MICHIGAN IN THE NOVEL

2012-2016 :: A Five-Year Checklist

INTRODUCTION

This checklist is the second five-year compilation, following the assemblage for the years 2007-2011 published in 2014. Both constitute a rough-and-ready continuation of Michigan in the Novel, 1816-2006: An Annotated Bibliography (second edition, 2013). It is termed a “checklist” (or hand-list) because the level of bibliographic detail for each item recorded is considerably reduced. In fact, just enough information is given to establish the author, title, date of publication, and a few other details. In addition, there is no attempt to provide a publishing history of these books that would cite reprints, new editions, later appearances under a different title, translations into different languages, dramatic versions, or similar information.

As with its parent bibliography, the purpose of this checklist is to record novels published from 2012 through 2016 that are set, wholly or partially, within the present geographical boundaries of the state of Michigan. Novel is defined here as a separately issued work of narrative fiction, bound as a unit, regardless of length. There are no requirements imposed concerning the place of birth or the residence of the authors of these novels.

Besides so-called “mainstream” fiction all other genres are included: mystery, romance, science fiction, juvenile fiction, so-called Christian fiction, gay/lesbian, graphic novels, and the more recently-established genre, urban fiction.

To be eligible for inclusion in this bibliography, a novel must have at least ten pages with a Michigan locale. Excluded from the primary entries are short stories, poetry, drama, screenplays, and pageants; however if these have been subsequently written based on an earlier novel, then that fact is noted. Serially published novels that have had no later separate publication are not included. Novels published outside the United States, whether in English or another language, are also included in this bibliography.

2012-2016 OVERVIEW

The number of novels identified that were published during the five-year period 2012 through 2016 amount to 867 titles. In comparison, 614 novels were listed for the 2007-2011 compilation, an increase of more than 29 percent.

The 1816-2006 bibliography identified 2,726 separate titles, with a further fifteen subsequently coming to light and noted in its addenda. During this 190-year span, the yearly average for the publication of a novel set in Michigan was nearly 15; for the decade 1997 through 2006, the average increased to 86.

The five-year period 2007 through 2011 saw this annual average jump to 123; the inclusive years 2012 through 2016 increased the annual average to nearly 174. As noted in the introduction to the 2007-2011 checklist, the steadily upward trend would seem to indicate an increasing interest from writers to set their novels in Michigan.

It has been also noticed, however, that more authors are using the various sources of self-publishing and print-on-demand services since the turn of this century. Reasons for this trend undoubtedly vary: from the gratification of having one's book published immediately without lengthy editorial demands from publishers, to the unwillingness of mainstream publishers to issue second-rate material.

Traditional, mainstream publishers (e.g., Alfred A. Knopf, G.P. Putnam's Sons, W.W. Norton, Kensington, Harlequin, etc.) account for barely 16 percent of the Michigan novels published from 2012 to 2016, while 21 percent were published by Amazon's CreateSpace alone. The majority (almost sixty-four percent) of the 867 titles were either issued by small publishers, vanity presses, or were self-published.

Looking at the numbers of novels distributed among the genre categories also provides some insight into the proclivities of the various authors, and preferences of their readers. The most popular genre during the five years continues to be mystery fiction; 36 percent (316 titles) fall into this category. It should be noted that some of the novels categorized as urban fiction could be considered mysteries as well. Romance fiction is the second most popular genre: 18 percent (155 titles), with general fiction and juvenile fiction, including young adult and picture books, are tied for a close third: 15 percent (132 titles) respectively.

Two other observations are of interest. Firstly, the most prolific author in this five-year span is Amanda May Lee who wrote no fewer than 31 novels. Secondly, the number of series is a surprising 221; they contain 531 titles that represent 61 percent of the total output of novels set in Michigan that were published from 2012 through 2016. For details, see the respective indexes.

SYSTEM OF ARRANGEMENT

Entries

First editions of the Michigan novels are arranged alphabetically by author and given a number. Names beginning with Mac and Mc are interfiled, following the Library of Congress convention. Names appearing within square brackets, [], indicate that either the author's name on the title page is a pseudonym, or does not appear on the title page in that form, or not at all. Pseudonymous works are listed under the author's true name when known, and a cross reference made from the pseudonym. In the case of novels written by more than one person, the first name listed on the title page is chosen as the main entry, with additional cross references made from the other authors.

Titles

Complete titles and any subtitles on the title page of the book are given. Authors' names follow the titles in instances where the name differs from the entry, usually as a pseudonym or diminutive.

Imprints

Place of publication and publisher are given when known. Imprint information supplied in square brackets have been obtained from other sources.

Dates

Series

Titles of series, either specifically named by publishers or known by a popular title are given within parentheses, e.g. (Harlequin Nocturne, no.114); (Chocoholic Mystery, no.7).

Notes

Notes for each of the entries are generally restricted to specifying its literary genre and setting. In some cases additional information follows the sign § and can include titles of subseries, sequel details, joint pseudonym identification, or language of publication.

If the story is set in a fictitious locale, that name appears within quotation marks along with its real-world equivalent within parentheses if it can be positively identified, e.g. "Chandlerville" (Onaway).
