Kane Evaluates Alcohol Policy

Early this week, Dean of Student Life J. Houghton Kane sent a letter to student organization representatives who attended the opening meeting held to discuss the new regulations governing the use of alcohol on campus.

In the letter, Kane assessed the progress of the new regulations to date and wrote, "Looking at the situation as an administrator, the first few weeks of the semester have gone well." He added, "Since noise levels are one significant key to the new regulations, it is gratifying to see that, in the main, students are being more conscious of noise."

Kane said the Alpha Phi Epsilon toga party held in Reimert on Wednesday, Sept. 3 was intended to be a test of whether a large group of people could gather and remain within the "regular hours" requirement allowing a normal person in that residence hall to study.

"While the officers of APEs and the RA on duty worked very hard to control the noise, the event simply was too noisy," Kane said.

"There seems no doubt but what gatherings of any significant size during "regular hours" will result in violations of college regulations," he added.

According to Kane, another difficulty during the first few weeks involved the storage of an "empty" keg on campus. Theoretically, he wrote, the keg had been tapped, the beer consumed elsewhere, but the empty keg was brought into a resident hall on campus and stored until it could be returned to the distributor. Kane wrote that this was an obvious enforcement problem, raising serious questions as to whether or not the keg had been tapped on or off campus. Even a small amount of beer in a keg would be a violation, he informed. "The only way to avoid suspicion and disciplinary action is to be sure that no containers of alcohol larger than one gallon are brought on campus," he said.

Kane intends to communicate periodically through the year with student organization representatives in efforts of continuously evaluating the new alcohol policy and its restrictions.

Myrin "hires" $20,000 security guard

By ANTHONY FIORE
Of The Grizzly

The word on the streets is there's a better chance of getting an Uzzie on a DC10 than sneaking a book out of the Myrin Library. I'd even give smuggling drugs out of Turkey the odds over pilfered material getting past the Tattle-Tape Detection System Model 1355 Sensing Unit. That's the full name of the new security system which library authorities hope will end the illegal removal of Myrin's resources.

"I think it's great," says circu-lations assistant Brian Scarborough, with no apparent fear of losing his job to Model 1355's twin sensing panels. These two electronic narcs are situated perpendicular to the plane of the exit doors, and spaced to create a walk-way out of the building.

According to Scarborough, any item which hasn't been recorded as borrowed will set off a "beeper" as it passes between the panels. At the sound of the beeper, a metal swing-gate which is installed at the end of the walk-way locks in the closed position. Escape becomes impossible, and the suspect is checked for contraband materials. Scarborough labeled such an experience as a "good deterrent."

Security at its finest for just under $20,000 and library authorities hope to see a return on this investment when results are obtained in the next annual inventory.

Each year a section of the library's 145,000 volume collection is checked. This year, out of the books acquired between 1979-1983, a total of 187 volumes were missing. It costs the college $22 to replace each book, and $10 to process each replacement. The administration feels that over the next five years the use of Model 1355 will have decreased the amount of missing materials, as well as released money which can be used to purchase new resources.

It has been assured that the use of the new system is not in any way meant to impugn the character of the Ursinus student body. Mr. Charles Jamison, the head of library circulations, maintains that this is an "honest campus, by and large," and that Myrin's patrons do not consist solely of Ursinus' students. Tattle-Tape is simply the first visible sign of a three year renovation made possible by a $750,000 grant. By 1989 there will be both interior and exterior changes for the Myrin Library. Hopefully, one will be an increase in the amount of books at the students' disposal.

CAMPUS MEMO

We in formal higher education for convenience create pigeon holes and stuff certain subject matter into them and work up methods of studying that subject matter. We call these pigeon holes disciplines. Students who concentrate in a discipline say they are "majors" in the discipline. This system of pigeon-holing makes sense. We cannot grasp all things rationally all at once. We have to look at the world a bit at a time under certain constraints and rules, from a certain angle.

To get a broad view of the world, students at a college such as Ursinus, while digging deeply into one pigeon hole—their major—, poke around in others. We like to think that this poking process will acquaint students with several ways of thinking about the world, each useful and all interactive and mutually supportive. Behind the pigeon holes, most of us want to believe there is a seamless whole. We want to believe that all our insights connect to a common ground. This may be an unprovable assumption. But most of us make it, in one way or another.

