

1905

Everyday Etiquette (Part 2)

Marion Harland

Virginia Van De Water

Follow this and additional works at: <https://openworks.wooster.edu/motherhomeheaven>

Recommended Citation

Harland, Marion and Van De Water, Virginia, "Everyday Etiquette (Part 2)" (1905). Mother Home & Heaven. 104.
<https://openworks.wooster.edu/motherhomeheaven/104>

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the Special Collections at Open Works, a service of The College of Wooster Libraries. It has been accepted for inclusion in Mother Home & Heaven by an authorized administrator of Open Works. For more information, please contact openworks@wooster.edu.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

occur, the considerate person will leave. But this must be permitted only under protest. To invite a friend to one's house, and then seem to find her presence unwelcome is only a degree less cruel than confining a bird in a cage, where he can not forage for himself, and slowly starving him. If one has not the hospitable instinct developed strongly enough to feel the right sentiment, let him feign it, or refuse to attempt to entertain friends. The person under one's roof should be, for the time, a sacred object, and the host who does not feel this is altogether lacking in the finer instincts that accompany good breeding.

We know one home in which hospitality is dispensed in a way no guest ever forgets. From the time the visitor enters the doors of this House Beautiful she is, as it were, enwrapped in an atmosphere of loving consideration impossible to describe. One guest, visiting there with her children, was horrified at their being taken suddenly ill with grippe,—so ill that to travel with them just then was dangerous. She was hundreds of miles away from home with the possibility of the children's being confined to the house for some days to come. The physician summoned confirmed her fears. The distressed mother knew only too well what an inconvenience illness is,—especially in a friend's house instead of in one's own home.

THE VISITED

All the members of the household united in making the disconcerted woman feel that this home was the one and only place in which the little ones should have been seized with the prevailing epidemic; that it was a pleasure to have them there under any circumstances; that to wait on them and their mother was a privilege. The sweet-voiced, sweet-faced hostess, herself an invalid at this time, drew the anxious visitor down on the bed beside her and kissed her as she said:

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

“Dear child! try to believe that you and yours are as welcome here as in your own dear mother’s home.”

Surely of such is the Kingdom of Heaven!

XIII

HOSPITALITY AS A DUTY

If ours were a perfect state of society, constructed on the Golden Rule, animated and guided throughout by unselfish love for friend and neighbor, and charity for the needy, there would be no propriety in writing this chapter. Home, domestic comfort and happiness being our best earthly possessions, we would be eagerly willing to share them with others.

As society is constructed under a state of artificial civilization, and as our homes are kept and our households are run, the element of duty must interfere, or hospitality would become a lost art. Even where the spirit of this—one of the most venerable of virtues—is not wanting, conscience is called in to regulate the manner and the seasons in which it should be exercised.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

As a corner-stone, assume, once for all, that a binding obligation rests on you to visit, and to receive visits, and to entertain friends, acquaintances and strangers in a style consistent with your means, at such times as may be consistent with more serious engagements.

It may sound harsh to assert that you have no right to accept hospitality for which you can never make any return in kind. The principle is, nevertheless, sound to the core.

Those who read the newspapers forty years ago will recall a characteristic incident in the early life of Colonel Ellsworth, the brilliant young lawyer who was one of the first notable victims of the Civil War. His struggles to gain a foothold in his profession were attended by many hardships and humiliating privations.

HOSPITALITY AS A DUTY

Once, finding the man he was looking for on a matter of business, in a restaurant, he was invited to partake of the luncheon to which his acquaintance was just sitting down. Ellsworth was ravenously hungry, almost starving, in fact, but he declined courteously but firmly, asking permission to talk over the business that had brought him thither, while the other went on with the meal.

The brave young fellow, in telling the story in after years, confessed that he suffered positive agony at the sight and smell of the tempting food.

"I could not, in honor, accept hospitality I could not reciprocate," was his simple explanation of his refusal. "I might starve, I could not sponge!"

Sponging—to put it plainly—is pauperism. The one who eats of your bread and salt becomes, in his own eyes—not in yours—your debtor. For the very genius of hospitality is to give, not expecting to receive again. (This by the way!)

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I do not mean if your wealthy acquaintance invites you to a fifteen-course dinner, the cost of which equals your monthly income, that you are in honor or duty bound to bid her to an entertainment as elaborate, or that you suffer in her estimation, or by the loss of your self-respect. But by the acceptance of the invitation you bind yourself to reciprocation of some sort. If you can do nothing more, ask your hostess to afternoon tea in your own house or flat, and have a few congenial spirits to meet her there. It is the spirit in such a case that makes alive and keeps alive the genial glow of good-will and cordial friendliness. The letter of commercial obligation, like for like, in degree, and not in kind, would kill true hospitality.

Your friend's friend, introduced by him and calling on you, has a proved claim on your social offices. If you can not make a special entertainment for him, ask him to a family dinner, explaining that it is such, and make up in kindly welcome for the lack of lordly cheer. If it be a woman, invite her to luncheon with you and a friend or two, or to a drive, winding up with afternoon tea in some of the quietly elegant tea-rooms that seem to have been devised for the express use of people of generous impulses and slender purses. It is not the cost in coin of the realm that tells with the stranger, but the temper in which the tribute is offered.

HOSPITALITY AS A DUTY

“I do not ‘entertain’ in the sense in which the word is generally used,” wrote a distinguished woman to me once, hearing that I was to be in her neighborhood. “But I can not let you pass me by. Come on Thursday, and lunch with me, en tête-à-tête.”

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I accepted gladly, and the memory of that meal, elegant in simplicity, shared with one whom my soul delights to honor, is as an apple of gold set in a picture of silver.

The stranger, as such, has a Scriptural claim on you, when circumstances make him your neighbor. In thousands of homes since the day when Abraham ran from his tent-door to constrain the thirsting and hungering travelers to accept such rest and refreshment as he could offer them during the heat of the day, angels have been entertained unawares in the guise of strangerhood.

"Did you know the B——'s before they came to our town?" asked an inquisitive New Englander of one of her near neighbors.

"No."

"Then—you won't mind my asking you?—why did you invite them to dinner on Thanksgiving Day? It's made a deal of talk."

HOSPITALITY AS A DUTY

Abraham's disciple smiled.

"Because they were strangers, and seemed to be lonely. They are respectable and they live on my street."

Poetical justice requires me to add that the B——'s, who became the lifelong friends of their first hostess in the strange land, proved to be people of distinction whom the best citizens of the exclusive little town soon vied with one another in "cultivating." In ignorance of their antecedents the imitator of the tent-holder of Mamre did her duty from the purest of motives.

Not one individual or one family has a moral or a social right to neglect the practice of hospitality. Unless one is confined to the house or bed by illness, one should visit and invite visits in return.

We are human beings, not hermit crabs.

XIV

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

The observance of mourning is a difficult matter to treat, for individual feeling enters largely into the question. Still, there are certain rules accepted by those who would not be made remarkable by their scorn of conventionalities.

The matter of mourning-cards and stationery has been treated in the chapter on "Calls and Cards," and on "Letter-Writing." A word may here be added with regard to the letter of condolence. This should be written to the bereaved person as soon as practicable after the death for which she mourns. It must not be long, but should express in a few sincere words the sympathy felt, and the wish to do something to help alleviate the mourner's distress. This letter does not demand an answer, but some persons try, some weeks after such letters have been received, to reply to them. This is not really necessary, except when the writer is a near friend of the family. In many cases, a black-edged card bearing the words, "Thanks for your kind sympathy," is mailed to the writer.

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

If one does not write a letter, one may send to or leave at the house of mourning a card, bearing the words, "Sincere sympathy" upon it.

It is now customary to accompany the funeral notice in the daily papers with the sentence, "Kindly omit flowers." This is especially customary when the deceased is a well-known or popular person. To send flowers after the appearance of such a notice is the height of rudeness and shows little respect to the dead and none for the family. There are many funerals at which flowers are a burden,—there is such a profusion of them. Not only is it necessary to have a special coach to transport the huge floral emblems to the cemetery, but there they soon fade, leaving the wire forms to rust and become an eyesore until the caretaker of the section removes them. It is far better, if one does send flowers, to let them be bunches of loose blossoms, which may be strewn over the grave, and which, in fading, will not leave a hideous skeleton of stained wire to torture the sight of the first visitors to the newly-made grave. If there are more of these blossoms than can be taken to the cemetery, those left may be sent to the inmates of hospitals, who need not know that they were intended for a funeral. If the request “no flowers” is made publicly, let outsiders leave to the members of the family of the deceased the melancholy privilege of supplying the few choice flowers that accompany their dear one to his last resting-place. It is surely their privilege.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

In attending a funeral, one should be very prompt, and yet not so far ahead of the hour set as to arrive before the final arrangements are completed. At a church or house funeral, one should wait to be seated as the undertaker or his assistant directs. Nor should one ever linger after the services to speak to any members of the family, unless one is particularly requested to do so.

In churches of two denominations it is not customary to have the coffin opened to the public gaze. It is a pity that this law is not universal, but it is becoming more common to have the casket left closed through the entire service. It certainly spares the mourners the agonizing period during which the long line of friends, and strangers who come from vulgar curiosity, file past and look on the unshielded features of the dead. Some one has said that the custom of allowing the curious who did not know the deceased, and who cared nothing for him, to gaze on his face after death, seems to be taking an unfair advantage of the dead.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Many persons prefer a quiet house funeral for one they love, for there are few persons vulgar or bold enough to force themselves into the house of mourning, where only those who knew and loved the departed are supposed to be welcome.

At a house funeral the clergyman stands at the head of the coffin while he reads the service, the audience standing or sitting as the custom of the special service used demands.

At a church funeral, the clergyman meets the coffin at the door and precedes it up the aisle, reading the burial service. As he begins to read, the congregation risers and stands as the procession moves forward. When, after the services, the coffin is lifted by the bearers, the congregation again arises and remains standing until the casket has been taken from the church. A private interment, or one at the convenience of the family, is now almost universal. Unless invited, no outsider, even if he be a friend of the family, will go to the cemetery under such circumstances.

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

After the funeral, and when one's friends have become accustomed to their sorrow, is the time when grief is the hardest to bear. It is then that the sympathetic person may do much toward brightening the long and dreary days in the house of mourning. Flowers left at the door occasionally, frequent calls, an occasional cheering note, a bright book lent, are a few of the small courtesies that amount to actual benefactions. Only those who have had to learn to live with a grief that is almost forgotten by others know what such tokens of thoughtful sympathy mean.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The heaviest mourning demanded by conventionality is worn by a widow, but even she is now allowed to dispense with the heavy crape veil. In its place is the long veil of nun's veiling, which is worn over the face only at the funeral. With it is a face-veil, trimmed with crape, and a white ruche or "widow's cap" stitched inside of the brim of the small bonnet. The dress is of Henrietta cloth, or other lusterless material, and may be trimmed with crape. Black suède gloves and black-bordered handkerchiefs,—if these are liked,—are proper. The widow seldom discards her veil under two years,—some widows wear it always. After the first year it is shortened.

It is a matter for congratulation that cape, that most expensive, unwholesome, perishable and inartistic of materials, is worn less and less with each passing year. Surely to have to wrap oneself in its stiff and malodorous folds adds discomfort to grief. It is now seldom worn except by widows, although a daughter may wear it for a parent, a mother for her child.

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

The matter of the mourning-veil is one each person must settle for herself, although the strictest followers of fashion deprecate its use for any women except widows. Some bereaved daughters and mothers wear it, but not for a long period, seldom longer than six months.

Mourning for the members of one's immediate family may be worn for a year, then lightened. Mourning for a relative-in-law is lightened at the end of three or six months.

While on this subject it would be well to call attention to the fact that one should either wear conventional black, or no black at all. For a widow to wear, as a well-known woman did recently, a long veil and gray suède gloves, borders on the ridiculous. Nor should velvet, cut jet, satin and lace be donned by those wearing the insignia of grief. Nor are black-and-white combined deep mourning. They may be worn when the weeds are lightened, but not when one is wearing the strictly conventional garb of dolor. Even widows may wear all white, but not with black ribbons, unless the heavy black has been laid aside for what may be called the "second stage" of bereavement. At first, all materials either in black or white, must be of dull finish. Dresses may be of nun's veiling, Henrietta cloth, and other unshining wool fabrics, or of dull, lusterless silks. Simple white muslins, lawns and mulls are proper, but must not be trimmed with laces or embroidered.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

For men, black or gray suits, black gloves and ties, and a black band upon the hat, are proper. The tie should be of tafeta or grosgrain silk, not of satin or figured silk. I would lay especial stress on the poor taste of the recent fad of wearing a black band upon the sleeve of a tan coat. If a man is too little grieved, or too poor to buy a black or gray coat, or to have the tan coat dyed black, let him wear it, and dispense with the reminder that he is an object for condolences. The same rule applies to the would-be smart young woman who sports a narrow black strip upon the left arm of her tan rain-coat or walking-jacket. If she can not wear conventional and suitable mourning, she would better wear none.

The matter of the period of time in which a mourner should shun society is a subject on which one may hesitate to express an opinion, as there are too many persons whose views would not coincide with ours. In this case, as in others, one must, to a certain extent, be a rule unto oneself. One who is very sad shrinks naturally from going into gay society for the first few months after bereavement. The contrast of the gaiety with the mourner's feelings must, of necessity, cause her pain. To such an one we need suggest no rules. To those less sensitive or less unhappy, it would be well to say that deep black and festive occasions do not form a good combination. While one wears crape and a long veil one should shun receptions, opera boxes, teas, and all such places. Later, as one lightens one's mourning, one may attend the theater, small functions, and informal affairs. Even the very sad may go to the theater when they would shrink from attending an affair at which they would meet strangers and where they would be obliged to laugh and be gay.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

THE HOUSE OF MOURNING

After the first few months of conventional retirement are past the sufferer must decide for herself what she may and may not do. We would add, rather as a suggestion than as a law of etiquette, that the onlooker forbear to judge of the behavior of the recently-bereaved. The heart knoweth its own bitterness, and if that bitterness can be sweetened by some genial outside influence, let others hesitate to condemn the owner of the heart from seeking that sweetness. Those whom we have lost, if they were worth loving, would be glad to know that our lives were not all dark.

XV

AT TABLE

Rules for setting the table change from year to year, so it is not possible to give many directions for laying the board. Fine table-cloth and napkins of pure white are always en règle, and the greatest care must be bestowed upon the proper laundering of these. At the right of each place stand the water glass and the wine glasses, if these last are used. To the right of the plate is the knife, to the left, the fork. The folded napkin is laid on the right-hand side of the knife. The soup and dessert spoons may be placed at the right of the knives, or horizontally across the table at the upper side of the plate. At breakfast and luncheon the bread-and-butter plate, holding a small knife, stands at the end of the forks on the upper left hand side of the place.

AT TABLE

The matter with which we have especially to do just now is the manners of the eater. The table may be simply or elaborately laid, as circumstances and taste dictate. It goes without saying that every housekeeper will have her board as attractive in appearance as possible, and that she will never omit the bowl or vase of flowers from the center of it. If her purse will not allow this decoration in mid-winter she may substitute a potted plant or a vase containing a few sprays of English ivy, or Wandering Jew.

The men never sit down until the women are seated. Each man draws out for her the chair of the woman who sits next him. Even in the quiet home-life this practice should be observed, and husband or sons must always draw from the table the chair in which the wife or mother is to sit, and remain standing until she is seated. As soon as all are at the table the napkin is unfolded and placed across the knees. It need not be opened wide, unless it is a small breakfast or luncheon serviette. When the hostess begins to eat, the others follow her example. All food must be eaten slowly, and, above all, noiselessly. Many a fastidious person has had her enjoyment of her soup spoiled by the audible sipping of it by her vis-à-vis or her next neighbor. The soup should be lifted from the plate by an outward sweep of the spoon, and taken quietly from the side, not the tip, of the spoon. It is bad form to break bread or crackers into the soup, and the plate containing the liquid should never be tipped in order to obtain every drop of the contents.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Fish is not to be touched with the knife. There is reason for this. The cutting of some delicate sea-food with a steel knife affects the flavor of it, and renders it less delicate. The flesh is so tender that it may be cut with a silver fork, and this is the only implement permitted in its manipulation. The same rule applies to salads, which are never, by the followers of conventionality, touched with the knife. Lettuce is, before serving, broken into bits of a convenient size to be carried to the mouth. If this is not done, the eater should cut it with the side of the fork, or fold each bit over into a convenient size for eating.

AT TABLE

It should not be necessary to remind people in this day of decent behavior that the knife must only be used for the purpose of cutting the food. When it has fulfilled this duty, being wielded by the right hand, the food being held in place by the fork in the left, the fork is then taken in the right hand, and the knife laid, with the edge turned outward, across the back of the plate. It is generally supposed that all classes know the use of the knife, yet in a fashionable restaurant there recently sat a handsomely-attired woman carrying French pease to her mouth with the blade of her knife!

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

It is an atrocity to pile several kinds of food upon the fork, mold them into a small mound with the knife, and then "dump" the load into wide-open jaws. Each kind of viand should be lifted, a small bit at a time, upon the fork. Mastication should be absolutely noiseless, and the process conducted with the lips closed.

Bread, even when hot, may be broken off, a small piece at a time, buttered upon the plate, then eaten. All hot bread should be torn open or broken with the fingers, never cut into bits. To butter a slice of bread by laying it upon the table or, more disgusting still, upon the palm of the hand, is a relic of barbarism.

AT TABLE

A mouthful must never be so large as to make it impossible for the eater to speak if a question be addressed to him while he is disposing of it. Nor can too great stress be laid upon the duty of slow eating and thorough mastication of all kinds of food. Not only does it add to the grace of the table-manners, but it prevents indigestion.

