembert...even some of the harder stuff like Cheddar and Gouda. We're very close to a major bust."

Perhaps we need to know more about these men who would be mice before we judge them. Then again, perhaps we don't. Anyway this is the end of the article. The clock has just struck one and I can hear the farmer's wife coming around the corner. Squeak!

(Editors note: If you feel that you might be a mouse, a toll-free hotline, 1-800-4-SC-MICE, had been established to help you cope with your mousehood. Trained mice man the phones 24 hours a day.)

Southern Security Nabs Nobody Doing Nothing

by Giovanni Boccaccio

The past weeks of unmitigated horror ended with a rather odd occurrence late Sunday evening.

Administration stubbornly refused to let Accet staff write an article on the incident, insisting that nothing had happened, so here, in the words of Reggie Horton, SC security officer, are the bizarre details.

"It is all true," he claims, "except for the good bits, which are entirely fabricated.

Yesterday evening, as I followed my routine beat towards the cafeteria, nothing caught my eye. I stared at it, and sure enough, nothing was there. And it was spreading.

Even as I watched, Southern's scenery was vanishing—and in its place was nothing. After half a hillside, two sidewalks, and three junior accounting students were swallowed up, I decided to take action.

I turned my back, folded my arms, stomped my foot, and yelled, "Enough already!" That seemed to work, for when I glanced over my shoulder, nothing was happening, and fast. It stopped spreading and instead coalesced into nobody.

Now don't get me wrong. Nobody is not the cute, rounded, Casper-the-Friendly-Ghost figure you commonly see in Family Circus cartoons. Obviously, Bill Keane has never seen nobody. I have. Nobody is tall, purple, with fourteen tentacles, three mouths, and an eye or two all vying for a place on its bulbous forehead.

Nobody glared around for a moment, then shifted its gaze in my general direction. "I suppose," it said in a startling British accent, "you'll be complaining of indigestion shortly." And its tentacles writhed in a particularly dispirited manner. Hastily quelling the queasy feeling in the pit of my stomach, I assured it I was quite well, thank you. "Hum," it rejoined.

Another eye swelled round, showing aside three particularly purple arms, and blinked slowly.

"I dare say," it said, "you might bring out something proper to eat if one were a visitor, you know."

Usually, nothing scares me in the dark. But when nothing is standing there actually talking to you, it is rather disconcerting. I ran to the cafe, borrowed a double of each entree, and hurried back down.

Nobody was there. It glared at the offering, then took a huge heaping of Special K loaf. At the time, this seemed like an irrelevant detail.

I did worry, however, when nobody dropped the rest, turned a distressing shade of chartreuse, then screamed, "Asmpesfa Escdwkawsgeoy!" I fled with the leftovers back to the cafe and found Mr. Evans, the food service director.

"Nobody ate this," I told him, "and nobody turned yellow-green and greenish-yellow and I don't think nobody liked it."

"Nobody didn't like it?" asked Evans carefully.

"Right," I insisted. "I have other things to do," said Evans. "When nobody likes the food, let me know. Then we'll have something to worry about."

"Nobody finished the Special K loaf!" I called after him, but he had already vanished among the refrigerators.

ters.

Back outside, nobody was still hungry. Another sidewalk was missing, and two education majors with it. Then it hit me—nobody chose its food from the realm of the irrelevant. His choice of majors was clear proof.

It is terribly difficult to find something totally irrelevant when you really need to (almost impossible, by definition), but I tried. I hastily collected my orange airplane guidance flashlights, some mismatched socks, World Civ. II notes, and Dr. Wohlers, Vice-President of Student Affairs.

President Sahly discusses his vision for Southern in the 90s

By Amy Beckworth

Interested in Dr. Don Sahly's goals for Southern in the 1990s? In an interview on April 6, Sahly said the enrollment, quality of academic programs, science facilities, spirituality, and hiring more minority faculty are his five major goals.

What are your specific goals for the 90s?

Enrollment is the most important thing to a college. We want to keep the enrollment growing, but national demographics projects a decline in the number of students between now and 1995. This will affect our college. It is our hope that Southern will meet our growth projection. If our projections are not met, we hope to at least maintain the present level of students. This past year enrollment went up nearly 100.

The next goal we want to look at is the quality of the academic program. We want to maintain and improve the majors we presently offer. We, especially, want to upgrade our accounting program to a full masters level. We plan to do this next year. Southern has just introduced a marketing major in the business department. Our hope is that the current interest in marketing will continue to mature and grow into a solid major.

Another goal we must address during the 1990s is the quality of our science facilities. Our present laboratories and classrooms are the oldest parts of our campus. We are going to have to completely renovate Daniels and Hackman Halls or build a new science complex. Presently, we are giving study to total renovation of to a new building. I envision addressing this within the next two academic years.

As I look to the 1990s it is my goal to have a spiritual revival, not just on campus but in the church at large. The church growth here in North America is in a pathetic state especially when compared to the rest of the world.

The final goal I want to address is creating balance in the diverse population on this campus. Southern needs to attract more minority faculty so we can meet the needs of all the students. So far it has been a real challenge.

There has been talk about changing the name of our school. Is it true Southern College may change to Southern University?

That is a topic for discussion right now. The faculty has given that some thought, and at the present time there is no action to move in that direction. I do envison this topic coming up for further discussion.