When you get to the pigeon hole of the fine arts, something is really different. Here, the process of making a painting or a sculpture just does not seem like the process of writing an analytical paper in, say, economics. Yet teachers of fine arts will insist, I think, that they too are helping students to come to grips with the world, no less than teachers of economics.

They too are trying to touch that seamless whole behind all the compartments. What's going on in that pigeon hole that makes it seem so different?

Many years ago, Scott Buchanan, a co-founder of the Great Books program, wrote a little book, "Poetry and Mathematics." In it he tried to explain the difference between poetry (which stands for the fine arts) and math. "Math," he wrote, "is analytic, seeing wholes as systems of relations; poetry is synthetic, seeing wholes as simple qualities."

To mathematicians, the base of a cone is an element in relationship with other elements in the cone. To poets, it is a circular form that arouses an emotional relationship with themselves.

Both relationships are part of the experience of a human being in an accessible world. Both help elucidate, help explain, help justify, help harmonize.

One of my most unusual friends is Ernest Robson, an 83-year-old writer. He majored in chemistry at Amherst many years ago and worked as a scientist. He also has written much experimental poetry. Just recently he published his latest book, "Freedom, Cannibalism, Creative Love and the Value of Cosmic Nonsense." Robson has poked in many pigeon holes in his long and creative life, as his title suggests. But he has never allowed one of the pigeon holes to occupy his attention exclusively. He long ago decided that poetry (that is, the fine arts) was as necessary to his quest for insight as his college major, chemistry.

I encourage you to go to Fetterolf House this weekend or next week and open yourself to the special properties of the fine arts. The exhibition is provocative and stimulating and merits the interest of each and every serious student on the campus.

Student Health Hints

All students should make sure they are covered on their parent's insurance policy in case of an accident where hospitalization or other medical expenses are involved

- have hospitalization numbers handy
- some companies tend to remove a child from their parents' policy after turning 18. Urge your parents to check each year to insure coverage.

In order for bills to be paid, students must fill out insurance forms in the Student Health Center. All students are responsible for their own doctor and hospital bills.

- Inquire about the special illness clause in the college's coverage.
- The college's sports insurance policy provides secondary coverage for medical expenses incurred due to injury while participating in intercollegiate athletics
- personal insurance numbers and home address should be given to the hospital, physicians office or medical facility at the time of treatment to be reimbursed.
- if your parents' insurance company refuses payment or will only make partial payment you should apply for benefits under the sports insurance plan for athletic injuries.
- the following is the address of the athletic insurance policy for Ursinus students:

she spoke. 11:14. Thirty six minutes to go until the end of class.

Exchanging my gum for a new piece, I sat figuring in my head. Exactly thirty-six minutes ago it was 10:39 and I was struggling with my stockings. Not that long ago. I could make it. Speaking of stockings, I could feel mine slowly sliding down my thighs, hoping to bind my kneecaps together so I fell over when I tried to walk. 11:18. Reaching down to my calves, I slowly started inching my stockings up to my thighs, where they belonged. As I scrunched around in my seat, trying to get the damn things centered right, Denise asked in a stage whisper, "What ARE you doing?" "Fixing my stockings," I stage whispered back. She asked, "Did you ever try paying attention in class? You could get something from it!" "Really?" I mumbled, my head under the desk to make sure I hadn't put a nail through my stocking "Like what?"

I looked at my watch. It read the exact same time as the clock on the wall above the professor's head. I sighed. 11:08. I tapped my foot and shifted papers on the desk before me. Writing the date on the first line in my notebook, I hoped to waste atleast a minute or two. I checked my watch and was chagrined to find it only 11:09. As I gazed intently at the professor scribbling stuff on the chalkboard, I scrawled "ISN'T THIS CLASS OVER YET?!" on a sheet and shoved it towards my friend Denise, who was in the adjacent chair. She read it, giggled and whispered, "NOPE!" passing the note back as 11:24. Still restless, I gazed around the room, studying the people around me. Out of the corner of my eye, I caught one of the prettiest girls in the sophomore class sliding glasses on to her absolutely perfect nose. I whacked Denise in the ribs, "Look," I whispered, pointing as she turned indignant eyes toward me, "She had a flaw!" "There is a God, afterall," Denise murmured as we gazed in astonishment and thankfulness.