Never touch the food on the plate with the fingers, to push it upon the fork. If anything must be used for this purpose, let it be a bit of bread, but, if possible, dispense altogether with assistance of any kind. The fork should be equal to getting up all that is absolutely essential, and comfort does not depend upon securing every particle of meat or vegetables with which the plate is supplied.

Every year the spoon has fewer uses, and the fork has more. Now, when it is possible, desserts are taken with the fork where a spoon used to be employed. Pie, cake, ice-cream and firm puddings, with all kinds of fruit, are eaten with the fork. Of course the spoon is still essential for semi-solids, such as custards, creams, and jellies.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

There are a few things which one is allowed to eat with the fingers, besides breads of all varieties. Such are Saratoga chips, olives and small bird-bones,—these last to be taken daintily in the finger-tips. It is no longer considered good form to eat asparagus with the fingers, although some very well-bred persons still do it. It is certainly an ugly sight to witness one's opposite neighbor eating asparagus in this manner. It is possibly not so unattractive as to see him eat corn from the cob. But no better way of disposing of this last vegetable has as yet been invented.

At breakfast, one may drink coffee with sugar and cream, but when black, or after-dinner coffee is served in a small cup, which is known as a demi-tasse, cream should be omitted. To ask for this when it is not on the table is the height of rudeness. One should learn to drink his after-dinner coffee without cream. Sugar is, of course, permissible. There is sense in this dictate of fashion, as in many of the other rules laid down by this dictatorial dame. The coffee taken at the end of a hearty meal is intended to act as a "settler" to the repast and to aid the work of digestion. This it does much more easily when clear than when "qualified" with milk or cream.

AT TABLE

After the salad course at a dinner, and before the dessert is brought in, the waitress removes the crumbs from the table, using a tray and folded napkin for this purpose. When she does this it is bad form for the guest to lay in the tray any bits of bread that may be left at his place or to assist the waitress by moving his glass, salt-cellar, or any other article that may be left on the table. A good waitress should remove salt-cellars, pepper-cruets, and such articles, before crumbing the table, leaving only the glasses at each place. It is her business to do all this so quietly and deftly that the guests are scarcely conscious of it. To further this end, let the whole affair be attended to by the waitress, and do not seem to notice any lapses on her part.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

At the end of the meal the finger-bowls are used. The ends of the fingers are dipped in the water, and the lips touched with these; then mouth and hands are wiped upon the napkin which is left, unfolded, at the side of the plate, if one is taking only one meal in the house. If a longer stay is expected, he may watch his hosts to see what they do with their napkins, and follow their example in disposing of his.

AT TABLE

Dinner over, the hostess makes the movement to rise, and she, with the other ladies, proceeds to the parlor. There they are joined later by the gentlemen. At an informal or family dinner, the men and women may leave the table together, the men standing aside to let the women pass out first, and in the drawing-room cigars may be lighted by the men after they have asked permission of the women to smoke.

All the above rules with regard to the company dinner apply to the family dinner as well. One can not be too careful in observing the laws of table etiquette in the family circle if one would be at ease in company.

One warning I would give to the hostess or home-maker: Do not apologize unless necessary! If a dish is a signal failure, say with an apologetic smile that you regret that such a thing was spoiled in the baking, or that you fear the meat is very rare, and, unless the matter can be remedied, let it go at that. You but embarrass your guests and put them to the disagreeable necessity of reassuring you, if you dwell upon the matter. And if a guest drop a cup, or upset a glass, or have any other accident, he should apologize in a few sincere words, and then say no more about the matter. If he choose to do so, he may, after dinner, speak in an aside to his host, and express his regret at his carelessness.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The host should never insist that one be served a second time to any dish after it has been positively declined. To do this is rude and no less disagreeable to the object of the attention because it is kindly meant. At a formal dinner one is not served a second time to any dish, but at an informal dinner, what are called "second helps," are quite permissible and convey a subtle compliment to the hostess. When a plate is sent back to the carver for a fresh supply of meat, the knife and fork should be laid side by side upon it, not held in the hand, as some persons insist. And when one has finished eating, the knife and fork are laid in the same manner upon the plate.

AT TABLE

The napkin must never be tucked into the neck of gown or shirt, nor must it be fastened to the belt or the waistcoat-button. After one leaves the nursery one should be able to eat without a bib.

XVI

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

“As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he,” declares the Book of books. And as a man is in his home, so will he be abroad, when the “company manner” rubs off.

One frequently becomes involved in some quite unexpected circumstance that scratches off the beautiful surface-coloring, if it be only as deep as the hue on the stained wood.

The manner that one puts on when one goes into a friend's house, or dons when one is “in company,” is what may be called “adjustable courtesy.” If it is not made of the best material it seldom fits well.

Not long ago a friend drove with us by the house of a man whose society manners, when first seen, call forth admiration.

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

Upon this particular spring afternoon, he sat upon the veranda of his home. As we approached, and he met our glance, he sprang to his feet, bowed low, and remained standing until we had passed.

“What a pretty attention to pay to two women!” we exclaimed.

Our friend gave a significant shrug, and called our notice to the fact that the man's wife had, before we came by, driven up to the end of the veranda, and that she was, unaided, climbing from a high trap in which she and her two little girls had been driving, while her husband lolled at ease in a steamer chair. It took the presence of a woman who did not belong to him to bring him to his feet. Looking back, after we had passed, we noted that he had again resumed his lounging attitude, and that his wife was lifting the second child from the carriage.

Such is adjustable courtesy! It is not an everyday garment, and is, consequently, only worn to impress strangers.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

No one can afford to do the injustice to his better self of allowing himself to become careless toward those with whom he lives, or to neglect the small sweet courtesies that should be found in the home, if anywhere. It is the home etiquette that makes the public etiquette what it should be. This reminder can not be repeated too often.

In many houses the men forget to show the respect due to the wife, mother and sisters. Parents should train their sons to stand when a woman enters the room, and to remain standing until she sits down. The considerate husband rises and offers his wife the easy-chair in which he is seated. She, knowing that he is weary after a hard day at the office, will not take the chair, but she will appreciate the little attention, and love him the better for it.

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

In the same way it is always the place of a man to stand aside and let a woman pass out or into a room before himself. Going down a flight of stairs, the man goes first, so that in case the woman trips, he may catch her. In ascending the steps, she precedes him.

In the talk on table etiquette, we have touched on many points, but not on certain things that seem too petty to be mentioned, as it is not supposed that persons of polite breeding need to be reminded of them. It is only when one looks in on the home-life of some so-called "nice" people that one feels that perhaps after all to call attention to these points would not be superfluous.

One of these is the use of the toothpick. To wield this in company is barbarous; to produce it at table is disgusting. The idea of having a glass full of toothpicks upon the family board is as disagreeably suggestive, and more disgusting, than would be the presence of a bowl of water, flanked on one side by a cake of soap, on the other by a wash-cloth. Cleansing of all parts of the body should take place in the privacy of one's own apartment or in the bath-room.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Tipping back the chair at table or in company is bad form. One small child was broken of this habit when she lost her balance while swaying backward from the table on the two hind-legs of her chair, and gave her head a furious bump on the floor. Sobbing, she was lifted to her feet, and met the stern gaze of her father.

"I am very glad," he said, "to see that you are badly enough hurt to be reminded never to tip your chair again. It is rude! If some grown persons I know had received a similar lesson in childhood, they might not offend the taste of others as they now do."

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

Taking butter from one's butter-plate with the tip of a fork that has been already in one's mouth is another disagreeable trick. The like may be said of the same way of helping oneself to salt. If a small butter-knife and salt-spoon are not provided, the tip of the knife may be used in their stead.

Bolting food and pushing back one's chair without the preliminary and apologetic "Excuse me!" is the custom of some otherwise estimable householders. It would be better to eat less, if one's time be limited, and eat slowly, as food thus taken in a rush is of small use in the internal economy. A few mouthfuls, well masticated, will possibly do more good, and certainly produce less discomfort, than three times as much swallowed in indigestible chunks. And after the short repast has been partaken of, let the master of the house set the example of common decency by uttering the conventional "Excuse me!"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

One hopes that it would be a difficult matter to find anybody so far oblivious of ordinary good manners as to clean his nails in the dining-room, but, let us blush to say it! one does meet many men who clean and pare their nails in the presence of family and intimate friends. Perhaps it is due to the fact that a woman does not carry a pocket-knife that she is seldom seen doing this. Her manicure instruments are kept upon her dressing-table, and it is in her own room that she performs this very necessary part of her toilet. Not so her liege lord. After washing his hands up-stairs, he descends, open knife in hand, and, sitting down in drawing-room or library, surrounded by his family, proceeds to perform scavenger-work upon his nails. He will sometimes file them also, oblivious of the fact that the sound of the file produces a like rasping effect on the nerves of some beholders. If a contingency arises that makes it necessary for a man to clean his nails in public, or in the presence of his family, let him have the grace to murmur an apology and turn his back during the operation.

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

Another rudeness that a man will perpetrate in his own home, from which he would shrink in the home of another person, is that of wearing his hat in the presence of women. Every mother should train the small boy of the house to remove his hat as soon as he enters the front (or back) door. To do this will then become second nature, and it would not be probable that he could ever be guilty of the rudeness of standing in hall or parlor and talking to mother, sister or other feminine relative with his hat on his head. One mother at least positively refuses to hear what her little son has to say if he addresses her with his head covered. One may regret that with older men other women have not the like courage of their convictions. A man's hat is so easily removed we wonder just why he should leave it on in the house, even if he is going out again in a moment. The man whose courtesy is not of the adjustable type will not do this, and these remarks are absolutely superfluous as far as he is concerned.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Nor will it be necessary to remind him to pick up the handkerchief, thimble, scissors or book that the woman in his presence lets fall,—even if she be his wife. To assist the feminine portion of humanity comes natural to the thoroughbred.

And just here I would say a word to the young person of the so-called weaker sex. It is to remind her that she, as well as her brother, owes the duty of respect to her elders. She is too prone to think that the boys of the family should rise for the older people, should remain standing until parents are seated, and should always be ready to run errands, or to deny themselves for their seniors. The duty to do all these things is incumbent on the girl or woman in the presence of those who are her elders or superiors. The girl or young matron who reclines in an easy-chair, while her grandparent, mother, father, or woman-guest stands, is as guilty of rudeness as her brother would be were he to do the same.

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

It is not on the men alone that the etiquette of the home depends. Indeed it is the place of the mother to see that little lapses in good breeding are not overlooked. And she is the one who should, by her unselfishness, her gentle courtesy, and unfailing politeness in even the smallest items, show forth the spirit of true kindness, on which all good manners are founded.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

One thing that makes for peace and etiquette in the home is the recognition of the rights of others. For this reason one member of the family should never inquire into another's correspondence, into his engagements, social or otherwise, or ask questions even of his nearest and dearest. The fact that a man is one of a family, every member of which is dear to him, does not mean that he has no individuality, or that he must share the secrets of his friendships or business matters with any one. He should always feel in the home that any confidences he may care to give are most welcome, but that such confidences are never demanded or expected.

In recognizing these rights of others, one must remember that each person's own room is sacred to himself. It is inexcusably rude for one member of a family to enter the room of any other member without first knocking at the door and receiving permission to "come in." Each human being should feel that he has one locality that belongs to him where he can be alone unless he decrees otherwise. To further this end the wife should knock at her husband's door before she enters his room, and the husband should show her the same consideration, while brothers and sisters should always give the warning tap, which is virtually a request for permission to enter, before opening the door that the occupant of the room has closed behind him or her.

ETIQUETTE IN THE HOME

XVII

IN PUBLIC

The subject of this chapter is so large that we almost despair of doing more than touch on a few of the many points it should cover.

Perhaps it would be well to give first a few rules for that most public of places,—the street.

The question as to the etiquette of raising the hat is one that demands attention,—and yet the rules are simple.

A man always uncovers his head completely when he returns a woman's bow. He does the same when he meets a man he knows walking with a woman, whether she be known to him or not. When a man is walking or driving with a woman and she bows to a man or woman she meets, her escort lifts his hat. On parting with a woman he bares his head. If he stand and talk with her, he should hold his hat in his hand unless she asks him to cover his head, or unless the day be cold,—in which case he says, “Will you pardon me if I put on my hat?” Then, when he leaves her, he again uncovers.

IN PUBLIC

As a safe rule in whist is, “When in doubt, lead trumps,” so a safe rule for a man in public would be, “When in doubt, take off your hat.”

When a man meets a woman on the street, and wishes to talk with her for a moment, he should, if time allow, turn and walk a little way with her, rather than stop and thus hinder her. If he have a business engagement that makes this impossible, he should apologize for not doing so, in a few words, as—“Pardon me for not walking with you instead of stopping you, but my train leaves in fifteen minutes," or, "I have an appointment in ten minutes."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

On a cold day, when a man stands talking with a woman with his head uncovered, she should say, "Pray put on your hat! I am afraid you will catch cold." He should accede to her request, saying "Thank you!" as he does so.

It is a woman's place to bow first, when she meets a man. Unless they are old friends, the man does not lift his hat until he has received this sign of recognition from a woman.

When men meet each other on the street they may recognize each other as they please,—by a nod, a wave of the hand, or by touching the hat. For a man to touch his hat to a woman is an insult, unless he be a servant—as a coachman receiving an order from his mistress—when he acknowledges the order by touching the brim of his hat with his hand. Did more men appreciate that they were giving the "coachman's salute" to a woman, mortification rather than courtesy might prevent a repetition of the offense.

IN PUBLIC

When a man is a woman's escort and they board a street-car, she should, without comment, allow him to pay her fare. When they get on the same car by chance, she should make the move to pay her fare, but if the man hands the money to the conductor before she does so, she should simply bow and say "Thank you!" To dispute about who shall pay car-fare is bad form.

A man helps a woman on the car, putting her on ahead of himself. In getting off, he goes out first, and then helps her out.

When all seats are taken in a car and a woman enters, a gentleman will rise and give her his seat, lifting his hat as he does so, which courtesy she should always acknowledge by saying "Thank you!" cordially and audibly.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

If the car be full and a woman enters carrying a baby in her arms, any girl or young matron present should resign her seat to the burdened passenger, unless some masculine passenger has manliness enough to do so. To the credit of human nature be it said that we have never seen a mother with a child in her arms stand for two minutes, no matter how crowded the car might be.

Of course a young woman should resign her seat to an elderly woman, as she will do the same for a very old or infirm man.

The custom of a man and a woman walking arm-in-arm at night is rapidly falling into disuse. For couples to walk in this way in the daylight has not been customary for years, unless the woman be so aged or invalided as to need the support of her escort's arm. Now, even after dark, there is hardly any need of a man's arm for a woman's guidance in the brilliantly-lighted streets. If the couple be walking through a poorly-illuminated street, or on a country road, or climbing a steep hill, the man offers the woman his arm. He should also do this at night when he holds an umbrella over her head. Even in the daylight when they cross a crowded thoroughfare together he should lightly support her elbow with his hand to pilot her over. He should never, unless they be members of the same family, take her arm in order to guide her.

IN PUBLIC

In public a man must never attract a woman's attention by clutching her arm, or—odious action!—by patting her on the shoulder or back. If there is such a noise about them that the mere speaking her name in a low voice will not reach her ears, he may respectfully touch her on the arm saying at the same time, "Excuse me, please!" Personal liberties are always in poor taste, but never more vulgar than in a place where they are noted by all observers.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

If a man escort a woman home, she may utter a brief "Thank you!" to him on parting with him. Profuse expressions of gratitude on such an occasion are bad form. On parting from him after he has taken her to the theater, opera, or any other entertainment, she may, when she bids him good night, say cordially, "I am indebted to you for a very pleasant evening," and, if she wish, she may add, "We shall be glad to have you call at any time."

A man must never linger at a woman's door to utter his good-bys, or to speak a few final sentences. Doorstep chats may do for nurse-maids and their attendants. They are out of place in higher circles. A man rings the bell for the woman he is accompanying, and, if it be too late for him to enter the house for a few minutes, removes his hat, says good night, and takes his leave.

IN PUBLIC

So much fun has been made of the custom that some women have of kissing each other in public places on meeting and parting, it is surprising that even gushing girls still adhere to the ridiculous fashion. If people must embrace, let it be in the sanctity of the home, or where there are no amused observers. If a kiss has no meaning, then let Fashion do away with it; if it means tender affection, it is too sacred a token to be exchanged where dozens of people may look on and comment on it. It is hardly too sweeping an assertion to make when one says that among mere acquaintances, kisses are best omitted altogether. Do let us have some method of salutation for those we really love that is not given as frequently and freely to every chance acquaintance or casual friend! One woman declares that beyond her relatives there is no grown person she willingly kisses, except two women whom she has known for years, and she respects them too much to embrace them in the presence of an unsympathetic world. A warm hand-clasp will suffice until the people who love each other can be alone.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Of course there are exceptions to this rule, as to many others. When a man puts his family upon the train or boat which is to carry them from him, he will uncover his head, and kiss each one of the beloved group. Many other such exceptions will suggest themselves. Common sense and good taste should keep one from making a mistake in these matters.

It is in wretched form for a man to speak of a woman by her first name when talking to casual acquaintances. It is as bad form, or nearly as bad, for a woman to speak of a man by his last name, as "Brown" or "Smith." It takes very little longer to say "Miss Mary" or "Mr. Brown," and the impression produced is worth the extra exertion. Nor, unless they be members of the same family, does a man address a girl by her first name in a crowd of outsiders. In her home, she may be "Mary" to him. In public, let him address her as "Miss Smith."