What would be the benefits of changing the name?

The benefits of changing the name are strictly those that hit you from a public relations, marketing, fund-raising, and recreating potential.

Is your goal to keep Southern's tuition the lowest of all SDA colleges?

Yes, it is our goal to try to maintain the lowest cost in the denomination, with the exception of Oakwood. The General Conference subsidizes Oakwood. It is a real challenge to keep tuition low. We want to maintain our quality. If low cost becomes associated with low quality, we really will not have anything to market. We are still the least expensive.

Kenny Zill spent the year behind his camera, capturing you...

"We have good coverage of the students," said Ervin Brown, the assistant producer of Strawberry Festival. "If they got involved, we probably have at least one picture.

Kenny Zill, the producer of the show, chose "Pieces of Life" as the theme. The show will include contemporary music along with around 2,000 pictures of "life" at Southern.

To make the show complete, strawberries and ice cream will be served after the slide presentation.

Financial aid options revealed

By Gari Cruz

One of the most common problems Southern College students will face next year is, of course, how to pay for tuition.

Many students do not realize the number of options available to them. "There are many types of grants and loans students can receive," says Ken Norton, Director of Student Finance. Some of these include Restricted Scholarships, Pell Grants, State Grants, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, Stafford Loans, Perkins Loans, and Work-Study Programs.

Restricted Scholarships are given to students who maintain high academic achievement and/or meet the requirements of the individual scholarship.

For example, a Dora McClellan Brown Scholarship is for theology majors and a George Alden Nursing Scholarship is for nursing students from Florida. Many more restricted scholarships are listed in the Financial Aid section of the Southern College catalog.

Grants are obtained by students who can show they have a great financial need. Not just anyone can obtain a grant. The student must apply for federal aid (grants) and then submit a letter of request to the Loan and Scholarship Committee. The committee will then look at the student's grade point average, ACT scores, citizenship record, and work record to see if the student is really putting forth enough effort to be worthy of financial aid. The student must have a real need and must already be working before real consideration is given. "You demonstrate you're doing your part, and we'll work out a program," says Norton.

Loans are obtained by borrowing money from the federal government through the school or by borrowing from a bank. Most loans are guaranteed by state agencies. In a Parent-Plus Loan, parents may borrow up to $4,000 a year to a limit of $20,000. Beginning times for paying back the loans vary anywhere from 60 days to nine months after graduation or when the student drops below a half-time enrollment status.

Through the Work-Study Program, the government pays for most of the student's wages, and the rest is paid for by the employer. Information on who is eligible for the program is available at Wright Hall.

Pamphlets, applications, and more details about any of these programs are available at the Financial Aid office.

Do not be afraid of enemies; the worst they can do is kill you. Do not be afraid of friends; the worst they can do is betray you. Be afraid of the indifferent; they do not kill or betray. But only because of their silent agreement, betrayal and murder exist on earth.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I have attended Southern for three years. Within this short period of time, I've seen and experienced a lot of things that God might not approve of. God has given the leaders of this school opportunities to preach and speak his words. I'm speaking of leaders like teachers, administrators, and most importantly the pastoral staff. The spiritual leaders here have a great deal of responsibility to lead the young in the right way.

I can imagine that the deans are probably wondering why instead of trying to get to worship, the students are trying to get out of worship. When we do go to worship, we have no reverence. It's as though we are anywhere but the House of the Lord. Friday night veepers is like going to Marcey's Massage Parlor. Girls and guys can't keep their hands off their companions. "Preach the Word."

I feel as though the pastoral staff doesn't fully realize the responsibility that lies before it. The pastors need to come to some of the students' rooms and listen to some of their Satanic music. They should also witness their Satanic symbols that hang in their rooms. We must remember that Satan has control of much of the world, and here, on Southern College campus he's doing every thing in his will to lead us astray, eventually causing us to be lost in total darkness. "Preach the Word."

Many students and faculty members agree with me when I say this style of preaching for worship services just doesn't fly. The pastoral staff here would be surprised at how many students would love to hear the Word of God preached. "Preach to Word."

"Once upon a time," how many times have we heard this phrase during worship? This is the phrase used for fiction story books. This is the line we read to our children at bedtime in order to put them to sleep. And this is just what's happening when someone begins a sermon with a phrase like this. We come to church to wake up spiritually, not to go to sleep. "Preach the Word."

I must tell students at S.C. not to do as I did. I ran around like a chicken with his head cut off. I ran from church to church looking for some pastor to save my soul; however, instead I found pastors who are afraid to hurt someone's feelings. They sugar coat God's words. They don't "Preach the Word," with authority. We must realize that pastors and Church leaders can cause us to be lost rather than saved. We must remember that God uses ministers as tools to reach his people through the Bible, the Spirit of Prophecy, prayer, and most of all the Holy Spirit. Pastors don't have the right to preach the way they want to. "Preach the Word."