11:30. I started figuring again. In twenty minutes we would be... OUT OF CLASS, happily, I tuned

Bears Buried in Season Opener Against Franklin & Marshall

By JOSEPH F. PIRRO
Of The Grizzly

There are a limitless number of words to describe an Opening Day loss, especially when the final score is 44-12.

A few for starters—embarrassing, upsetting, disastrous—were some of those uttered by the Ursinus College players and coaches after Saturday's lopsided Centennial Conference loss to host Franklin and Marshall.

In an offensive outburst, the F&M Diplomats rolled for 240 of their 263 total yards in the second half to break open the game. They had held a 14-0 halftime lead on two scores in the first eight minutes of action at Williamson Field.

But it wasn't only the Diplomat's offense that evened their season record at 1-1 and extended their historical humbling of Ursinus to 15 wins in the last 16 meetings.

Bear mistakes handed F&M two quick touchdowns. But after a second quarter that was fairly error-free, miscues reared their ugly heads again in the second half.

"Coming out at halftime, I still thought we were in a football game," said Ursinus coach Sterling Brown, who watched 12 new starters play like the inexperienced troops they were. "Then we started to make every mistake you can make in a whole season."

Just six minutes into the game freshman punter Chris Blass reached down for a low snap and allowed his knee to touch the ground, ending the play right there and giving F&M the ball at the Ursinus nine. Two plays later, quarterback John Travagline went over from the one.

Two plays after the ensuing kickoff, F&M defensive end Mike Corbo poked the ball out of quarterback Cliff Repetti's hands and Steve Ragland recovered at the Ursinus 21. Moments later, Travagline hit Brad Bate with the first of his two touchdown passes, this one covering 23 yards.

But for the rest of the half, the Ursinus defense stood firm, led by junior tackle Dave Bodolus, a St. Pius graduate who had two sacks and spent most of his time in Travagline's shirt. The bears held

At halftime it was close at 14-0. "Then we started to make every mistake you can make in a whole season" - Sterling Brown

F&M to three first downs at the half and just 43 yards in total offense.

But on offense, the Bears got no closer than the F&M 35, and that came after a John Haurin interception at midfield a few seconds before intermission.

Early in the second half, F&M took over at its own 45 following a 26-yard punt by Blass. Travagline capped a 10-play drive with a 31-yard scoring pass to Dale Amos.

And the mistakes kept on coming. Late in the period, the Diplomats recovered a fumble on the Ursinus 41, setting up a 13-yard touchdown run by holder Mike DeBerdine on a perfectly executed fake field goal.

After a safety—Blass watched a punt snap sail over his head—the Diplomats made it 37-0 early in the final period after recovering a fumble by backup quarterback Kevin Parker on the Ursinus nine.

But Parker, a freshman from Cardinal O'Hara, came roaring back to provide the Bears with more than a glimmer of hope for the future.

Brown inserted Parker in the third quarter after Repetti, a sophomore taking his first varsity snaps, gave up his third interception.

With nine minutes left in the game, he engineered a 10-play, 68-yard drive for the Bears' first score, rolling out right and cutting back 13 yards into the end zone. Then on the last play of the game, he hit high school teammate John Hodge with a pretty 29-yard touchdown strike.

There was no real turning point," said Brown.

Lady Bears

Fight to 2 - 2

By JILL THEURER
Of The Grizzly

The Lady Bears improved their field hockey record to 2-2 this past week handing losses to Lehigh and Drexel by scores of 4-3 and 1-0, respectively.

On Saturday, U.C. faced Lehigh in a game that ended in double overtime. Lehigh shocked Ursinus, scoring three consecutive goals within the initial eight minutes of the game. However, the Lady Bears fought back and ended the first half, 3-1 with one driven in by junior Jill Johnson.

The Ursinus women continued their fight in the second half as goals were notched by Ginny Migliore and Johnson once again. The game continued in overtime in hopes of breaking the 3-3 deadlock, but neither team was successful. Finally, captain Beth Bingamen fired in the game-winning goal just four minutes into the second ten minute overtime.

The squad also faced Drexel this week. JoAnn Schoenherr shot one past the opponents' goal defender in the second half but the game was far from being over at that point. With just four minutes left the game was interrupted by a severe thunder and lightning storm. Because the officials would not let the two teams resume the game, it was continued the following day. Ursinus was able to control Drexel's offense and hold them off therefore winning the contest with Schoenherr's previous goal from the day before.