IN PUBLIC

One of the most annoying of habits indulged in in public is that of being late at the theater. It is trying to have to lose whole lines of a play while one rises, gathering up bonnet and wraps to do so, to allow the belated person to pass who sits beyond one. It is a pity that theater-goers do not take more pains to show each other the kindness of being in their places before the curtain rises.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

In entering a theater, the man stands aside to allow the woman to go into the door ahead of him, then steps forward to show his tickets to the usher, at the same time taking two programs from the table, or from the boy holding them. The coupons are handed back to the man, and kept by him, in case any mistake should arise with regard to the seats. Then the woman follows the usher down the aisle, followed by her escort. It is well for both men and women to remove their coats and wraps, either in the vestibule of the theater or before going into their seats. After sitting down, the woman takes off her hat and holds it in her lap throughout the performance.

The same rules hold good with regard to a musicale or a concert, except that at these entertainments a woman does not remove her head-covering.

I wish there were any chance that anything anybody might say could impress on American women that their habit of talking or, worse still, whispering, during a musical performance is abominably rude! Let those who have suffered by this almost universal practice testify to the misery it causes. To have one's favorite passage from a beloved composer marred by "Now this is where he dies, you know," or "Just hear the thunder in that orchestra, and now just listen to the chirping of the dear little birds!" or,—“I don't think I can lunch with you to-morrow, dear, but perhaps the next day,” “Do you think those long coats are becoming to short women?—who that has undergone the agony of being in the vicinity of such a talker can fail to utter a fervent “Amen” to the frenzied petition that they be suppressed?

IN PUBLIC

XVIII

ETIQUETTE OF HOTEL AND BOARDING- HOUSE LIFE

There is no better place than a hotel in which to study the manners, or lack of manners, of the world at large. It is here that selfishness is rampant, and unselfishness hides its diminished head.

Before we discuss the ethics of hotel life it will be well to give a few general directions as to what one does from the time he enters the door of the building which will, for a long or short time, be his place of abode. He proceeds at once to the office, makes known his desires with regard to a room or rooms, and writes his name in the register handed to him by the clerk. He is then assigned to his room, and a porter directs him thither, carrying hand luggage. To this porter he hands his trunk-check, and the trunk is soon brought to his room.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

Upon the inside of the door in every hotel-room is tacked a set of rules of the house, and these are in themselves sufficient to instruct our uninitiated traveler in what is expected of him. He here learns that the hotel is not responsible for valuables left on the bureau or table of the room, that the guest is requested to keep his trunk locked, and to lock his door upon going out, and to leave his key at the office; that valuable papers and jewelry can be left in the safe of the hotel; at what hours meals are served, and so on. All these directions the considerate person will observe. None of them is unreasonable. There are many things for which no printed rules are given which are none the less essential to the correctness of demeanor on the part of a guest.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Loud talking is one of the things to be avoided. One must remember that in a hotel more than in any other place is the warning of the Frenchman likely to be proved true,—“The walls themselves, my lord, have ears!” Each room has another room next to it, and the partitions are thin. The transoms all open upon a general hall in which can be heard any loud remark spoken in any one of the rooms. If one does not discuss affairs she wishes kept secret, she must bear in mind the fact that other people may be annoyed while resting, reading or talking, by fragmentary bits of conversation wafted to them. At the hotel table one must also bear this in mind. Loud talking in a public place stamps the speaker as a vulgarian, or a person who has seldom been outside of his own home, and has never learned to modulate his voice.

On entering a hotel dining-room, the traveler pauses until the head waiter, or one of his assistants, indicates a table at which he may sit. If this table be too near the radiator or window, or otherwise undesirable, the guest may courteously ask if he can not be placed in another locality. When a man and a woman are together the man enters the room first, and leads the way to the table, on the first occasion of their taking a meal at the hotel. After that, if they occupy the same table each day, the woman enters the room first and proceeds to her seat, followed by the man. He, or the waiter, draws back her chair for her and seats her. The man, of course, remains standing until she is seated.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

The menu card is handed to the man, with a pad or slip of paper and pencil. Upon this, after discussion with the woman, he writes his order. As a rule he orders the entire meal, except the dessert, at once. The sweets can be decided on later.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I wish I could impress on the minds of persons in a hotel that it is wretched form to criticize audibly the viands set before them. The person sitting near you is not edified to hear you remark that the soup is wretched, the beef too rare, the coffee lukewarm. If you have any fault to find, do so to the waiter and in such a tone that other guests can not hear it.

Above all, do not scold the waiter for that for which he is not to blame. He does not purchase the meat, nor does he fry the oysters. Show him that you appreciate this fact, and ask him politely if he can not get you a better cut, or oysters that are not burned. Some persons seem to think that it elevates them in the opinion of observers if they complain of what is set before them. They fancy, apparently, that others will be impressed with the idea that they are accustomed to so much better fare at home than that they now have that it is a trial for them to descend to the plane on which others are eating. The fact of the case is that the person who is accustomed to dainty fare, and to even-threaded living, is too well-bred to call the attention of strangers to the fact.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

While we are on this subject it would be well to remind the thoughtless person that when he dines with a friend at that friend's hotel, on his invitation, he is a guest. It is therefore rude for him to comment unfavorably on the dishes on the table. When, under such circumstances, a guest says to his host pro tem., "My dear fellow, they do not give you good veal here!" or, "Are you not tired of the mean butter you eat at this hotel?" he is criticizing in an offensive manner the best that his host can offer him, since he has no house of his own in which to entertain. The guest should act as if it were his friend's private table, and forbear to criticize fare or service.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

One of the often-unconsidered items of expense in hotel-life is the "tips" that one must give. In no other place is one's hand so often in one's pocket. A porter carries a bag, and he must be tipped; another carries up a trunk; he must be tipped; one rings for iced water, and the boy bringing it expects his ten cents; one wants hot water every morning, and in notifying the chambermaid of this fact, must slip a bit of silver into her palm. The waiter at one's table must be frequently remembered, and the head-waiter will give one better attention if he finds something in his hand after he shows the new arrival to a table, and, of course, on leaving, one will also give a fee. So it goes! When, however, one is staying by the week at a hotel, "tips" need be given only once a week,—unless some unusual favor is asked. We may rebel against the custom, and with reason. But as not one of us can alter the state of affairs, it is well to accept it with a good grace, or reconcile oneself to indifferent service.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

The matter of children in a hotel is one on which so much has been said and written that there is little left to say. At the first glance one is tempted to resent the fact that many hotel proprietors object to having children accompany their parents to the public table, and that some even demur at their presence in the house. Child-lovers have said bitterly that the celestial “many mansions” seem to be the only abodes in which the little ones are welcome,—and all these opinions have a great deal of truth on their side. But it is not until one has undergone the annoyance of ill-governed children in a house where there are no restrictions enforced on them, that one sees the other side of the shield. One large boarding-house at a fashionable summer resort is popular to mothers of large families because the proprietor does not object to children. A guest there last season decided that if that were the case said proprietor had no nerves. She soon learned that childless guests declined to stay at the place. Children raced up and down the long corridors, screaming as they went; they played noisily outside of bedroom doors; they ate like little pigs at the hotel tables. In short, they made the house a purgatory for all except other children and their typical American mothers.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I say "typical," but there are two types of mothers in this land of ours. One is the mother who hands the management of the children over to a nurse or several nurses, and she is, of course, the rich woman whose children see her seldom, and that not often enough to bother her. The other type is the woman who has nerves toward all things except her own children's noise. She is such a doting parent that she is, to all appearances, blind and deaf to the fact that her own offspring drive to the verge of insanity other "grown-ups" with whom they come in contact. Verily the American youngster is having everything his own way in private and public nowadays! Dwellers in hotels are to be pardoned if they beg that he be kept in private until his parents learn to govern him, and by thus doing, to show mercy to other people.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

While the rules that govern propriety should be adhered to everywhere, there is no other place where they should be more strictly observed than at the summer hotel, or the boarding-house of a fashionable watering-place. It may not be an exaggeration to state that there are few decent places where they are more openly disregarded. With the trammels of city life one seems to lay down an appreciation of the fitness of things generally. The free intercourse, the rapidly-made acquaintances, the mingling of many sorts of peoples in the huge caravansary—tend to make us cast aside conventionalities. Husbands, running down from the city for a Sunday with their wives, find them absorbed and happy in the gay life about them, and quite sufficient unto themselves when the husbands return to counting-room and office on Monday morning. There is always a class of men who, having nothing else to do, are habitués of the summer hotel, where they flirt with the wives of other men and make themselves generally useful and talked-about.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

There may be no harm in all this sort of thing, but it is well for the discreet maiden and matron to avoid giving any cause for the enemy to blaspheme,—in other words, for the gossip to make herself busy and dangerous. To this end, late hours in shaded corners of verandas, moonlight sails and walks, and beach-promenades well on toward midnight, are to be shunned. While these are innocent per se, they give rise to scandal. The young girl may always have a chaperon to whom to refer as to the properties, but it is not the young girl who is most talked about. The married woman whose husband lets her have her own way is a law unto herself, and she must be careful not to make that law too lax. It takes very little to set silly tongues wagging; it takes months and years to check the commotion they have made.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

Promiscuous intimacies at summer resorts are a great mistake. Unless a woman knows all about a fellow guest, she should not get in the habit of running into her room, or of talking with her as with a life-long friend. She may be pleasant toward all, and intimate with none.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

It is a well-known fact that there is no other hotbed of gossip equal to a hotel or a boarding-house. Women, released from the cares and anxieties of house-keeping and home-making, turn their time and thoughts to fancy work and scandal. Each arrival runs the gantlet of criticism and comment, and afterward becomes the subject of "confidential" conversations upon veranda and in parlors. Here, as everywhere else, work that will occupy the mind is a sovereign cure for this habit. One can usually sit in one's own room, but if one does not, there is always a book to be read in parlors or on the veranda, which will show the would-be gossip or retailer of scandal that one is too much occupied to engage in conversation.

BOARDING-HOUSE LIFE

Certainly in a hotel no one lives unto himself, but each must consider the comfort of his neighbor. Such a semi-public life is at the best a poor substitute for a home existence. Two rules to be observed will make other rules of hotel or boarding-house etiquette sink into insignificance compared with their importance.

First: Do nothing that will make others uncomfortable.

Second: Pay attention to your own business, and pay no attention to that of other people.

XIX

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

Sport, scientists tell us, is a relic of prehistoric pursuits; and the so-called sporting instinct is a stirring of the primeval nature within civilized breasts. Perhaps that is why more people forget the first tenets of good breeding when competing in various forms of outdoor exercise than in nearly all the other walks of life put together.

The man who would view with an amiable smirk the spilling of a glass of Burgundy over his white waistcoat at a dinner, will often exhibit babyish rage at the breaking of a favorite golf-club or the stupidity of a caddie. The girl whose self-control permits her to smile and murmur: "It's really of no consequence!"

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

when a dance-partner's foot tears three yards of lace off her train, will seldom show the same calm good-humor when her opponent at tennis serves balls that are too swift and too hard-driven for her to return.

There are many concrete and a few general rules for behavior in sport of all sorts, the observance or neglect of which denotes the "thoroughbred" or the boor far more accurately than would a week full of ordinary routine.

The general rules apply to every form of sport. They are, briefly:

First, last and always—keep your temper! Remember the word "sport" means "pastime." When it becomes a cause of annoyance or impatience, or an occasion for loss of temper, it misses its true aim and you are not worthy to continue it.

Second; the "other fellow" has quite as much right to a good time as you have.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Do not play selfishly, or vaunt your superiority over him. In all contests, show no elation at victory, or chagrin at defeat. This is the first and great law. Its observance differentiates the true sportsman from the mere sporting-man.

Third; play fairly. The man or girl who will take an undue advantage of any description over an opponent, not only breaks the most sacred rules of good breeding, but robs himself or herself of the real enjoyment of the game.

Fourth; no sport in which people of breeding can participate demands loud talking, ill-bred language or actions, or the abridgment of any of the small sweet courtesies of life.

To sum up,—good breeding, fairness, self-control and patience are needful equipments. Without any and all of these no man or woman should take part in sports.

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

Golf, perhaps, more than any other outdoor pastime, demands a thorough and judicious blend of the foregoing qualities. The old story of the Scotch clergyman, whose conscience would not allow him to continue both golf and the ministry, and who therefore abandoned the latter, was of course an exaggeration. But the idea it expresses is by no means absurd. When a crowd of people throng the links,—when novice and adept, crank and mere exercise-seeker are jumbled together in seeming confusion—it is not always easy to keep a cool head, a sweet temper and a resolution neither to give nor to take offense.

Many a golf-player errs in behavior less through ill-intent than through heedlessness and ignorance of what the etiquette of the occasion demands. Such enthusiasts may profit by the ensuing rules which cover the more salient points of decorum, and which may enable the beginner to avoid many a pitfall:

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

When two players "drive off" from the tee they should always wait until the couple in front of them have made their second shot and walked off from it. Thus confusion is averted and the proper distance maintained. It is a simple rule, but one often broken.

Three players should always let a pair of players pass them. Not only should they grant the desired position, but they should offer to do so before the question "May we pass?" can be asked. The pair in question should (in case such permission is not volunteered) ask politely to be allowed to move forward. The yell of "Fore!" is all the strict rules of the game demand, but the rules of breeding should come first.

A single player must give way to all larger parties. This is but fair, since golf is, preëminently, a match; and those actively engaged in the contest should have the right of way over a man who is merely practising. The "single player" must recognize and yield with good grace. If he desires unobstructed practice, let him choose some time when the links are vacant.

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

Never drive on the "putting green" when other players are there "putting out." Players should not forget to get off the green the moment they have "holed out." The place is not intended as an isle of safety, or a club-house corner where scores may be computed, gossip exchanged, or the work of others watched.

If you are at the tee waiting for others to "drive off," never speak, cough, or in any way distract the attention of the player who is addressing the ball. Inconsiderate or ill-bred people in this way spoil hundreds of good drives and thousands of good tempers every year.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

When a man and a woman are playing golf, the latter should always be allowed to precede on the first drive off from the first tee.

A man, playing against a woman, should not allow himself to get too far ahead of her. Do not leave her to plod on alone. This same rule applies when playing with another man. Do not go after the ball after a drive until your opponent drives. Then walk together in pursuit. Never go ahead of your partner.

Use no undue haste in golf. Never run!

If you are not employing a caddie, always offer to carry the clubs of the woman with whom you are playing. In the same circumstances offer to make the tee from which she is to drive off. It is optional with her whether or not to accept your offer.

When you have no caddie allow players who have caddies to pass you. They will go faster than you and should have the right of way.

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

Never make unfavorable criticisms of others' play. Never, above all, laugh at any of their blunders.

Automobiling has so increased in popularity that it is almost a national pastime. And with its growing favor has sprung up a noxious and flourishing crop of bad manners. There seems to be something about the speed, the smell of gasoline or the sense of superiority over slower vehicles, that robs many an otherwise well-bred automobilist of all consideration. Yet the utmost consideration is due, not only to mere mortals but to fellow "motor-men."

Common humanity, as well as civility, should always prompt a chauffeur to stop at sight of a disabled auto and to ask if he can be of assistance; to offer the loan of any necessary tools or extra gasoline; or even, if necessary, to volunteer a "tow."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Do not presume on the community of interests to address the chauffeur or passengers of a passing auto, any more than the passengers of one ordinary vehicle would address those of another. Do not stare at another's car, nor, if at a standstill, examine the mechanism. This is the height of rudeness. The fact that you are so lucky as to be an automobilist gives you no license to investigate the workings of another man's machine, or in other ways to make yourself obnoxious.

When passing an auto of inferior horsepower, do not choose that moment to exhibit your own greater speed. Be careful also not to give such a car your dust nor (so far as you can avoid) to sicken its occupants with the smell of your motor's gasoline.

Do not boast of the phenomenal runs you have made. You are not a record-holder. And when you become one, the newspapers will gladly exploit the fact without any viva voce testimony from you.

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

When meeting or passing a horse-vehicle never fail to shut down speed and, whenever possible, to ascertain whether or not the horse is afraid of automobiles.

Do not violate the speed ordinance. The ordinance was made for public safety, not to spite you. Do not frighten animals or pedestrians, nor carelessly steer too near to some farmer's live stock which may happen to be in the road. Remember the owners of the chickens or dogs you may run over is helping to pay for the smooth road you are traversing. The road is partly his, and you are in a measure his guest.

Tennis offers fewer opportunities for "breaks" than do many other of the sports of the hour. Yet good breeding is here as necessary as when playing any other game.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

If you have a woman for a partner and it is her "serve," do not neglect to pick up and hand her the balls before each service. Second her more carefully than if she were a man, and take charge of the extra balls for her.

If a woman is your opponent, remember she has not the strength and endurance of a man. Serve gently. Do not slam balls over the net at cannon-ball speed and force. Oppose only moderate strength to her lesser power. Give her the benefit of the doubt in the case of a "let," or when the ball may or may not be over the back line.

In "double service" do not serve the second ball until she has recovered her position from pursuing the first. The choice of rackets should also, of course, be hers; and any work, such as putting up the nets, hunting the lost ball, and so on, devolves on you.

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

The yachtsman is of two classes,—the man who delights in the dangers and seamanship incident on a cranky “wind-jammer” in a heavy sea, and the man whose boat is a floating club-house. Both types are prone to forget at times that their guests are not so enthusiastic as themselves; that they may be nervous or inclined to seasickness, and that the amusements of their host may not always appeal to them. The man who would never think of causing inconvenience to a guest on land will show impatience or lack of sympathy at that same guest’s timidity or mal de mer, when afloat.

The same rules of behavior that obtain between host and guest ashore should prevail on the yacht. The tastes of the latter should be as scrupulously considered, and his or her likes and dislikes be as considerably met.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Similar laws of social usages apply to boating and canoeing. "The fool that rocks the boat" has received so many warnings and such just and wholesale condemnation that there is no use wasting further words on him. No man who values the safety and comfort of his companion will do anything to imperil either. A man should always offer to row, but should give the girl who is with him the option of doing so if she wishes. He should hold the boat steady for her and assist her to embark, having previously arranged the cushions in the stern and made all other possible plans for her comfort.