Reggie Horton

Dear Editor,

In conversations with students at S.C. as well as in articles and editorials appearing in the Accent, I frequently note the use of the word "arbitrary" in referring to the rules and regulations at S.C. I have also noted that if one tries to discuss the rules and regulations with faculty and administrators in terms of moral principles, many will quickly discourage such an approach and freely admit that many of the rules and regulations we endure are in fact arbitrary. The reason, I believe, for discontinuance at the mention of principle is that if we try to understand just one rule or regulation in terms of principle someone might ask why not evaluate all rules and regulations in such manner. No one in authority here at S.C. wants to do that because they very well know, though it may be heatedly denied, that Biblical and Spirit of Prophecy principles play a very small role in determining today's S.C. rules and regulations.

Many self-supporting schools claim to carefully follow Spirit of Prophecy counsel and thus make life dull and monotonous in everything from diet to dress to recreation. Conference and union schools tend to believe that if they are going to recruit and hold energetic, up-beat and vibrantly alive young people they must minimize Ellen White's counsel on lifestyle in particular. In the view of this writer, both positions err badly.

Several faculty members have told me that organizations and institutions have a right to make whatever rules they wish even if the rules are arbitrary. This may be true for worldly institutions, but I do not believe it is true for institutions claiming God as the head. Procedural rules and regulations established for the sake of convenience may be arbitrary. But where there is a moral issue involved the rules must be arbitrary. This is the staff of which tyrannies and despotisms are founded. It reminds one of nation-states in which constitutions are frequently suspended, the press censored, and basic human rights routinely violated. When everything is arbitrary there is no safety at all except when God mandates special intervention. God does not govern this way. I do not believe He wants His earthly institutions governed this way.

I want those reading this to know that I appreciate the candor and honesty of the faculty and administration of S.C. I am only one Seventh-Day Adventist. However, my perspective on much of what is being done at S.C. and especially the way it is being done is clearly different from that of the administration and much of the faculty. I am as concerned as anyone to have the college project a positive and favorable image to the constituency and the non-Adventist world. However, I am not so concerned with image that I want to distort in my own thinking, and that of others, the character and government of God, and end up treating my brothers and sisters in the Church in ways that Christ never treated anyone.

Screaming high school seniors invade Southern during annual College Days

By Gina McIntyre

Collegedate—"The Splash is up to YOU" was the theme of the 1990-91 College Days. On April 8-9, 553 students from the Southern Union and other areas across the United States and Canada came to tour the campus.

The schedule of events included an orientation after the Seniors from the various academies were escorted in by police cars with sirens blaring.

The students were entertained on the first day by the music departments production, The King and I, and at 8:00 by the Gym-Master Home Show.

Macki Rucker, from Madison Academy said, "I enjoyed taking the Bible test. It's also good to see old friends. Today I saw a friend that I hadn't seen since eighth grade!" He also added, "I've found the program [College Days] doesn't give enough instruction." One Senior from Atlanta Adventist Academy stated that in order to get much out of College Days, one had to be self-motivated. Most responses to the general program were positive, however.

Ron Barrow, Vice President of Admissions said, "We had fewer students than anticipated, but we had a good group. Everything went very well. We had a good time."

He also stated that more applications came in as a result of the two-day event than last year even though there weren't as many students participating.

Music department presents "The King and I"

By Melissa Farrow

"The King and I", a musical play, was presented by the Southern College music department. It was staged at the Colledgeade Academy auditorium on April 8, 9, 10 and 12.

The play is based on historical facts about the King of Siam in the 1860s and an English tutor, Anna. Anna taught the royal children and wives elements of Western culture: conventions of society, dignity of the human being, and the immorality of slavery. The King and his son, the future King, were greatly influenced, and they eventually changed the diastical customs of their society.

The cast of "The King and I" at rehearsal

"The play went well. We had a good cast," said Marvin Robertson, producer and vocal director. "The turnout was what I expected, but it can always be better. But, we did well."

"The King and I" had a 62 member cast and a 21 piece orchestra. The role of the King was played by Larry Blackwell. Kathy Stewart played Anna.

Engineering and Technology club formed to encourage and assist students in those fields

By Lisa Rosaasen

Brian Hartman, sophomore engineering major, has formed an Engineering and Technology club to assist, encourage, and involve engineering/technology majors. "As a freshman, I found that the engineering/technology majors did not have a support group to offer them beneficial activities," said Hartman.

The club's first activity was a tour of the campus telephone and computer facilities on March 27. Four engineering majors attended along with Mr. John Durichek, chairman of the technology department.

Their second meeting was a departmental chapel on April 5. Bill Belles, interstate architect and president of Kirkman and Belles Architects in Cleveland, was the guest speaker.

He addressed the importance of the relationship between engineers and architects. In his discussion, Belles stressed that engineering majors shouldn't let the difficult math courses discourage them from pursuing the field of engineering. He said the engineering work field is different from the required engineering education.

Twenty-five students, mostly engineering majors, attended the meeting. Belles is doing architectural work for Southern College, designing a proposed science complex and redesigning Danell's Hall.

A third tentative activity, that Hartman has planned for this year, is a field trip to a local compact disc plant.

Although this school year is almost over, the club chose officers to finish the year. Hartman was elected as acting president. Bill Pentress, a sophomore engineering major is acting secretary-treasurer, and Mr. Durichek is acting sponsor.

Hartman said officers for next year could have been chosen this year, but since the engineering major spends only two years at Southern, he wanted to give the freshmen an opportunity to be officers as well.

