Founded on 125 acres of land bought with a medal of St. Joseph and the promise of $12,000, the University of Dayton has grown and changed in its rich 150-year history.

On July 1, 1850, the St. Mary's School for Boys opened with only 14 students. Today the University of Dayton educates over 10,000 students a year with the same commitment to Marianist tradition.

From its humble beginnings, the university has strived to become a leader in Catholic higher education by creating a long lasting tie with its 84,000 graduates

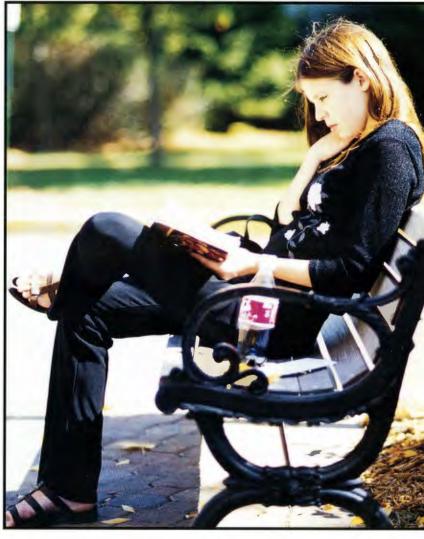

UD is an organziation that fosters the drive to learn and discover while serving others. Striving toward that goal, the school and its community are in a state of perpetual motion.

TO UD, EACH FIRST-YEAR STUDENT COUNTY COUNTY

Story by Erin Wysocki

Cars weighted down with clothes, VCRs and school supplies crawled down Stewart Street as nervous students unloaded their belongings into cubicle size rooms. The morning of Aug. 21 started early when the crop of first-year students pulled into the parking lot. In no time, campus was bustling with life as the New Student Orientation Program leaders helped to empty cars and to arrange residence hall rooms to feel like home.

"It was a lot easier than I thought," Pat Hart, first-year student, said. "I thought the whole process would be so chaotic, but things went smoothly and made adjusting to the whole experience easier."

To kick off student's new freedom, Campus Activity Board sponsored the Party in the Plaza mixer in hopes of uniting members of the new class. Other activities during orientation week included the annual First Stop Fair, the informational Act Out skit and the convocation held in the Frericks Center.

nitely my favorite during orientation week," first-year student Jessica Bardoulas said. "The music was awesome and everyone was together having a great time."

"The week's activities helped the freshmanget to know each other and learn what UD community is all about, "sophomore Kristen Finney said.

Students were bombarded with social and academic responsibilities. First-year students were trained how to handle the freedom and responsibilities of not living with their parents, how to practice appropriate Ghetto etiquette and how to maneuver around campus.

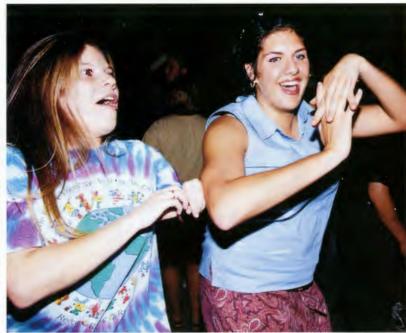

"Everything has been so much fun," Hart explained. "Classes are kind of challenging, but I really enjoy college life. It's so much different than home."

After the first few awkward weeks of college, students met new friends. Most first years agreed, however, that the best thing about college life was having freedom to live on their own.

SUSTAINED ENTERTAINMENT ENCOURAGES SUPPORT FROM UD PATRONS

Story by Bethany Steele

To gain prestige as a leader among Catholic colleges and keep tuition down, the university needed to tap into the generosity of alumni. That was exactly what the committee members of the Call to Lead Campaign imagined. The campaign kicked off on Nov. 5 with a $150 million goal.

The money raised would benefit a variety of university programs and initiatives. Scholarships were top priority, followed by facilities and technology. They would include renovating Miriam and Chaminade halls, creating a state-of-the-art science complex and building a European-style soccerstadium. Connected learning was the second largest section of improvement that the campaign would benefit, including scholarships and technology initiatives for the School of Engineering and the Ryan C. Harris Learning-Teaching Center. Faculty and staff development, annual funds for excellence and partnerships also topped the list of fund-seekers during the campaign.

Because of the Call to Lead Campaign, the university received the largest monetary gift in its 150-year phistory. John McHale, a 1978 graduate, pledged $2 million for the next five years. McHale previously pledged $1.4 million towards the construction of a basketball center that opened in June 1998. The university planned to name the center in honor of McHale, but he insisted it be named after former basketball coach, Don Donoher. McHale's decision to donate money was influenced by his experience with education, Marianist character and social aspects at the university.

Along with McHale's contribution, the Callto Lead Campaign caught the attention of supporters across the nation. Donators want to see the university become a national leader in Catholic higher education. The campaign does not end until 2002, but the university expects to raise more than $75 million from supporters.

"The campaign is a large-scale effort to tell the story about the University of Dayton," President Brother Raymond Fitz said. "It's about the university's aspirations for alumniand supporters around the country, with faith, those who believe in UD's mission will hear the call and answer it."

SOBRIETY OR THE LACK THERE OF CHECKS THE TRADITION OF HOMECOMING

Story by Bethany Steele

Students abandoned their books and weekend activities on the afternoon of Oct. 2, and lined up on Stuart Hill. Every ear strained to hear the first bang of a drum or a police siren. The annual Homecoming parade was about to begin. Soon there were cars coming down the hill throwing candy, frisbees and plastic cups to onlookers.

Homecoming was time to take a break from the books and celebrate the university community. The university tried to keep a constant flow of non-party activities throughout the weekend. The women's soccer team faced Duquesne Friday night. The home bleachers were filled to support the Flyers who lost 3-2. Saturday's bout with St. Bonnie was a winner for the Flyer's 3-0.

For the active type, the Thomas J. Frericks 5K run/walk Saturday morning offered early morning exercise with a crowd of sleep-deprived students cheering on the runners. With almost 400 in attendance, it was one of the most participated events of the weekend,

"We watched the runners run past my friend's house," junior Sabrina Palomba said. "All the cheering for them was great, and they were all excited for the support. I think it helped them keep going."

The university took time Saturday afternoon to honor alumni who had given extraordinary amounts of service to the community. The ceremony was held in the chapel where John L. Lahey received the Distinguished Alumni Award for developing an educational program for inmates at a prison in New York. Three graduates received Special Achievement awards, two accepted special service awards and one walked away with the Christian Service Award.

After the formal ceremony, alumni and students continued to celebrate together. Students and alumni watched the parade move through campus and participants of the parade challenged the crowded Ghetto. Alumni also attended Homecoming Fest on Founders field and spent the remaining afternoon hours eating, drinking and dancing to the Kilwein Family Tree-O.

"The Parade was hilarious," Palomba said. "There were so many more floats this year. The (marching) band was awesome at the parade. It was cool that the band and the alumni braved the Ghetto to provide music and entertainment."

Later in the evening, the Homecoming Swing Dance in the Kennedy Union Plaza was well attended by both collegiates and alums. The Kilwein Family Tree-O provided live music. The falling raindid not stop the dancing, but it cooled things down for the dancers.

Attendance was low at the traditional homecoming football game. Although there were not a lot of Flyer fans at the game, the Flyers beat the Butler Bulldogs with a decisive 42-7 victory.

Homecoming may celebrate the university community, but officials were concerned about the poorly attended university events, emphasis on drinking and unruly behavior. These problems caused administrators to consider no longer sponsoring Homecoming Weekend. The chairpersons at the university felt that the spirit of Homecoming was no longer focused on community celebration but instead another excuse to drink.

"Homecoming is just one big party," sophomore Sandy Serne said. "There isn't really anything for people who don't want to drink."

Students' irresponsibility led to the possibility of losing Homecoming. The UD Rescue Squad experienced harassment from parade spectators. Throughout the parade, UDRS had beer and footballs thrown on their ambulance and endured obscene gestures and comments from fellow students.

Although administrators put Home-coming on the chopping block, the Student Government Association rallied to keep the celebration. SGA wanted to improve it and turn Home-coming into a weekend that alumni, their families and students could enjoy.

GIVING THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT TO THE COMMUNITY

Story by Dave Jacobs

Santa flew onto campus early this year to celebrate 1,100 kids from Dayton public and Catholic Schools visiting the campus Dec. 8. Students provided the children with a unique experience through activities organized by the Christmas on Campus committee.

Children, who ranged from kindergarten to second grade, participated in the wide array of activities. In the PAC, carnival games set up by 25 organizations gave children the chance to win numerous prizes.

Some children had their face painted with evergreens and others made hand puppets in Miriam Hall. Many others took advantage of the Kennedy Union games room and played pool or bowled with their UD escort. COC also offered other choices for the local kids, included decorating Christmas cookies and seeing the model train display weave through a snowy scape. Pictures with Santa and listertained bright-eyed children.

"The Carnival and different activities gave the kids a chance to be interactive with the activities," sophomore Sarah Swartz explained. "It was a great chance for different organizations to connect with kids in the community. It's great to think that we may have made their Christmas more special."

This year's celebration involved a few changes from years past. In an effort to improve crowd control, the COC committee built a new set for Santa and moved his location from KU to the Humanities building. At the Mass in Frerick's Center, new banners were used during the procession.

Christmas on Campus brought the holiday season early to college and elementary students alike. University students gave the spirit of the season to the Dayton community through the festivities.

"Most of us had as much fun as the kids," sophomore Katie Hesketh said. "The kids just bring out energy in you and help you get in the Christmas spirit."

CONTINUOUS REMINDERS OF OUR PAST RENEWS COMMITTALE TO UD'S MARIANIST MISSION

Story by Jeff Galles and Shawna Hanes

From a vision in 1850 that spurred traditions of academic standards and service, to the journey toward "becoming a national leader in Catholic higher education" today, the UD community came together to celebrate the past while looking forward to the future.

On Sept. 25 students, faculty and Dayton community members gathered to kick off a year-long series of events that highlight the people and happenings that have propelled the university into the 21st century. The festivities included an open house for the community, Mass celebrated by Archbishop Daniel E. Pilarczyk, and various performances.

"The weather for the mass was perfect," sophomore Katy Hesketh remarked. "The entire community was present. It really did a great job bridging the gap between UD and its surrounding community."

Young's Jersey Dairy debuted a customized ice creamflavor named Sesquiberry. Bookstore employee Brother Ken Thompson created the name in a name the flavor contest.

"It was good stuff," sophomore Page Eppenstein said. "The perfect swirl of strawbery and blueberry."

The celebration also initiated a campaign of student service. For the next year, students were called to commit either individually or within their organizations to 150 hours of community service.

"I think it is a great idea that encourages the students to get more involved" junior Sabrina Palomba said "I am in a service fraternity, so I think it's good to get more students involved in serving others."

The sesquicentennial kickoff exhibited the connection between the community, alumni and students that represents UD's reputation and encompasses the vision for the future.

SHOWING PARENTS A GOOD TIME TAKES OFF

THE ANXIETY OF THE EMPTY NEST

Story by Debi Curson

Continuing a tradition from the late 70s, students displayed banners in the Ghetto and residence halls, welcoming parents to the annual Parent's Weekend.

Students showed parents the university by taking them to various planned activities that included sporting matches and a swing dance. Parents and students were able to take lessons, dance and enjoy the time together.

Saturday, parents were invited to have breakfast with Bro. Raymond Fitz. Many students and parents attended the football game in the afternoon.

"Just spending time with our son was the best part of the weekend," parent Christine Grote said. "I like UD now, better than I ever did."

Families had the opportunity to attend university activities, but some decided to create their own.

"The best part of the weekend was nothing particular, just laughing with mom and picking on her," senior Melissa VanSickle said.

Not only did families spend time at the university, but they also visited other parts of Dayton. Stops included Meijer, the mall, restaurants and local bars.

"The best part of my weekend was partying with my

PRODUCTIONS IN A HISTORICAL THE ATRECTY; AN EXPERIENCE TO TREASURE

Story by Bethany Steele

From May to November, the stages of Stratford, Ontario, have been home to some of the greatest plays written in the past 50 years. The Stratford Festival has been attended by UD students since 1980.

"Originally, the festival was a venue for Shakespeare," Brother Alex Tuss said. "The festival hosts an array of productions."

This year's festival included 10 plays on three stages. The Festival Theatre showed "The Tempest," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Pride and Prejudice." The musicals "Dracula" and "West Side Story" played at the Avon Theatre, while Tom Patterson's Theatre showed "Macbeth" and "Richard II."

Amity Cherry attended the Festival for the past three years. She got involved with the festival her sophomore year through a friend who was an English major.

"The trip was very reasonably priced," Cherry said.
"For $150, I would definitely tell others who were thinking about going to do it. If they decide to go, they should sign up early since only a limited number of students can attend."

Jim Gobrail first heard about the festival through the plugs of professors and students. Although he enjoyed the experience, he felt it important to understand the background of the plays.

"It's important to familiarize yourself with the plays," Gobrail explained. "If you have some background, you don't have to spend the first half of the play trying to figure out what the plot is."

The Stratford Festival is a balance of a social and educational experience. It allows students to engage in discussions about topics relevant to the festival, English and the theatre curriculum.

CARVING OUT NEW TRADITIONS; PUNPKINS TO BRIGHTEN THE DAY

Story by Shawna Hanes

Ghosts and goblins walking among students hidden beneath a shroud of mystery and stage makeup haunted the Ghetto streets Halloween weekend.

The appeal of dressing up, being scared and trick-or-treating does not end with childhood. Organizations and students themselves celebrated with some howling activities and creative attire.

CAB sponsored free pumpkin carving on Founders Field as well as a Psychic Fair in Kennedy Union. For $1, students could peruse a live Psychic Network. Orpheus also sponsored a free showing of "Night of the Living Dead" in Chudd Auditorium. FREEFAHL, a benefit concert for breast cancer education, completed the festivities. The concert was free for students and guests, but donations were accepted to fight breast cancer.

Some students were on the clock Halloween night, taking care of those that needed a lift home or campus. Junior Sean Mason, a public safety cadet, was the student supervisor on Halloween night and drove one of Mom's Limos. Although public safety increased the number of officers on duty to combat large crowds, Mason didn't have any difficulties.

"I think that most of the riders I had were appreciative and I didn't have any problems with them during the evening," Mason said. "Having more officers in the Ghetto helped keep things controllable."

The campus also saw some little ones dressed up for candy feasting. The residence halls provided a place for local children to collect Halloween candy. Just for Kids sponsored a Halloween Party and other organizations volunteered in the community. Members of EARTH served as tour guides for the Metro park's Enchanted Forest where children and animals interacted.

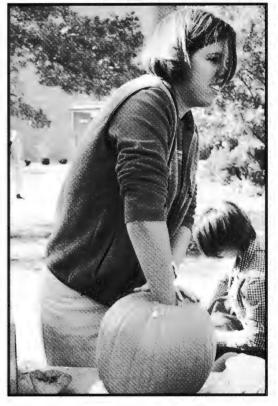

"You can not help but have fun during Halloween when you are with little kids," senior Jessica Jones said.