The course they are to take should always be left to her choice, and her wishes should be consulted in every way. A girl would also do well to remember that the man who has taken her boating is doing all the work and is trying to give her a pleasant time. She should meet him half-way, and should try to repress any nervousness she may experience in being on the water and any resentment she may feel at being occasionally requested by her "skipper" to "trim boat."

ETIQUETTE IN SPORT

Swimming is essentially a man's sport. While many women are good swimmers, they usually lack the strength and endurance to make them men's equals in this line. A man should therefore be careful to avoid overtaxing the strength of the girl who is swimming with him; should be content to remain near the shore if she so desire, and, in surf-bathing, should lift her over the breakers, or try to shield her from their force.

In teaching others to swim, infinite patience, good temper and tact are needful. Allow for the nervousness and awkward-ness which are the almost inseparable attributes of beginners.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

In driving always ask your companion if she or he would prefer to handle the reins. Do not, by bursts of speed, or by "fights" with a fractious horse, endanger the safety or composure of your guest.

In riding horseback, never remain mounted when addressing some friend who is on foot. If your initial salute is to be followed by any conversation, dismount and remain on foot until you take your leave. In helping a girl to the saddle, always adjust the curb and snaffle, hand them to her and arrange her riding-habit before you mount your own horse.

There are countless pitfalls for the unwary in all forms of sport; but none that can not be readily bridged by consideration for others, by good temper, and by the commonest rules of breeding.

XX

MRS. NEWLYRICH AND HER SOCIAL DUTIES

We have ridiculed our newly-rich woman's fads, pretensions and failures so sharply and for so long that we find it hard to do justice to the solid virtues she often possesses. The average specimen is fair game, and we—one and all, from the gentlest to the most sarcastic—unite in "setting her down."

Except perhaps the mother-in-law, no other woman supplies fun-makers with such abundant—and cheap—material. She might retaliate on her persecutors more frequently than she does by attributing much of the ridicule, fine and coarse, heaped on her, to envy, far meaner than the meanest of her pretensions.

Thus much for the average specimen at her worst. The exceptions to the ignoble parvenu are numerous enough to form a class by themselves. It is not a disgrace in this country of dizzying down-sittings and bewildering uprisings, for miner, mechanic, merchant or manufacturer to make money fast. It is to his credit when he insists that the girl who was poorer than himself when they were married, and who has kept him at his best physical and mental estate ever since by wise management of their modest household—making every dollar do the work of a dollar-and-a-quarter while feeding and clothing her family—should get the full benefit of his changed fortunes. In house, furniture, clothing, company, and what he names vaguely “a good time generally,” he means that she shall ruffle it with the bravest of her associates. He means also that these associates shall be in accord with his means.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

MRS. NEWLYRICH

The odds are all against the chances that our worthy money-maker will conform his personal behavior to the new conditions. Husbands of his type leave "all that sort of thing" to wives and daughters, and make the social advancement of these women harder thereby. Not the least formidable obstacle in their upward journey is the stubborn fact that "your father is quite impossible."

Men, as a whole, do not take polish readily. Unless John Newlyrich wore a dress-coat before he was twenty-one, he is not quite at ease in a "swallow-tail" at forty. As a millionaire of fifty, he rebels against the obligation to wear it to the family dinner every evening in the week. If he has read Dickens, which is hardly likely, he echoes Mrs. Boffin's "Lor'! let us be comfortable!" He butters a whole slice of bread, using his knife trowel-wise, and if busy talking of something that interests him particularly, lays the slice upon the cloth during the troweling. He cuts up his salad, and makes the knife a good second to the fork while eating fish. Loyal to the memories of early life, he never gets over the habit of speaking of dinner as "supper," and observes in conversation at a fashionable reception, "As I was eating my dinner at noon to-day." In like absent-mindedness, he tucks his napkin into his collar to protect the expanse of shirt-front exposed by the low-cut waistcoat of his dress suit. He says "sir," to his equals, and addresses facetious remarks to the butler, or draws the waitress into conversation while meals are going on. Anxious wife and despairing daughters are grateful if he does not put his knife into his mouth when off-guard.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Trifles—are they? Not to the climbers who are exercised thereby. They are gravel between the teeth, and pebbles in the dainty foot-wear of Mrs. Newlyrich. The history of her social struggles would be incomplete without the mention of this drawback. She has learned the by-laws of social usage by heart, and, loving and loyal wife though she is, she sometimes loses patience with John for not doing the same.

MRS. NEWLYRICH

In this, and in many another perplexity, more or less grievous, our heroine has our sympathy and deserves our respect. We use the word "heroine" advisedly. We have put the wealthy, pushing vulgarian, who is part of the stock company of caricature and joke-wright, entirely out of the question. She has her sphere and her reward. Our business is with the woman of worthy aspirations and innate refinement, raised by a whirl of Fortune's wheel from decent poverty to actual wealth. She has a natural desire to mingle on equal terms with the better sort of rich people.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

She is glad of her wealth, but not purse-proud. It has introduced her to another world. Of her social life it may be truly said that old things have passed away and all things have become new. It would be phenomenal if she fitted at once and easily into it. Money has bought her fine house, and for money the artistic upholsterer has furnished it. Money has hired a staff of servants, whereas up to now, a maid-of-all-work was her sole "help."

Money does not enable her to master the "shibboleth" that would be her passport to the land she would possess. And to mangle it into "sibboleth"—as the least sophisticated of us know—means social slaughter at the passages of Jordan.

Discarding Scriptural imagery for modern common sense, let us begin with the Newlyrich kitchen, in holding helpful counsel with the nominal mistress thereof.

MRS. NEWLYRICH

Engage no servant who patronizes you. Give her to understand at the outset that you are the head of the house, and know perfectly well what you want each one to do, and how your household is to be run. Be kind with all—familiar with none. They are your severest critics. Each is, in her way, a spy, but in her own interest. An employer who used to be poor, albeit she was, at the poorest, far richer than any of them will ever be, is a thing to be looked down on and bullied. Accept this as a basic truth and shape your course in accordance with it. Assert yourself with dignity, never defiantly. They have nothing to do with your past, or with anything connected with your personal history beyond the present relation existing between you as employer and hireling. They will discuss and criticize you below-stairs and on “evenings out,” and, in the event of “changing their place,” to the next mistress who will stoop to listen to them. They would do the same were you a princess with a thousand-year-old pedigree. Stand in your lot and be philosophical.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

You can not be too punctilious in not questioning them about how "things" were done in other houses in which they have been employed. Every such query will be construed into ignorance and diffidence. Be a law unto yourself and unto them.

Yet you must learn how the people live whom you would meet upon common ground as old to them as it is new to you. You blush in confessing that you are bewildered as to the order in which the various forks are to be used that lie beside your plate at the few state dinners you attend. Entrées are many, and some appallingly unfamiliar. You wonder mutely what these people would think of you if they knew that you were never "taken in" to dinner by a man until to-night, and how narrowly you watch the hostess, or the woman across the way before you dare advance upon the course set before you. Dreading awkward stiffness that would betray preoccupation, you attract attention by a show of gaiety unlike your usual behavior and unsuited to time and place. Should you make a mistake—such as using a spoon instead of the ice-cream fork—you are abashed to misery. Don't apologize, however gross the solecism! In eighteen times out of twenty, nobody has noticed the misadventure. In twenty cases out of a score, if it were observed you are the one person who would care a picayune about it, or ever think of it again.

MRS. NEWLYRICH

Another cardinal principle is to learn to consider yourself as a minute fractional part of society. When your name is bawled out by usher or footman at a large party, it sounds like the trump of doom in your unaccustomed ears. To your excited imagination all eyes are riveted upon you. In point of fact, you are of no more consequence to the eyes, ears and minds of your fellow-guests than the carpet that seems to rise to meet your uncertain feet. Stubborn conviction of your insignificance is the first step that counts in the acquisition of well-mannered composure among your fellows.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

In forming new acquaintances, be courteous in the reception of advances, slow in making them until you have reason to think that you are liked for yourself, and not because your husband represents six, or it may be seven, numerals. There are sure to be dozens of critics who will accuse you of parading these figures, as vessels fly bunting in entering a strange harbor. Stamp upon your mind that adventitious circumstance has nothing to do with the worth of YOU, YOUR-SELF!

MRS. NEWLYRICH

For a long while after you embark upon your new life, be watchful and studious—yet covertly, lest your study be noted. Return calls promptly, sending in the right number of cards, and bearing yourself in conversation with gentle self-possession. Never be flattered by any attention into a flutter of pleasure. Above all, do not be obsequious, be the person who honors you by social notice a multi-millionaire, or the Chief Magistrate of these United States. Servility is invariably vulgarity. Familiarity is, if possible, a half-degree more repulsive. Self-respect and a wholesome oblivion of dollars and cents are a catholicon amid the temptations of your novel sphere.

When you begin to entertain in your turn avoid, scrupulously, startling effects and novelties of all kinds. Until you are used to the task, be strictly conventional in arrangements for your guests' reception and pleasure. Let floral decorations and "souvenirs" be modest and tasteful. Mantels banked with orchids, boutonnieres of hot-house roses at a dollar apiece, and cases of expensive jewelry as favors, may express a generous hospitality on your part and a desire to gratify the acquaintances you would convert into friends. They will surely be set down to ostentatious display of means that few of the guests possess.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

There are Manuals of Etiquette which will keep you from open solecisms in social usages. Follow their rules obediently, curbing all disposition to originality—for a while, at least. If possible, keep the greedy society-reporter at a distance, without angering her. Do not give away the list of those invited, much less the menu. As Dick Fanshawe's eulogist said of men who "jump upon their mothers,"

MRS. NEWLYRICH

—"Some does, you know!"

And thereby they give occasion to the afore-mentioned cartoonists and joke-venders to deride the name of hospitality dispensed by the Newlyrich clan. Let the aforesaid Manual of Etiquette be followed with obedience, but not with servile and unthinking obedience. Unfortunately it is true that the person unaccustomed to precise social regulations and to a formal manner of living, is inclined to consider the rules governing such life as arbitrary, inexplicable and mysterious. If the uninitiated woman will disabuse herself of this idea, she has taken a long step in the right direction. Once you make a conquest of the thought that there is reason behind the forms employed by society, it will not be long before you will be searching for the reason itself. The laws governing the conventional world will then acquire for you a meaning that will make adherence to them simple and natural, instead of stiff and mechanical.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The matter of discriminating properly in questions of taste is a thing much more difficult to learn than the set and definite rules governing definite exigencies of social life. Yet taste,—taste in clothes, taste in the objects surrounding one, taste in all matters with which expenditure is concerned,—this is a necessity in the attainment of any social position worthy of the name. In this direction something may be gained by observation, though not until the eye is sufficiently trained to make it a trustworthy guide. The sense of beauty is somewhat a matter of cultivation and its application to everyday life is the result of experience and judgment. Do not imagine that a color is becoming to you merely because you happen to like it. Do not buy a chair or a couch simply because the one or the other may happen to please your fancy. The color you wear, the furniture you buy must have reference, the one to your appearance, the other to its surroundings.

MRS. NEWLYRICH

When one is unversed in these matters it is best to submit problems to an authority. It is wiser to allow a clever modiste to select the color, style and material of one's gown than to do it oneself. It is better to put the scheme of decoration for your house into the hands of some accomplished person, educated to that end, than to attempt it yourself. In large cities persons competent in this matter of household decoration may easily be found, people whose business it is to act as paid agents of the more beautiful and esthetic way. Many architects have in their employ persons who are capable of advising as to interior decoration and of superintending the work. If one is resident in a small place the difficulty is obviated by the intelligent aid offered to the questioner through the columns of the better magazines devoted to esthetics as applied to everyday living. The advice given in the best of these publications is conscientious, careful, expert advice.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I have said that it is not your fault that you were not born in the purple. Neither is it of your merit and to your honor that you now walk in silk attire, and may freely gratify dreams you would once have considered wildly impossible.

The best of all books enjoins on the suddenly-exalted to be mindful of the pit from whence they were digged. Purse-pride is contemptible in its meanness and folly. You are safe from ridicule if you keep this fact in mind. Set up "me" and "mine" in "pearl" type, and not in capitals.

XXI

A DELICATE POINT OF ETIQUETTE FOR OUR GIRL

This chapter is, perhaps, rather a Familiar Talk with Our Girl on the proprieties—which she may not recognize as such—than the emphasizing of various points of etiquette. But the violation of the essentials of self-respect is so common that a book of this character should have a chapter devoted to a bit of plain speaking to the young woman of to-day. We may call her actions under certain circumstances a violation of the proprieties, or of etiquette, or of conventionality. Or, perhaps, it is a sin against all three.

We are accustomed to seeing the sign "Hands off!" hung upon dainty fabrics,

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

—pure, spotless materials that would be injured and stained by the touching of a gloved or bare hand. People who admire the pure beauty of the article thus marked do not resent the sign. They see the wisdom of it and are willing to obey the mandate. For a fabric once soiled never looks the same again. All the chemicals in the country can not give it the peculiar pristine freshness that was once its chief beauty.

To those who appreciate the beauty of youth, its pure freshness, the thought of its being touched by indiscriminate hands is abhorrent.

We have, happily, passed the Lydia Languish age, the day in which the young girl was a fragile creature, given to fainting and hysterics, clothed in innocence that was ignorance, good because she was afraid to be naughty, or because she was so hedged in by conventionalities that she did not have the opportunity to stray near the outer edge of the pasture bars. In her place we have a healthy, fearless, clear-eyed young person, looking life and its possibilities square in the face, good because she knows from observation or hearsay what evil is, and abhors it because it is evil. She is a sister, a chum, a jolly companion to the boy or man with whom she associates. She rides, walks, golfs or dances with him. She may do, and she does, all these things and she still keeps his respect.

A DELICATE POINT

Thus far we go, and then creeps in the sinister question: Does she always do this?

The answer comes promptly: It is her own fault if she loses any man's respect.

To those of us who have outstepped girlhood, who have begun to live deeply these lives of ours that are full of potentialities for good or evil, there comes a keen insight, and, with that insight, our outer sight becomes more clear; and sometimes in looking at young people we find our hearts, and almost our lips, crying out, "DON'T!"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

We would not be—we are not—prudes, but the bloom of the peach is beautiful, and once rubbed off it can not be replaced. The snow-white fabric is too fair to be carelessly handled.

Last winter I sat in a train-seat behind a girl of eighteen and a young man a few years her senior. She was pretty and bright. She chatted gaily with her companion, who, after a few minutes, threw his arm over the back of her seat. To the initiated, it was evidently done as a trial as to whether that kind of thing would be allowed. The girl, intent on the conversation, appeared not to notice the action. In a few moments the hand resting against the girl's shoulder was laid over the shoulder. The owner flushed, made some laughing protest, but evidently administered no rebuke, as the offending member continued to rest where it was, then gradually crept up toward her neck; finally, at some teasing remark of hers, it tweaked her ear. Had the child been older, the look in the man's eyes as he watched the fluctuations of color in her pretty face, would have warned her that she was playing with fire; that his respect for her would have been greater had she shown in the beginning that the sign, "Hands off!" was on her person, although invisible to the vulgar eye.

A DELICATE POINT

This is but one of the many instances of the free-and-easy actions on the part of men, permitted by well-meaning girls.

In nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand a man will not take a liberty with a girl unless she allows it.

I wish girls would bear this fact in mind! Men are what they make them, what they allow them to be. When a young fellow told a man in my presence last week that such and such a girl was a "jolly sort," and, while out driving, had stopped at a roadhouse with him, gone into the parlor of the house and taken a glass of ginger ale while he had one of whisky, I was not surprised that the man of the world to whom he imparted this fact, remarked, "Crookéd, eh?"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

That the young fellow (who, had he been older or less easily flattered, would not have related the occurrence) flushed and laughingly denied the allegation—did not alter the fact that the conclusion drawn was inevitable. The young girl may not, probably did not, deserve the stricture passed on her, but by her free-and-easy behavior she lost something she never can regain.

Men may pay attention to girls who ignore the conventionalities, who allow them doubtful liberties, but they like them because they are what they term "fun." Such girls are not those for whom men live, for whom they sacrifice bad habits, for whom they look in seeking a wife, and for whom they would bravely give up life if necessary. The true love of a good man is worth winning. It is not won by the girl who lowers herself to a man's level. To her might apply the time-worn toast of man to "The New Woman,—once our superior, now our equal."

A DELICATE POINT

Another point to which I would draw the attention of our girl is that the man should make the advances, should do the seeking and the courting. To this she would reply, "Why, of course! All girls know that." They may know it theoretically, but does every girl live up to that knowledge? Does she always wait to be sought, to be won, without taking a hand herself at assisting destiny? I think observation will not prove that she does.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

In this very free-and-easy age, when men are too busy seeking the elusive mighty dollar to be over-eager to show marked attention to girls, it is often the young woman who pays heed to some of the preliminaries of the courting period. It is frequently she who suggests to a man, after meeting him several times, that she would be glad to have him call. It is she who, when he is going on a journey, asks him if he will not write to her. It is she who asks him for his picture and, on occasion, offers him one of hers.

It is, and it has been through centuries, the place of the man to take the initiative in such matters. If he wants to call on a girl, let him have the courage to ask her if he may do so; if he wishes to correspond with her, he should ask her permission to write to her. And if he does none of these things of his own volition, they may go undone. The girl who, through love of admiration, or the desire for men's attention, takes these initial steps, loses her self-respect, and, unless the man in question be an exceptional instance, awakens in his breast a sensation of amused interest. He is flattered, and a bit contemptuous. As time goes on and he likes the girl more and more, that feeling may be forgotten, but it is always lying there dormant, and may arise sometime just when the young woman would most wish for respect and love.