Although Hartman and Pentress will be transferring to Walla Walla college next year to complete their degrees, he wants to see the club continue. Mr. Durichek said he will encourage the club to continue, but he wants to have a strong student leader that will take care of most of the planning.

Some of the activities Hartman would like to see offered next year are a field trip to a Lockheed airplane plant, a field trip to a TVA electrical plant and control center in Chickamauga, and an egg-drove contest.

Hartman's goals for the remainder of this year and for the club in the future are to provide a support group, to provide special diversions and learning experiences, to provide a practical organization that will balance the theoretical math and physics clubs, and to provide field trips that will give engineering students a view of the prospective work environment as well as local contacts. He also plans to write very long sentences.

Changes in store for faculty

By Shawna Dye

The 1990-91 school year will bring some new faces to the Southern College teaching staff and take away some of the present staff.

In an effort to not have as many contract teachers next year, several departments will be taking on full-time teachers.

The biology department will be taking on Dr. David Ekens from Keokuk College, and also Bill Hayes who is presently completing a doctorate at the University of Wyoming. The department will be losing Marcie Woolsey who will be getting married.

Pam Alfeld will be joining the nursing department along with one more, yet undecided, teacher.

Behavioral science will be losing Larry Williams, who will be studying for his doctorate at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville.

Terrie Ruff will be taking William's place. She attended Southern College several years ago, but graduated from the University of South Carolina with a masters in social work.

Robert Moore will also be teaching at Southern next year in the math department, but his is not a completely new face. He taught at Southern four years ago and is now returning with his Ph.D. in mathematics.

Stepanske to lecture in the "land down under"

By Shawna Dye

Jeanette Stepanske, Professor of Education, will be doing some unusual lecturing this summer. She'll be doing it "down under".

On June 4 she will leave Colledgeade for Stanton, Virginia where she will chair the Small School's Language Arts Committee for three weeks.

On June 24 she, along with Elaine Piersons, Associate Superintendent of Education for the Georgia-Cumberland Conference, will be flying from Washington D.C. to Auckland, New Zealand.

They will then be going on to Sidney, Australia where they will be met and hosted by Dr. L.D. Devine, the Educational Superintendent for the South Pacific Division.

From Sidney, they will go on the Howgate, Australia where Stepanske will give a one week seminar/workshop for principals and teachers from the South Pacific Division. The subject will be "management of small schools".

The two will then go on to Melbourne, Carnes, and on July 12th they will fly out of Australia to Honolulu, Hawaii, and then home on the 19th of July.

Stepanske comments on her trip. "One of the things I hope to get out of this trip is to visit schools in other countries and compare their educational programs with American education."

EARTH TIPS

Automobiles

Use high-quality, multigrade oil for better fuel efficiency.

- Avoid options that cut fuel economy; a light-colored car with tinted glass reduces the need for air conditioning.
- Tune engine every 5,000 to 10,000 miles to keep engine running cleanly.
- Radial tires require 4 percent less fuel to use.
- Moderately paced driving boosts gas mileage; accelerate and brake slowly.

Earth Day

EARTH TIPS

Water

Install low-flush toilet or put a water filled bottle in the tank to displace water.

- Install a water-saving shower head.
- Water lawns early in the morning when evaporation is limited.
- Forget baths (30 gallons); take five-minute showers (15 gallons).
- Repair leaks quickly; a moderate drip wastes two gallons per hour.

EARTH TIPS

Electricity

Avoid setting refrigerator's too low. The proper temperature is 38 degrees Fahrenheit;

- for freezers, 5 degrees.
- Buy energy-efficient appliances. They cost more to buy but less to run.
- Use a clock-driven thermostat for self-adjusting heating.
- Use fluorescent lighting instead of incandescent bulbs.
- Run dishwasher only with full loads and use energy-saver cycle.

EARTH TIPS

Chemical substitutes

Instead of ammonia cleaners, use water with vinegar or baking soda.

- For furniture polish, use 1 part lemon juice, 2 parts olive or vegetable oil.
- For disinfectant, use half cup of borax in gallon of water.
- To clean rugs and upholstery, sprinkle cornstarch, then vacuum.
- Instead of mothballs, use cedar chips, newspapers or lavender.
- For roach killer, mix baking soda and powdered sugar. To stop ants, spread chili powder.

EARTH TIPS

Recyclables

Ask for paper grocery bags instead of plastic; don't bag small items.

- Buy eggs, milk and cereals in cardboard cartons.
- Separate newspapers, glass, plastics and aluminum for recycling; urge local officials, friends, and relatives to recycle.
- Take used motor oil to a reclamation center.
- Buy and urge local governments to buy recycled products.

Thatcher residents opposed to surveillance camera plans

By Tammie D. Mentzel

"It's an invasion of our privacy," said Delbee Dent, sophomore in Thatcher Hall where controversy over placement of surveillance cameras in hallways is causing turmoil.

The cameras were a suggestion from Dean Lydia Rose after seeing a similar security system at Pacific Union College. The proposal was added to the department "wish list" and submitted to McKee Baking Co. who donated funds necessary to purchase the cameras, said Rose.

"It's not a matter of spying on anyone or watching them walk down the hall in their t-shirts," said Rose. "We only want what is best for the girls."