REGISTRATION FOR THE UD LEADS TO LESS HASSLE

Story by Jeff Galles

Online meant no line this past year for two events that students look forward to with as much joy as a visit to the dentist: class registration and the housing lottery. For class registration, it meant students, for the first time, did not wake up before the rooster called to wait sleeplessly in long lines attempting to register for classes.

Although the registration system experienced some down time due to high traffic, most students appreciated the easy access. Jessica Marasa, a first -year student, commented on some of the technological shortcomings of the registration system.

"My computer froze up a couple of times," Marasa said. "I think it's a small price to pay for not having to wait in the long lines."

For the most part, the process was user-friendly. Many students, could roll out of bed and sign up for their classes instead of waiting in the halls of St. Mary's as in years past.

"I liked being able to stay in my room and do it," first -year Kevin Roselli explained. "I didn't even have to get dressed."

As for the housing lottery, UD students would not have to lose a Sunday afternoon sweating in anticipation to find out whether or not they would receive their dream Ghetto house.

For many years past, the housing lottery at UD involved a group of upper class students collectively waiting inside the Frerick's Center while one by one housing groups would make their selections.

"I thought the online lottery was a great improvement over the old process," junior Jennie Helms said. "We could look at the house layouts online and narrow down our list of potential houses. When it came to the actual process, spending five minutes online is a whole lot better than spending the whole day waiting for your number to be called."

These online technologies exhibited how UD con- $\frac{\Omega}{0}$ tinues to lead in the use of technology for the benefits of its students.

A WEEKEND FOR UD STUDENTS TOGETHER WITH THEIR SIBLINGS

Story by Jeff Galles

Brothers and sisters and quality time, oh my! On the weekend of Feb. 11-13, SGA sponsored Little Sibs Weekend with the theme "Up and Down, Little Sibs are in Town." Various activities over the weekend offered students the chance to renew their bond with younger siblings.

Sophomore Steve Graham went to the carnival, pizza party and watched mentalist Robert Channing's exhibition with his two brothers, one a freshman at UK and the other in 8th grade. He discussed how living away from home has affected his relationship with his siblings.

"Our relationship hasn't changed that much," Graham commented. "My relationship with my younger brother is probably the most different because I'm not living at home any more."

Playing games in the KU Games Room and a UD basketball game against conference foe St. Bonaventure were other sponsored activities for Saturday. Although she is a senior, this year was the first that Aimee Shields could invite her little sibs for the special weekend.

"The basketball game was great," Shields mentioned. "This is my first year living down on campus, so this was the first time that I invited my step-brother and stepsister to visit during little sibs."

On Sunday, students had one last opportunity to bond with their siblings before returning to their academic responsibilities. Students wrapped up the weekend with pancakes and field games. Junior Chissy Recklehoff and her sister didn't attend many of the activities, but they enjoyed the weekend of spending time together.

"The best part of the weekend was being with my sister," Recklehoff stated. "I will probably invite her back next year, too."

GETTING BALLROOM DANCING TO THE BASICS

Story by Bethany Steele

The lights dim, and a spotlight is placed on the already gleaming couple in the center of the dance floor. Do they sway back and forth like at a high school dance, locked in each others embrace, or do they elegantly waltz around the dance floor? To perform the sophisticated ballroom dancing, most couples took a ballroom dancing class to improve their dancing technique.

Of the many dances covered in the course, the two favorites were the cha-cha and the tango. They were two of the more upbeat numbers which students enjoyed learning. Not every formal dance could be learned in the class.

"I wanted to learn more swing moves and meringue, but there was not enough time," senior Christy Oswald stated. "There were a lot more dances that fit into the ballroom dance genre than I $_{\scriptscriptstyle{\oplus}}$ thought."

"I would have liked to learn the Emambo because it was in Dirty Dancing, "senior Melissa Glass said. "We learned a lot of the other dances that were featured in movies, too. "

Students got a chance for release from the typical academic course load with the class. Meeting new people and learning new dance skills were a highlight and relaxation.

"You get to meet so many new people," senior Nancy Mohlman stated. "I would suggest practicing the steps outside of class and writing everything down so you remember it."

Ballroom dancing not only was an escape from typical course material, but taught students a useful skill.

"I wanted to learn how to dance so I would be prepared for weddings, "juniorToddCikajiexplained. "It filled a credit, and I thought I could charm a girl with my dance moves, more so than my extensive knowledge about civil liberties."

OF MUSICAL EMOTION UNLEASHED FOR ADORING FANS

Story by Jeff Galles

From lawn seats where the performers appear to be ants, to the front row seats where the lead singer's sweat falls on adoring fans, whether a large stadium or a small bar, UD students enjoyed the live entertainment of a rock concert. Students traveled near and far to hear a diverse range of acts.

Concert fans commonly dressed for the concert to suit the style of the concert that they attend.

"On New Year's Eve my housemates and a few of our friends went to see a Moxy Fruvous concert in Buffalo," senior Jamie Dargart said. "We bought outfits specifically for the concert -- short skirts, halter tops, rhinestones and glitter. We had an awesome time!"

The emotion and festivity surrounding concerts created an atmosphere for many unusual events. Sophomore business student Angie Chmiel attended the Woodstock concert in New York over the summer.

"I saw some interesting things during the Woodstock event, " Chmiel mentioned. "People running around naked was a sight to see."

Chmiel also commented on some more frightening aspects of concerts that got out of control.

"Fires and riots that broke out oduring the show were really scary," Chimel stated.

While some concerts got out of hand, they were also the medium that brought generations together.

"I saw a diversity of ages when I went to a concert on the Eagles'Hell Freezes Over tour, "sophomore Jenny Reiling exyplained. "It was cool to see people from different generations coming together for a good time."

Not everybody saw concerts from the perspective of a fan, however. Some students used concerts as temporary job opportunities. Working at the concerts gave students a chances to earn money while also seeing some of the show.

"I was working at a lemonade stand and there were a lot of unusual people there to talk to, "Kristin Sinclair a sophomore who worked at X-Fest said. "I even saw a kid steal a t-shirt from the guy I was working for."

Not all concerts were on as grand of scales. Many local bands played on campus at the Pub on Thursday nights.

"My friends and I went to the Pub, they have great bands there on Thursdays," senior Dave Payerle said. "The best bands were Hello Dave and Third Wish - they have a great sound and a big following here on campus."

Whatever their tastes, UD students experienced a wide variet of opportunities for concerts.

BOOMING RESPONSE FOR A NEW BUSINESS RUN BY UD STUDENTS

Story by Bethany Steele

Some people need that extra kick of caffeine in the morning, and on campus the options were slim. KU coffee chills down too fast despite the thermal Styrofoam, and driving to Starbucks isn't convenient. In January, caffeine and coffee lovers' wishes came true. The management of Rudy's Fly Buy wanted to see more student- run businesses. As a result a plan for an on-campus coffee shop in Roesch Library was approved. The Blend's grand opening was Feb. 14.

The Dayton Student Agencies Club was founded in 1999 with the ambition of organizing more student-run businesses on campus. Splitting into three groups, the 17 members of the club came up with the ideas of a bagel shop, extending the clothing line at Rudy's Fly Buy or a coffee shop. The Blend was the first plan approved. The team immediately began to work on making the idea a reality. Core team members were 1999 graduate Renee DeMarchi, juniors Karen Mescher and Kathy Payne, and -sophomores Catherine Weber and [⊕]Mike Kaiser.

*The best part about being part the Blend provided just that.

38 The Blend

Some people need that extra of the Blend is seeing half a year of ckofcaffeine in the morning, and work come to life," Weber stated.

The Blend is part of the Ryan C. Harris Learning-Teaching Center, which was also added to the Roesch Library this year through donations from his parents. Harris was a UD student who died in a car accident two years ago.

Students worked to give the shop a contemporary look. It was meant to be a place for students to work in groups and study in a relaxed atmosphere.

"The Blend's unique atmosphere sets it apart from other coffee shops," Weber explained. "The central location, quality beverages and pastries and competitive prices gives the Blend an advantage."

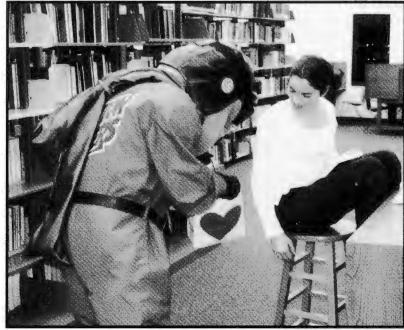

Faculty and staff tended to make up the majority of morning business while students frequented the shop in the later hours to have project meetings or to relax by the fireplace. The Blend offered a wide variety of drinks that titillated the senses or calmed the spirit.

Whether a student looked for a place to study in the evenings or a charge for their morning classes, the Blend provided just that.

JESSONS OF PATIENCE AND COMPASSION THROUGH REAL LIFE PRACTICE

Experience. A quality that all employers seek in prospective employees. For many students obtaining on the job experience at an internship or co-op is beneficial in their degree pursuit; however, for student teachers, the experience of teaching is a degree requirement for graduation. Students who go through the student teaching program have mixed reactions to their student teaching experiences.

Student teachers find themselves becoming adjusted to a different time schedule. Dealing with students at different times of the day is one challenge student teachers face.

"A belligerent student during 4th period(11:45am) is much easier to deal with than the same student during 1st period," senior Bill Monro commented.

Another challenge to student teaching is balancing one's schedule.

"The most challenging part of student teaching is balancing my time between classes, work, and doing 'teacher stuff'," senior Sarah Paling explained.

Each student teacher is responsible for a class, while being mentored by their cooperating teacher. Dealing with these cooperative teachers as well as other staff members provided the experience of working in a teaching community.

"The teachers I work with are so willing to help me with anything," senior Heather Myers explained. "They encouraged me to keep in touch with them."

Not all students had positive experiences in their mentoring process.

A future teacher learns more about teaching opportunities. The career fair allowed students to learn more about Miami Valley schools before making employment decisions. Photo by Beth Kiefer.

"I had two bad extremes of mentoring from my cooperating teachers, "Paling stated." One of them refused to do any work while the other one wanted all the teaching done her way, not letting me learn on my own."

The student teaching experience allows students to see the reality of a teaching career.

"I thought teaching was going to be hard, " stated Myers. "Now I realize that it's hard, yet rewarding. It's not easy, though many believe otherwise!"

RESIDENTIA SERVICES BUILDS NEW COMODATIONS FOR JUNIORS AND SENIORS

Story by Jeff Galles

In Ohio, there's always one thing certain, construction. This past year students didn't have to wait for the traffic jams on 1-75 during the summer months to experience construction. Over the course of the year, the Lawnview Apartments were constructed at 201 Lawnview Avenue.

With 54,468 square feet to house 165 juniors and seniors, the new apartments were a hot commodity in the housing lottery.

"I really like the idea of being in a new apartment building," stated future resident sophomore Josh McCormick. "I won't have to deal with the damage caused by past residents although it also means that my roommates and I will be accountable for any damage that we cause."

The Lawnview Apartments were so popular in the four person lottery that they were all claimed in the first 90 selections of the housing lottery. Other than being new, the apartments contain other attractive features such as a breakfast bar, a built-in television stand, a microwave and a dishwasher.

"They are the perfect amalgam of apartment and house living, "sophomore Pat Carns cited. "A kitchen with many appliances, two sink bathroom, living room, dining room, and bedrooms make a wonderful setup for a college dwelling."

The main phases of construction were complete by the end of the winter semester; however, the building didn't quite have the finished look.

"Although the building is completed on the outside, the landscaping still needed to be completed of for the building to look truly finished," McCormicka commented. "I don't think that will still be a problem" once I move in for next semester."

GOODWILL AMBASSADOR CHRIS BURKE'S PERSEVERING INSPIRES UNIVERSITY AUDIENCE

Story by Jeff Galles

Everyone has the need to feel wanted and to be included. Actor Chris Burke, known most for his role on the T.V. series Life Goes On shared a message of family support and perseverance with UD students on April 6 as a part of Disabilities Awareness Week.

"I had heard about Chris Burke making speeches at college campuses," first-year student Melissa Kinman mentioned. "I remembered watching him on T.V., but I didn't expect anything out of the ordinary because my sister has Down Syndrome."

Burke emphasized the need for students to serve those who are more in need. His message about the trials he faced in life left students with a picture of how people with disabilities seek to be treated.

"Seeing Chris Burke in person made me realize how much of a real person he was," sophomore Meghan Doyle stated. "He didn't just have to deal with Down Syndrome, but also faced other difficulties in accomplishing his success."

In addition to support from his family, Burke also identified his faith in God as a necessity in realizing his dreams of becoming a Hollywood actor and helping others with disabilities. Hearing about a celebrity's faith was encouraging for some of those who attended the standing room only event.

"Something that I did n't know about him was that he is a Christian," Kinman commented. "I also learned how important his family was throughout his life."

of hope. From persevering through his parent's initial discouragement from acting in a television drama to his current position as the National Goodwill Ambassador for the National Down Syndrome Society, Burke emphasized that everyone could overcome his or her own shortcomings.

"He made me realize that the cliche 'You can do anything you put your mind to' was true," Doyle concluded.

DOWNTOWN FIFTH THIRD FIELD YIELDS THE ATTRACTION OF MINOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Story by Jeff Galles

Peanuts, popcorn, and Dragon's baseball - the national pastime came to Dayton after Mandalay Sports Entertainment bought the Rockford Reds and moved them to the $22.7 million Fifth Third Field in downtown Dayton. The minor league baseball team provided students an opportunity to see professional baseball without having to pay major league prices or drive over an hour for a Reds game.

With the move to Dayton, the Dragon's organization provided an opportunity for employment to UD students looking to gain experience in sports industry.

"As a marketing major at UD, I feel I was prepared well for my current job with the Dragons," explained senior Jeff Forthofer who is employed by the Dragon's front office. "I have a lot of interaction with fans and clients on a day to day basis; my experience at UD both in the classroom and socially day basis; my experience at UD ಕ್ has been helpful."

The new stadium in downtown Dayton was part of the city's plan for developing the appeal of downtown commerce. In its beginning stage, the Riverscape project should make the downtown more of an entertainment hot spot for college students.

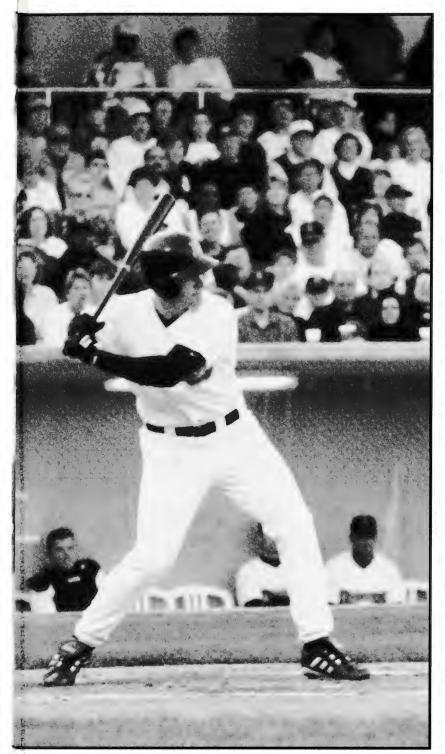

"I don't think the change will happen overnight afterall it is a long term project," offered Forthofer. "I think it could have the same effect that you see in Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh, but on a smaller scale."