A DELICATE POINT

Men prize that which they have had difficulty in winning. The apple that drops, over-ripe, at one's feet is never quite so tempting as that which hangs just beyond reach.

It is well for the matter of sex to be put out of mind in many of the dealings between young men and young women, but in the question of loverly attentions it can not be ignored. And in this matter it is the man, and the man only, who should make advances. It is better for her peace of mind that a girl should never have the marked attention of any man, than that she should forget her maidenly dignity in order to acquire it. Such acquisition is certainly not worth the price paid for it.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

A man must look up to that which he loves. And a hard-and-fast rule is the slangy one that declares that one does not run after a car when he has already caught it, or when it stands at the corner waiting for him, and ready to start or stand at his will. The girls for whom men find life worth living are those who are ideals as well as companions.

Dear girls, be happy, be merry, have all the harmless fun that the good God, who wishes you to be happy, sends your way. But for the sake of the man who may one day seek you and win you—for the sake of the womanhood that he would honor—let all men know that you are labeled—“HANDS OFF!” and that you are not to be cheaply gained. They will love you better, respect and honor you more for that knowledge.

A DELICATE POINT

XXII

OUR OWN AND OTHER PEOPLE'S CHILDREN

Constance Fenimore Woolson, in one of her novels, thus describes a discourtesy to which mothers of young children are much given:

“Talking with a mother when her children are in the room is the most trying thing conversationally; she listens to you with one ear, but the other is listening to Johnnie; right in the midst of something very pathetic you are telling her she will give a sudden, perfectly irrelevant smile over her baby's last crow, and your best story is hopelessly spoiled because she loses the point (although she pretends she hasn't) while she arranges the sashes of Ethel and Totsie.”

There is a protest in the paragraph quoted that will find an answering groan in many a heart. Who of us does not wish that mothers of small children would adopt a few rules of ordinary politeness and courtesy, and, when talking to a guest, give attention that is not shared and almost monopolized by the child who happens to be present?

CHILDREN

Parents make the mistake of thinking that their children must be as absorbingly interesting to all visitors and acquaintances as they are to those to whom they belong. This is a vast mistake. No matter how fond one may be of the young of his species, he does enjoy a conversation into which they are not dragged, and talks with more freedom if they are not present. Certainly it is far better for the child to learn to run off and amuse himself than to sit by, listening to talk not meant for his ears. Those of us who were children many years ago were not allowed to make nuisances of ourselves to the extent that children of to-day do, and surely we were happy. In one home there is a small boy, very good, and very affectionate, whose mother can not receive a caller without the presence of the ubiquitous infant. He sits still, his great eyes fixed upon the face of the caller, and she feels ashamed for wishing that he would get out of the room. Occasionally he varies the monotony by saying, "Mother, don't you want to tell Mrs. Blank about what I said the other day when I was hurt and did not cry?" Or, "Mother, do you think Mrs. Blank would like me to recite my new poem to her?"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

This may be annoying, but it is still more pitiful. To talk so much to a child and of him in the presence of others that he is a poseur at the early age of five, is cruel to the little one himself. We frown on the old adage which declared "children should be seen and not heard," but there are homes in which the guest wishes that they might be invisible as well as inaudible.

CHILDREN

One mother defers constantly to her fourteen-year-old son, and allows him to be present during all chats she has with her friends. She says, "You do not mind Will, I am sure. You may say what you like where he is, for he is the soul of discretion, and I talk freely with him." But the visitor does not feel the same confidence in "Will," and certainly objects to expressing all her opinions with regard to people and things in his presence.

Our own children are intensely interesting; the children of other people are not! Let us, once in a while, put ourselves in the place of another person, and think if we are willing to have that person's child always in the room when we would talk confidentially with her. I think if we are frank we shall acknowledge that while we do not mind the presence of our own children, we do talk more freely when other people's children are not present. Said a man not long ago:

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

"Mrs. Brown is a marvelous woman. She is one of the most devoted mothers I know. Her children are with her a great part of the time. Yet, whenever I call there, alone or with a friend, a signal from her empties the drawing-room or library of the entire flock of five infants, and she is just as much interested in what her callers have to say as if she had no youngsters cruising about in the offing."

It is not to be supposed that children are never to be allowed to come into the drawing-room. They should be trained to enter the room, greet the guests politely and without embarrassment, answer frankly and straightforwardly, and to speak when spoken to. Then, they should be silent unless drawn into the conversation. The truest kindness is, after a few moments, to let the little one run away and play with his toys or in the outdoor air.

CHILDREN

The child who hangs his head shyly, and refuses to speak politely to any one who addresses him, should be punished as severely as for an impertinence. From the cradle a baby may be taught to "see people," and, as soon as he is old enough to return a greeting, he must be trained to do so.

The only way to make small ladies and gentlemen of children is to teach, first of all, perfect obedience. This is, in this day, an unpopular doctrine, for there is prevalent a theory that the child must be allowed to exercise his individuality,—in other words, to do as he pleases. Why the child should develop his individuality, and the parents curb theirs, may be matter for wonder to those not educated up to this twentieth-century standard of ethics. If "days should speak and multitude of years should teach wisdom," the father and mother are better fitted to dictate to the child than the child to dictate to them. And yet, in the average home, the last-mentioned form of government prevails.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Nothing is more unkind than to allow a child to do as he pleases, for, as surely as he lives, he must learn sooner or later to yield to authority and to exercise self-control. The earlier the training begins, the easier it will be. The child creeping about the room soon knows that the gentle, but firm "No!" when spoken by the mother means that he must not touch the bit of bric-à-brac within reach. And even this lesson will stand him in good stead later on.

The basic principle of home government must be love enforced by firmness. A punishment should seldom be threatened, but if promised, must be given. The time for threat and punishment is not in public. In the parlor, on the train, or boat, it is the height of ill-breeding to make a scene and to threaten a whipping, or a punishment of any kind. Were the child properly trained in private, parents and beholders would be spared the humiliating spectacle that too often confronts them in visiting and traveling.

CHILDREN

One word here as to the child on train or boat. The person who is truly well-bred will not turn and frown on the mother of the tiny baby who, suffering with colic, or sore from traveling, is wailing aloud. Of course the sound is annoying, but it is harder on the poor, mortified mother than on any one else. I already hear the question, "Why doesn't she keep the infant at home then?" Frequently she can not do this. The child may be ill, and be on its way to seashore or mountains to gain health; or the mother may be summoned to see some ill relative, and can not go unless the baby goes, too. Whatever the cause of her going, the fact remains that she derives no pleasure from holding a screaming baby, and her discomfort is turned into positive anguish by the disgusted looks of the women, and the muttered imprecations of the men.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I saw once under such circumstances a woman who was an honor to her sex. Opposite her in the train sat a young mother, and in her arms was a fretful, wailing baby. It was evidently the first baby, and the poor girlish mother was white and weary. At every scream the baby gave she would start nervously, change the little one's position, look about at the passengers with an expression of pathetic apology,—all the time keeping up a crooning "Sh-h-h!" that produced no effect on the crying atom of humanity.

CHILDREN

And, as is often the case, the more nervous the mother became, the more nervous did the baby grow, and the louder did he scream. An exclamation of impatience came from a woman seated behind the suffering twain, and, at the same moment a man in front threw down his paper with a slam and rushed out of the car and into the smoker. Then the woman who was an honor to her sex came across from the seat opposite, and laid a gentle hand on the mother's shoulder, smiling reassurance in the tear-filled eyes lifted to hers.

"My dear," said the soft voice, "you are worn out, and the baby knows it. Let me take him for a minute. No, don't protest! I have had four of my own, and they are all too big for me to hold in my arms now. I just long to feel that baby against my shoulder! Give him to me! There, now! you poor tired little mother, put your head down on the back of the seat, and rest!"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

She took the baby across the aisle, laid him over her shoulder with his head against her cheek, in the comforting way known to all baby-lovers, and in three minutes the cries had subsided and the baby was asleep in the strong motherly arms, where he lay until Jersey City was reached. And the tired little mother fell into a light slumber, too, comforted by the appreciation that she was not alone, nor an intolerable nuisance to all her fellow passengers.

Was not such an act as this woman's the perfection of true courtesy, the courtesy that forgets itself in trying to make another comfortable?

This same spirit spoken of by Saint Paul as "in honor preferring one another" can be inculcated in the children in our homes. The small of the human species are, like their elders, naturally selfish, and must be taught consideration for others.

CHILDREN

It is the grafting that makes the rose what it is. You may graft a Jacqueminot or Maréchal Neil upon the stump of the wild rose. The grafting, the pruning, and the training, are the work of the careful gardener. The mother can never be idle, for, while the stock is there, she does the grafting.

Obedience must be taught in small things as well as in great. The tiny child must be taught to remove his hat when he is spoken to, to give his hand readily in greeting, to say "please" and "thank you;" not to pass in front of people, or between them and the fire; to say "excuse me!" when he treads on his mother's foot or dress; to rise when she enters the room; and to take off his hat when he kisses her. The mother who insists that her child do these things at home need not fear that he will forget her training when abroad.

XXIII

OUR NEIGHBORS

The fact that people live next door to you does not make them your neighbors in the higher and better sense of that word. There may be nothing in their persons or characters to commend them to you, or for that matter, to commend you to them. "Neighborhood" in literal interpretation signifies nearness of vicinity. You have the right to choose your associates and to elect your friends.

Presuming on this truth, dwellers in cities are prone to vaunt their ignorance of, and indifference to, those who live in the same street, block and apartment-house with themselves. If newly come to what is a kingdom by comparison with their former estate, they make a point of seeking society elsewhere than among residents of their neighborhood. "Let us be genteel or die!" says Dickens of Mrs. Fielding's struggles to eat dinner with gloves on. "Let us be exclusive or cease to live in the best set!" says Mrs. Upstart, and refuses to learn the names of her neighbors on the right and left.

OUR NEIGHBORS

One of the hall-marks of the thoroughbred is his daily application of the maxim, "Live and let live." His social standing is so firm that a jostle, or even a push from a vulgarian who chances to pass his way, can not disturb him. When the mongrel cur bayed at the moon, "the moon kept on shining." If he be a gentleman in heart as well as in blood and name, he has a real interest in people who breathe the same air and tread the same street with himself—interest as far removed from vulgar curiosity in other people's concerns as the gentle courtesy of his demeanor is removed from the familiar bumptiousness of the forward and underbred.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Entering ourselves as learners in his school—and we could not study manners in a better—we recognize our neighbors as such. If we live on the same block and meet habitually on the street, a civil bow in passing, a smile to a child, in chance encounters in market or shop, a word of salutation, be it only a “Good morning,” or “It is a fine day!” or, after a few exchanges of this sort—“I hope your family keeps well in this trying weather”—are tokens of good-will and appreciation of the fact that we are dwellers in the same world, town and neighborhood.

None of these minute courtesies which you owe to yourself and to your neighbor lays on you any obligation to call, or to invite her to call on you. Failure to comprehend this social by-law often causes heart-burnings and downright resentment. You may thus meet and greet a woman living near you every day for twenty years, and if some stronger bond than the accident of proximity do not draw you together, you may know nothing more of her than her name and address at the end of that time—perhaps the address alone. Unless, indeed, casualty in the way of fire, personal injury or severe illness, make expedient—and to the humane such expediency is an obligation—further recognition of the tie of neighborhood. In either of the cases indicated, send to ask after the health of the sufferer, and if you can be of service. If there be a death in the house, a civil inquiry to the same effect and a card of sympathy will “commit” you to nothing.

OUR NEIGHBORS

We are working now on the assumption that each of us has a sincere desire to brighten the pathway of others, to make this hard business of daily living more tolerable. Of all the passive endurances of life, strangerhood is one of the hardest to the sensitive spirit. Your neighbor's heart is lighter because you show that you are aware of her existence and, in some sort, recognize her identity. She may not be your congener. Your bow and smile remind her that you are her fellow human being. Stranger ships meeting in mid-ocean do not wait to inspect credentials before exchanging salutes.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

If your neighbor be an acquaintance whom you esteem, do not let her be in doubt on this point.

In ante-bellum days at the South, neighborhood was a powerful bond of sympathy. Miles meant less to them in this respect than so many squares mean to us now. A system of wireless telegraphy connected plantations for an area of many miles. Joy or sorrow set the current in motion from one end to the other. What I have called elsewhere being "kitchenly-kind," was comprehended in perfection in that bygone time. When the house-mother sent a pot of preserves to her neighbor with her love and "she would like to know how you all are to-day," it was the outward and substantial sign of the inward grace of loving kindness, and not an intimation that the recipient's preserve-closet was not so well-stocked as the giver's. When opening hamper and unfolding napkin showed a quarter of lamb, or a steak, or a roll of home-made "sausage meat," enough neighborly love garnished the gift to make it beautiful.

OUR NEIGHBORS

Out-of-fashion now-a-days?

"'Tis true: 'tis true 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis 'tis true."

Enough of the old-time spirit lives among our really "best people" to justify the "kitchenly-kind" in proffering gifts that presuppose personal liking and active desire to please a neighbor. A cake compounded by yourself; a plate of home-made rolls taken from your own table; a dainty fancy dish of sweets of home-manufacture, express more of the "real thing" than a box of confectionery or a basket of flowers "put up" by a florist. It is the personal touch that glorifies the gift, the consciousness that your neighbor thinks enough of you to give of her time and service for your pleasure. The home-made offering partakes of her individuality, and appeals to yours.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Neighborliness does not, of necessity, imply familiarity of manner and speech that may become offensive, or a continuous performance of visits, calls and "droppings-in" that must inevitably become a bore, however congenial may be the association. Those friendships last longest where certain decorous forms are always observed, no matter how close the mutual affection may be. Mrs. Stowe, in one of her New England stories, describes the intercourse between two families as "a sort of undress intimacy." Reading further, we find that this dishabille companionship involves visits by way of the back door and at all sorts of unconventional hours.

OUR NEIGHBORS

Such abandonment of the reserves that etiquette enjoins on every household is a dangerous experiment. The back porch is for family use. Your next-door neighbor may not meddle therewith. Personally, I do not want my own son, or my married daughters, to enter my house through the kitchen. If you, dear reader, would retain your footing in the house of the friend best-loved by you, come in by the front door, and never without announcing your presence as any other visitor would. Steady persistence in this rule will avoid the chances of divers unpleasant possibilities. Your hostess—or her husband—or grown son—may be as much in dishabille as the intimacy which, in your opinion, warrants you in running in and up, without knock or ring. You may happen on a love-scene, or a family quarrel, or a girl may be in the hands of the treasure of a hair-dresser who shampoos her twice a month with pure water that looks like peroxide of hydrogen, and “restores” the subject’s dark brown tresses to the guileless flaxen of her forgotten babyhood; or your clattering heels upon the stairway may break the touchy old grandmother’s best afternoon nap.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

There is but one place on earth where it is safe to make yourself “perfectly at home,” and that is your own house—or apartment—or chamber.

XXIV

ETIQUETTE OF CHURCH AND PARISH

Theoretically, the church is a pure democracy, a mighty family. There, if anywhere, the rich and the poor meet together on terms of absolute equality.

In that least poetical of pious jingles,—

“Blest be the tie that binds,”—

we declare that

“The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.”

These and other Pietistic platitudes, whether tame or tuneful, are technical, and so nearly meaningless as not to provoke debate. Every reasonable man and woman knows and does not affect to conceal his or her consciousness of the truth that social distinctions are not effaced by the enrolment of rich and poor, educated and illiterate, refined and boorish, in impartial order upon the "church books." True religion does refine feeling and engender benevolence and charitable judgment of our fellows. In doing this, it creates a common ground of sympathy, as of belief. It elevates the moral and spiritual nature. Of itself, it does not enrich the intellect, or polish manners. One may have a clean heart and dirty flesh-and-blood hands; may be a sincere and earnest Christian, yet double his negatives, shove his food into his mouth with his knife, prefer the corner of a table-cloth to a napkin, and be an alien in the matter of finger-bowls.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

It is possible that two women may work together harmoniously in church and parish associations, each esteeming the other's excellent qualities of heart and enjoying the fellowship of her "kindred mind," and yet that both should be intensely uncomfortable if forced into reciprocal social relations that have nothing to do with church or charity.

CHURCH AND PARISH

These are plain facts no reasonable person will dispute. In view of them the fact, equally patent, that the Newlyrich clan invariably resort to church connection as a lever to raise them to a higher social plane, is one of the anomalies of human intercourse that may well stir the satirist to bitter ridicule and move compassionate beholders to wonder.

"When they begin to feel their oats they go off to you!" laughed the keen-witted, sweet-natured pastor of a downtown church to a brother clergyman whose flock worshiped in a finer building and a fashionable neighborhood. "The sheep with the golden fleece always finds a breach in our church-wall."

It takes him, his ewe and his lambs, a long time to learn that pew-proximity does not bring about social sympathy. It is not a week since I saw a girl, a thoroughbred from crown to toe, flush in surprise and draw herself up in unconscious hauteur, when a flashily-dressed young person greeted her across the vestibule of a concert-room with "Hello, Nellie! didn't we have a bully time last night?"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

They had attended a Sunday-school anniversary, and as their classes were side by side, had exchanged remarks in the intervals of recitations, songs and addresses. The parvenu's clothes were more costly than "Nellie's;" her father was richer; they were members of the same church! To her vulgar mind these circumstances gave her the right to take a liberty with a slight acquaintance such as no well-bred person would have dreamed of assuming.

First, then, I place among the maxims of Church and Parish Etiquette: Do not imagine that your next pew-neighbor must be your acquaintance. If she be a new-comer and a stranger in the congregation, bow to her in meeting in lobby or in aisle, gravely and yet cordially, recognizing her as a fellow-worshiper in a temple where all are welcome and equal. If you can be of service to her in finding the place of hymn or psalm, should she be at a loss, perform the neighborly service tactfully and graciously,—always because you are in the House of the All-Father, and are His children,—not that you seek to court a mortal's favor for any ulterior purpose.