Residents of Thatcher have mixed opinions about the cameras being placed in their dorm. Sophomore, Karen Crismond, says she feels it wouldn't be so much an invasion of privacy if the cameras were placed only at entrance ways. "It's a good security device, but I feel funny about having a camera in the hall of my home." Some, like sophomore Lisa Rossasen, feel that there are other areas on campus that need attention. "The walk from Brock Hall to the girl's dorm on the lower promenade is dimly lit and definitely deserves privacy," said Rossasen.

Others simply feel that there is no need before, why now? "Our doors are always locked. I don't see the purpose," said sophomore, Amber Murphy.

Tamara Michelenko, junior, says she can't see the need because she can't see the problem.

According to Dean Rose there are problems. There has been vandalism on several occasions by academy age boys who enter the dorm through the side door used by the janitors. Rose says the cameras would eliminate this problem and others such as unauthorized males in the dorm and stealing from laundry rooms.

The cameras are being installed this summer, said Rose, but a completion date is unknown.

Christian literature conference held here

By Gari Cruse

The Southeastern Regional Meeting of the Conference on Christianity and Literature took place at Southern College April 5-7.

Seventy people representing thirty colleges and universities and fifteen states took part in the conference, which examines what relationships exist between Christianity and literature.

The conference involved a keynote address, the reading of papers on Christianity and literature, responses to those papers, an organ demonstration by Judy Glass, a performance by the Destiny Drama Company, and a dinner at President Don Saby's home.

According to Dr. Dave Smith, who served as the program chair, the participants expressed how beautiful the campus was and how friendly the Southern College students were to them. "The conference went very well, and everyone enjoyed it. There were good, quality papers read and some fine Christian fellowship," said Smith.

The keynote address speaker was Professor Leland Ryken from Wheaton College in Illinois. Ryken received his Ph.D. from the University of Oregon in 1968, focusing on the literature of the English Renaissance.

The paper voted most outstanding was John Zubizarreta's "T.S. Eliot and the Gospel of St. John." He is from Columbia college, and his was the last paper to be read at the conference.

There were some students participating from the area including students from Lees College, Bryan College, and Covenant College.

The conference, which meets once a year, will take place at Georgetown University in 1991.

Environmental Crisis or Earth Day Hokum?

Turn on your television. Listen to your radio. Read most newspapers and magazines. They tell the same story in escalating intensity: Our nation and the entire world face an army of environmental disasters that can be combated only with massive increases in government controls, even world government controls.

While there is no shortage of environmental "crisis" information, little attention has been paid to well-reasoned opposing views. Yet, many competent scientific authorities and political analysts maintain that most of these doomsday predictions are unsubstantiated hokum.

Which side is correct? • Who should be believed?

What follows is a series of opposing opinions on environmental questions. One set of views seeks to persuade the public that there is little choice but to give up personal and even national freedoms. The other urges rejection of a radical agenda leading to totalitarian controls in the name of preserving the environment.

Please study these competing views. Obtain the supporting literature offered below and,

The John Birch Society maintains that environmental concerns have been grossly exaggerated in a deliberate campaign to gain support for radically altering the American people's way of life. No one denies that there are legitimate environmental concerns. But we must not allow our nation to be steamrolled into a loss of sovereignty and an end of personal freedom in the name of fighting pollution or protecting the environment. Unproved theories should be tempered with provable facts, the test of logic should be scrupulously applied, and the hidden agenda of the environmental lobby should be exposed and rejected.

For a packet of facts and analysis to help counter the threat posed by environmental hysteria, send $5.00 to the address given below. You will receive a wide assortment of published materials dealing with the issues addressed in this advertisement. With solid facts instead of unsubstantiated theories, you will more effectively influence your elected and appointed officials.

Environmental club forms on campus

By Amy Beckwith

SAVE. Students. Aware of our Valuable Environment, is a new environmental club organized this semester.

The impetus for forming the club was a class project. Larry William's Contemporary Social Problems class decided to tackle environmental problems. Their first step was to form a club which would raise student awareness of environmental issues.

Some tentative goals of the club are: reducing the use of styrofoam cups, plates, etc.; organization of a continuous recycling campaign on campus for paper, aluminum, glass and other recyclable products, reducing the waste involved with junk mail and announcements in mailboxes, raising awareness of environmental issues in the church as a whole, and challenging other schools and institutions to take similar steps.

Robert Pittman, one of the founding members of SAVE, says, "As Christians we have a responsibility for the stewardship of the earth. We should set examples for the community to follow."

Earthday 90

By Amy Beckwith

Sunday, April 22, the 29th anniversary of Earth Day will be celebrated all over the nation.

President Bush said that Earth Day is an opportunity for us to evaluate how we are doing with the environment and to make a commitment to impact the future.

Here in Chattanooga—parks, organizations, and people will take an active part in Earth Day. Southern will too.

This Thursday, Ron Littlefield, commissioner of Public Works for Chattanooga, will come and speak about the environment for chapel. "I have worked with environmental matters all my life, but around here I'm probably best known for my involvement with the Summit Landfill," said Littlefield. His chapel talk will focus on the different generations working together for the better of the environment. "I hope America can find a way to merge the environmental interests of all generations," said Littlefield.

Also on this Thursday, the new environmental club, SAVE (Students. Aware of our Valuable Environment), will have a membership drive and petitions for students to sign in the cafeteria after Assembly.