The addition of a sports complex started what city officials hope will increase the amount of activity in the heart of Dayton.

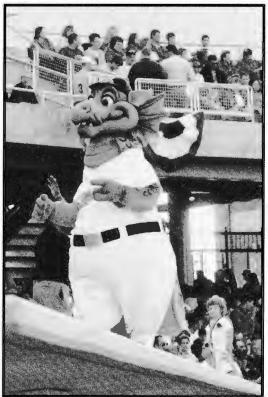

"Prior to baseball, students didn't have much to choose from outside of the Oregon District, Memorial Hall, and the Victoria Theatre," Forthofer concluded. "Now there will be more places to eat and drink and have fun outside of campus."

COOLING OFF FROM STUDYING WITH REFRESHMENTS OF DELICIOUS ICECREAM

Story by Bethany Steele

Chubby Hubby? Chunky Monkey? Cheery Garcia? Phish Food? Hmm...no, definitely my all time favorite, Mint Chocolate Chunk. These were some of the decision students had to make as they stood in long lines at Ben and Jerry's free cone day on April 18.

Some of the favorites included Double Fudge Chocolate, Mint Chocolate Chunk, Cookie Dough and "The World's Best" Vanilla. Students gave up time for homework, talking, sleeping, and going to class to get a free scoop of ice cream from Ben and Jerry's.

Free cone day brought not only UD students but people from all over the Dayton community.

"The best aspect of free cone day, besides the free ice cream, was standing in line with 3, 000 screaming kids," sophomore Jeremy Collins stated.

Students who made it out to Ben and Jerry's ranged from people who traveled to the shop three times a week to three times a year.

Ben and Jerry's inundated the university campus with advertisements about the big day. The shop was supported by the university and outside Dayton community. Individuals could enjoy free ice cream, tunes from a live band, and hanging out with friends on the patio.

"It was a beautiful day and that added to the excitement of free cone day," senior Gail Bichlemeir stated. "It was so great that Ben and Jerry's brought all these people together for so much fun."

Ben and Jerry's did not end their generosity with the free ice cream. They also provided each customer with a buy one get one free coupon for more ice cream.

"The best thing about free cone day," sophomore Sarah Swartz commented, "is that there will be another one next year!"

CLUBS AND BARS PROVIDE LIGHTS FULL OF MEMORIES

Story by Jeff Galles

Whether they were looking for a night on the town full of music and dancing or just a nice dinner, UD students could get all that and a little touch of nostalgia by visiting Dayton's Historical Oregon District.

The Oregon District served as a venue for many unique local area bands. Clubs and bars on the strip allowed students to experience a diversity of musical talent as well as seeing an array of personalities. Tumbleweeds and the Night Owl were two popular places to see live musical entertainment.

"The Oregon District is more diverse and open to different lifestyles, musicians artists, and sexual preference," senior Trisha Weinstein explained.

When looking for a place to celebrate a 21st birthday, the Oregon District was a popular choice for UD students. The different scenes allowed a variety of activity to bring in the joyous occasion. One activity that was popular in the Oregon District was karaoke.

50 Oregon District

in the Oregon District was my first time singing karaoke," senior Sarah Danko reminisced. "I was awful, but I had a good time."

The mix of college students and local residents provided an interesting social experience. The merging of ages, genders, and cultures gave a new experience for students who had never been exposed to that scene.

"The Oregon District differs from other places I've been to because it is smaller and less crowded," senior Elizabeth Bermingham stated. "Comparing it to districts that I've been to in New York and Chicago, it is definitely different because of all the college students."

When students needed a break from the monotony of the Ghetto weekend, the Oregon District offered an exciting change of scenery.

Weinstein encouraged others to take in a night in the historical part of Dayton, "Everybody needs to go there, but remember to bring lots of money," she said.

SPRINGTIME COOKOUTS PROVIDE A FEAST WITH GOOD COMPANY

Story by Jeff Galles

Picture spring time at UD - a cool breeze and the smell of charcoal burning. When the weather on campus was warm, one could be sure to find a cookout. Nothing removed students from dorms and houses like the rich scent of free food.

For some people a barbecue wasn't truly special without traditional picnic fare.

"Cheeseburgers and chips are the traditional cookout meal," law student Damon Ashcraft explained. "However, the event is even better with a variety of foods."

Hot dogs were commonly seen on grills around UD. There was some debate about which brand of cookout food was best: JTM or Kahn's.

"JTM's are too processed for me," sophomore Ryan Cook stated. "Sure, Kahn's hot dogs are also processed—with a hot dog old man Kahn admits that you don't know what you getting. However, JTM tries to maintain the illusion that you are getting real meat."

For those who didn't like meat, but enjoyed the atmosphere of a cookout, veggie burgers were a grillable alternative at most barbecues.

"I really prefer veggie or chicken burgers at a cookout, because I really don't like hamburgers or hot dogs," junior Aja Glett offered. "In addition to a variety of food, it's nice to have an open area so there's plenty of room to enjoy the outdoor weather."

In addition to the food, barbecues supplied an opportunity to enjoy outdoor activities with old friends while also having a chance to meet some new ones. Students had a chance to come together and fellowship, leaving the academic world behind for a moment.

"After a week of watching the nice weather from inside a classroom, it's nice to enjoy the weather," Studies a classroom, it's nice to enjoy the weather, "Studies a classroom, it's nice to enjoy the weather, "Studies a classroom the Ghetto; it affords the opportunity for random folks to come up and join in the neat focused relaxation."

SEMESTER ENDING TESTS PROVIDE EXAMINATIONS OF THE IMPORTANT THINGS IN LIFE

Story by Jeff Galles

The tests, quizzes, homework, and projects were over, but the semester wasn't complete until the final exams were in the books. These final tests of a semester's worth of class material affected students in different ways.

Without their structured class schedules, finals week provided more free time to students on campus for studying and relaxing.

"I enjoy the extra free time to spend with my friends and playing ultimate frisbee," junior Cory Maloney offered. "It's refreshing to spend those last days on campus knowing that the semester is almost over."

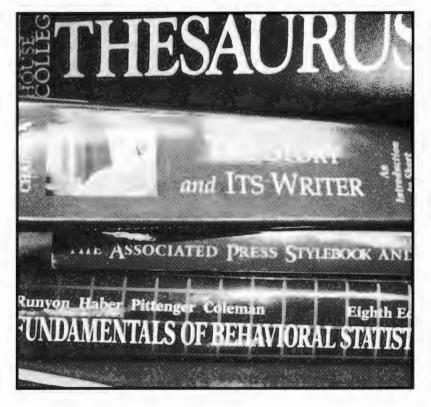

The weight that final exams have on one's grades and moving away from campus caused other students some added stress.

"Final exams reduced the time I had to sleep and exercise," stated first-year student Denise Hammons.
"Also, there is little time to spend with close friends toward the end of the semester knowing that you will be leaving for home in a couple days."

Each student approached studying for finals in a different way.

"I like to study in my living room late at night," junior Mike Anderson commented. "It is really quiet there, and I can study uninterrupted."

Handling the stress of final exams was important to surviving the final week of the semester. From prayer to preparation, students had different approaches to managing the stress induced by the semester-ending tests.

"Take lots of breaks, make 'to do' lists of everything for the week so you can remember, and spend lots of time with your friends," senior Emily Meyer suggested. "It will be last time you see most of your friends for several months, and they're lots more important than grades."

"I think the best way to handle the stress of finals is preparation," Anderson asserted. "Realizing that finals are simply a review of information already learned during the school year is the best way not to stress over them."

AFRICAN MUSICAL EXPERIENCE MOLDS PERSPECTIVES OF AMERICAN MUSIC

Story by Jeff Galles

Taking a walk through the "door of no return," hearing the musical talents of the Nananom Dance Ensemble, and bringing school supplies to the children of Ekumfi Asokawa, senior music major Matthew Scheeser had a unique spring break experience when he went to Ghana as a part of the West African Musical Odyssey coordinated by associate professor of music Dr. Donna Cox.

The idea for the trip grew out of Cox's world music course as well as Cox's previous musical experiences during an immersion trip to Ireland.

"I believe that to truly understand the music you hear, you must experience it in the culture from which it originated," Cox asserted. "So much of American music, especially jazz, blues, and spirituals, is rooted in Africa."

To understand the development of this music through the slave trade, students visited Cape Coast, home of the infamous slave castles, ಕ್ಕ್ called the "door of no return."

"The experience of seeing the slave castles on the west coast of Africa affected me deeply," Scheeser commented. "Seeing the hub of the slave trade was something I will never forget."

Another aspect of this spring break journey was the opportunity to serve the children of Ekumfi Asokawa by bringing them much needed school supplies. This village was sponsored by Dayton's Omega Baptist Church.

"A benefit to this trip was the chance to serve a community, although rich in culture, is poor monetarily," Cox explained. "This helped to put our own blessings into perspective."

The experience of African history, culture, and music personally affected those who participated in the journey.

"Learning about the culture of Africa, we learn about ourselves," Scheeser offered. "We learn were our music comes from, and that we cannot steal the music as if it were purely our own."

BEYUN JUST BEING A FAN CAN ALSO BE A CAREER

Story by David Jacob

Some students dream about getting a good job after graduation. Some students just dream about finishing the semester. Others dream about being the general manager of the Cincinnati Reds.

Chris Sprague, a sophomore sport management major, would like to be part of that dream some day. For Sprague, the sport management program-an interdisciplinary program involving business, communication, sport management and other related areas-has helped him acquire experience that will help build his resume and achieve his goals.

"I always loved sports," Sprague said. "I wanted to have a career in sports."

Gabrielle Nordman, a junior sport management major, felt that doing projects with the community, helping out with the basketball team, and a thorough teaching of the basics helped prepare her for a career in sport management.

"Sport management is a field to definitely look into," Nordman commented. "It is a field you can go fár in."

Sprague recommended that students "go to a game and see if you could concentrate and focus on the behind the scenes, overcome the fan stage, and see if you could really be part of the event."

Sport management does not just focus on sport events and facilities management. It helps prepare students for careers with clubs, sports organizations/9 federations, newspapers, television, sporting goods, \bar{a} and vocations in the numerous areas of private and $\stackrel{\prec}{=}$ public recreation.

OF BODY, MIND AND SPIRIT WERE IN AS A PART OF CONFERENCE

Story by Jeff Galles

The fourth annual Colors of Leadership conference came to UD on February 25 and 26. The focus was centered on enriching the whole person for those who attended. The conference theme was "Richer Shades of Color: Enhancing the Minds, Bodies, and Souls of Our People."

Sponsored by Diverse Student Populations and BATU, the conference was successful in registering over 150 participants. Students from Cleveland State, Hiram College, Wright State University, Central State University, Marietta College, and Urbana University attended the conference along with some local high school seniors participated in the conference. Members of LASA, Team UD, and some of the RA's complete the list of people attending the conference.

On friday night of the conference, the attendees entertained each other with Apollo Night, a contest showcasing the diverse talents of the participants. Toyin Giles won the fifty dollar first prize with her singing performance.

Saturday included the main sessions for the conference. Faculty, graduate students, alumni, and other community leaders lead 11 workshops. The Keynote speaker for the conference was WROU-FM and WRNB-FM president and general manager Ronita Hawes-Saunders, Some of the workshops included "Spritual Enhancement for the Soul, "Moti-God vating the Black Collegian," and there also was a yoga session.

SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCES HELP STUDENTS JOURNEY TO THE DEPTH OF THEIR SOULS

Story by David Jacobs

Everyday students faced the chaos, stress and confusion of college life. To help refocus their lives, some attended one of the numerous retreats offered by Campus Ministry. Retreats sponsored by Campus Ministry and the residence halls had a Christian focus, but they were open to students of all faiths. Campus Ministry sponsored the Lighthouse, More To Life, Guided, Urban and Rural Plunge retreats.

Students experienced farm life for a weekend on the Rural Plunge retreat. They found a different atmosphere, but a welcoming group all the same.

"The families really welcomed me," senior Keith Phaller explained. "I felt really at home even though I had just met them a couple of hours earlier."

Participants found the retreat opportunities were a good chance to experience their faith fully, learn about different cultures and build and strengthen relationships with other students.

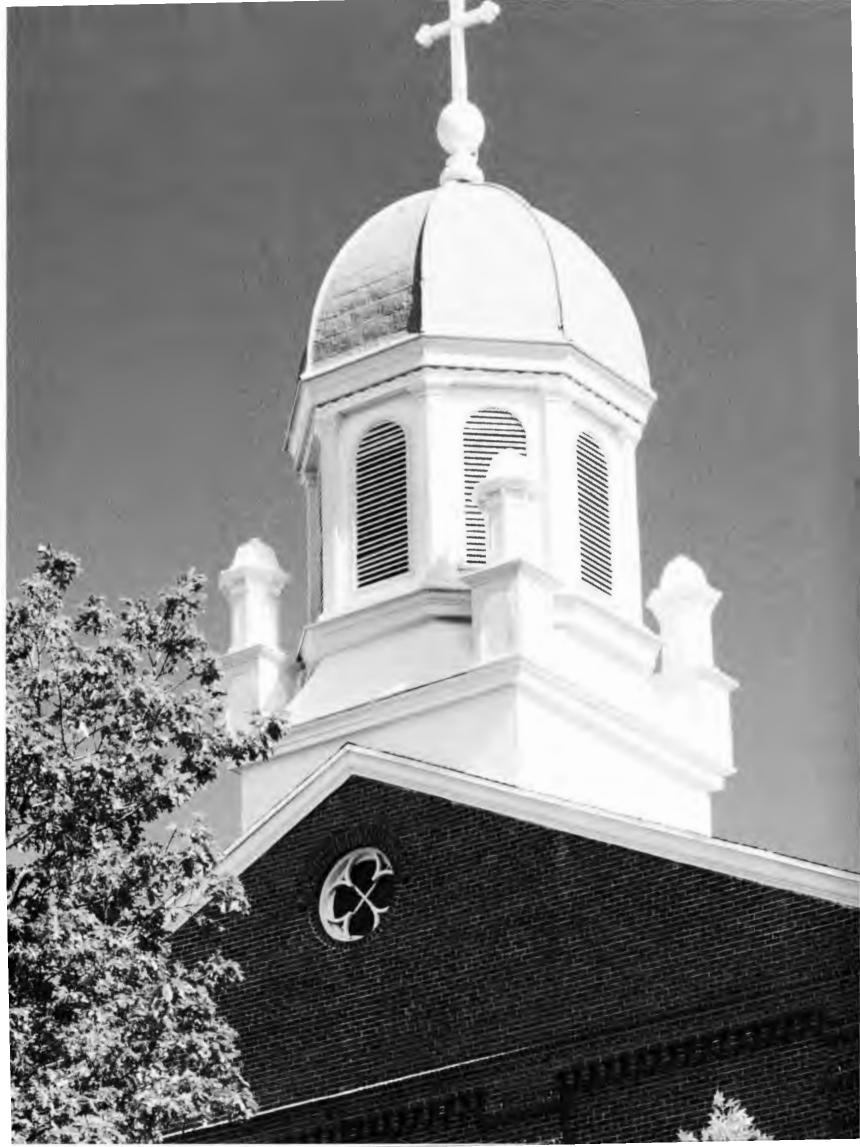

"I see all these people on campus who were on the retreat, and it's like we have this special bond that we can understand," Phaller stated.