CHURCH AND PARISH

In meeting her on the street let your salutation be ready, and pleasant, but not familiar. Don't "Hello, Nellie!" her, then or ever, while bearing in mind that non-recognition of one you know to be a regular attendant at the same church with yourself, yet a comparative stranger there, is unkind and un-Christian.

The case is different if you are the stranger. Friendly advances should come from the other side. If they are not made, there is nothing for you to do but to content yourself with the recollection that you go to church to worship God, not to make acquaintances. Never depend on your church-connection for society. If you find congenial associates there, rejoice in the happy circumstance and make the most of it. If you do not, do not rail at the congregation as "stiff and stuck up," at the church as a hollow sham, and the pastor as an unfaithful shepherd. The expectation on the part of some people that he should neglect the weightier matters of the law and the gospel, and prostitute his holy office by becoming a social pudding-stick for incorporating into "a jolly crowd" the divers elements of those to whom he is called to minister, disgraces humanity and civilization—not to say Christianity.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

CHURCH AND PARISH

Pew-hospitality has fallen into disuse to a great extent of late years, principally on account of the usher-service. The tendency of this partial desuetude is to make pew-owners utterly careless of their obligation to entertain strangers. Regard for the best interests of your particular church-organization should suggest to you as a duty that you notify the usher in your aisle of your willingness to receive strangers into your pews whenever the one or two vacant seats there may be needed. If your family fills them all every Sunday, you can not exercise the grace of hospitality.

When one or two, or three, are to be absent from either service, however, take the trouble to apprise the oft-sorely-perplexed official of the fact, and give him leave to bring to your door any one he has to seat. When the stranger appears, let him see at once that you esteem his coming a pleasure. Give him a good seat, a book and a welcome generally.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

By this behavior you commend to his favor your church, human nature, and the cause dearest to your heart.

If you are the visiting worshiper, and it is evident that the other occupants of the pew are the owners thereof, make courteous and grateful acknowledgment at the close of the service, of the hospitality you have received. I hope the return you get will not be the cold, supercilious stare one true gentlewoman had from the holder of a pew in the middle aisle of a fashionable church in New York. The guest put into Mrs. Haut Ton's pew, thanked the latter simply and gracefully for the opportunity given her of hearing an admirable sermon.

"Who are you that dare address me!" said the silent stare. "It is bad enough to have my pew invaded by an unvouched-for stranger without being subjected to the impertinence of speech!"

CHURCH AND PARISH

The last place upon God's earth where incivility and the arrogance of self-conceit are admissible is His house. "Be pitiful," writes the apostle who learned his code of manners from One who has been not irreverently called "the truest gentleman who ever lived." "Be pitiful; be courteous!"

The relations of parishioner and the pastor's family are often strained hard by the popular misconception of the social obligations existing—or that should exist—between them. In no "call" that I ever heard of is the clergyman enjoined to cater to the whims and vanities of exacting members by visits that are not demanded by spiritual or temporal needs, and which minister to nothing but the aforesaid jealous vanity. Send for a clergyman when his priestly offices are required. For the rest of his precious time let him come as he likes, and go whither he considers his duty calls him. He was a man before he took orders, and the man has social rights. Let him "neighbor," as old-fashioned folk used to say, with his kind.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The aforesaid "call" makes no mention of his family. If you like to call on them when they come to the parish, and if you find them congenial—your congeners in fact—keep up the association as you would with your doctor's, or your lawyer's family. That you belong to Doctor Barnabas' parish, that you are the wife or daughter of an officer in his church, gives you absolutely no claim on his wife or daughters beyond what you, individually, possess. To demand that Mrs. Barnabas, refined in every instinct, highly-educated and with tastes for what is best and highest in social companionship, should be bullied and patronized by Mrs. Million, a purse-proud vulgarian, unlearned and stupid, is sheer barbarity. Yet we see it—and worse—in every American church.

CHURCH AND PARISH

Do you, sensible and amenable reader, lead the way to better things; loosen at least one buckle of the harness that bows many a fine spirit to breaking, and makes "the Church" a smoke in the nostrils of unprejudiced outsiders. Separate ecclesiastical from social relations. Owe your right to call a fellow parishioner "friend," and to visit at manse or parsonage, or rectory, to what you are—not to the adventitious circumstance of being a member in good standing in a fashionable, or an unfashionable, church. Exact no consideration from those who belong with you to the household of faith on the ground of that spiritual "fellowship."

The position is false; the claim ignoble.

XXV

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG TO THE OLD

The pessimist, reading the heading of this chapter, would be inclined to ask if one writes nowadays of a lost quantity. While we do not consider the grace of courtesy as entirely lost, we are at times tempted to think that it has "gone before," and so far before that it is lost sight of by the rising generation.

The days have passed when the hoary head was a crown of glory, as the royal preacher declares. It is certain that if it is a crown, it is one before which the youth of the twentieth century do not bow.

Before we condemn the young unsparingly for their lack of reverence, we must look at the other side of the question. Today there are few old people. First, there is youth. That lasts almost until one is a grandparent; then one is middle-aged. No one is old,—at least few will acknowledge it. The woman of forty-five is on “the shady side of thirty,” she of sixty-five, is “on the down-slope from fifty.” And, even when the age is announced, one is reminded that “a woman is only as old as she feels.” There is sound common sense in all this. Can not we afford to snap our fingers at Father Time and his laws, when the law within ourselves tells us that we are young in heart, in feeling, in aims? So the principle that bids us shut our eyes at the figure on the milestone we are passing is a good one. As long as we feel fresh still for the journey, as long as every step is a pleasure, what difference if the walk has been five miles long or fifteen? We judge of the strain by the effect it has had on us. If we feel unwearied and ready for miles and miles ahead of us, who shall say that the walk has been ten miles long, when we are conscious in our energetic limbs that it has only been two delightful miles?

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The fact that no one is now old has its effect on the Young Person in our midst. She hesitates to say to the matron, "Take this seat, please!" when she knows that in her soul the matron will resent the insinuation that she is on the downward grade. Not long ago I witnessed the chagrin of a woman of thirty-five who rose and gave her seat in a stage to a woman who was, if one may judge by the false standard of appearances, at least fifteen years her senior. The elderly woman flushed indignantly:

"Pray keep your seat, madam!" she commanded in stentorian tones. "I may be gray-headed, but I am not old or decrepit!"

She of thirty-five had cast her pearls of courtesy before swine, and assuredly they had been trampled underfoot.

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG

I fancy that one reason gray hair is becoming fashionable is this desire to cling to youth. Every year more young women tell us that they are prematurely gray, and their sister-women add eagerly, "So many women are, nowadays!"

Our Young Person must, then, be very careful how she displays the feeling of reverence for age which, we would like to believe, is inherent in every well-regulated nature. She must exercise tact, without which no person shall have popularity.

One point in which Young America displays lamentable vulgarity is in the habit of interrupting older people. Interruptions, we of a former generation were taught, are rude. That is a forgotten fact in many so-called polite circles. And when people do not interrupt they seem to be waiting for the person speaking to finish what he has to say in order to "cut in" (no other expression describes it fitly) with some new and original remark. That is, apparently, the only reason that one listens to others,—just for the sake of having some one to answer. The world is full of things, and getting fuller every day, and unless one talks most of the time he will never be able to air his opinions on all points. And every one's opinion is of priceless value,—at least to himself. This seems to be the attitude of Young America. Yet in courtesy to the hoary head one should occasionally pause long enough to allow the owner thereof to express an opinion. Although one has passed fifty, one may, nevertheless, have sound judgment, and ideas on some subjects that are worth consideration. I wish young men and women would occasionally remember this.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The woman of sixty, or over, can really learn little of value from her granddaughter,—even when that granddaughter is a college graduate, and has all the arrogance of twenty years. Of course, grandmother may need enlightenment on college athletics, on golf, even, perhaps, on bridge,—although that is very doubtful, if she lives in a fashionable neighborhood. But, after all, these are not the greatest things of life. She would, perchance, be glad to listen to her young relative's accounts of her sports if she would take the trouble to tell the happenings that interest her, in a loving, respectful spirit. Our elderly woman does not like to be patronized, to be told that she dresses like an old fashion-plate, and that she is, to use the slang of the day, a "back number." The grandmother knows better. She has lived and she is sure that from her store of knowledge of life,—of men, women and things as they really are,—she could bring forth treasures, new and old, that would be of great help to the hot-headed, impulsive young girl about to risk all on the perilous journey that lies before her.

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I would, therefore, suggest that Our Girl practise deference toward her elders. At first she may not find it easy, but it is worth cultivating. It is, moreover, much more becoming than the arrogance and aggressiveness too common nowadays. There is something wrong when a person feels no respect for one who has attained to double or treble her years. There is something lacking. The collegians of both sexes would do well to turn their analytical minds on themselves, and, as improvement is the order of the day, add to their fund of becoming attainments the sweet, old-fashioned attribute of courtesy and reverence toward age.

It is easy, after all, if one will watch carefully, to do the little kind thing that makes for comfort, and not do it aggressively. It is not necessary to adjust a pillow at the elderly person's back as if she needed it. I saw a sweet woman put a pillow behind an invalid with such tact that the sufferer, who was acutely sensitive on the subject of her condition, did not suspect that her hostess had her illness in mind.

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG

"My dear," said this tactful woman, "if you are 'built' as I am, you must find that chair desperately uncomfortable without a cushion behind you! I simply will not sit in it without this little bit of a pillow wedged in at the small of my back. I find it so much more comfortable so, that I am sure you will."

And the cushion was adjusted. Could even supersensitive and suspicious Old Age have resented such attention?

Of course elderly people like to talk.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Why should they not be allowed to do it? The boy or girl listener is impatient of what he or she terms inwardly "garrulousness." Is not the prattle of youth as trying to old people? But, to do them justice, unless they are very crabbed, they listen to it kindly.

Unfortunately one seldom sees a young person rise and remain standing when an old person enters the room. Yet to loll back in a chair under such circumstances is one of the greatest rudenesses of which a girl or boy is capable.

Right here, may I put in a plea for the old man? In the first place, he is not as popular as the old woman. She is often beloved; he, poor soul! is too often endured. In very truth he is not so lovable as his lady-wife. He did not take the time while he was young to cultivate the little niceties of life as she did. Women have more regard for appearances than men have,

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG

and their life is not spent so often in counting-room and office; they are, in their daily life, surrounded by refined persons more than are their husbands; they do not have to talk by the hour with rough men, give orders to surly underlings, eat at lunch counters, and join in the morning and evening rush-for-life to get a seat in the crowded car or train where the law is "Sauve qui peut!" or, in brutal English "Every man for himself and"—no matter who—"for the hindmost!" All these things, after years and years, influence the man or woman. It is inevitable. It even affects the inner life. The Book of books tells us that though the outward man perish, the inward man is renewed day by day. Sometimes the inward man is hardly worth renewing at the end of a life of such rush and mad haste after the elusive dollar that there has been no place for the gentle amenities of existence. Therefore, as the man gets old, his nature comes to the front, and, too often, the courtesies that were pinned on him by a loving wife, and kept polished up by her, drop off and he does not want to bother to have them re-adjusted. Consequently, he often has habits that are not pretty. He is irascible; he is intolerant with youth, and, now that he is laid aside, he likes to tell of what he did when he was as active as the young men about him. Dear young people, let him talk! Listen to him, and remember that at your age he was just as agreeable as you. Consider, too, that if, when you are old, you would escape being the self-absorbed being you think him, you would do well now to begin to avoid the selfishness and self-absorption that you find make the old man objectionable. Practise on him, and he will in his old age still be doing a good work.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

It is not pleasant to feel old, to know that you are set aside in the minds of others as "a has-been." There are few more cruel lessons given to human beings to learn in this hard school we call life. And this task has to be learned when strength and courage wane, and the grasshopper is a burden. If young people would only make it unnecessary for the older person to acquire it! It lies with youth to make the declining years of those near the end of the journey a weary waiting for that end, or a peaceful loitering on a road that shall be a foretaste of a Land in which no one ever grows old.

COURTESY FROM THE YOUNG

XXVI

MISTRESS AND MAID

They were not foreordained from all eternity to be sworn enemies. Could that fact be impressed on the mind of each, there would be less friction between them.

Where, in this day and in this country, is found the family servant who follows the fortunes of her employers through adversity and evil report, asking only to be allowed to live among those who have shown her kindness, who have taught her all she knows, and who have been kinder to her than her own family have been? She may exist in the imagination of the optimistic novelist,—but not in reality. Once in a great while such a servant, well-advanced in life, is found,—but she is a rara avis.

MISTRESS AND MAID

It is trite to say that in this country the servant matter is all askew. We know that, and it is incumbent on us to make the best of matters as we find them. To do this both mistress and maid should be impressed with the fact expressed in the opening sentence of this chapter. As matters now are, the maid sees in the mistress a possible tyrant, one who will exact the pound of flesh, and, if the owner thereof be not on her guard, will insist on a few extra ounces thrown in for good measure. The mistress sees in the suspicious girl a person who will, if the chance be offered her, turn against her employer, will do the smallest amount of work possible for the highest wages she can demand; break china, smash glass, shut her eyes to dirt in the corners, and accept the first opportunity that offers itself to leave her present place and get one that demands fewer duties and larger pay.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

One of the great mistakes of the mistress is that she lets the state of affairs annoy her. Why should she? The maid is not "her own kind," and the woman is wrong who judges the uneducated, ill-reared hireling by the rules that govern the better classes. The servant and the employer have been reared in different worlds, and to ignore this fact is folly. How often do we see the mistress "hurt" because of Norah's lack of consideration for her and her time, and vexed because the servant fails to appreciate any kindness shown her? Let her accept the condition of affairs as what the slangy boy would call "part of the game," and not waste God-given nerve and energy in worrying over it. If she gets reasonably good return in work for the wages she pays, she should be content. To expect gratitude of the working-class is, too often, but hunting for the proverbial needle in the stack of hay. Blessed is she who does not seek it, for she will never be disappointed.

MISTRESS AND MAID

Nor should the mistress expect a friend and counselor in the maid. Once in a while, one meets a servant who, by some accident, is capable of discerning the refinement of nature in her employer, and of respecting it. In this case, she may care more for the employer for knowing that she is trusted. The mistress who, acknowledging this, makes a confidante of her maid, is running a great risk. It is an unnatural state of affairs, and unnatural relations are never likely to be successful or happy.

Yes! there is no doubt about it,—the system of domestic service is all wrong, and it grows worse. Except in a few exceptional cases, the distrust of the housewife for the maid-of-all-work, the suspicious attitude of said maid toward her nominal mistress, increase with each passing year.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The evil is so great that the only remedy lies in each household doing by itself the best that lies within its power to change the current. Were each housewife in the country to strive to better matters, the change would soon be apparent.

It is a fact that, by appealing to the best in human nature—be that nature American, Irish, German or Scandinavian—we elicit the best from our fellow creatures. Let the mistress, then, try to believe in the good intentions of her servant, or, if she can not really believe in them, let her intend to do so. Her attitude of mind will, unconsciously to herself, make itself felt upon her hireling. Let her take it for granted that the "new girl" means to stay, is honest, trustworthy, and anxious to please, and let her talk to her as if all these things were foregone conclusions. She may show by gentle manner and kindly consideration that Norah or Gretchen is a sister-woman, not a machine. If the washing or ironing happens to be heavy, let her suggest a simple dessert of fruit, instead of the pudding that had been planned. And if the maid's heavy eyes and forced smile show that she is not well, let the mistress, for a brief moment, put herself in the place of the hireling, and think what she would want done for her under similar circumstances. She will then suggest that some of the work that can be deferred be laid aside until the following day, or offer to give a hand in making the beds or dusting the rooms.

MISTRESS AND MAID

"But," declares the systematic housewife, "I do not hire a servant,—and then do my own housework!"

No! Neither did you hire your maid-of-all-work to be a sick nurse,—but were you ill it would be she who would cook your meals, carry up your tray and take care of you, unless you were so ill as to need the services of a trained attendant. Bear this in mind, and show the maid that you do bear it in mind.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

It is a more difficult matter to get the servant to look at the subject from this standpoint. She has not been educated to regard things from both sides. It is the custom of her cult to meet and, in conclave assembled, to compare the faults, foibles and failings of their employers. And when they do commend an employer for kind treatment it is, as a rule, only to make the lot of another servant look darker by contrast with the bright one depicted.

"Oh, me dear!" exclaims Bridget on entering Norah's kitchen at eight-thirty in the evening and finding her still washing dishes. "And is this the hour that a poor, hard-working girl is kept up to wash the dinner-things? There are no such doin's in my kitchen, I tell ye! My lady knows that I ain't made of iron, and she knows, too, that I would not put up with such an imposition!"

MISTRESS AND MAID

The fact that Norah's mistress has helped her all day with the work, that she is herself the victim of unexpected company; that she regrets as much as Norah can that the unavoidable detention at the office of the master of the house has made dinner later than usual, does not deter the suddenly-enlightened girl from feeling herself a martyr, and the seed of hate and distrust is quick to bear fruit in an offensive manner and a sulky style of speech.

She does not pause to take into consideration that, while she may just now be doing extra work, she also receives daily extra kindnesses and consideration that were not agreed upon in the contract of her hire.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

There are just two rules that make the relations of mistress and maid tolerable or pleasant. One is that everything be put on a purely business basis—an arrangement, we may remark, that the maid would be the first to resent. If she is willing to give only what she is paid for, she must be willing that no margin be allowed to her, and that she be expected to live up to her part of the contract, fulfilling every duty as well as any servant possibly could, expecting no allowances or indulgences, and receiving just the “times off” for which she bargains. Only that, and no more! She would soon weary of the bargain.