Booters Jump to 4 - 1

By TOM BROWN
Of The Grizzly

This week the soccer team upped its record to 4-1 by recording their second and third consecutive shut-outs. On Saturday the Bears defeated Franklin & Marshall 3-0 and on Wednesday U.C. edged Albright 1-0.

Saturday's game was the home opener for Ursinus and also the first game on the Bears new field. U.C. looked right at home on the new field, thoroughly dominating a highly touted F&M squad. Sophomore Dennis Quinn opened the scoring about midway through the first half when he neatly tucked a pass from Kerry Keeney in the back of the net for his first goal of the season. About ten minutes later, freshman Scott McCartney launched a 25 yard rocket off the post and into the net to give the Bears a 2-0 lead at halftime. About 20 minutes into the second half, Keeney added another stripe to his

Trauger Sweeps Up Her Opponents

By JOSEPH F. PIRRO
Of The Grizzly

— In November 1983, Ursinus College's nationally-ranked field hockey squad (14-3-3 that season) edged Northeastern 4-3 in triple overtime to win the ECAC Division I title.

The following fall, the Lady Bears (ranked 13th) went just as far but fell to host Boston College 3-0 in the finals. Both years, Tami Trauger, a 1983 graduate of Perkiomen Valley High and a former first team All-Bux-Mont defensive player, watched.

In 1986, all eyes will stare at her, especially those of All-American goalie Mia Fields.

Senior Trauger, a lifetime Trappe resident and the only returning defensive starter for Adele Boyd's 1986 team, moves from her right back slot of a year ago to sweeper. There she will act as a type of bedside nurse to Fields, keeping the Lady Bear net free of the opposition's sickening goals.

After enduring a waiting list traditionally associated with Division I teams, Trauger gained a starting position her junior year. She said about her new responsibilities as sweeper, "If it gets past me, then it's over . . . It's a one on one."

Boyd has given the defensive controls to the former PV Lady Viking who will attempt to establish a steel curtain barricade Moses couldn't split.

"I like it, it's a challenge," she said. "At right back, I could be more offensive, but now I have to think and help everybody."

At Perkiomen Valley, captain Trauger played sweeper, dusting enough opponents her senior year to lead her team to a fourth place finish in state finals at Shippensburg. She was named the school's top female athlete.

She said she's the only active player from that team in college sports, a dozen some odd years after she first broke into athletics when she "was the only girl the boys would let play kickball."

Given scholarship offers from Division I Kent State University in Ohio and Ball State in Indiana, she opted for the college down the road — about 2.6 miles from home.

She remembered, "It was a 15-hour ride, and 7½ hours out that way, I realized I wasn't going to be going there (Ball State) . . . I got back home and my acceptance letter to Ursinus was in the mailbox. "I've lived here all my life, but I never thought I'd go to school here (Ursinus)," she added.

"Being close to home is worth clean clothes and free meals . . . I can't imagine it any other way . . . It's convenient."

Although Ursinus is a Division III school with just over 1,200 students, the hockey team competes on the Division I level. Under legendary coach Eleanor Snell (1931-71), the Lady Bears went undefeated in the 50s, 60s and 70s twelve times and had 14 seasons with just one loss.

Trauger figures to be the key defensively if the winning tradition is to continue and surpass 1985's 13-6-1 record, Ursinus finishing as the 15th-ranked team in the country.

At Ursinus, where athletics have traditionally taken a back seat to academics, Trauger said, "It's a choice to compete and play."

"Sometimes, I'll have two tests to study for and two hours of practice on the same day . . . I come home and I'm exhausted."

The Lady Bears have placed in the nation's top-20 poll ten of the last twelve years without benefit of scholarship players. "There's not one player on jayvee or varsity who doesn't have a decent amount of skill," said Trauger.

"Scoring has never been important to me," she said. "I just can't see myself as an offensive player . . . They're hyper, jumpy, aggressive," she said, explaining that her sweeper role demands a steady patience — waiting for the rubber ball to come her way. "In any sport, I've always been defensive minded."

After spraining an ankle early in preseason, Trauger is healthy and optimistic. "If our last two tournaments are any indication of how we'll play, I think we'll do well."

