As part of CSC's Jubilee '87 Building Campaign, a large parking area accommodating over 220 vehicles was built along the southeastern edge of the campus. A second lot with 22 spaces was provided immediately east of the Administration Building to afford more visitors' parking.

Other developments and fund-raising efforts will be reported in the next issue of Stritch '83.

The 1983 Class includes the first graduates of Stritch's Bachelor and Master of Science in Management degrees. It also includes the second group to receive Associate of Science in Nursing degrees.

Committee Prepares Plans

A special committee of students and faculty members will help plan arrangements for Graduation Weekend activities — a reception for families and friends, a liturgy in the College chapel and a Sunday meal in Serra Hall.

Formal announcements and detailed instructions will be sent to all parties concerned, according to Sr. Andree Gaspard, academic dean.

Congregation Elects Three As Directors

The Sisters of St. Francis of Assisi have elected an administrative team of three Sisters to lead the Congregation for the next four years. Sister Joanne Meyer was re-elected director, and Srs. Nancy Kazik and Marcia Lunz were elected associate directors of the Congregation.

Sister Joanne, former CSC Math Dept. head, holds degrees from St. Louis University. Sister Nancy graduated from Stritch ('70) and Seattle University; Sister Marcia graduated from Stritch ('67) and Northwestern University.

Science Remains Essential to Liberal Arts

In this "space age," education, communication and other aspects of daily living are influenced directly by the discoveries of science and their applications to technology. Besides, such current concerns as ecology, energy, conservation, food production, genetics and deadly diseases call for more and greater advances in science — particularly as these relate to many areas of general interest and public welfare. To the degree, then, that science works in the service of humankind, it is a means to an end.

Similarly, at Stritch, rather than being an end in itself, science is a meaningful and integral part of the liberal arts curriculum. This means that students majoring in the sciences also take courses in the humanities, social and behavioral sciences, fine arts and other subjects, while students in these latter fields broaden their perspectives with science courses.

Two Majors Offered

Stritch offers academic majors and minors in biology and chemistry. The Biology Department services students through its 16 distinct courses. Lower level offerings introduce students to scientific contributions and scientific methods, while advanced courses prepare students to teach or to enter graduate and/or professional schools. Courses in micro-biology and physiology meet the requirements for students in the nursing program.

Headed by Sr. Ann Ferschl, professor, the Biology Department has two other faculty members: Sr. Mary Ann Polasek, associate professor, and Sr. Renee Costanzo, assistant professor.

For those who wish to have a better understanding of their physical environment, Stritch's Chemistry Department offers introductory courses. It also offers advanced courses as a basis for related fields, as preparation for nursing, dietetics, teaching or graduate study. In all, the department provides 16 courses in chemistry and two in general physics. Its two full-time instructors are

Seventh Mile of Art

Sun., Aug. 21, is the date of Stritch's 7th Annual Mile of Art Fair, according to Jackie Thompson and Charlotte Peter, '82, co-chairpersons, Friends of Studio San Damiano. Plans for the gigantic, fundraising event are already underway.

William J. McAsey, associate professor and department head, and Sr. Roswitha Ganser, associate professor.

The newest program at Stritch is a Broad Fields Science Major which prepares students to teach at the middle school or junior high level. It features a spectrum of courses drawn from biology, chemistry, earth sciences and physics, which may be combined with such minors as teacher education, business preparation or mathematics.

Many Careers Possible

Few fields at the College offer as many job opportunities as those awaiting the liberal arts student with a science major. Armed with a Bachelor of Arts degree in biology or chemistry, a graduate can pursue higher studies; elementary or secondary school teaching; research positions in business, industry, government or health professions; medical technology or laboratory work.

He/she can become an environmentalist, conservationist, forester, horticulturist or naturalist, or hold a position in biochemistry, food service supervision, clinical chemistry, pharmacology, geochemistry, oceanography, polymer science and toxicology. The many job career possibilities range from pre-medicine, pre-dentistry, pre-nursing, and pre-veterinary to business preparation for development, marketing and sales.

Hence, while Stritch recognizes science as being important, basic and relevant, it also recognizes the need to supplement analytical methods learned in the scientific disciplines with other knowledge, understandings and appreciations needed for making balanced value-judgments so important where moral issues are involved. Thus, at Stritch, science exists to serve the humanities and vice versa.

Stritch Selected in National Competition; The Brunswick Foundation Presents Award

Stritch is one of ten small colleges and universities in the United States named winners of The Brunswick Foundation's 1982 national competition. Each school received an unrestricted grant of $3,300 from the Foundation, based in Skokie, IL.

The ten colleges were chosen on the basis of action plans they are implementing on their campuses to strengthen the quality of education in four categories: (1) Financial Aid — what the college is doing to adjust to the reduced external funds available for student financial aid; (2) Education Programs — what the college is doing to integrate some of the new technological advances into its educational programs; (3) Student/Teacher Relationships — what the college is doing to assure that the faculty remain vital as teachers; and (4) Facilities — what the college is doing to prevent necessary maintenance projects from being deferred and thus avoid deterioration and/or obsolescence of the physical facilities.

Ray Hartstein, Brunswick Foundation administrator, presented a check to Sr. Camille Kliebhan during a visit to CSC.

Along with Stritch, the other award winners are: Arkansas College, AR; College of Idaho, ID; Hartwick College, NY; Hollins College, VA; Lake Forest College, IL; La Roche College, PA; Phillips University, OK; Tougaloo College, MS; and Upsala College, NJ.

Stritch Reading Clinic Marks Forty Years Of Service to Child and Adult Registrants

With the approaching summer session, the College will mark the 40th Anniversary of its Reading Clinic. Since 1943, the Clinic has helped approximately 13,000 children, nearly 2,000 adults, and hundreds of students who have utilized the Clinic facilities for college-level courses in study skills and speed-reading.

Staffing the Clinic are 12 clinicians during the year (more during the summer) — plus laboratory teachers enrolled in the College's graduate Reading Practicum. This composite staff handles 300-400 students each semester and during the summer months.

Other Information Given

Registrants, who range from ages 6 to 60, sometimes travel great distances to attend classes. Some come from such points in Wisconsin as DePere, Superior, Kewaskum, Richfield and Sussex, as well as from surrounding places like Cedarburg, Elm Grove, Mequon and Wauwatosa. Six small groups meet weekly on campus for Scripture reading, group discussion and prayer sessions.

The general theme of these six weeks is "Empowerment by the Holy Spirit."

Those seeking help in reading come from all walks of life: professionals, like doctors and lawyers, hoping to improve their speed-reading techniques to keep abreast of current literature in their field; ex-servicemen, laborers and parents who need to read for various reasons; young adults preparing for college; and school-age youngsters who either are experiencing difficulties in classroom situations or are not working up to their potential.

Until this year, the Clinic held classes on the Fox Point campus and at the Franciscan Congregation's Motherhouse on South Lake Drive. The latter operation was closed to consolidate the Clinic's programs, personnel and facilities in one location.