Retreats offered the possibility to further explore and personalize their faith. All retreats pointed to personal faith reflection. The Guided retreat gave students an opportunity to be silent and explore -- to

"I never thought I could be silent for a weekend," junior Michelle Dechene said. "It definitely proved the importance of quietness and contemplation. These retreats offer a great opportunity to meet people and relax. You get to get away from it all and reflect on things that are higher."

Dr.O Connor

Lessons that will last a lifetime

Story by Lisa Distelzweig

Human sex will never be the same. After taking Dr. Lawrence O'Connor's human sexuality class very few students disagreed with that. His class revolved around teaching students to take care of themselves when dealing with the issues of sex.

O'Connor, 68, passed away Feb. 26, 2000, at Kettering Hospital after suffering a severe stroke at his private practice four days earlier. Joining the faculty at UD in 1992 as an adjunct professor, O'Connor taught several sections of the popular human sexuality course.

His classes were never boring, attendance was always high because students never knew which joke he would tell, or what video would be shown. They could be walking to different classes and hear other students telling their friends an O'Connor story that had been told a million other times.

Besides teaching his class, O'Connor was also involved in the campus community. He spent a great deal of his time speaking at different events on campus. O'Connor was willing to give up his free time to speak at organizations' meetings, and Greek 101. He gave a quiz about sex facts and answered anyone's questions at the end of his presentation. He often incorporated many jokes and stories to help the students feel more comfortable about openly discussing sex.

The memorial service offered for O'Connor was widely attended by students and faculty. Students and friends were given the opportunity to say a few words or share a story of how O'Connor touched their lives.

Many students had the privilege to learn from O'Connor. Now it is the students' job to take what they learned and keep his spirit alive. They will keep telling his stories and jokes, making sure that students on campus stay safe. This was what O'Connor cherished the most, the safety of his students.

The beginning of the school year was a chance to get together with friends, begin a fresh academic year, and get involved. Students could see a bustling Humanities Plaza one Friday afternoon in early September. Some of the 180 oragnizations in the campus community gathered for Up the Organizations Day. During this time, students had an opportunity to view the various activities on campus.

"I found Up the Orgs Day to be really helpful," first-year student Melissa Kinman commented. "I really wanted to be involved when I got on campus, but didn't really know what was available. I knew that I wanted to do stuff with my faith, music, and theater."

promote their groups' mission. Students set up tables in the plaza and displayed various information and paraphernalia for their organization.

"Up the Orgs Day gave our group more publicity," junior Annette Lindsay, member of Campus Crusade for Christ, explained. "More people ended up coming to our weekly meetings and getting involved."

Up the Organizations Day seemed helpful to groups that were smaller and less known on campus or just beginning as an organization. Previously, organizations like the Foosball Club and the Billiards Club became popular through exposure in this event.

The day also brought a feeling of unity among the organizations. Fraternities and sororities, academic, athletic, faith, and media clubs came together. They were providing students with the chance together with the chance together be empowered to learn, at lead, and serve at the university and beyond.

JIVE AND WAIL

Story by Brooke Thomas

Swing gained its popularity in the 1940s and was rejuvenated in the late 1990s. The dance moves were still popular going into the new millennium. Students at the university still jumped, jived, and wailed as the swing club was still one of the most popular organizations on campus. Approximately 100 students attended dances and practices to perfect their moves.

"We really spent a lot of time trying to make the swing experience as easy as possible to learn," senior music coordinator Gail Bichlmeir stated. "The swing club officers all practiced long hours to learn all the moves so we could teach all the members. It took a lot of time but it was well worth it when we saw all the people at the dances."

Whether it was intricate moves or jumps and flips, students and Dayton community members worked to become polished dancers. Participants practiced to be prepared for dances and some learned the steps well enough to become certified to teach others.

"Igot interested in swing before I came to UD," sophomore Pat Carns explained. "But I practiced a lot when I got here and got pretty good. This year I got to start teaching lessons and even learned the Lindy which is an intricate dance. It was really fun to teach others and see them do the moves you had taught."

Students did not only stay on campus to show off their swing moves. Often they ventured off campus to dance. It gave students a chance to dress up and go out to show their moves.

"It's great because it isn't just restricted to here, but I can go anywhere and perform some impressive moves. It's a neat skills I can take with me, "a sophomore Liz Harveyo commented."

The root of most procrastination is channel surfing at 2 a.m. when a 20-page paper still needs written. Flipping through the channels, students found the university's own Flyer TV on channel 50. The station was student run, meeting the needs of students, faculty and staff by providing programs like news at noon and basketball updates.

Flyer TV ran everyday at noon, providing headlines and breaking news. There were also weekly newscasts in the evenings. Students learned to work together to produce the shows.

"I appreciate all the efforts put forth by the students in Flyer TV," Bryan Mato explained. "It is a difficult and tedious task, and they do a professional, thorough job."

The newly added show to their roster was

"We decided to start the new show hoping the campus would enjoy the live broadcast," senior Gina Losego, director of the show, said.

Students and faculty could also use the Flyer TV's labs and studios for personal and classroom production. Individuals especially interested in broadcasting can be part of the College Broadcast that Flyer TV offered. This program took the best college-produced shows and made them available for broadcast on various college stations throughout the country.

"I like the fact that UD has a station that is made by students and for students," first-year Christopher Smith stated. "I'm excited that UD is giving their students the chance to relate better to each other through this medium."

"Five cents can save a life" was heard repeatedly from Circle K members trying to raise money for lodine Deficiency Disorder, the main service project for the club. The club was able to donate nearly $2,000 to IDD through their semiformal and donations given to the club during IDD week.

Circle K was one of the many service clubs on campus and they are the collegiate division of Kiwanis International. IDD was not the only service project Circle K was involved with in the community. On a weekly basis members of the club delivered bagels from Bagel Cafe to St. Vincent DePaul and helped out the at Veteran's Association day care center. The club also volunteered at the Ronald McDonald House and the Learning Tree Farm on a monthly basis. Last year the club volunteered for over 1,000 service hours.

"Being a member of Circle K has been an experience of a lifetime," senior Laurie Keefe said. " We have really made a difference in the lives of the people we help."

Circle K was one of six organizations receiving top honors from the university by winning the Top Organization award for service.

At the Circle K Ohio District Convention, the club received the Romanello Achievement Award, which is the top honor on the district level.

"This past year has surpassed all of our goals," junior Theresa Davies eplained. "This club has really made it to a new? level of service and has 2 grown so much in the last three years."

For the Bayer brothers, working in the Student Government Association was more than just an extracurricular activity, it became a family affair. Their involvement started with Justin Bayer being elected to SGA during his first year at the university. Justin became SGA President in his third year. Kevin followed suit, winning the first-year student election just two years after his brother started his SGA work.

"I need to be involved, with the hopes of making changes for the better of the students," junior Justin Bayer said.

Justin held a strong sense of community, which lead him to get involved. A desire to make a difference runs in the Bayer family. Kevin was striving to accomplish the same goals as Justin.

"I decided to run for freshman senator with the thought that I could properly represent firstyear students and the issues that face them," first year Kevin Bayer explained.

Kevin was a member of the Public Relations Committee, trying to promote interest in SGA. As the voice of the first-year students, he hoped to move up in SGA in the next few years, following in his brother's footsteps.

The subject that both Bayers were passionate about were those issues regarding the campus as an interacting community despite the different races, religions, and cultures. Justin worked diligently on events designed to create an integrated network of students. Kevin joined Team UD which was created to form a culturally diverse and harmonized campus.

"I just hope that during my term as President of SGA, I was able to make a positive change on a campus," Justin stated. "Hopefully, my brother will continue where I have lefting off."

Story by Heather Frawley

The Public Relations Student Society America is an organization designed to assist communication students in becoming better professionals after college.

PRSSA was founded by the Public Relations Society of America, which is the professional chapter. Students join PRSSA to gain valuable experience creating public relations campaigns for clients on and off campus.

"I joined PRSSA because I love to get involved in whatever I can to gain experience and meet new people," firstyear student Andrea Livingston said. "PRSSA looked like an amazing experience and opportunity."

In the past year PRSSA worked with Campus Ministry on Hunger Awareness Week, designing posters and promoting the Dance Marathon. For the Dance Marathon PRSSA created all fliers, brochures, e-mails and off-campus advertisements. They also wrote public service announcements and news releases for campus media.

One of the biggest projects PRSSA worked on was the Milk Mustache Campaign that came to campus in mid-November. The campaign gave students the opportunity to wear a mustache and compete for a spot in Rolling Stone magazine.

PRSSA gives students a chance to network with a number of communication professionals about what it is like finding jobs and interviewing, as well as, what it takes to make students stand out against the competition.

"I have gotten a lot from the organization like resume critiques, guest speakers from the field $\frac{Q}{2}$ and developing campaigns for various area \bar{n} organizations," senior Michelle Evens said.

Prayer, praise, and primetime were the main activities sponsored by Campus Crusade for Christ this year. Crusade was a resource for college students that seek to grow in their personal relationship with Christ.

"Staff was really helpful keeping us accountable for our actions and reaching people for Christ," senior Mike Pangrace stated. "I really grew a lot closer to God through leading a Bible study and evangelizing in the dorms."

Many people enjoyed prayer and praise music performed at Crusade gatherings. This year the music ministry grew into a full band for one primetime meeting during the second semester.

"The music played by the praise band was awesome," Pangrace offered.

sponsored some ministrybuilding trips throughout the year. The Fall Retreat, Christmas conference, and Big Break were three opportunities for members to develop their relationships with God.

"Christmas conference in Indianapolis helped me realize a deeper need for God," senior Phil Luthman commented. "I experienced a great deal of fellowship hanging out with the guys who I've grown so close through my involvement with Crusade."

Fellowship with other Christians is emphasized in crusade activities. Over the course of the year, the Crusade house threw many parties to allow members and people interested in Crusade to experience God outside of a formal setting.

"At homecoming, the house threw a root beer kegger," sophomore Chris Bomba recalled. "Weghad to go all the way togothad to go all the way togothad to get a keg of root beer, but it was definately worth it."

Late nights and long Saturdays on the third floor of KU became a ritual for some university students. These individuals were staff members of the Daytonian year-book and their goal was to chronicle the events of the 1999-2000 year and capture the memories for the future.

The student-run organization and business was comprised of 17 editors, managers, and writers who balanced deadlines, book promotion, and customer service.

"Producing a 350-page publication is not easy work," junior Sarah McBrien explained. It's fulfilling to see the compilation of a year's events and know that we are part of compiling that history. It takes a lot of team work, and we work together well to market and produce the book."

"We utilize "Up the Organizations Day" and "Yearbook Week" as promotional times for the book," senior business manager Lindsay Carden stated. "The book is still not well known, but it is growing in popularity. Our sales are up 20 percent compared to last year."

Seven staff members traveled to Atlanta to the National College Media Convention. Students got a chance to learn the latest publishing, promotion, and designing techniques from collegiate advisers and professionals.

"The convention is a chance to learn better techniques to make the bookquality," sophomore editor Jeff Galles commented. "It's a chance to become more knowledegeable."

"We just hope to produce a quality book," senior co-editor in chief Debigor Curson said. "These memories will be cherizationed as the students of UD grow older."

Boll Theater was filled with the chants of pubesant girls yelling for their favorite rock star. It may have sounded like the screams of girls at their favorite boy band concert. Instead it was the talent of the university theater department shining through in their production of the musical comedy Bye Bye Birdie.

The musical began with auditions in early January and garnered a cast of mostly first-year students. Bye Bye Birdie was chosen because of last year's loss of the graduating theater students. Director Linda Dunlevy-Shakleford believed this musical would be appropriate for the talent remaining in the university.

"Last year we lost much of our top musical talent," Shakleford explained in an article in the Flyer News. "But the wonderful surprise we got instead was in discovering a lot Every show follows hours of rehearsals. Students practice their parts for the upcoming showing of Bye, Bye Birdie.

"Practices were intense and long for every cast member," junior Shannon Morgan stated. "We had dances to learn along with the typical lines and music. We were a little nervous opening night, but the practice was worth it. I think the audience really enjoyed it."

Bye Bye Birdie was not the only production to draw an audience in Boll Theater. Students and parents had a chance to view Moon Over Buffalo. The show played over Parents' Weekend, offering parents and students alternative entertainment.

Antigone also graced the Boll stage. French playwright Jean Anouilh adapted Sophocles' famous Antigone and it was brought to the main stage in mid-January.

The theater department produced three of shows that transformed main stage into another place and offered enter-ditainment to audiences.

Six women came together from different backgrounds with one common belief--women deserve equality -- and Students Advocating Female Equality (SAFE) was brought to life.

SAFE sponsored the Take Back the Night March and the Clothes-line Project. Groups of students and faculty protested the violence by carrying signs through the Ghetto and chanting. Over 100 people participated in the two marches.

The Clothesline Project provided student a T-shirt they could design with a message or picture portraying their feelings on rape or sexual assault.

any restrictions." junior Lindsay Hildreth said.

SAFE also sponsored discussion groups. The topics ranged from "Why Do Women Hate Each Other" to "Women's Sexuality," and they offered students an opportunity to discuss these issues.

"It is a great opportunity to be able to sit down and actually discuss these topics in an environment where you can say exactly how you feel," said sophomore Stephanie Dutcher.

SAFE also worked to change the sexual assault program for first-year students. There were complaints about the current program and hopes for more effective ways to educate students about the seriousness of rape and sexual assault.

SAFE's first year on campus was welcomed by interested students and those seeking change. SAFE wanted to make people realize that the women raped could have been the most influential person in your life.

AMBITION

Story by Jeff Galles

Born out of a love for younger children, the University of Dayton Association for Young Children was founded this year with the mission of bringing awareness to the needs of young children in the community.

Paul Ebert, a sophomore early childhood education major, founded the club seeking to reach young children so they can develop to their fullest potential.

"One of our goals for the club is to start a scholarship program, so that less fortunate children could enroll at the Children's Center," Ebert stated. "We look to work closely with the center to gain experience working with primary school age children."

ing. With the $3.3 million dollar expansion, the center is looking to be an exemplary facility for early childhood development.

"We're trying to create a non-institutional look," stated assistant dean of the School of Education William Drury in a public relations press release. "We want the facility to look more like a home than a school."