The other rule, and the better, is that a little practical Christianity be brought into the relationship,—that the maid do her best, cheerfully and willingly, and that the mistress treat her in the same spirit, giving her little pleasures when it is within her power to do so, trying to smooth the rough places, and to make crooked things straight. Then, let each respect the other and make the best of the situation. If it is intolerable, it may be changed. If not intolerable, let each remember that there is no law, human or divine, that demands that the contract stand for ever—and let each dissolve the partnership when she wishes to do so. Until this is done, mistress and maid should keep silence as to the faults of the other, trying to see rather the virtues than the failings of a sister-woman.

MISTRESS AND MAID

I wish that some word of mine with regard to this matter could sink into the mind of the mistress. I fear that it will never be possible to train the maid not to talk of her mistress to her friends. But the employer should be above discussing her servants with outsiders. This is one of the most glaring faults of conversation,—one of the most flagrant breaches of conversational etiquette among women of refinement. The hackneyed warning that the three D's to be banished from polite conversation are Dress, Disease and Domesticity, has not been heeded by the average housewife, so far as the last D is concerned. She will fill willing and unwilling ears with the account of her servants' impertinences, of their faults, of how they are leaving without giving warning, and of how ungrateful all servants are, until one would think that her own soul was not above that of the laundress, chambermaid and cook, whose failings she dissects in public. Such talk reminds one of the conversation with which Bridget regales an admiring and indignant coterie. With the uneducated hireling, it may be pardonable; in the case of the educated employer it is inexcusable.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

XXVII

A FINANCIAL STUDY FOR OUR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE

Thirty years ago I held a heart-to-heart talk with reasonable, well-meaning husbands on the vital subject of the monetary relations between man and wife.

I quote a paragraph the force of which has been confirmed to my mind by the additional experience and observation of three more decades than were set to my credit upon the age-roll when I penned the words:

“I have studied this matter long and seriously, and I offer you as the result of my observation in various walks of life, and careful calculation of labor and expense, the bold assertion that every wife who performs her part, even tolerably well, in whatsoever rank of society, more than earns her living, and that this should be an acknowledged fact with both parties to the marriage contract. The idea of her dependence upon her husband is essentially false and mischievous, and should be done away with, at once and for ever. It has crushed self-respect out of thousands of women; it has scourged thousands from the marriage-altar to the tomb, with a whip of scorpions; it has driven many to desperation and crime."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

I have headed this chapter "A Financial Study for Our Young Married Couple," because I have little hope of changing the opinions and custom of the mature benedict. One youthful wedded pair should come to a rational mutual understanding in the first week of house-keeping as to an equitable division of the income on which they are to live together.

If you—our generic "John"—shrink from coming down to "cold business" before the echoes of the wedding-bells have died in ear and in heart, call the discussion a "Matter of Marriage Etiquette," and approach it confidently. And do you, Mrs. John, meet his overtures in a straightforward, sensible way, with no foolish shrinking from the idea of even apparent independence of him to whom you have intrusted your person and your happiness.

OUR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE

It is, of course, your part to harken quietly to whatever proposition your more businesslike spouse may make as to the just partition, not of his means, which are likewise yours, but of the sums you are respectively to handle and to spend. Do not accept what he apportions for your use as a benefaction. He has endowed you with all his worldly goods, and the law confirms the endowment to a certain extent. You are a co-proprietor—not a pensioner. If, while the glamour of Love's

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Young Dream envelops and dazes you, you are chilled by what seems sordid and commonplace, take the word of an old campaigner for it that the time will come when your "allowance" will be a factor in happiness as well as in comfort.

May I quote to John another and a longer extract from the thirty-year-old "Talk concerning Allowances?"

"Set aside from your income what you adjudge to be a reasonable and liberal sum for the maintenance of your household in the style suitable for people of your means and position. Determine what purchases you will yourself make, and what shall be intrusted to your wife, and put the money needed for her proportion into her care as frankly as you take charge of your share. Try the experiment of talking to her as if she were a business partner. Let her understand what you can afford to do, and what you can not. If

OUR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE

in this explanation you can say 'we' and 'ours,' you will gain a decided moral advantage, although it may be at the cost of masculine prejudice and pride of power. Impress upon her mind that a certain sum, made over to her apart from the rest, is hers absolutely, not a present from you, but her honest earnings, and that you would not be honest were you to withhold it. And do not ask her 'if that will do?' any more than you would address the question to any other woman. With what cordial detestation wives regard that brief query which drops, like a sentence of the Creed, from husbandly lips, I leave your spouse to tell you. Also, if she ever heard of a woman who answered anything but 'Yes!' "

Carrying out the idea of co-partnership, should your wife exceed her allowance, running herself, and consequently you, into debt, meet the exigency as you would a similar indiscretion on the part of a young and inexperienced member of your firm. Treat the extravagance as a mistake, not a fault. Not one girl-wife in one hundred who has not been a wage-earner has had any experience in the management of finances. The father gives the daughter money when she (or her mother) tells him that she needs it, or would like to have it. When it is gone he is applied to for more. She has been a beneficiary all her life, usually an irresponsible, thoughtless recipient of what is lavished or doled out to her, according to the parental whim and means.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Teach her business methods, tactfully, yet decidedly.

One young wife I wot of began keeping the expense-book presented to her by her husband with these entries:

“January fourth. Received $75.00 (Seventy-five dollars).

OUR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE

January sixth. Spent $70.25 shopping, etc.

“Balance—$4.75 set down to Profit and Loss.”

After fifteen years of married life her husband died, bequeathing the whole of a large estate to her, and making her sole guardian of their three children,—a confidence fully justified by her conduct of the affairs thus committed to her.

“My husband trained me patiently and thoroughly,” she said to one who complimented her financial sagacity. “I was an ignoramus when we were married.”

Then laughingly she related the “profit and loss” incident.

It is the fashion to sneer at women’s business methods. Who are to blame for their blunders?

Should your wife play with her allowance, as a child with a new toy, let censure fall upon those who have kept her in leading-strings. Teach her gradually to comprehend her responsibilities. The sense of them will steady her unless she be exceptionally feather-brained. Be she wasteful or frugal, the allowance you have made to her is as honestly hers to have, to hold or to spend, as the third of your estate which the law will give her in the event of your death.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

“Settlements,” according to the English sense of the word, are not yet common in the United States. One American father, whose daughter was on the eve of marriage with an Englishman, ordered the prospective groom out of the house when the foreigner queried innocently as to the “settlements” the future father-in-law intended to make upon his child.

A man with a reputation for fortune-hunting had nearly rid himself of the slur by insisting that his fiancée's large estate should be settled absolutely upon herself. Her quondam guardian put a different complexion on the generous act by divulging the circumstance that the husband, by the same "settlement," had made himself sole trustee of his wife's property of every description.

OUR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE

While there are, perhaps, fewer purely mercenary marriages in our country than in any other, it can not be denied that a large proportion of enterprising young men act, consciously, or unwittingly, on the advice of the Scotchman who warned his son not to marry for money, but in seeking a wife, "to gae where money is."

"Is he marrying her fortune, or herself?" asked one gossip of another when an approaching bridal was spoken of.

"They say he is very much in love with her!" was the answer, uttered dubiously. "I fancy, however, that he would have repressed his passion, if she were a poor girl."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Which brings us to a much more delicate matter than the division of the income earned, or inherited, by the bridegroom.

It is a fact that may have much significance—or none—that the bride makes no mention of endowing her husband with all, or any portion, of her worldly goods. It is likewise significant that laws (of man's devising) take it for granted that her property goes with her, so that in most of our states it is his without other act of gift than the marriage ceremony.

The man who marries for money has no scruples as to the acceptance and the use of it. Sometimes it is squandered; sometimes, but not often, it is hoarded; most frequently "it goes into the husband's business" and is invested by him for the benefit of himself and his family.

OUR YOUNG MARRIED COUPLE

The nicer issue with which we have to do is how our conscientious John, who would have married his best girl if she had not possessed one penny in her own right, is to comport himself with regard to the fortune, modest or considerable, which she brings to him as dowry.

Briefly and clearly—as a trust not to be committed to the chances and changes of his individual ventures. No investment should be made of his wife's money without her knowledge and full consent. In all that he does where her funds are involved, he should be her actuary, and what profits result from "operations" with her funds should be settled on herself and children. By this course alone can he retain his self-respect, his reputation as an honorable man, and certainly disabuse his wife's mind of any possible suspicion that his affection was not wholly for her.

XXVIII

MORE ABOUT ALLOWANCES

The arrangement between husband and wife concerning money matters should be no more definite and business-like than that subsisting between father and children. To be taught early the real value of money is a distinct assistance to financial integrity in later life. To have in one's possession, even as a child, a sum wholly one's own, conduces to a feeling of self-respect and independence. As soon as a child is old enough to know what money is and that, for money, things are bought and sold, he should have an allowance, be it only a penny a week. Suggestions, but not commands, as to its expenditure should accompany the gift. Gradually the weekly or monthly amount should be increased, and instructions should be given as to its possible use.

MORE ABOUT ALLOWANCES

A child may be advised properly to divide his small funds between pleasure and charity, or between the things bought solely for his own benefit and those for the benefit of others, the value of the expenditure, in each case, being dependent on the freedom of his choice. As he grows older he should be taught to expend money for necessities. He should be trained to buy his own clothes and other personal belongings. This sort of training, often disastrously neglected, is of far more practical value than many things taught in the schools. The feeling of responsibility engendered in children or young people by trusting them with a definite amount of money for certain general purposes, can scarcely fail of a happy result. It binds them to a performance of duty while it confers, at the same time, a delicious sense of freedom. An allowance for necessities gives its recipient liberty of choice in expenditure, but the choice must be judicious or the recipient suffers. This it does not take him long to find out.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Many a man who refuses his sons and daughters allowances, permits them to run up large bills at the various shops where they trade. Exactly what the amount of these bills will be he never knows, except that it is sure to be larger than he wishes. The children of such a man never have any ready money. They do not know what to count on and, in consequence, not being trusted, they exercise all their ingenuity to outwit the head of the family and to trick from him exactly as much money as possible. A young woman with somewhat extravagant tendencies, who belonged to the class of the unallowanced, begged her father for a new gown. She pleaded and pleaded in vain. Finally, he said if she had anything that could be made over, he would stand for the bill. This word to the wise was sufficient. She took the waist-band of an old gown to her modiste who built upon it a beautiful frock for which she likewise sent in a beautiful bill. Fortunately this daughter had a father who was a connoisseur in wit, and who could appreciate a joke even at his own expense. But the example will serve, as well as another, to illustrate the lengths to which a woman may resort when not treated as a reasonable and reasoning creature about money matters.

MORE ABOUT ALLOWANCES

“I would rather have one-half the amount of money of which I might otherwise have the use, and have it in the form of an allowance,” said a young woman who was discussing, with other young women, the subject of expenditures. “If I know what I am to have, I can spend it to much better advantage. I can exercise some method in my purchases. If I don't know, I am likely to spend a large sum on some two or three articles with the hope that more is coming. Suddenly and unexpectedly father sets his foot down on further bills, and there I am with a dream of a hat but no shoes, or with a ball-gown and not a coat to my back."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Money plays some part in the life of every human being belonging to a civilized nation. The question of successful and skilful expenditure is a vital question for the majority of people. It is not a question that can be solved without training. Yet we educate children in various unimportant matters, and, for the most part, leave this of money untouched. In no way can a child or a young person be taught so readily and so quickly the proper use of money as by limiting his expenses to a certain sum, which sum he nevertheless controls.

XXIX

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS THAT ARE BIG THINGS

Seeing the prevalence of rudeness in human intercourse, one is forced to believe that the natural man is a cross-grained brute. That breeding and culture often convert him into a creature of gentleness and refinement speaks volumes for the powers of such influence. The average man seems to take a savage delight in occasionally giving vent to brutal or cutting speech. To yield thus to a primal and savage instinct is to prove that breeding and refinement are lacking.

There are certain business men who, during business hours, meet one with a brusque manner that would not be pardoned in a petty tradesman. If we visit them on their own business,—not as intruders,—it is the same. They seem to feel that a certain disagreeable humor is an indispensable accompaniment to the occasion. Such insolence is usually taken as a matter of course by the recipient, who immediately feels penitent at the thought of his intrusion.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Too often the physician who is not a gentleman-at-heart, trades on the fact that his patients regard him as a necessity, and is as disagreeable as his temper at the moment demands that he shall be. He intimates that he is so busy that he has scarcely time to give his advice; that the person he attends had no business to get ill, and, in fact, makes himself generally so disagreeable it is to be wondered at that the sufferer ever calls in this man again. Yet in a drawing-room, and talking to a well person, this man's manner would be charming. One sometimes feels that sick people and physicians might well be classed as "patients" and "impatients."

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

It is but fair to remark that, to the credit of physicians, it is not always those who have had the largest experience, or who stand at the head of their profession who deserve to come under the above condemnation. The men to whom the world looks for advice in the matters of which they have made a study, and who are sure of their standing, are often the gentlest, the most courteous.

Our busy men have need to remember that the man who is gentle at heart shows that gentleness in counting-room and office as well as in drawing-room and dining-room, and the fact that the person calling on him for business purposes or advice is a woman, should compel him to show the politeness which —"is to do and say

The kindest thing in the kindest way."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

On the other hand, common courtesy and consideration for another demand that the person who intrudes on a man when he is busy should state his business briefly, and then take his departure. Only the busy man or woman knows the agony that comes with the knowledge that the precious moments of the working hours are being frittered away on that which is unnecessary, when necessary work is standing by, begging for the attention it deserves and should receive. Let him who would be careful on points of etiquette remember that there is an etiquette of working hours as well as of the hours of leisure and sociability.

Perhaps the lapse from good breeding most common in general society is the asking of questions. One is aghast at the evidence of impertinent curiosity that parades under the guise of friendly interest. Interrogations as to the amount of one's income, occupation, and even as to one's age and general condition, are legion and inexcusable. Every one who writes—be he a well-known author or a penny-a-liner—knows only too well the query, "What are you writing now?" and knows, too, the feeling of impotent rage awakened by this query. Yet, unless one would be as rude as his questioner, he must smile inanely and make an evasive answer.

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

To ask no question does not, of necessity, mean a lack of interest in the person with whom one is conversing. A polite and sympathetic attention will show a more genuine and appreciative interest than much inquisitiveness.

While we are on this subject, it may be well to mention that a lack of interest in what is being told one is a breach of courtesy that is all too common. Often one sees a man or woman deliberately pick up a book or paper, open it and glance over it while his interlocutor is in the midst of a story he means to make interesting. If the conversation is interesting, it deserves the undivided attention of both persons; if what is being said is not worth attention, the listener should at least respect the speaker's intention to please. There is nothing more dampening to conversational enthusiasm, or more "squelching" to eloquence, than to find the eyes of the person with whom one is talking fixed on a book or magazine, which he declares he is simply "looking over," or at whose pictures he is "only glancing."

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

A good listener is in himself an inspiration. Even if one is not attracted by the person to whom one is talking, one should assume interest. This rule also holds good with regard to the attention given to a public speaker. In listening to a preacher or to a lecturer, one should look at him steadily,—not allowing the eyes to wander about the building and along ceiling and walls. This habit of a seemingly fixed attention is easily cultivated. If one is really interested in the address, it aids in the enjoyment and comprehension of it to watch the speaker's facial play and gestures. If one is bored, one may yet fix the eyes upon the face of the person to whom one is supposed to be listening, and continue to think one's own thoughts and to plan one's own plans. And certainly the person who is exerting himself for the entertainment of his audience will speak better and be more comfortable for the knowledge that eyes belonging to some one who is apparently absorbed in his address, are fixed upon him.

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

Conditions under which otherwise polite persons feel that they can be rude are those attendant on a telephone-conversation. With the first "Hello" many a man drops his courtesy as if it were a garment that did not fit him. And women do the same. If the "Central" were to record all that she (it seems to be usually a "she") hears, and all that is said to her, our ears would tingle. True it is, that she often is surly, pert, and ill-mannered. But if she is ill-bred, that is no reason for the "connecting parties" to follow suit. Were one really amenable to arrest for profanity over the wires, the police would be kept busy if they performed their duty.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

But putting aside the underbred who swears, let us listen for a moment to the so-called courteous person,—for he is courteous under ordinary circumstances:

"Hello! Central! how long are you going to keep me waiting? I told you I wanted '3040 Spring.' Yes! I did say that! and if you would pay attention to your business you would know it! I never saw such a worthless set as they have at that Central office. Got them, did you? It's time! Hello, 3040, is that you? Well, why the devil didn't you send that stuff around this morning? Going to, right away, are you? Well, it's time you did. What ails you people, anyway? No!! Central!!! I'm not through, and I wish to heaven you'd let this line alone when I'm talking," and so on, ad infinitum.

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

Is all this worth while, and is it necessary? And must women, who, as they call themselves ladies, do not give vent to expressed profanity, so far copy the manners of the so-called stronger sex that they scream like shrews over the telephone?

Calling one day on a woman whom I had met with pleasure half-a-dozen times, I was the unwilling listener to her conversation with her grocer. She began by rating Central for not asking "What number?" as soon as the receiver was lifted from the hook. Having warmed up to business on this unseen girl, she got still more heated with the grocer at the other end of the wire. She had ordered one kind of apples, and he had sent her another, and the slip of paper containing the list of her purchases had an item of a five-cent box of matches that she had not ordered. With regard to all of which she expostulated shrilly and with numerous exclamations that were as near as she dared come to masculine explosives,—such as "Great Heavens!" "Goodness gracious!" and so forth. After threatening to transfer her custom to another grocer, and refusing to accept the apology of the abject tradesman, she compromised by saying that she would give him another trial, and hung up the receiver, coming into the parlor and beginning conversation once more in the even society voice I had invariably heard before from her.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

That the ways of telephones and the persons who operate them are trying, no one can deny,—least of all, the writer of this chapter, who lives in a house with one of these maddening essentials to human comfort. But the loss of temper that manifests itself in outward speech is not a requisite of the proper appreciation and use of the telephone. It is nothing less than a habit, and a pernicious one,—this way we have of talking into the transmitter. Let us remember that courtesy pays better than curses, and politeness better than profanity. If not, then let us have poorer service from Central and preserve our self-respect.