Grizzly Captains

John Haurin
(5'-11", 172)

John Haurin, a senior out of Archbishop Wood High and Churchville, Pa., has been elected defensive captain of the 1986 Ursinus college football team.

Haurin, a 5-11, 172-pound free safety, was chosen one of three captains along with two offensive players, center Rich Alercio of Toms River, N.J. and running back Russ Perry of Shrewsbury, N.J.

Haurin helped Wood go 10-2 in his junior year and win the Catholic North regular-season crown. In his final season (1982), he made second-team all-Catholic League and second-team all-area. He also ranked 41st academically in a class of 260 and won the Parents Association Award.

At Ursinus, Haurin is a dean's-list student majoring in economics and the school record-holder for tackles in a game with 17 against nationally ranked Gettysburg in 1984.

Last year he piled up 68 tackles, fourth best on the team, and helped the Bears go 5-4 for their first winning season since 1972. (Of the four losses, one came on a field goal with 24 seconds to go, another on a touchdown and two-point conversion with 11 seconds left, and a third on a missed two-point try in the closing minutes.)

Haurin is also the only non-bachelor on the roster. He married a fellow Ursinus student last year and became a father this summer.

Russ Perry
(6'-1", 190)

Russ Perry, a senior out of Red Bank Regional High and Shrewsbury, N.J., has been elected offensive co-captain of the 1986 Ursinus College football team along with Rich Alercio, a junior from Toms River North High.

Perry, a 6-1, 190-pound running back, started every game last year and gained 349 yards on 111 carries as Ursinus went 5-4 for its first winning record since 1972. He also hauled in 16 passes for 153 yards.

In consecutive weeks last year, Perry rushed for 64 yards against nationally ranked Gettysburg (featuring the No. 2 defense in Division III), scored twice against Muhlenberg and then tied a school record with three touchdowns against Washington & Lee.

After sitting out his freshman year with an old high school injury,

Blowing the Call

By Vince Leskusky Of the Grizzly

The 1985 NFC Championship Game. Game Six of the 1985 World Series. Two arguments for the use of the instant replay.

The Monday night Broncos - Steelers game. The Dolphins - Jets game of Week 3. Two cases insisting on the refinement of replay usage.

The blown call on the lateral/halfback pass received much attention. While ruled an illegal forward pass, the officials in the replay booth deemed it legal, based on the monitor's irrefutable evidence. But the Broncos had executed a play before the overruling could reach the field. It was an egregious mistake, yes, but the ultimate outcome was not effected; the Broncos even covered the spread. Although Bronco coach Reever went bezerk, the incident was excused as a "one time only" error due to uncertainty with the system.

Sunday in OT, Woody Bennett of the Dolphins jarred the ball from Jet kick returner, Mike Harper. Mike Kozlowski pounced on it to give the Dolphins possession deep in Jet territory. Marino and company trotted onto the field, only to have to return in bewilderment to the sidelines. Harper was down. No fumble.

For whatever reason, the onfield officials didn't ask for help on their indecisiveness from upstairs. As in the Bronco game, the replay officials were unable to relay their reversal to the field in time. The play stood and the Jets drove on to win.

This is inexcusable after the Bronco charade. Sure, Shula could've called time-out. After all, you can't lose a game in OT if the clock expires. But should it be the coach's job to officiate? Why didn't the confused officials ask for help? Were they afraid to lengthen a play-off influencing game by a few minutes? The Pats-Jets game was delayed on a meaningless three yard reception on a third and fifteen reception to allow a review.

Obviously a few changes need to be made. Some suggestions. First, if any official believes a call could be wrong and the replay could be of use, he should request a replay. Second, like in the USFL (all $3 of it), permit each team a request to the replay per half. If the replay upholds the call, a time-out would be charged. Third, if the booth official suspects a missed, correctable call he should buzz the field to allow time for a review.

The replay rule was intended to be a step forward, an effort to prevent a Game Six 1980 Stanley Cup situation from occurring. Instead, it now offers an even more excruciating way to lose—in slow motion with Merlin Olson saying, "He literally fumbled it. The Official just blew the call."

Athlete of the Week: Gwen O'Donohue

Freshman Gwen O'Donohue, a former standout at Egg Harbor Township (N.J.) High, has been named Ursinus College Athlete of the Week after taking her second gold medal and second meet record in a college cross-country career exactly two meets old.