The Association for Young Children was on hand for the ground breaking ceremony of the the new expansion.

"Working with the Children's Center allows us to focus on early education," Ebert offered. "The new legislation for primary certification provides a dual benefit for improving our university education while performing a service to the community."

The establishment of this club as well as the expansion of the UD Children's Quantum Center looks to establish a lasting commitment to realizing the potential of all young children.

A lot can happen in 28 hours. A life can be saved and changed. The university community "danced for a day and gave hope for a lifetime" at the first annual Dance Marathon, March 31, for the Children's Miracle Network.

Preparations for the marathon began in October with the formation of the executive committee. The marathon was held in collaboration with the Children's Miracle Network to raise money for The Children's Medical Center of Dayton. Dancers registered and raised money in advance.

Slicing through the air and piercing the target's bull's eye, UD's archers were skilled in their craft and helfpul in their community. The team had an event packed year with shoots all over the country as well as holding two in Collins Gym.

The team competed on an individual and team level. In both the Louisville and Chicago indoor shoots, the team was ranked 9th. In Louisville, some of the team members were given the opportunity to shoot at 3D and 4D targets.

The team traveled to Las Vegas, Nev., for a world shoot where they were up against some of the world's top professionals. Locally the team competed against Case Western Reserve, University of Toledo and scholarships teams such as

The two shoots held in Dayton were the OSU indoor state shoots and a shoot against the Univerisity of Toledo. They were held here to help the team raise money for the national and world shoots held in other parts of the country.

"We had an active year hosting the state tournament and going to Las Vegas," sophomore Adam Gabriel stated. "The team was successful, and we are looking to rebuild the team for next year because we are losing good shooters."

The archers also gave back to the community with service activities. Aside from competing on a local, state and national level, the team worked with a local Boy Scout troop to help them earn their archery badges.

"As a team we go to the Cub Scout camp to show them how to handle the bows and eventually teach them how to shoot," senior Budge Miyahara, said.

Rain or shine, they were up at 6 am running and training while their fellow classmates were going to bed after an all-nighter. Their weekends were packed with training and other activities. The ROTC Program was a challenging program for its members. Vigorous exercise in the early morning hours and extensive training were a few of the elements involved with the Fighting Flyer Battalion. Cadets prized these hardships brought on by the ROTC Program because of the benefits the program brought them.

"It is a lot of hard work," first-year cadet Kevin Crawford stated. "The benefits that come along with this hard work are immeasurable. We are taught discipline, giving measense of self-respect and an attitude that keeps me focused on goals that I have made for myself in life."

The benefits from ROTC were not limited to discipline. The people who participated in ROTC experienced the same type of rugged lifestyle, making a community of people that looked out for one another.

"The people that you become associated with in ROTC are quality individuals," first-year cadet David Erwin commented. "They truly care about each other. It is a tough program, but if you can endure the hardships, the benefits quickly outweigh the difficulty."

ROTC members learned military and civilian skills. Their capacity for leadership, team building, and management added to their marketability in the business and military realms.

The schedule and curriculum challenged sturged dents with the military lifestyle. For those who endured, the benefits were well worth it.

In Our House

Story by Mitch Sex and Jeff Galles

The Red Scare was a aroup of very dedicated basketball fans that scream, quite possibly, louder than the rest of the entire UD Arena. These loval followers dressed in red attire and painted themselves with red and blue war paint in anticipation for the game to start. They were almost always the first fans at the games, and always the last fans to leave; cheering the Flyers as they went into the locker room after the game.

Members of Red Scare showed their dedication to UD basketball was strong. In order to get into the Red Scare, students camped out next to the KU box office overnight waiting for a chance to get one of the prized spots in the organization.

our seats in the 300 level our freshmen year, so we wanted better seats from which to cheer on the flyers," sophomore Jeremy Collins explained. "As a member of Red Scare, you feel like your chanting makes a difference."

From shouts of "overrated" to encouragement for the team when the score wasn't in the Flyers' favor, Red Scare fans had a blast supporting UD basketball.

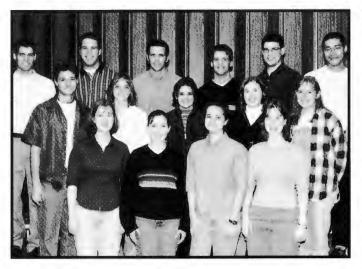

"I had the time of my life being a member. It was so much fun to sit with other fans that like to get as crazy as me at games," junior Tim Tkacz commented.

With as much fun as Red Scare students had cheering, the basketball team enjoyed the club more. Opposing teams found it very hard to play the Flyers at home, where UD lost only four games.

"It was this great support that made playing of at home even more of and advantage," junior bas-niketball player Tonyati Stanley said.

Option To..., the multimedia presentation, demonstrated traditional Christian faith and values to the campus in a nontraditional way.

Beginning in the fall semester of 1999, a core team of students and faculty began the process of inventing and defining Option To...

"The ideas didn't flow well at first," co-producer senior Nan Sullivan said. "We had issues with how we thought a play on racism might be taken, especially coming from an all-white production group."

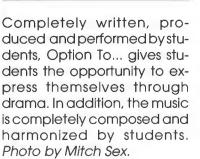

Students talked to many outside sources to make sure the play's information would be accurate and sensitive to the subject. They discussed the topic with Black Action Through Unity (BATU), Campus Ministry diversity division and minority students on campus.

"It's amazing how so many different people can come together to create something that really explores such tough issues," Sullivan stated. "It's great to see this work really touch so many people."

It was created by and for students. Seniors Megan Williams and Scott Wagner were the content directors and responsible for creating a story line relatable to students. The play allowed a variety of students to use their talents to present social issues and faith ideas to students.

"It's really interesting to use the different talents of students to bring together a production for the campus, "sophomore Christian Donovan said. "It felt cool to be part of $a_{\overline{a}}^{Q}$ production that was sending out positive and pow- $\bar{\aleph}$ erful messages to the community.

Dance

Story by Beth Kiefer

The crowd roared, the buzzer sounded and fans screamed as the dance team ran onto the court. All these were normal occurrences at UD basketball games before the 1999-2000 season. The Fly Girlz dance team was gone this year.

The dance team began during the 1994-1995 year. They performed during timeouts for men's and women's and women's home basket ball games. The team consisted of about 15 girls chosen from tryouts held in the fall.

During the team's first year, their coach quit at the beginning of the season, but the team managed to stay alive.

"The uniforms we wore during the first two years were taken away and literally hidden in a closet at the arena," former captain and UD alumni Julie Caruso said.

The team had a conflicting relationship with administration over music, moves and uniforms. The uniforms were taken away because they were too provocative. The struggle was temporarily solved when an outfit was agreed on by dancers and administration. However, the new uniforms were also deemed forbidden.

Besides the struggles over choosing music and dress, the dancers began to lose floor time. The timeouts started to include both cheerleaders > and dancers instead of solotimeouts that both groups were used to. The dance team was wary of their future.

> For the final season, the same coach returned, but she was in charge of both the cheerleaders and the dancers. Timeouts became combined. Members began quitting.

In 1999, the dance team dissolved. Only a reorganized cheerleading squad remained. Eight spots on the cheerleading squad became dancers who would not have to stunt.

The discontinuation of the Fly Girlz dance team left members with memories of contributing to the spirit of Flyers basketball.

"I remember feeling sucha pride when the crowds cheered for us," reminisceds Caruso.

The week of competition between sorority and fraternity teams evolved into a weekend of teams reaching out and helping the university community as well as developing a sense of community among the Greek organizations.

Due to scheduling conflicts and new ideas, the old "Greek Week," where sororities and fraternities competed for bragging rights turned into "Greek Weekend," when members of the Greek community came together for a common cause.

Sponsored by the Panhellenic Council and the InterFraternity Council, Greek Weekend was kicked off with a cookout behind Founder's Hall and a kickball tournament. Each sorority was paired up with a fraternity. Throughout the weekend the teams worked together to raise money for their philanthropies and to help out other causes.

Part of the weekend included the Hope Walk, sponsored by Delta Tau Delta and Phi Siama Rho. The Hope Walk was a seven-mile walk around the cities of Oakwood and Dayton. Each team received points for the amount of people they had participating.

For those who could not participate in the walk, members could participate in Greensweep. Members planted trees and helped clean up the student neighborhood.

At the end of "Greek Weekend," a party was held at Tim's Bar and Grill to celebrate the success of the events and to announce which team racked up the most points, Besides creating friendly competition, the $_{\Omega}$ Greek community gave back to the community $\stackrel{\Phi}{\succeq}$ and got to know each other a little better.

Recruitment

Story by Mitch Sex and Debi Curson

Battling cold weather. snow and back to school blues-195 women skidded up and down Stuart Hall to participate in formal recruitment.

Formal recruitment took place the first week in January, amid snow storms and the hustle and bustle of the new spring semester. Because they were not allowed to participate in informal recruitment in the fall, many first-year women took their first opportunity to experience sorority life in the winter.

To be eligible to participate in recruitment, women must have completed one semester of college, be in good disciplinary standing with the university, have a minimum GPA of 2.0, as well as abide by all university recruitment rules.

"The university requires that all students interested in participating in sorority or fraternity life have at least a semester of college credit, a minimum of a 2.0 cumulative GPA and be in good disciplinary standing," Assistant Director of Student Activities Melissa Flanagan stated. "Additionally, women must have registered for recruitment with the Panhellenic Council and pay a nominal fee for participation."

Once the women became eligible for recruitment, they went to various sorority recruitment parties, including open houses and preference parties. The majority of the parties were held in the evening, making for a long day on the part of both potential members and sorority members.

"Formal recruitment is always tiring, but is so much fun because you really get to bond with your current sisters and meet many women that are interested in becoming involved with Greek Life," junior Hillary Hanlon commented.

In the end, the sororities $_{\overline{0}}^{\Omega}$ and potential member $_{\overline{0}}^{\oplus}$ found what they were looking for-the perfect fit.

Story by Debi Curson

Derby Days began at the University of California-Berkley in 1933. What started out as a day of events has now turned into up to a full week worth of activities. Sororities compete in various events over the course of the week. Some of the events planned were a canned food drive, house decoration, skit performance, a clothina drive, a kickball tournament, field games, and jar judging.

The theme for Derby Days 2000 was "Welcome to the Jungle," a throw-back to the 1980s. Skits and house decorations reflected that theme from tributes to the band Guns 'n' Roses, to wild and ornate jungle decorations.

Castles were made of canned food in Kennedy Union Plaza, where each of the seven sororities were given a 10 by 10 foot square area in which to build. The sororities had to collect as much canned food as they could to construct these castles. Castles were judged on the amount of food collected and aesthetics. Over 1600 items were collected and donated to the Ronald McDonald House.

Sororities also competed against each other in the annual Derby Days clothing drive. Throughout the year, sororities collected bags of clothes from family and friends. The bags were loaded into cars and brought to KU, where they were weighed. The clothes went to the St. Vincent DePaul Society.

Derby Days gave the Greek community another opportunity to come together for a good cause. The week-long celebration was a mix of competition, philan-thropy and fun.

Giving to the community was one of the most gratifying aspects of Greek Life. The 11 fraternities and sororities donated over 10,000 hours and $10,000 to philanthropic activities each year.

Many of the philanthropic activities were open to the campus and Dayton communities and involved sporting events. The Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity sposored "Bowl for the Heart," with all proceeds going to the American Heart Association. A football tournament, called the Phi-est Bowl was sposnored by the Alpha Phi sorority, and Sigma Kappa sponsored the "Sigma Cup," a floor hockey tournament. The money raised by the the competition was given to the Sigma Kappa foundation to support Alzheimer's Disease research. Other events included volleyball and kickball tournaments.

This year, Delta Tau Delta and Phi Sigma Rho teamed up to sponsor the "Hope Walk." All proceeds went to the American Cancer Society. The seven mile walk winded through Dayton and Oakwood neighborhoods. To increase participation, Greek organizations received points for every member that participated toward their Greek Weekend total.

Greek organizations found that service to others not only helped the community, but gave members a sense of fulfillment.

Story by Kevin Rigling

The 1999-2000 season proved to been an exciting one in the realm of Flyer athletics. Flyer fans saw many victories and accomplishments throughout the year, including the women's varsity soccer run in the NCAA tournament and the men's basketball appearance at the Big Dance. Many of Dayton's other sports attained their own accomplishments, as well as many of the individual awards that many athletes won.

The fall season gave the first glimpse into Dayton's powerful sea-First-year women's soccer player Missy Gregg was named as the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week while leading the women into the NCCA tournament. Senior soccer player R.J. Kaszuba also earned A-10 Player of the Week honors. Senior cross-country runner Dan Moroney was named A-10 Player of the Week as well as A-10 All Conference Honors. Moroney. along with senior soccer player Mark Schulte, were named to the 2000 GTE University Division Men's Fall/Winter Sports At-Large Academic All District IV Team. Schulte was announced to have been drafted by the Tampa Bay Mutiny of Major League Soccer after the season ended.

In cross country news, first year runner Tara Storage had a tremendous season, gathering A-10 Rookie of the Week Awards numerous times, Performer of the Week, A-10 All Conference Team, and A-10 Most Outstanding Rookie award. She also earned All Conference honors and Runner of the Week award for track and field in the spring. Sophomore Jodi Borges also made All Conference in the shot put in track and field this season.

Men's and women's basketball attained numerous awards. Senior Christi Hester had a stellar season, garnering Player of the Week honors several times. Teammate first vear Stefanie Miller was awarded with Rookie of the Week. On the men's side, first year Brooks Hall was Rookie of the Week a few times, as well as being named to the Conference All Rookie Team. Senior Mark Ashman was Player of the Week at various times throughout the season, as well as named to the 1st Team All Conference and the National Association of Basketball Coaches All-Star Game, Junior Tony Stanley was named to 2nd Team All Conference while senior Ted Fitz was on the Conference All Academic.

The end of the 1999 baseball season did not disappoint Flyer fans, as junior catcher Brooks Vogel was named Player of the Week a couple of times and was the Collegiate Baseball/Louisville Slugger National Player of the Week during the season.

Flyer sports proved that UD was not only an academic powerhouse, but an athletic one, as well.

Water skiing has been a club sport for a time now at the University of Dayton, and it shows in the amount of dedicated athletes and fans involved in the sport. The club sport spent its weekends in the fall and spring in various locations at different lakes. Each tournament consists of three events, slalom, trick, and jump. Each tournament the Flyers competed in could contain from 5 to 22 teams from around the Midwest. During the competitions, both the men and women's team have an "A" and "B" team. During tournament action, only the "A" team can score points for the team.

Tournaments lasted a weekend, and most teams arrived Friday evening. Skiing began the next morning at 8 AM, with the slalom event. This was followed later in the day with the trick event.

Sunday morning finished the trick events for the tournament. The day also consisted of the third and final event, the jump event. Trophies were awarded to the top 3 finishing teams.