A rudeness of which people who should know better are frequently guilty is that of criticizing a dear friend of the person to whom one is talking. This is not only ill-mannered, but actually unkind, and one of many flagrant violations of the Golden Rule. If a man loves his friend, do not call his attention to that friend's failing, nor twit him on his fondness for such a person. He is happier for not seeing the failings, and if the friendship brings him any happiness, or makes life even a little pleasanter for him, do not be guilty of the cruelty of clouding that happiness. If the man does see the faults of him he loves, and loyally ignores them, pretend that you are not aware of the foibles toward which he would have you believe him blind. The knowledge of the peccadilloes of those in whom we trust comes only too soon; we need not hurry on the always-disappointing, often bitter knowledge.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Perhaps lack of breeding shows in nothing more than in the manner of receiving an invitation. Should a man say, patronizingly, "Oh, perhaps I can arrange to come,"—when you invite him to some function, write him down as unworthy of another invitation. He is lacking in respect to you and in appreciation of the honor you confer on him in asking him to partake of the hospitality you have devised.

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

"Really," protested one man plaintively, "I am very tired! I have been out every night for two weeks, and now you want me for to-morrow night. I am doubtful whether I ought to come. I am so weary that I feel I need rest."

The stately woman who had asked him to her house, smiled amusedly:

"Pray let me settle your doubts for you," she said, "and urge you not to neglect the rest nature demands. Your first duty is to her, not to me."

The man was too obtuse or too conceited to perceive the veiled sarcasm, and to know that the invitation was withdrawn.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

Unless one receives special permission from the person giving an invitation to hold the matter open for some good and sufficient reason, one should accept or decline a verbal invitation as soon as it is given. If circumstances make this impossible, one should apologize for hesitating, saying, "I am so anxious to come that I am going to ask your permission to send you my answer later, after I ascertain if my husband has no engagement for that evening,"—or some such form. The would-be hostess will readily grant such a request.

It may seem far-fetched to speak of ingratitude as a breach of etiquette, but the lack of acknowledgment of favors is very much like it. The man who accepts all done for him as his due, who forgets the "thank you" in return for the trifling favor, is not a gentleman—in that respect, at least. The young men and young women of to-day are too often spoiled or heedless, taking pretty attentions offered them as matters of course, and as their right.

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

In this chapter on miscellaneous etiquette it may be well to enforce what is said elsewhere with regard to the respect every man should show to women. For instance, every man who really respects the women of his family will remove his hat when he enters the house. There are, however, men who kiss these same women with covered heads.

In a well-known play acted by a traveling company some years ago in a small town, the hero, standing in a garden, told the heroine he loved her, was accepted by her, and bent to kiss her, without removing the conventional derby from his blond pate. All sentiment was destroyed for the spectators when irate Hibernian accents sounded forth from the gallery with: "Suppose ye take off yer hat, ye ill-mannered blokey!"

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

The Irishman was in the right.

Before closing this chapter on miscellaneous points of etiquette, I would say a word to those who, through bashfulness or self-consciousness, do the things they ought not to do and leave undone those things which they ought to do. They are so uncomfortable in society, so afraid of not appearing as they should, and so much absorbed in wondering how they look and act, and wishing that they did better, that they are guilty of the very acts of omission and commission they would guard against.

If I could give one rule to the bashful it would be, Forget yourself and your affairs in interest in others and their affairs. Be so fully occupied noticing how well others appear and trying to make everybody about you comfortable, that you have no time to think of your behavior. You will then not be guilty of any flagrant breach of etiquette. The most courteous women I have ever known, those whose manners were a charm to all whom they met, were those who were self-forgetful and always watching for opportunities to make other people comfortable. Such are the queens of society.

A FEW OF THE LITTLE THINGS

XXX

SELF-HELP AND OBSERVATION

To the uninstructed, socially, the bare rules and conventions regulating social life seem often meaningless and arbitrary. A careful consideration of these conventions, such as it has been the aim of this book to give, shows that no one of them is without a reason for its being. The classification, however, of social forms together with the reasons governing these forms, does not provide a body of knowledge sufficient to serve as guide in the matter of comporting oneself easily and to advantage socially. There are many situations and points of behavior that it is impossible for a book of etiquette to cover. The laws laid down are only a small social capital. They discuss the more obvious matters of social contact. Numerous points,—and these of the finer sort,—must be left without comment. In the treatment of these points and problems the person desirous of solving them properly must rely largely on his own good sense. One must apply to social exigencies the same methods of reasoning that one applies in meeting the other exigencies of life. In a word, one must resort to the principle of self-help.

SELF-HELP AND OBSERVATION

Much, too, and this in the pleasantest fashion, may be done to extend one's knowledge of good form by observation of people who have unusual tact and social discrimination. In every city, town and village, there are such persons who are distinguished above their fellow citizens by social instinct, by the talent for performing gracefully and acceptably the offices of society. In differing degrees, but still perceptibly, these people, like the painter, the musician, the poet, are marked by a taste and a thirst for perfection. To render social life as interesting, as charming, as beautiful as possible, to make the social machinery run smoothly and without friction,—this is their aim. Such people give quality to social intercourse. They observe the little amenities of life with grace. They know how to enter a room and how to leave it. They convey by the bow with which they greet one on the street the proper degree of acquaintanceship or friendship. They dress with propriety. They take time by the forelock in the adoption of new devices for the entertainment of their friends. Their parties are the prettiest; their houses are the most popular. Not necessarily clever of speech, they are clever in small and charming activities. They have a marked talent for all the little graces that make social intercourse easy and delightful. This talent, of course, can not be communicated, but much may be learned by watching its operation. Certainly one can gain from it a knowledge of particulars, of how to perform certain definite acts, even if the conquest of the method is impossible.

EVERYDAY ETIQUETTE

SELF-HELP AND OBSERVATION

It is not difficult in any community to discover people who approach more or less nearly the type described. They have a recognized distinction. To watch them, and, by this means, to wrest from them a part at least of their secret, is the surest way for the individual, timid or unversed socially, to discover his own social power and to increase it.

THE END

Index

INDEX

Accepting invitations	116
Accounts, keeping	316
Acknowledging gifts	95, 101
Acknowledging invitations	1, 4, 7, 9
Addressing invitations	6
Addressing letters	30
Afternoon receptions	42
Allowances, importance of	322
Allowances: children's weekly sums	322
Allowances, expenditure of	326
Allowances, value of	323
Anniversaries	50
Announcements, wedding	76
Answering letters	25, 35
Arrival at functions	43
"At Home" days	16
"At Homes," invitations to	2
"At Homes" of brides	77
Attendants, wedding	56, 67
Automobiling, etiquette of	221
Bachelor dinners	110
Bachelor hospitality	103
Bachelor hospitality: chaperon required	106
Bachelor hospitality: engaging chaperon for	106

I N D E X

Bachelor hospitality: form of entertaining	104
Bachelor hospitality: issuing invitations	107
Bachelor receptions	107
Bashfulness	342
Birthday gifts	98
Boarding-house, etiquette of	200
Bowing	188-191
Bouquets, bridal	74
Breakfast, wedding	57, 74
Bridal dress	70
Bruskness	327
Business courtesy	330
Calling cards	13
Calls	15
Calls: "At Home" days	16
Calls: leaving cards	19
Calls, returning	23
Calls, social obligation of	15
Calls to offer sympathy	22
Cards	13
Cards for matron	14
Cards for men	15
Cards for mourning	20
Cards for young women	14
Cards, style for calling	13
Cards: when calling	19
Ceremony, wedding	62, 69
Chaperon	85
Chaperon at theaters	88

I N D E X

Chaperon, duties of	85, 88
Chaperon, excursions with	89
Chaperon, necessity of	86
Chaperon, obligation to	90
Children	256
Children at hotels	207
Children, authority over	262
Children, behavior of	261
Children, indulgence to	257
Children, obedience of	267
Children, place of	260
Children, traveling with	263
Christening gifts	98
Christening parties	52
Christmas gifts	100
Church acquaintances	280
Church companionship	278
Church etiquette	277
Church etiquette: making friends	281
Church etiquette: pastor and parish	285
Church etiquette: pew hospitality	283
Church etiquette: visiting congregations	284
Church etiquette: welcoming strangers	284
Coming out	78
Coming-out parties	42
Condolence	33, 152
Conduct toward guest	139, 144
Congratulations	33
Congratulations, wedding	63, 73

INDEX

Correspondence, value of	26
Courtesy	288
Courtesy: aged men	296
Courtesy: value of deference	296
Courtesy: value of discrimination	291
Courtesy due elders	288
Criticism, rudeness of	337
Dancing parties	46
Débutante	78
Débutante, age of	79
Débutante, apparel of	81, 83
Débutante, coming out	78
Débutante, conduct of	83
Débutante, significance of	79
Declining invitations	9, 11
Dinner, invitations to	9
Dinner parties	36, 39
Disagreeableness	328
Driving, etiquette of	228
Duty of hospitality	145, 151
Duty of maid	300
Duty of mistress	300
Duty to elders	288
Embracing	195
Engagements	49
Engagement gifts	97
Escorting women	194
Evening receptions	41
Expenses, wedding	56

INDEX

Finances of young married couples	311
Finances: accounts	316
Finances: advantages of agreement	315
Finances: advice to wife	313
Finances: allowance for wife	314
Finances: investing wife's money	321
Finances: marrying for money	320
Finances: wife earns allowance	312
Finger bowls, use of	172
Flowers for funerals	153
Fork, use of	169, 175
Functions	36
Functions: afternoon receptions	42
Functions: anniversaries	50
Functions: announcing engagements	49
Functions: christening parties	52
Functions: coming-out parties	42
Functions: dancing parties	46
Functions: dinner parties	36, 39
Functions: evening receptions	41
Functions: how to conduct oneself	39, 46
Functions: leaving	40, 43
Functions: luncheons	40
Funerals	155
Gentleness, value of	329
Gifts	92
Gifts, acknowledging	95
Gifts, appropriate	93
Gifts, birthday	98

INDEX

Gifts, christening	98
Gifts, Christmas	100
Gifts for engagements	97
Gifts for weddings	92
Gifts for young women	97
Gifts, lists of	101
Gifts, marking silver	94
Girls, etiquette for	245
Girls, etiquette for: free and easy behavior	250
Girls, etiquette for: impropriety of advances	251
Girls, etiquette for: losing respect	247
Girls, etiquette for: maidenly dignity	254
Girls, etiquette for: permitting liberties	249
Girls, plain talk to	246
Golf, etiquette of	217
Guests at hotels	200
Hat, lifting of	189
Home, etiquette in	176
Home, etiquette in: breaches of manner	182
Home, etiquette in: courteous attentions	184
Home, etiquette in: family table	179
Home, etiquette in: politeness essential	178
Home, etiquette in: recognizing others' rights	186
Home, etiquette in: respect necessary	178
Horseback riding, etiquette of	228
Hospitality	145
Hospitality, bachelor	103
Hospitality, duty of	145, 151
Hospitality, mutual obligations of	147

INDEX

Hospitality, return of	148
Hospitality to strangers	150
Hostess at table	166, 173
Hotel, children in	207
Hotel etiquette	200
Hotel etiquette: conduct toward waiter	204
Hotel etiquette: criticizing	204
Hotel etiquette: dining-room conduct	203
Hotel etiquette: instructions for guest	200
Hotel etiquette: loud talking	202
Hotel etiquette: tipping	206
Hotel gossip	212
Hotel, summer	209
How to write letters	24
Indulgent parents	257
Ingratitude, display of	340
Interest, display of	331
Investing wife's money	321
Invitations	1
Invitations, acknowledging	1, 4, 7, 9
Invitations, addressing	6
Invitations, declining	9, 11
Invitations for an "At Home"	2
Invitations for card parties	5
Invitations for church weddings	5
Invitations for dinners	9
Invitations for evening receptions	3
Invitations for luncheons	10
Invitations in honor of friend	3

INDEX

Invitations requiring no acceptance note	1
Inviting a visitor	137
Jokes, wedding	64
Leaving cards	19
Letter writing	24
Letters, addressing	30
Letters, answering	25, 35
Letters: colored letter paper	27
Letters of condolence	33, 152
Letters of congratulation	33
Letters: value of correspondents	26
Letters, dating	30
Letters: inclosing stamps	34
Letters, how to write	25
Letters: mourning stationery	29
Letters: plain white paper	28
Letters: postal cards	31
Letters: signatures	30
Letters: social forms	28
Listening, value of	332
Luncheons	40
Maid of honor	59
Maidenly dignity	254
Marriage, ceremonies of	54, 66
Marrying for money	320
Mistress and maid	300
Mistress and maid: duty to maid	305
Mistress and maid: duty to mistress	308
Mistress and maid: making confidant of maid	309

INDEX

Mistress and maid: making friend of maid	303
Mistress and maid: relations between	300, 308
Mistress, conduct of	300
Mourning: attending funerals	156
Mourning, cards of	20
Mourning: church funerals	156
Mourning: conduct of bereaved	162
Mourning: extending sympathy	157
Mourning: flowers	153
Mourning: funeral notices	153
Mourning: home funerals	156
Mourning, house of	152
Mourning stationery, appropriate	29
Mourning, time of	161
Mourning veil	159
Mrs. Newlyrich, ambitions of	233
Mrs. Newlyrich, apparel of	243
Mrs. Newlyrich: conduct toward servants	236
Mrs. Newlyrich: engaging servants	235
Mrs. Newlyrich: forming new acquaintances	238
Mrs. Newlyrich, house of	243
Mrs. Newlyrich, manners of	231
Mrs. Newlyrich: mastering forms	241
Mrs. Newlyrich: purse-pride	244
Mrs. Newlyrich, social duties of	229
Music, wedding	61
Napkin, use of	175
Neighbors	268
Neighbors, addressing	270

INDEX

Neighbors, courtesy to	270
Neighbors, familiarity with	274
Neighbors, higher significance of	268
Notices, funeral	153
Obedience, children's	267
Observation, value of	344
Paper, letter	27
Parents, indulgent	257
Parish, etiquette of	277
Parties, anniversary	50
Parties, christening	52
Parties, coming-out	42
Parties, dancing	46
Parties, dinner	36, 39
Parties, house	122
Pastor and parish	285
Politeness in home	178
Postal cards, use of	31
Public, addressing women in	193, 197
Public, assisting women in	193
Public, boarding a car in	191
Public, bowing in	188
Public, embracing in	195
Public, escorting women in	194
Public, etiquette in	188
Public, lifting hat in	189
Public, removing hat in	198
Public, resigning seat in	192
Public: theater conduct	197

INDEX

Purse-pride	244
Receptions, afternoon	42
Receptions, evening	41
Receptions, invitations for	3
Returning calls	23
Rowing, etiquette of	226
Rudeness	327
Spoon, use of	169
Sports, etiquette in	214
Sports, etiquette in: automobiling	221
Sports, etiquette in: driving	228
Sports, etiquette in: golf	217
Sports, etiquette in: horseback riding	228
Sports, etiquette in: politeness necessary	214
Sports, etiquette in: rowing	226
Sports, etiquette in: swimming	227
Sports, etiquette in: tennis	223
Sports, etiquette in: yachting	225
Sports, general rules of	215
Summer hotel, etiquette of	209
Swimming, etiquette of	227
Sympathy, cards of	22
Sympathy, expressions of	157
Table, at	164
Table, at: drinking coffee	171
Table, at: eating	166, 168
Table, at: salad	171
Table, at: second service	174
Table, at: the hostess	166, 173

INDEX

Table, at: use of finger bowls	172
Table, at: use of fork	169, 175
Table, at: use of napkin	175
Table, at: use of spoon	169
Table, at: using fingers	170
Table, setting the	164
Table, sitting at	165
Telephoning, politeness of	333
Tennis, etiquette of	223
Tipping	123, 206
Uninvited visitor	116
Ushers, wedding	67
Value of allowances	323
Visited, the	133
Visited, the: conduct toward guest	139, 144
Visited, the: decline of hospitality	133
Visited, the: inviting a visitor	137
Visited, the: preparing for visitor	138
Visited, the: welcoming visitor	138
Visitor, the	114
Visitor, the: accepting invitations	116
Visitor, the: assisting hostess	119
Visitor, the: examples of misbehavior	126
Visitor, the: house parties	122
Visitor, the: keeping engagements	117
Visitor, the: meal time	118
Visitor, the: promptness essential	115
Visitor, the: proper mode of conduct	131
Visitor, the: thanking hostess	124

I N D E X

Visitor, the: tipping servants	123
Visitor, the: what to avoid	121
Visitor, uninvited	116
Visitor, wardrobe of	114, 122
Weddings	54, 66
Wedding announcements	76
Wedding apparel, appropriate	58, 70, 72
Wedding at home	54
Wedding attendants	56, 67
Wedding bouquets	74
Wedding breakfasts	57, 74
Wedding calls	76
Wedding ceremony	62, 64, 69
Wedding, church	66
Wedding decorations	67
Wedding, evening	72
Wedding expenses, how divided	56
Wedding invitations, form of	54
Wedding jokes, impropriety of	64
Wedding music	61
Wedding procession, order of	62, 68
Wedding ushers	67
Weddings: "At Home" days	77
Weddings: congratulations, expressing	63, 73
Weddings: maid of honor	59
Yachting, etiquette of	225
Young married couple	311

Wac 294.50