O'Donohue led Ursinus to victory over 10 other schools in the Baptist Bible Invitational Sept. 20 in Clarks Summit, Pa., winning the three-mile race in 19 minutes, 21 seconds—2:12 under the old meet record and 1:37 faster than the course mark.

Two weeks before, the 5-1 native of Mays Landing launched her college career by winning the Philadelphia Metro Meet and leading Ursinus to the team title. The Bears, in only their second year as a program, relied on three freshmen and three sophomores in climbing from eighth and last in 1985.

O'Donohue covered the 2.9 mile Philly Metro course in 18:12.5, knocking almost two seconds off the old meet record as the suddenly formidable Bears turned in a near-blanket 1-3-4 finish and set a team mark of 32 points.

"With Gwen here at Ursinus," said coach Bob Shoudt, "we've laid the foundation for our new cross-country and track programs. We feel that her success will help attract other outstanding women."

At Egg Harbor, O'Donohue led the cross-country team to three Cape-Atlantic League crowns and won league track titles at 1,600 and 3,200 meters.

Captains from P6

Perry became a part-time starter in 1984 and won a full-time job in '85.

Rich Alercio (5'-9", 190)

Alercio, a 5-9, 190-pound center, also won a starting job last year, helping all-league running back Joe Sawyers set the Ursinus season scoring mark and the career rushing record. Alercio becomes one of the few junior captains in team history.

Of their four defeats in 1985, the Bears lost one game on a field goal with 24 seconds to go, another on a touchdown and two-point conversion with 11 seconds left, and a third on a failed two-point try in the closing minutes.

Hockey from P5

So far this season four varsity team members have been successful in scoring. They are Johnson (3), Schoenherr (2), Migliore (2), and Bingamen (1).

The Lady Bears continue their schedule with a contest here tomorrow against American University at 1 p.m. Next week both varsity and J.V. take on Temple and Lock Haven.

Soccer from P5

assist leg when he beautifully fed Rob Walder, who didn't have to break stride to finish off the scoring and F&M. Once again the defense was outstanding, led by seniors Brad Young and Jim Barnes. Junior Brigg Backer and freshman Mike Misher also had fine games in defense. Junior Chris Hoover turned in one of his finest performances in midfield. Coach Walt Manning said, "This certainly wasn't the same team we had on Tuesday," referring to the Bears lackluster performance against Western Maryland.

Against Albright, U.C. needed a fortuitous bounce to overcome the Lions. After a sloppy first half, the score stood at 0-0. Ten minutes into the second half, Hoover shot from 25 yards, the ball hit a clump of grass and bounced high over the Albright goalkeeper who had committed himself to the balls original direction.

Tomorrow the Bears look to go 5-1 as the host the Rangers of Drew University. Game time is 12:00 p.m.

Frankly Speaking on Movies

By Frank Everett Columnist for The Grizzly

Like many people, I find the cool, dark recesses of an air-conditioned movie theater more appealing in the summer. Unfortunately, the air-conditioning often turns out to be the highlight of the cinematic experience. This summer proved to be no exception. For those of you who were stuck in summer school or in some remote shore town without a movie theater, here's what you missed.

This has been a year of transition for several young actors, including Tom Cruise. His first adult role in the highly successful Top Gun laid to rest any doubts that he could shed his high school boy image. Top Gun cast Cruise as a cocky Naval fighter pilot and contained some of the most exciting flight sequences ever filmed. Add to this a solid performance by the beautiful Kelly McGillis and you've got this summer's closest thing to a smash hit.

Two other members of the "Brat Pack" attempted their first grown-up portrayals in About Last Night, based on David Mamet's play, "Sexual Perversity in Chicago." Rob Lowe and Demi Moore established an excellent rapport that was wasted in this watered-down version of the play about singles looking for love in the big city. Lowe and Moore proved, at least, that they deserved better.

Matthew Broderick showed us that he can still play a seventeen-year-old, which is no small task considering his twenty-five years. In Ferris Bueller's Day Off, John Hughes showed us a typical day in the life of an atypical high school senior as he played hooky all over Chicago. Broderick's performance made the movie worth seeing, but Hughes' first endeavor without Molly Ringwald needed help in the last half-hour.