The numbers of the club were low, but the team still kept the spirit and tradition of the club alive. One such tradition was the Friday drive before tournaments. The cars and vans were usually soaped up and headed to the site as a large caravan, oozing with Dayton Water Ski spirit and pride.

Little doubt remains that the Water Ski team will continue their Friday drive before tournaments, and that dedicated fans will arrive shortly after the caravan to support Dayton Water Ski.

REBUILDING

This was a rebuilding season. We had to re-evaluate where we wanted to go.

Story by Kevin Rigling

Water polo, described as a cross between ice hockey, basketball and soccer, combines a variety of skills for the necessary victory. Players hurl a volleyball sized ball into the awaiting goalie's face.

In the 1999 fall season, the Flyer water polo squad finished short of their own expectations. However, team members credit this to loosing three starters.

"It's not that we didn't have a good team," junior Mark Rastetter explained. "We have a lot of talent and potential but a lot of new faces. This year was more of a rebuilding year."

Although the Flyers did not make it to the Midwest Championships as they did last season, they had some highlights in the year. The Flyers did not lose any conference games until they reached the conference championships, where they lost to Notre Dame. This defeat prevented a trip to the Midwest Championships.

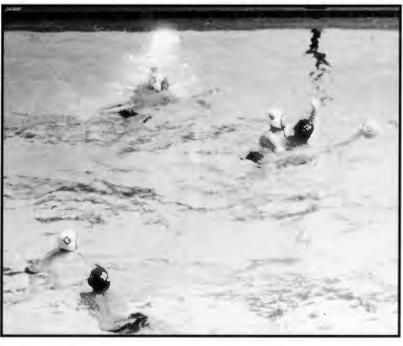

However, the tournament held at The Ohio State University demonstrated the Flyers strength. They went undefeated the entire tournament, battling teams such as OSU and University of Toledo en route to winning the tournament.

Rastetter emphasized that the Flyers were not content with this season.

"At the end of the season, we reevaluated where we wanted to be as a team," Rastetter stated. "We had a lot of new faces and talented freshmen come in this year, and hopefully during the off season training, we can come together as a team and have a triumphant season next year."

"It was impressive how hard all of the women played." -Jenny Smith

Story by Kevin Rigling

More participation and increased practices produced quality performances for the men's and women's lacrosse teams.

"Our season went pretty well," club president, junior, Jenny Smith stated. "We have improved a lot since last season."

Perhaps the most memorable aspect of the women's season was their very first game, which they won.

"Everyone just played really well for it being the first game," Smith commented. "It was very impressive how hard all of the women played."

Smith felt that, upon a majority of the players returning, the team would be more prepared. Some of the players this year had never played before, and looked pretty good despite that. One aspect of their game that the women would like to work on is their running of plays. According to Smith, the plays sometimes became too complicated, and the players forget the simple things that made the team good. However, with hard work and practice, the women prepared for the next season.

The men had some impressive games as well. Evidence of this was their game against the Miami Red Hawks at Founder's Field. The men seemed to dominate throughout much of the game. The Miami defense could not control the Flyers' offensive power. With their teamwork and speed, the Flyers' outplayed their opponents throughout much of the match. The Flyer defense and goalies provided the necessary defense reauired when Miami had the few chances to get the ball to the other side of the field.

The men's lacrosse team looked strong this season, and with more hard work, they expected to be a feared team next season.

Story by Kevin Rigling

The Flyers' 1999 season seemed like a roller coaster ride compared with their impressive 1998 program. The Flyers capped an incredible season with an Atlantic-10 regular season championship. This year, Dayton looked to have a strong season despite losing some key players. The mix included a variety of incoming first year students, some returning Flyers and a few seasoned veterans. The team was led by senior co-captains Karen Maciaga and Johanna Metzger.

"It was a little disappointing," junior Carla Muntz admitted. "We were really frustrated. We expected to do much better."

After losing their season opener 3-0 to Ohio State, Dayton seemed to have a resurgence of strength, winning three in a row. Although it looked as though the Flyers were picking up steam early in the season, they were dealt six crushing losses in a row. The Flyers persisted. They worked harder, kept things positive and went on an 11-6 run to close out the regular season, finishing 14-13 overall and 10-8 in the A-10. This season marked the fifth consecutive season that the Flyers have finished the regular season above .500.

The players had an abundance of tenacity and heart throughout the season. The last two games of the regular season proved crucial in the Flyers' attempt to finish strong and earn a spot in the A-10 championship. The team's second to last game against the Hokies of Virginia Tech, the Flyers found themselves behind by a game. They turned around and won the next three consecutive games, winning the match. This win secured the Flyers' .500 season and kept their A-10 championship hopes alive.

The Flyers were determined to win their last match of the season at Cincinnati against Xavier. Despite losing to Xavier at the Frericks Center earlier in the season, the Flyers put their all into this game, but lost 3-0. The defending regular season champs, although disappointed, resolved to work hard in the offseason to make next year victorious.

While the season may not have gone as well as the Flyers would have liked, the Flyers did win some prestigious awards. Junior Sierra Ashley was named into the A-10 All-Conference team after leading the team this season in digs and kills per game. First year Susan Westbrock received the A-10 Rookie of the Year award, bringing the award to a Dayton player for the second year in a row. Muntz accomplished an amazing feat of her own, breaking the school record for assists just 11 games into the season. The Flyers look to improve next season, as they are returning 11 letter winners from this season's squad, including Ashley, Ferriell, Muntz and Westbrock.

The Flyers started to train immediately as the off sea-game. Muntzfelt that next year would turn around.

"We will have a big advantage in that almost everyone is returning," Muntz declared. "We will have a large team playing in the spring, and this will help everyone get to know each other better. With hard work, this will help the team to improve next season."

Story by Kevin Rigling

The men's and women's rugby teams both proved to be victorious in many of their battles this season. The men began their dominance early in the season, as in evidence of the 67-0 trouncing of the University of Cincinnati Law Schoolin late September. The men's squad went undefeated in the first half of last year's season, and placed sixth at Nationals, so their skills were not surprising.

The men also proved themselves in their season opener against Ohio University, where they won 34-10. The Flyers used their exceptional speed to score in their games evidenced in the match against UC. One of the essential ideas in this year's success was the team's defensive capabilities.

"We wanted to be more aggressive in our games," club president Andy Jutte explained."So we changed our defense to accomplish that."

The squad once again proved to be too much to handle for many of the opposing teams, as the men grabbed the Ohio Championship for the second straight year, as well as finishing 2nd at the Midwest Championships and 2nd at the Ohio Rugby Classic. Despite the large amount of new players, 15 to be exact, the Flyers still dominated in many of their matches. Jutte expects next year's squad to be just as good as this year's, or even better.

"They're looking good," Jutte commented, "There's a lot of experience on the team, and a lot of depth at each position."

The women's rugby team had a good season as well. One of their most important matches of the season was against the University of Illinois.

"We got killed," senior Jill Lombardi stated, "But it was good for us, because it helped us to move our level of play up, and help us compete with the bigger schools. Because Illinois is nationally ranked, it gave us the exposure to that level of play."

The women had plenty of high points this season. During their fall season, they knocked off Ohio University and Miami University. This was a benchmark for the women because they had never beaten Miami in the past. They also competed in their first regional this season. Next year, the women will look to rebuild the team in numbers and strength.

The men's and women's varsity soccer teams entered the 1999 season with significant expectations to meet. The men won Dayton's first Atlantic 10 regular season championship the previous year. The women accomplished the same feat, as well as coming up short in their quest to the NCAA tournament, losing to Xavier 4-3 in a shootout, Both teams embarked upon a quest to improve their seasons.

The Flyer women viewed the 1999 season as a chance to erase last year's loss and make it to the NCAA championship. Led by senior team tri-captains Jen Davin, Wes Oxley and Damian Gold, the women turned their game up a notch in their crusade to the Big Dance. First-year Missy Gregg credits the outstanding season to the help from Flyer veterans.

"The senior captains provided really good leadership," Gregg stated. "They led us throughout the season. We all knew how good we could be. We just kept our heads up and retained a positive focus."

The women's team had their most successful season in Flyer history. The women ended the season with an impressive record of 18-5. Coach Mike Tucker led the women in their pursuit of both an A-10 championship and an NCAA championship.

The women had strong performances turned in by Flyer returning players and outstanding newcomers. Grega provided a spark amona the Flyer offense. Solid performances were achieved by other freshmen, including Gregg's Alter teammates Liz Brown and Lindsey

The women made it all the way to the second round of the NCAA tournament, losing there 5-1 in South Bend against the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame. The women look to improve even more next season.

"We are lifting, conditioning and training hard, "Gregg revealed. "We want to go into next season knowing that no team will be fitter than the Flyers."

The men's team came into the season looking strong. They lost four players from last year's squad. Many of the top players in each position remained, including junior forward R.J. Kaszuba, a previous scoring champion. Other Flyer notables include senior captain Godfrey Tenoff, junior midfielder Patrick Wirtz and senior defender Mark Schulte. The Flyers looked to some of their first-year students to fill the voids left by graduated starters. The men set out to fight for a third straight A-10 crown.

The men started their season on a high note. They won five out of their first eight games against non-conference opponents. In the A-10, the Flyers finished 5-5-1 and 9-7-2 overall. Although the men

His per-game yard average is the highest in UD history, and he was named GTE Academic All-District. The leading scorer for the Flyers, however, was junior fullback David George. He scored 15 touchdowns: 12 touchdowns for rushing 529 yards and 3 touchdowns for receiving 104 yards. Brad Van Vleet, a junior linebacker, led the Flyers defense with 109 tackles.

Many exceptional games highlighted the Flyer's season. The team routed the University of San Diego 41-0, giving them their first shutout since 1996 when the Flyers defeated Evansville 42-0. Dayton's defense aided their win, holding the PFL's second leading rusher Oscar Arzu to just 35 yards on nine carries. Another notable game was a nail-biter with the Drake Bulldogs, beating them 20-14. Jimmy Lee accounted for half of the Flyer's 70 offensive plays: rushing 31 times for a

The 1999-2000 season turned out to be tremendous for both the men's and women's basketball teams. The men wrapped up their season as Atlantic-10 Western Division Champions. The women also had an impressive season, making a run in the A-10 tournament and the WNIT.

The women's team achieved many goals this season. For the first time in six years, the team finished with at least a .500 record, finishing 15-15. Senior Christi Hester received numerous awards throughout the year, including the A-10 Player of the Week three times, All-Academic Team, A-10 Second Team, and Co-Most Improved Player.

Flyer veterans, including Alena Martens and Janette Jaques and Flyer first-year Stefanie Miller, helped the Flyers to post an improved season. The Flyers also broke their previous attendance record in their first home game against Purdue, with 4, 830 in attendance to cheer them in a hard fought loss. The Flyers turned their season around from the previous one. Although they finished with 15 wins and 15 losses, nine of the losses were by single digit amounts.

Throughout the season, the Flyers played games to the extreme and posted some impressive numbers. The Flyers outscored their opponents this season 2,141 to 1,982, with Hester leading the way averaging 15.1 points per game. Senior RaeLynn McIntosh collected 176 rebounds this season, averaging 5.9 per game.

The Flyers advanced to the quarterfinals of the A-10 tournament, where they suffered a loss to St. Joe's. The women then prepared for the WNIT. In the first round, they lost to Florida, 97-93, despite playing their best game of their season. Hester led the Flyers with an 30 points, her season high. Martens also turned in a remarkable performance, with 29 points. The Flyers planned to improve in the following season.

On the men's side, a disappointing 1998-1999 season was completely revamped and an outstanding 1999-2000 season erupted, ending with a trip to the NCAA tournament. The Flyers started the season with an impressive 9-0 run. The Flyers defeated some noted teams, including the University of Kentucky and University of Xavier. The Flyers seemed to be rather consistent, always rebounding from losses in true fighters' form.

"We never lost more than one game in a row. That says a lot about this team," Coach Oliver Purnell stated at a press conference. "The consistency of this team all year long got us here (NCAA tournament)."

After their astonishing regular season, the Flyers arrived at the A-10 championship ready to win. Unfortunately, the Flyers lost to St. Bonaventure in the second round. This did not impede the Flyers' ultimate goal though, as they were selected as the eleventh seed in the West region in the NCAA tournament. This marks the first

Unfortunately for the Flyers, Purdue's Jaraan Cornell broke out of his season slump by hitting three 3-pointers in the final nine minutes of the game.

The club ice hockey team wrapped up a tough season in March. The team ended up with a 9-12-4 regular season record. The Flyers lost goaltender senior Mike Haplin after December graduation and were left without a seasoned goaltender. As the younger goalies tried to fill Halpin's skates, the Flyers' season experienced a few bumps along the way.

"We had a lot of younger players this season," junior Scott Reynolds explained. "Most of them were just getting used to our mode of play."

Although the season was rocky, members expect next year to be more successful.

"We didn't finish where we thought we should this year," sophomore Chuck Dodge commented. "We wanted to be in the top three. Next year though, I definitely expect to be in the top two or three, possibly win the league."

Another factor in the season outcome was head coach Eric Gartz' absence. About midway through the season, Gartz fell ill and was unable to finish coaching the season. Club President Tom Trzcinski took over coaching.

"We took it weekend by weekend,"Reynolds stated. "We lost a lot of close games, but I never thought that we were ever out of any game."

The Flyers practiced twice a week in order to prepare for games. Practices included scrimmages, skating and passing drills. In the off season, the team did weight training and played roller hockey to keep themselves in shape. Their hard work led to some sweet rewards.

"One of the most memorable games this season was against Kentucky in the first round of the MCHL tournament," Dodge recounted. "We had lost to them twice earlier in the regular season, but in this game we came out and beat them 6-3."