On Sunday, SAVE will help with a booth at the Tennessee River Park. Admission to the park is one paper bag full of recyclable clear glass, aluminum, or paper. In place of recyclable products a $1.00 donation will be accepted. The park will have demonstrations, games, exhibit, concerts, special programs, field trips, concessions, and adult and children's activities.

COLLEGIATE ADVENTISTS REACHING EVERYONE

Angels watching over us daily

By Andy Nash

As typical Adventist children, my younger sister, Angela, and I were once avid listeners to the "Your Story Hour" tape collection—with Aunt Sue and Uncle Dan.

The story that peaked our interest more than any other was one entitled, "Strangers in the Night." In it, two children left alone in their home are visited by a "mean man" and later, a "nice man" (as we called them). The nice man, exhibiting tremendous strength, protected the children from the robber. Later that evening, he went to lie down in the guest room and somehow disappeared without leaving any tracks in the snow. "...For some people have entrusted angels without knowing it," Aunt Sue explained. This always fascinated us!

Angelic intercession is not a new concept. Angels are mentioned first in Genesis 3:27, when God placed them at the gates of the Garden of Eden to keep sin out and to guard the Tree of Life. In fact, the Bible speaks of angels over three hundred times. Ellen White adds that angels were responsible for guiding the animals into the ark and for watching over the infant Moses in the bullrushes. H.M.S. Richards says, "The scriptures tell us more about angels than about baptism, the Lord's Supper, the Sabbath, ...the resurrection of the dead, and the Second Advent!" With all this biblical publicity, angels must be a force in our world today as well.

However, with numerous books written on the occult, the Devil, and demons, people are frequently drawn away from the study of the Lord and His messengers, states Billy Graham. This sometimes is where misconceptions of angels begin. Over the years, I've heard angels described as passive spirits that make music with their harps as they float through the clouds. This just isn't accurate!

When invited into our lives, angels protect, befriend, and enlighten us through the saving power of Jesus Christ. And they love doing it!

"Through the ministry of angels, heaven is in touch with the daily life of all God's earthly children," says Richards. And J.R. Williams tells us,

"That angels are present with us for protection and deliverance is a beautiful truth of the Bible. . . . Most sources convey the fact that these celestial beings are here to help. However, before the angels of Heaven can use their incredible influence in our lives, they have to be welcomed. When we pray and ask for God's assistance, it gives Him justification in helping us. Often this is done through His angels.

And what powers they have! Ellen White tells us that when Jesus was being mocked and beaten before His crucifixion, the angels of Heaven were watching in horror. They wanted to intercede, but were not allowed. "The weakest angel could have caused that mocking throng to fall powerless, and could have delivered Jesus."

The angels of the Lord are anxious to help us as well, but they wait on His word before taking part in our lives. When that word comes, the angels excitedly rush to "encamp around" those who serve Him (Psalms 34:7).

While angels have the power to guide and protect us from the evil demons of Satan, we have something that the angels can only marvel over—redemption. At one point in the novel Flirting with the Darkness, by Frank E. Peretti, the angels of God are in a park with a young girl named Sally Roe who is about to accept Jesus Christ into her life. The kneeling angels encircle Sally, their heads bowed, their swords lying in the grass like "spokes of a wondrous wheel." Tall, the lead angel, can only say, "Redemption. It never ceases to thrill me!"

I believe that, in the unseen world, angelic celebrations such as this take place when a person comes to Christ. Ellen White notes that "Every true confession glorifies Him, and causes the angels to break forth into singing." And, according to Graham, "Angels set all the bells of Heaven in motion with their rejoicing [over the saved] before the Lamb of God." The angels of Heaven have no idea what salvation is like, but they want us to experience it.

For some reason, the angels of God love us. Ellen White informs us that when Jesus told the angels of His plan to come to Earth to save the sinners, the angels were shocked and greatly saddened by the announcement. "The angels prostrated themselves at the feet of their Commander, and offered to become a sacrifice for man." However, the angels couldn't take the place of Christ.

The angels of Heaven have known each of us all our lives, but we have yet to meet them. What a day it will be when "we behold our previously unseen protectors and guides in the sky

Destiny Drama Company presents Eyewitness

By Tamaru R. Michalenko

"I miss you too," were the final words from the play entitled EYEWITNESS, presented by the Destiny Drama Company, Friday evening, April 6, 1990, at the Collegedale Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The evening's performance was dedicated to Dawn Patton, a former Destiny member, (1986-87) who died of Lupus. "The memory of Dawn Patton is an inspiration to not only Destiny Drama Company performers but to all of us who aspire to be overcomers in Christ," stated Shannon Born, a current member of Destiny who knew Dawn and described her as an overcomer.

EYEWITNESS was co-written by George Turner (Destiny member from 1984-86) and David Denton (6-year Destiny veteran). Their work was commissioned to commemorate the troupe's tenth anniversary season. EYEWITNESS was a stirring portrayal of a modern Christ and the significant effect He had on His contemporaries. Powerfully presenting the personality of Jesus Christ in a 20th-century setting, EYEWITNESS explored the relationships of 1990's men and women to a living Messiah.

From the birth of Christ to His death, all events were portrayed before the eyes of a captivated audience wondering what would be happening next to this modern day Messiah.