The funniest movie of the summer teamed Bette Midler and Danny Devito as a nouveau riche California couple in Ruthless People. Much of the humor was pure raunch, but I loved every minute. The soundtrack, which included tunes by The Rolling Stones and Billy Joel, helped give this film its hip, trendy style.

We saw two excellent roles for women this summer, and Meryl Streep played neither one. First, a strong performance was given by Segourney Weaver in Aliens. Sequels rarely match the quality of the original film, but Aliens was a welcome exception to the rule. Weaver is definitely a woman to be reckoned with. By far the most suspenseful and scariest film of the summer, Aliens was also one of the few box office successes.

More recently, Farrah Fawcett recreated her stage role as a rape victim who turns the tables on her attacker in Extremities. Fawcett has come a long way since her blonde bubble-head days on television, which she proved almost two years ago in The Burning Bed. Her work in Extremities was astonishing and could win her an Oscar nomination. Hopefully, her next role will allow her to display her talents without being brutally beaten.

Prince tried to recapture his success on film with Under the Cherry Moon, which never approached the electricity of Purple Rain. The long-awaited Under the Cherry Moon was shot in black-and-white and filmed entirely on location in Southern France; but the movie was a mess from the opening credits. The music from the film was incredible. Buy the soundtrack album, Parade, but skip the movie.

Finally, two of Hollywood's biggest names were paired in Heartburn. Jack Nicholson and Meryl Streep played roles loosely based on Watergate reporter, Carl Bernstein, and food writer, Nora Ephron. Nicholson and Streep were perfect, as always, but the film seemed to lack some of the book's humor, which is surprising considering that Ephron wrote the screenplay as well as the book. The sometimes autobiographical account of a doomed marriage was worth seeing, if only for the Streep-Nicholson match.

Most major studios have reported profitable summers, despite the lack of blockbuster films. The are several upcoming fall films of interest, including Molly Ringwald in The Pickup Artist, Woopie Goldberg in Jumpin' Jack Flash, and Paul Newman and Tom Cruise in a sequel to Newman's, The Hustler. Hopefully, these films will give us more to talk about than this summer's offerings.

Tim Ail becomes new food director

This summer, after receiving the Outstanding Manager Award from the Wood Company, former Ursinus food director Tom Glick took a similar managerial job at Wood's Mont Clair State food program in Allentown, Pa. Glick's replacement, Tim Ail, has had experience in food management at Cheyney University in Cheyney, Pa. and at Drexel University.

Although realizing that his job often entails enduring the complaints and gibes of disgruntled faculty and students, Ail hopes to achieve his goal of serving good food in a clean environment. Concerning his relations with the people he serves, Ail said, "I am a firm believer in communication. With open minds, I think the students, faculty and I can come to a compromise that we all can live with. We all have to realize that this is an institutional setting and that there is a framework within which this food service has to work."

With him, Ail has brought the idea of what he calls "monotony breakers." Off-hours specials such as a late night pancake festival are planned. By keeping students informed about such specials and having an "open door policy" to suggestions, Ail expects to adequately fill the shoes of his well recognized predecessor.

Denise was saying, "BONG, the time is now 11:45." Five minutes ago I was recopying my notes in my notebook. I watched the little hand on the clock go around. 11:47. Denise was mumbling something about lunch. I was checking my skirt for lint balls. As I was examining my nail polish for possible flaws, I heard my professor say, "so the test on Wednesday will cover everything up to Chapter II." 11:49. Once more, I wacked Denise in the ribs. "Hey!" I whispered. "Can I borrow your notes tonight?" She glared at me as we filed the classroom.

The Private Eye

By A.M. SALAS
Of The Grizzly

While in Myryn the other day, I picked up a copy of National Review. It's the most recent issue, the annual "Campus Issue", dated September 26. Despite my opinions about the political slant of NR, (a little to the right of Atilla the Hun) I admire the writing in it, which is almost uniformly excellent. The issue was triply enticing because of its focus on College and University trends, the promise of readable journalism, and the words "Wimp Wars: Sensitivity vs. Free Speech on Campus" emblazoned across the cover.

Filled with great expectations, I sat down, checked the table of contents for my article of choice, which starts on page 28, and read.