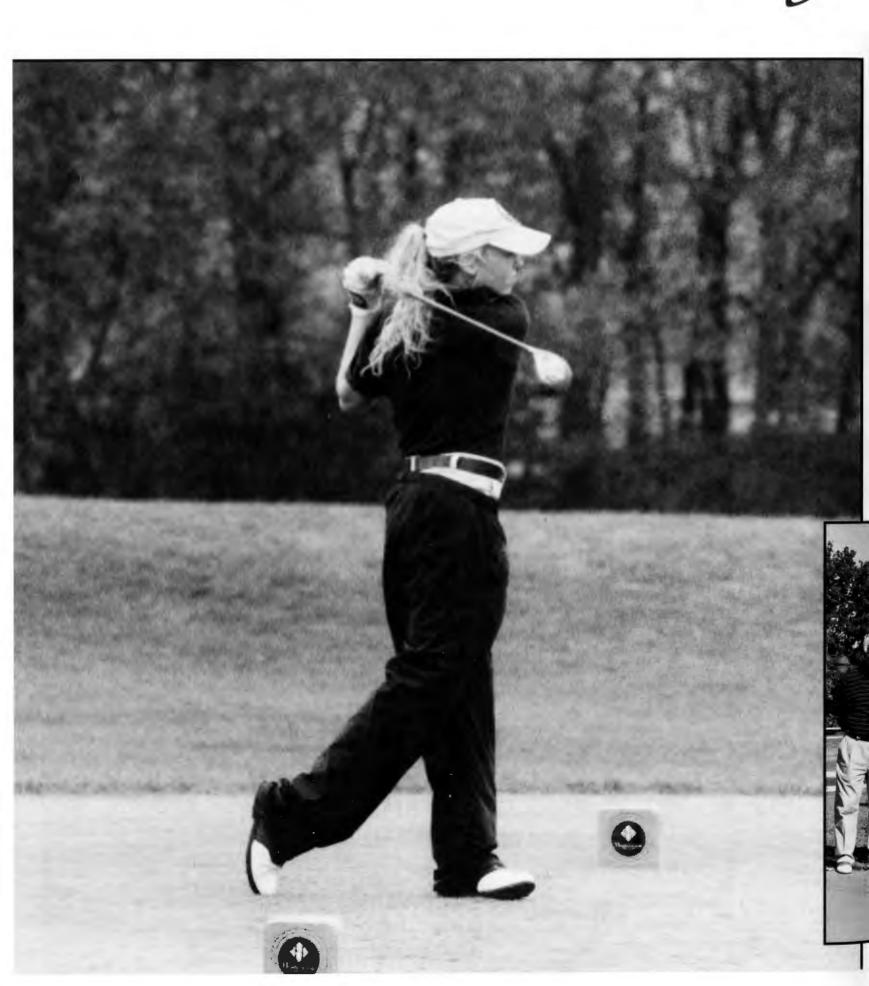

Dodge explained that many of the close losses in the season could be viewed as an experience problem. Against rivals such as Indiana University, Miami University (OH), and the University of Michigan, it showed in the third period.

"We would play hard, right with them, for the first two periods," Dodge expounded. "But in the third period, our inexperience came into play, while the other team could keep on going strong."

The team was already one step ahead of the past season. They set their goals for the upcoming season and outlined where they would like the program to go in the future.

The men's and women's golf teams had full schedules in both the spring and fall seasons, and with the help of newcomers and veterans alike, each team managed to produce positive outcomes. Each team played in a variety of tournaments. The women competed in Illinois, Ohio, Virginia, and North Carolina, against such schools as Illinois State, Elon College, and Bowling Green State University. The men took their gameplay to Michigan, Ohio, New York, and Kentucky while battling St. Bonaventure, Detroit, and city rival Wright State University. Both teams worked hard in the off season in preperation for the upcoming seasons.

The women started their fall season in Normal, III., against Illinois State. They played nearly every weekend in the months of September and October, with a match

October 11 and 12 at the Eastern Illinois Invitational. The Flyers finished fourth, with Creighton University taking the first place position. Junior Kristen Joyce scored 168, the first place finisher on the squad, which gave her a tie for fifth place overall in the tournament. Sophomore Stephanie Kane finished 16 with a 173 while senior Serena McGannon tallied a 176 to finish in 18 place. The women also competed in the Flyer Invitational in Dayton earlier in the month. Joyce and first-year Brett Johnson led the Flvers with scores of 90. Seniors Kelly Pyka and McGannon tied for second on the team with 92. The women began their spring season in NC at Elon College, where they finished tenth in a field of 15 teams. Joyce once again led the Flyers, with a combined round total of 164, which yielded her a 18 place tie. The women also competed in the William and Mary Invitational near the end of the season, finishing tenth. Joyce continued her triumphant success of the season, leading the Flyers with a tenth place finish, with a score of 158. Pyka and Kane also contributed to the Flyers' finish.

The men started their fall season at home, hosting their own Dayton Invitational. They played every weekend throughout the month of September and nearly every weekend in October. First-year student Justin Sokol, along with seniors Chad Larkin, Mike Burens and junior Todd Grear led the Flyers throughout much of both the spring and fall seasons.

"I think we did fairly well," Larkin expressed, "It was nice to win our own tournament, although we were disappointed with our finish at the A-10 tourney, despite Matt Pagnotto's great matchplay there."

Larkin credits the team's success to the first-years that joined the sauad.

"The new guys came in wanting to play, which in turn pushed the veterans to their peak," Larkin stated.

Larkin also has high hopes for next year's team.

"Although they will be losing some seniors, the freshmen from this year will be strong and we have three incoming first-year students that should be good as well," Larkin commented. "It should not be a rebuilding year by any means."

Story by Kevin Rigling

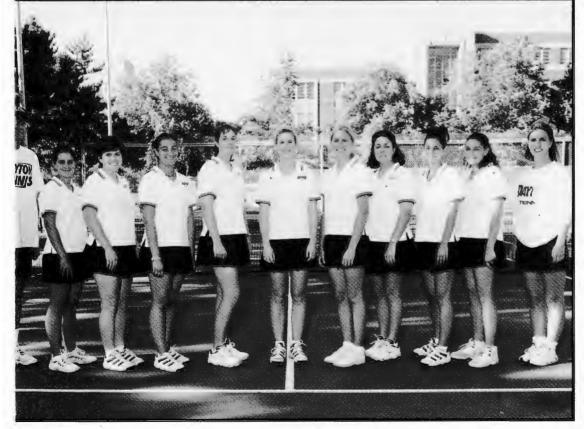

The men's and women's tennis teams worked hard in the offseason to prepare for their 1999-2000 seasons. The men were coming off an impressive 19-8 record from their previous season, while the women looked to improve their 8-13 record. Both teams gained some incoming students while keeping some seasoned veterans, all ready to turn triumphant seasons.

The women's team started their fall season strongly, with 8-1 wins over Wittenberg and Bradley. They lost a close match to Austin Peay next, then picked up steam as they posted some impressive victories along the season. These included a 9-0 romp of IUPUI and three straight 7-2 wins over John Carroll, Cleveland State, and St.

Bonnaventure. Many of the losses were close matches. These games were won by the other teams by a point or two. The women looked at an 8-4 record as the fall came to a close. The women focused on improving the game, both physically and mentally for the upcoming season. However, the women lost yet another hard-fought close match 5-4 to Oakland University. Despite the loss, many Flyers, including senior Michelle Evans, first year Rebecca Stanchin, and first year Moreen Wiggins, posted victories. The women next lost to Duguesne, but followed that loss with a win over Akron. The women also put up some more impressive wins, with an 8-1 trouncing of Manhattan College and a 7Senior Jeff Keckley was named to the 2000 Bell Atlantic A-10 All Conference Tennis Team.

2 defeat of Cedarville Colege. The Flyers entered the Atlantic 10 tournament ready to offer opposition to any team who came their way. Despite their hard playing, the women lost to Fordham in the first round, but bounced back and beat LaSalle 5-0, taking their season record to a much improved 16-13.

The men came off of a very good 19-8 season ready to do battle in the 1999-2000 season. The Flyers' fall season started with a bang. Their first match was cancelled, but the men defeated Wittenberg 5-2 in their next game. The men played in a couple of tournaments, then lost to crosstown rival Wright State. However, this loss may have simply given the Flyers a renewed spirit, as they went on a winning streak, victorious in three straight matches: 7-0, 6-1, and 4-3. The men ended their fall season on a good note ready to take on their spring opponents.

The beginning of the spring season was rather rocky for the men. They went on a roller coaster ride of sorts, often winning one, then losing one or two, and then winning again. As the season progressed, the Flyers started to fall into their groove, winning

BATTING AND

Puperior season

Story by Kevin Rigling

The Flyers started their 1999-2000 season on a sour note but it ended in sweet success. After losing their first five games, they rebounded. Eventually, the women breathed new life into their game, and the season turned sweet. Near the end of March, the women went on a rampage, winning 16 out of 18 games, including an eight game winning streak. The women finished their season on a strong note, including a 4-4 tie with Oakland University that was called because of rain.

The softball team had many highlights throughout the year.

"None of our schedule is fluff," coach Jodi Eickemeyer commented in an interview with Flyer News. "We have a tough schedule, which has helped us get better, but it doesn't get any easier."

One exciting set of games was the match up between the Flyers and Cleveland State on April 18. This date was a momentous one for the Flyers, as the women's softball team reached the 30 win plateau for the first time ever in school history. The doubleheader sweep of Cleveland State was largely made possible by senior third baseman Tanya Leet, as well as help from junior Erin O'Shea and senior pitcher Sara Hatcher. O'Shea went 3 for 3 on the day and scored two runs, while Hatcher pitched solidly, giving up three hits and one earned run in seven innings. This game marked Hatcher's 19th winning appearance overall, and her 15th straight. It was Leet, however, that gave the Flyers the edge in this contest. After belting a home run in the second inning to kick the Flyers off to a 5-0 lead, the senior decided that she wasn't finished and took another long ball deep in the 10th inning to give the Flyers the win 9-8. The win put the women at 30-17 for the year.

Hatcher proved to be a tenacious force in many of the Flyer victories. She pitched many exemplary innings and won some essential games, including a two game sweep of St. Bonaventure in April. The pair of wins put Hatcher at an impressive 22-4 for the season, with 18 straight wins. Her 21st win in the first game against the Bonnies set a new school record. Hatcher was named the A-10 pitcher of the week for her accomplishments in these games as well as the others that occurred in the same week. As of April 25, Hatcher's record stood at 21-4, with 23 complete games while boasting a 0.79 ERA.

The Flyers ended their regular season by splitting a pair of games with the University of Massachusetts. Dayton won the first game of the afternoon with the assistance of home runs from Leet and sophomore Kerry White, who battled injury all season. White also hit an RBI single in the same game. Minutewomen came back in the second game to prevent the sweep, powered by a couple of back to back solo home runs. The loss and win put the Flyers' regular season record at 34-20, with a 10-4 record in the A-10.

30-WRACHINGATEAU

The women completed a victorious season ready for A-10 tournament play, and with hard work and practice, the Flyers could improve upon this magnificent season next year.

The men's baseball team started the 1999-2000 season with a bang, winning three straight games versus state rival Bowling Green. However, the season then began a downward slump as the month of March rolled around, as the Flyers lost 13 straight games before beating Ohio University on March 22. The Flyers then went on an alternating streak, winning one and then losing, before falling on a four game winning streak in April. The Flyers lost the next four games, then rebounded to prove victorious in their next five outings.

There was one major change this past season in the Flyer's clubhouse, and that was the new head coach Tony Vittorio. Coming from a successful three-year stint at Indiana University Purdue University Fort Wayne, Coach Vittorio was ready to coach the Flyers to victory.

"I am excited about the opportunity to help build the program at Dayton," Vittorio expressed in a recent interview. "I feel that a Division I program at a Catholic institution will be a great fit for me."

Vittorio is known for rebuilding baseball programs and did not hesitate when starting at Dayton. He helped to sign four incoming freshmen and brought in six transfers from other schools.

Despite the disappointing season record, the Flyers still had a relatively good season in terms of individual players. As of May 9th, 2000, junior Brooks Vogel led the Atlantic 10 in home runs with 19, slugging percentage with .823, and total bases with 135. Vogel is ninth with a .372 batting average, fourth in RBI with 48, and fifth with 50 runs. Vogel was also named the Collegiate Baseball/Louisville Slugger National Player of the Week once during the season and was the A-10 Player of the Week a few times. Junior Brent Berigan also performed, tied for third in the A-10 as of mid April in triples with three, while pulling down the A-10 Player of the Week once during the season.

Other Flyers had noteworthy seasons as well. With the completion of the May 7th game versus Duquesne, and a 15-2 victory at that, senior left-handed pitcher Kasey Rosendahl pitched his seventh complete game. Rosendahl also contributed to an 8-7 victory over Marshall on May 4th in the second game of a doubleheader.

However, it was sophomore shortstop Jeff Bourassa who provided the punch in the Flyer's offensive power, as he hit two home runs in that game, a solo shot and a two run bomb. It was the first home runs of Bourassa's collegiate career.

The Flyers played in some exciting games this season, as well as some close yet tough losses. One example of the former was the match up against the Cincinnati Bearcats at Cincinnati. The "Baseball is a game you play every day," he expressed in an interview with Flyer News. "If we wake up and have practice today, we'll get better in practice. If we wake up for a game, we'll get better in the games. If we worry about today, good things will happen."

NEW BEGIN

Story by Kevin Rigling

The women's crew finished their first regular season as a recognized varsity sport at the University of Dayton with a hard-earned third place finish at the Bell Atlantic 10 Championships in Collingswood, NJ. The University of Massachusetts took home first place, while George Washington finished second and St. Joseph's tied with U.D. for third place. During that regatta, the Flyers won the Lightweight 4 final with a time 8:28.70, beating the UMass boat by 12 seconds. In the other races, U.D. placed fourth in the Varsity 4 and third in the Varsity 8.

Senior rower Bernadette Marten felt that the season was a good one for the team.

"We did very well," Marten explained. "We finished our best ever at the A-10 championships and beat Temple as well!"

The season leading to this culmination was filled with many ups and downs as the women began their varsity status careers. On April 1st, the Flyers hosted their first ever varsity regatta. The women took three out of four races against Indiana and Cincinnati. They won the Novice 4, the Varsity 4, and the Varsity 8 races, while Indiana won the Novice 8 race. Although only a club, the men's crew team competed in this regatta as well, holding their own against Indiana and Cincinnati by winning both of the Varsity 8 races.

The F!yers also competed in Marietta, OH against Purdue and Marietta. The women took second place in all four races, only finishing 4 seconds behind Purdue in the junior varsity 8 race. The women also traveled to Columbus, OH on a chilly windy day to combat the Buckeyes of Ohio State. Unfortunately, the Bucks proved to be more than the Flyers could handle, as they swept U.D. in five races. Among the mentioned regattas, the Flyers also competed in Pittsburgh, PA, Boston, MA, and Knoxville, TN.

The Flyers received some exciting news this season. Their upgrade to a varsity sport, which is the most recent since women's track was made varsity in 1994, brings the total number of varsity sports competing at the Division I level to 17.

"It was great to be recognized as a varsity sport," Marten expressed. "The additional funding we received allowed us to pay for all of the trips and even purchase a new boat."

Besides that, it was learned that Marten spent the previous summer training at the San Diego Olympic Training Center. Previously, Marten attended the National Team Identification Camp held at Princeton University, where she finished 11th out of 45 women. Her goal is to become a member of the U.S.

helped her to learn more about the sport.

"It was such a great opportunity to train with such an elite group of women," Marten stated. "It gives you someone you can model your own technique after, as well as learning even more about the mechanics of the sport."

The opportunity was the first time a University of Dayton rower was selected for this caliber of training. It certainly

GOING THED

LSTANCE

Story by Kevin Rigling

The University of Dayton women's track and field team enjoyed a 1999-2000 outdoor and indoor track season that was filled with highlights. The team returned many veterans from last season, but also gained a slew of incoming first year students. The Flyers gained some impressive first year students, including Kara and Tara Storage and LeBren Martin. The Flyers began their indoor season in December, with a transition to outdoor track in March. Throughout each meet, the women concentrated on attaining new goals and raising the bar. They were a force to be reckoned with, thanks to some improvements.

"The coaching was definitely better this year," sophomore Courtney Stephenson asserted.