Among the audience were approximately 70 individuals who registered for the Southeastern Regional Meeting of the Conference on Christianity and Literature, which began Thursday evening and continued through Saturday afternoon. The individuals represented 30 colleges and universities and 14 states. David Smith, Chairman of the English Department at Southern College, stated that for most of the individuals this was their first time on an Adventist campus and the presentation by Destiny was a "good introduction of Adventist views on religion." Smith also stated that several individuals expressed enjoyment regarding the play, enjoyed the beauty of the campus, the food, and the young people, especially the Destiny members.

A few students from Southern College responded to Destiny's performance by saying:

"David Denton and company did an excellent job in writing the script. It made me think about how Jesus suffered and died for me," stated freshman nursing major, Carol Shaw. "Also how we treat others and how we want to be treated as human beings. The Destiny Drama Club really did an excellent job on action and performance," Carol continued. "My parents were here, and they told me after the program how impressed they were with the whole thing."

"I thought it was very good," commented Brenda Caldwell, freshman elementary education major.

"It was funny, but serious as it showed how Jesus would have been treated if he were on Earth today. Very creative work!"

"I thought that it was an excellent description of what it would be like if Christ came today," stated freshman auto body repair major, Russell Havenman. "I also thought that it was the best acting I have ever seen."

congregations all across the world. I would like to believe that the angels of God are especially proud to be standing at our sides when these beautiful words are spoken.

"You idiots!... We'll never get that thing down the hole!"

"Listen out there! We're George and Harriet Miller! We just dropped in on the pigs for coffee! We're coming out!... We don't want trouble!"

For the health of it

By Darlene Almeda, R.N.

Q: During the Health Expo 90 held in the Student Center, I found out my cholesterol was a little higher than it should be. What suggestions do you have for me?

A: First of all you need to look at your diet. Saturated fats must be reduced. These are found in all animal products starting with meat itself, eggs, whole milk products, yogurt, and cheese. Also tropical oils such as coconut and palm oils are saturated—these are common ingredients in most cookies, crackers, and cereals. Try to increase your intake of soluble fiber such as oat bran, psyllium, and beans to reduce your cholesterol level up to 15%.

Next consider exercise. Cardiovascular exercise, including walking, will help increase your HDL (High Density Lipoprotein) also known as the "good" cholesterol. HDL helps carry back to the liver excess LDL (Low Density Lipoprotein) and keeps it from attaching to the walls of the arteries which will eventually narrow due to the excess plaque and debris.

According to B. Rifkind, a cholesterol researcher at one of the National Institutes of Health, a cholesterol level of 200 is a feasible goal for most Americans, but if you really want to decrease your risks [of heart disease], you'd have to bring down your level well below 140.

New Kids on the Block describes trials and tribulations of young immigrants

By A. Lee Bennett Jr.

New Kids on the Block, by Janet Bode, is not about the new rock group. "...but I don't think you'll be disappointed with this one," said Peg Bennett, McKee Library Director.

"Bode has interviewed 11 young adult immigrants, ages 13-20, and compiled their oral histories into a powerful and intriguing look at modern immigration. The young people describe their often dangerous journeys from their native lands and the hardship and confusion they face in their new country. All struggle with prejudice and conflicts in culture." This "outstanding" book's reference number is HQ 796.B594.

Described as "delightful and upbeat," Barbara Corcoran's The Potato Kid is "easy, relaxing, heart-warming reading. The main character is like most normal teenagers—loving, jealous, hardworking, lazy, kind, selfish, conscientious, and sorry for herself all at different items in the book. Young people will relate well to her disappointment in the sudden change in summer plans—and all because of someone she doesn't even like. Information on the plight of the small farmer is smoothly integrated into the story.

The reference number for The Potato Kid is PZ 7.C814 Po.

Gym-Masters perform annual home show

By Gina McIntyre

On Saturday night and Sunday evening, April 7 and 8, the Southern College Gym-Masters performed for their home crowd and the students attending College Days. The gym was overflowing.

The Home Show has a traditional theme. "We open with a tribute to American and end with a tribute to our Lord," said Tod Evans, coach in his 6th year at Southern. "We are proud to be Americans, and we want to give recognition to the American spirit. We also feel fortunate to have the right to be Christians."

The team of 35 members has traveled as far away as California (PUC). They have pulled a special drug awareness program into their routine for area high schools. According to Evans, each team captain is in charge of a skit relating to drug abuse. These routines are mixed into the general program.

The College Days favorites were "Batman" and the "World Wrestling Federation" acts. Davy Joe Swinyar admits that his favorite part about being the "Super Colossal Hulkster" is "slamming Christ." "I like all the groupies that follow me around afterwards," he said.

Tim Cross, member of the 1990 team, said of the College Days performance, "I felt really good about both performances. The team as a whole wasn't as psyched [as they were last evening] because parents and friends were there."

Gym-Masters

According to Evans it gets harder and harder every year to make the program unique. When he started his first year it was easy to put on a good show. "It's difficult to improve now and still be safe," he said. The Home Show is over, but next year's plans are already in motion.

"Cookie Byrd" swim meet splashed through PE center

By Gina McIntyre

The swimming club hosted a swim meet on Sunday, April 15, at the college pool. Stan Dobias, Angi Dobias, and Ruth Gifford coordinated the event.