The article, written by Margaret Anne Gallagher, Yale '82, deals with an incident which occurred this past spring at the Yale Divinity School. Briefly stated, the Yale Political Union debated a resolution that "CIA discrimination against homosexuals is justified." A graduate student at the Divinity School placed one of the advertisements on his dorm room door. Another Divinity student, the head of the University's lesbian coalition, told him to take it down, informing him that it was offensive and a form of sexual harassment. The Dean of the Divinity School agreed with the woman, and made the "offending" student take the poster off the door.

A second student, a Senior more perturbed by the violation of free expression than interested in offending homosexuals, put the same poster on his door. He was charged with sexual-harassment, thrown off campus, told he couldn't join in the graduation ceremonies, and warned that if he didn't publicly apologize for his offensiveness, he wouldn't get his degree.

Wonderful. What year is this? What planet is this? Lest you think that this is an isolated little incident, the article continues, citing: the beating of a campus minister at U.C. San Diego, who held up a placard in support of President Botha's actions in South Africa, the disruption, by Harvard students, of a speech by a spokesman for the Contras, an incident involving a Freshman at Brown who had been taught that homosexuality is not normal and was berated by her advisor for expressing this opinion. It was O.K. for her to have these opinions, but offensive of her to express them.

Why do people go to college? Isn't it supposed to be a place where you express opinions and learn to evaluate truths? Come on. Freedom of expression isn't supposed to go only to those who think "correctly". Its supposedly a right we all share, and if we choose to believe in White Supremacy, or the subjugation of Jews, or any number of things which the majority consider heinous and wrong, that is within our rights.

Frankly, I have only sympathy for the problems homosexuals are having now, particularly in the light of the public backlash against AIDS, but it is wrong to abridge someone's right of self-expression out of sympathy for another party. I would much rather know exactly what a person's mindset is on any given issue, if only so that I can avoid that person. I view the blatant male chauvinist pig or bigot with less disdain than the insidious one.

Education Moves

By KEVIN ADAMS
of The Grizzly

The Offices of Professors of Education, Dr. Dungan and Dr. O'Brien, will soon be located in the basement of Bomberger Hall. The move is precipitated by a lack of space.

Before, The Career Planning and Placement Office and the Education Department were run under one head; but now, they are separate departments. Since both departments have grown so much over the past few years, the Studio Cottage and its occupants are, "just too cramped to be working at maximum efficiency," says Dr. O'Brien, Chairman of Education. He also explained the need to be closer to the other departments.

The new conditions in the Bomberger basement should suit the Education Department quite well. The center includes new research areas, offices, and people to help the Education Department. In addition, the renovated Ship Room provides much more room to move around. Other areas in Bomberger basement will be taken over by History and EcBa, and there will be special facilities for Mr. Brenker's office.

Although the plan for Bomberger basement has fallen behind schedule, Fred Klee, Director of Maintenance, expects the job to be completed in approximately one month.

Dr. O'Brien, Dr. Dungan, and Mrs. Sue Calvin, Secretary of Education, are all looking forward to the move, and what they will be able to do with the new facilities.

Studio Cottage will still house The Office of Student Life, The Career Planning and Placement Center, and The Counseling Center run by Mrs. Beverly Oehlert, and the Campus Minister, Rev. Scott Landis.

campaign includes a 3-year plan to keep the department here at Ursinus as up-to-date as possible. The plan includes the following:

- 1) increased and improved instruments and equipment
- 2) hiring new staff member(s), particularly in the field of molecular biology, a fast-growing field
- 3) modification of the current curriculum
- 4) increased student research, both in class labs and independently

The fourth part of the plan is what's important to Dr. Small. He would like to see "more active participation of students in the research area." A personal goal is to see more Ursinus student involvement with the Pennsylvania Academy of Science, which publishes in their journal only research that has been presented to them by a students wrking under a professor's guidance.

It's everyone's right to make an ass of his or herself.

Something is going wrong in this country in general, and in colleges, specifically, when freedom of self-expression is compromised in favor of "tolerance". What a bizarre form of tolerance. And how safe are we here at Ursinus? Would we tolerate the presence of a student of prof. who expressed the opinion that blacks are shiftless, or that Italians are only good for making pizza? What if their comments were loud, uncouth, and expressed in derogatory terms, like "Wop"?

Maybe Orwell's predictions are catching up with us.