During the season, each woman on the team strived to accomplish new feats and records. Four of such happenings occurred during the McDonald's Invitational at Ohio University. Martin set a record in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 14.32 seconds. This broke the school record she set earlier in the year, at 14.67 seconds. Later that day, the event was the 400-meter hurdles, and her time of 1:01.96 surpassed her previous record of 1:02.13. Tara Storage broke her sister Kara's previously record of 4:49.19 in the 1500 meters with a time of 4:42.13. Sophomore Jodi Brogues also had a superb day, tying her own record in the shot put with a toss of 49'3". She also threw 152'7" in the discus, landing 13 feet ahead of the next finisher.

During the spring outdoor season, the Flyers turned in stellar performances. Martin continued her winning ways, often placing in the top three in her events. Impressive performances throughout the spring season were also turned in by junior Karla Klosterman in the 800 meters, sophomore Kelly Gray in the shot put and discus, first year Courtney Harring in the 400 meter dash, and the Storage sisters in the 3000 and 5000 meters. The women hosted their own Dayton Invitational at Welcome Stadium on April 16th. The Flyers were down by four points heading into the last event, trailing Duquesne. However, there was a disqualification against Duquesne for cutting over too early, enabling U.D. to score first in the relay and take first place overall in their own meet with 153 points. Duquesne finished second with 147 points. The Flyer newcomers once again stepped up in this meet, providing U.D. with five first place finishes.

At the end of the season, the Flyers placed seventh in the A-10 Outdoor Championships, due to a less than normal size squad that prevented Dayton from competing in every event. Despite the less than anticipated finish, the women still brought home four individual conference championships. Tara Storage won the 5000 meter, with hard work and practice and turn out an outstanding season next year.

"Everyone will be back next year," Stephenson stated. "We'll definitely be back, and we'll be stronger."

Martin won the 400 meter hurdles, and Borges won the shot put and discus throw.

The Flyers had a tremendous season, with a large number of newcomers to the program. With nearly all of this year's members returning, the women are poised to improve greatly on this season

"Everyone always wants to do his best. Knowing that the team is supporting you all the way really helps you to run your best."

Men's and women's cross country wanted more than just a winning season. The teams strived to end with an exceptional record but used teamwork as the backbone to attain their goal. This unified attitude pushed members to top performances until the end.

"Everyone always wants to do his best," sophomore Phil Ranley said. "Knowing that the team is supporting you all the way really helps you to run your best."

At the pre-meet practice each week, Coach Rich Davis gave each runner an assignment for the race. Runners knew who to pace with or who to pass during the race. These tips helped the team know their competition and set individual aoals.

For the second year in a row, the men produced a runner named to the Atlantic-10 All Conference Team. Senior Dan Moroney bettered his finish from last year by 25 places, finishing fifth of 103 runners at the meet. One of the team's biggest goals for the season was to run a strong race at the NCAA Great Lakes Regional Meet at the end of the season.

"Often Dayton doesn't do well at that meet because it is after A-10's, and people think that the season is over," Ranley explained. "This year, however, the team performed well with Dan running his best race of the season."

The women's team also experienced the benefits of being a close-knit group. In fact, one of their main goals for the season was to achieve more team unity than in previous years. The team integrated a large number of incoming first-year students into the group's bond. In the end, the team, its new runners and the new coach worked together to synthesize a new machine.

"At first we were skeptical about all of the freshmen coming out for the team," junior Kelly Klosterman reported. "They proved to be a huge asset. I've never had more fun on a team. The girls just worked so hard for themselves and for each other."

Q:

Who is your favorite professor?

"My favorite professor is Dr. Teresa Thompson of the communication department. Her knowledge and expertise as an educator are beyond incredible. Students often complain about having to do too much work for a professor, and Teri expected a lot from us, but it's funny how you just didn't mind doing the work. It is kind of sick for me to say this, but it was fun. Learning by her methods made me always excited to go to class."

What is the best way to celebrate your 21st birthday?

"I think the best way to celebrate my 21st would be to be with my closest friends. I don't want heavy drinking to be a part of my celebration. I want to begin the responsibility I have as an adult."

Elisabeth Wieser Sophomore

"The best way to celebrate is to drink a lot because it's the one day where it's acceptable, and your friends are there to take care of you."

If you could invite three people to dinner, dead or alive, who would you choose?

"I would invite Gandhi, Abraham Lincoln and Oscar Robertson. Gandhi because I want to know how difficult it was to live the simplest, purest life and still find inner happiness and peace. Lincoln because he held such a prestigous leadership position in America during the most influential time of war. Robertson because he was the greatest basketball player ever to come out of Cincinatti. He went on to have a successful professional career. He played for my favorite team, the Cincinatti Bearcats."

Emily Burns First-year student

"I would invite Democritus, Oscar Wilde, and Leon Lederman. Democritus, in addition to being a philosopher and politician, he was the first real particle physicist. His ideas about the atom are still the main focus of high-energy particle physics. Oscar Wilde is the coolest, wittiest, humurous literary figure ever, and even though he makes me look like a fool I would still want to meet him. Leon Lederman because he was the funniest physicist I have ever read in my life."

What is the secret to being a couch potato?

"I would have to be in a relaxed position. I also have to be tired. When I am on the couch I should have a universal remote control. Along with a VCR, there should be a good selection of movies. Snacks and a refrigerator within reach is important as well."

What is your most memorable experience in the ghetto?

What is the most exciting event you have experienced during your career at UD?

"The most exciting at UD since I have been here was definitely St. Patrick's Day because the campus was so alive. Some bars served green beer. People would go to class drunk and that was funny. It was all out a blast."

Emmanuel Ayim

Senior Athlete Proves Misconception Wrong

Story by Bethany Steele

Playing any sport in college takes talent and dedication. Emmanuel Ayim has been playing soccer since he was three years old. It is no wonder that he is one of the star players on the men's soccer team this season. He came to the university on an athletic scholarship, but he said that the good academics program also attracted him.

In fact, he thought that being "another dumb athlete" is one of the biggest misconceptions about him.

"The first impression people may have of you is that you are not smart, that athletic ability is what got you into college". Ayim commented. "But, when people meet ome they realize I'm not like that. I ome intellectual, not just someone that can score goals."

Instead of studying after practice when he was too tired to concentrate, he did his studying before practice. Soccer became his release from schoolwork and the stress of being a college student.

"The mandatory study hours I had my freshman year have helped me to set up good habits," Ayim stated. "I don't have to go there anymore, but I still go there to study."

Ayim has had adequate support in his athletic and academic endeavors, both from teammates and from his housemates and friends.

"We check in with each other, make sure no one oversleeps and misses class," Ayim said.

Soccer also functioned as Ayim's outlet for fun and socializing.

"A big part of it all is having a release," Ayim stated. "Too many students get caught up in being stressed about school. Everyone needs a release. It will carry over into the classroom and you will be more productive if you learn to balance your experiences."

Ayim also had soccer plans for after college. He was drafted to play professionally for the San Diego Flash. He went into the pool for an opportunity to play in the 2000 Olympics, as well.

"Getting an opportunity to play teaches you some real life lessons Ayim commented. "Some students spend four years alone, working hard, but doing everything by themselves. My experiences have helped me to get along with other people and adjust to different opinions and styles."

"On Duty" For Others

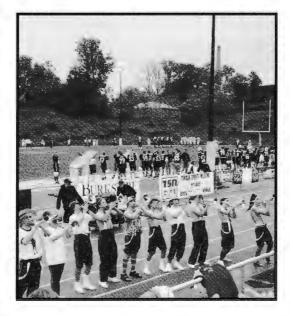

Mike Ellerbrock Aids Fellow Students as Resident Assistant

Most college students are happy just to balance work between all their classes and social life. Michael Ellerbrock, a senior civil engineering major, goes a step further. Not only has he tackled a demanding job as resident assistant for the past three years but also participates in Swing Club, Marching Band, and Phi Mu Alpha in addition to his position.

His first resident assistant experience was in Stuart Hall. He then became an RA for Garden Apartments from 98-99 and again in 99-00. He enjoyed the job despite its demands on personal time. Being an RA allowed him to be on top of activities going on around campus.

Perks of the job were the free room and board and the chance to direct a floor. Ellerbrock's favorite part of his job, however, was helping his residents.

"It's a good feeling when you can make some one feel better about a situation or problem", Ellerbrock stated.

Although he enjoys his residents, they have created some interesting excuses to get out of trouble. Students respect Ellerbrock, but there is an element of fear that his authority institutes. Getting to know the students personally eases their fears, though.

In his determination and dedication to all his activities, especially his job, Ellerbrock developed and increased sense of maturity, responsibility, and understanding.

Retreat Experience Eases the Transition for Graduates

Finding jobs, leaving friends and deciding what to do with their future graduation became a time of chaos. It was difficult to find time to reflect on what everything means.

This inspired a campus ministry team of Bridget Mooney, Connor McIntyre, and Jen Violi to create a program for seniors to address issues surrounding graduation.

"We wanted to address the concern of keeping students involved in the retreat experience," graduate assistant Bridget Mooney offered. "There was a need for different programming for seniors. The idea came from a journal, about a similar program at a different university. We met with 10 seniors to paffirm some of the topics we wanted to cover before starting the program."

Story by Shawna Hanes

On the Brink was open to any senior and involved a weekly program extending seven weeks. Topics such as reflection on self, creation of a personal mission statement, and living out faith and values after graduation were covered during the sessions.

"We were stunned by the response and it affirmed support for what we were trying to do, " said Mooney.

Students used this experience to bring clarity and build bonding relationships.

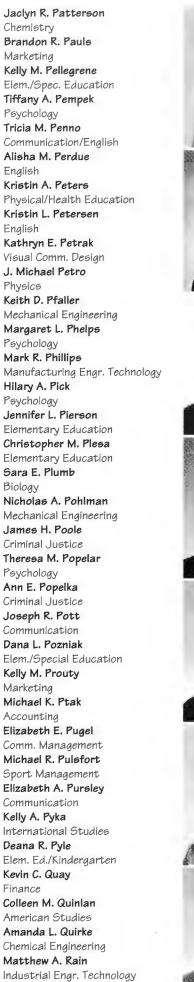

"I think that the best thing was that I didn't know everyone, but got to know them," Christy Oswald stated. "More importantly, I got to know myself more. It helped me go on that inner journey and reflect upon who I really am."

A Trip Down the Aisle

Marriage After Graduation Adds New Dimension

While most seniors simply thought about graduating in May, Jenny Huston had more on her mind. She got engaged to be married.

"(It is) terrifying. I am really nervous," Huston explained. "My sister is my maid of honor, and is graduating from high school this year. I'm also student teaching in May, so it's going to be crazy before the wedding happens."

Huston had plenty to think about over the last few months of school. Not only was she student teaching, but also planning for graduation and finding a job. On top of all that, her wedding was scheduled for June 10, 2000.

"We actually considered earlier dates because we wanted to make sure we were together wherever I find a job," Huston said. "We Story by Erin Wysocki wanted to get married as soon as possible so that we could move on with our lives together."

Although she never expected to get married at 21, Huston knows Bill is 'the one.' Even though people said that she is too young, she knew she had to do what is right in her heart.

Huston's friends have taken the engagement well. They had a 'screaming party' when she first told them. Everyone offered help, which kept her sane. Huston made final preparations for herself in her last year before starting her new life.

"I won't be able to take life on a whim after I am married, "Huston stated. "I'm trying to spend more time with people and get to knowed myself better as well."

High Fives and Hugs Mark End of College Career

The last four years were filled with parties, new friends, studying and growing. For many seniors it was hard to say good-bye to the life they had grown to love.

In the last week, prior to graduation, seniors spent their time packing and celebrating. They enjoyed dancing at the senior ball, the picnic in Humanities Plaza and the tent parties on Saturday night.

After one last night of Ghetto partying, seniors waited in anticipation in the arena wings saying good-bye, laughing and lining up for the big moment. The alphabetical order was checked and rechecked at least four times to make $\stackrel{\scriptscriptstyle{\leftarrow}}{\scriptscriptstyle{\cap}}$ sure everyone was in the right ğplace.

Story by Shawna Hanes

A new graduate checks the program to see how many names are left to be called. For those seniors that graduated early in the ceremony the commencement exercises seemed long. Photo by Evan Warble.

As they walked to their places on the arena floor, they gave each other high-fives and wished each other luck. They had finally made it.

Seniors searched for family and friends in the stands, doing anything to get their attention There were screams for friends when their names were called. Laughter filled the graduate section as they watched a champagne cork fly into the air and as they watched the engineering students spray silly string and confetti over the crowd.

At the end, students teared up and realized their undergraduate time at the university was finally finished. It was the end of one chapter and the beginning of another for the class of 2000.

An excited graduate thanks Brother Ray Fitz as he hands her the diploma she has long awaited. Some graduates had attended school for only four years, while some may have taken years olonger. Photo by Evan Warble.

Two graduates embrace in celebration of their friendship and accomplishments at UD. The parties started way before the ceremony and the ghetto was filled with parents, siblings, and friends who travelled to spend a few last nights in the ghetto with their graduating senior. Photo by Evan Warble.

Two recent graduates pose for a photo after the ceremony. The arena was packed with family and friends from around the country and world to see their loved ones graduate. Photo by Lisa Distelzweig.

Another graduate takes his turn in the spotlight. UD's commitment to call each and every graduate's name made the ceremony lengthy but personal for graduates who had worked so hard for those few seconds of glory. Photo by Evan Warble.

Just as the ball in Sherman Hall is in constant motion, the university and its community will continue to grow and change to meet the needs of the future.

The graduates will move on - using their UD experience to guide their path. The returning students will make strides toward completing their degree and impacting the university with their presence.

It is the call to learn, lead, and serve that keeps the university and its individuals in perpetual motion.

Editor's Note

We would like to thank our staff for being so dedicated and tenacious. Your hard work has meant so much to us both. Sarah, Brooke, Jeff and Kevin, thank you for staying after the semester ended to finish up. You truly went above and beyond the call of duty. Heather, Lindsay, Beth, and Shawna, good luck in the future, whatever it may bring. Thank you for your commitment and your lack of senioritis! Hung your work this year has been outstanding, FYF and STG have never looked better. Lisa, thank you for your smile and your willing spirit. Yearbook love to you all!

We would also like to thank our parents, Dan & Brenda Saurer and Chuck & Linda Curson for all their support and love over the past four years of collegiate yearbooking. Our list would not be complete with out thanking Paul Vieira and Aaron Geibel for their understanding concerning missed dates on deadline nights.

We want to acknowledge the university and its departments for their cooperation. Specifically, we would like to thank the office of student activities, residential services, the athletic department and Timothy Boone, the public relations office and the student body.

Finally, we want to thank Jostens, Inc., Tillie Billheimer, Tom Yontosh, DaVor Photography, Mike Apice and Jim Rainey.

While we can't say we enjoyed every minute on staff, we can say it has been a wild and fun ride. We wouldn't have traded this experience for the world. We'll miss you all. We're outie 5,000. YAH!!!