The "Cookie Byrd" swim meet started in 1988, awarding scholarships to winners of the mile, quarter mile, 100 yard breast stroke, 100 yard free-style, and 100 yard backstroke.

According to Gifford, "Due to lack of financial backing we're not offering trophies this year. We didn't have a swim meet last year. We would like to make this annual event."

Paul Darden, a resident of Apison, won the men's quarter mile 100 yard backstroke and the mile. He beat B. Craig's 1988 record of 24:06 with his 22:22 time.

Gifford tied her 1988 record of 6:34 in the quarter mile, coming from behind to beat Stephanie Servoss, who finished at 6:35.

Rick Hayes won the 100 yard breast stroke, 100 yard free-style and came in after Darden to capture second place in the 100 yard backstroke.

Southern College Invitation Golf Tournament planned for summer

By Melissa Farrow

The first annual Southern College Invitational Golf Tournament will be held June 25 at the Lookout Mountain Golf and Country Club.

The tournament is another fund-raising event of the Century II Endowment Fund which is expected to reach its $1 million goal in 1992.

"We expect to profit between $18,000 and $20,000 from this event," said Verle Thompson, chairman of the tournament committee. "We have had widespread recognition and hope to fill all 120 spaces."

The tournament is targeted to downtown businesses but is open to college personnel and alumni, or anyone willing to pay the $125 entrance fee.

Trophies will be given to the first seven place teams, and anyone getting a hole-in-one on designated par 3's will win a new car.

Major sponsors include McKee Baking Co., McNeilus Trucking, Ed Wright City Dodge and John Hicks Auto Park.

For more information call 238-2832.

1st Annual CABL weightlifting competition

By Reggie Horton

On Sunday, April 15th some men and a few ladies tested their strength in three hard core events, bench press, squats, and dead weight lifts.

In the women's events there were two contestants, Kristy Pae and Heather Theus. Heather won by benching 80lbs. total in the three lifts.

In the men's lightweight competition first place went to Harvey Hillyar. He lifted a total of 875lbs. in three events.

First place middle weight went to Ed Schneider, who lifted a total of 785lbs. in the three events. Calvin Simmons won first place in the heavy weight competition. He lifted a total of 910lbs. in the three events.

ScanTron tips that may improve your final exam scores

By Lisa Roisenen

With test week approaching, most students are looking for ways to get the best possible grades on tests. Surprisingly, one of the simplest solutions and one of the most effective tools costs only twenty-two cents.

Many final tests, particularly those given to large classes, require students to mark their answers on special sheets which are read by a machine. This machine is blind to normal visible light, responding only to infrared light. In order for a mark to be read, it has to have the right amount of carbon in it.

The proper instrument for this is a #2 pencil. Mr. John Beckett, director of Computer Services emphasized that automatic "clicker" pencils should not be used because their marks do not erase as well. "Pens should not be used because some of them will actually make marks that are completely invisible to the machine," said Beckett.

Computer Services had its own printer manufacture test forms for use with their ScanTron machine. Recently, a ScanTron salesperson on campus claimed that forms oriented by any other company were unlikely to produce acceptable error rates.

So Computer Services tested its homemade ScanTron forms against the forms made and sold by ScanTron. They processed 25 of each kind of sheet, with all 200 possible answers filled in. Both sets were graded 10 times before erasures were made, and 10 times after.

A total of 50,000 marks were made, and all but eight were read correctly, provided there were no erasures. That is an error rate of less than 2/10ths of one percent.

The sheets were then modified by changing four answers per sheet and re-grading. On the changed answers, ScanTron had an error rate of 2.5% and the home-made sheet had an error rate of 5%.

Mr. Beckett's advice to students was to use only a good old wooden pencil to upgrade your grades. His suggestion to the administration was that although the present answer sheet scored acceptably, given the moderate increase in cost, computer services should go back to ScanTron forms when the current stock is used.

Disaster relief team to be organized at Southern

By Lisa Rosaasen

Earlier this year, the General Conference passed a policy that would develop a national student disaster relief team with local divisions at participating academies and colleges across the U.S.

Dr. Larry Williams, a teacher in the Psychology department along with Dan Kozell, a teacher in the Business department hopes to implement a division of this program at Southern College.

Williams said the Bible and the Spirit of Prophecy says there will be more and more disasters. "We should take this opportunity to help others," he says.

College and academy students as well as faculty will be involved in disaster relief locally, regionally, and possibly nationally and internationally. Even when there is no disaster, students can help local emergency and rescue teams.

Students will be trained to provide trauma and shock counseling, grief support, food and clothing distribution, referral services, damaged building demolition, building repair, and clean-up. The Red Cross and local community services organizations will assist with the training.

To be involved students must be willing to learn specific skills and have a strong sense of motivation. "They can't look for the sensationalism, but must want to be of service," says Williams.

An organizational meeting is scheduled for 5:30 Monday, April 23 in the back of the cafeteria. Plans for Southern's team will be discussed and people who have an interest can sign up. Williams expects to contact those people over the summer and organize some of the leaders and begin the program in the fall.

Williams will be meeting with a local committee in May and General Conference officials in August to establish further plans and objectives.
