Presidential search nearly complete

By Lilyanne McCleane, Julia DiMartino and Paul Mampilly

The search for a new president entered its final stages this week as the Board of Trustees interviewed the candidates recommended by a search committee. An open reception was also held for each candidate this week so that he/she could meet with the college community.

The candidates include Richard A. Lynde, acting president, MSC, and Irwin R. Reid, Dean and John Stagmaier Professor of Economics and Business Administration, The University of Tennessee at Chattanooga.

Other candidates are Helen Popovich, president of Florida Atlantic University, Boca Raton, Florida and Michael P. Riccards, president of St. Johns College, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

One candidate, Dr. Kala M. Stroup, president of Murray State University, Kentucky, withdrew, citing personal reasons.

Acting President Lynde presented his ideas and views on MSC, and what he plans to do if he is appointed president by the board, on March 27.

According to Lynde, governing a campus is an extremely complex process. He compared it to a tug of war between various interest groups. The president's role is to mediate and be an intermediary and a communication point between the groups, said Lynde.

SGA News:

N.J. Senator addresses SGA on student issues

By D. Thomas Checkur
Staff Writer

Senator Gabe Ambrosia, a democratic representative of Bergen County, spoke with SGA legislators last night concerning controversial issues which have been affecting the student body.

Ambrosia, who is the chairman of the committee investigating the Garden State Parkway toll increase, strongly condemned the increase proposal.

"We discovered a whole series of abuses," Ambrosia said. "All of those meetings were done in closed session; in total violation of the Sunshine laws." He said the violations were systematic

The session, which lasted approximately an hour, was poorly attended. A few questions were asked regarding basic skills and minority faculty recruitment. Crucial questions on future plans for capital spending, admission policies and financial matters were barely mentioned.

Lynde did refer to a "significant shift in the public" that the college serves and "the new economic reality under which we operate. The state will never be able to provide the resources for the excellence we (educators) strive for."

When asked whether the lack of student participation bothered him, he said that students are to a large extent commuters and therefore are not involved with campus activities.

His answer deflected the responsibility for the apathy to the college's geographical location and other factors.

Helen Popovich, another MSC presidential nominee, presented her credentials and goals she would implement if offered the position left vacant by president Walters, on March 28.

Popovich, president of Florida Atlantic University, said, "I want to give students an excellent education. I want to see students gaining a sense of responsibility. In order for this to occur there must be leadership from the president, administration and faculty."

Two of Popovich's major concerns at MSC are its faculty and students. "I would reshape and determined.

According to Ambrosia, the Parkway administration defends the toll increase for the purpose of paying for road maintenance. He said the large bulk of the budget isn't used to upkeep the roads.

"Only $30 million goes to the road maintenance," Ambrosia said. "$60 million goes towards toll collection costs and the administration."

Ambrosia also felt that removing the toll plazas would eliminate many problems. "The road would be a much safer road without toll barriers," Ambrosia said. "Traffic would move freer." He added that stop and go traffic contributed to MSC's advisement system, reward good teaching and encourage involvement in the college as president," she said.

"I want to make the students feel they are part of the college," Popovich said.

Popovich added that she hopes to increase financial and alumni support. "I would work towards increasing private and corporate donations to aid the state's diminishing input," she said. "I want to build bridges to the alumni because with their help MSC can become stronger."

Popovich, who received her Ph.D. from the University of Kansas in 1965, said there is a need for a balance between the professional studies programs and general education requirements. "I have greater respect for pre-professional studies than the liberal arts program because they are teaching skills the student needs for their first job experience," she said.

"I will set the tone for a humane environment at MSC," Popovich said. "A college must possess integrity and optimistic colleges must be the most optimistic institutions in society," she said.

Michael P. Riccards, President of St. John's College, presented his vision for MSC on March 29.

Riccards talked about finding endowments from corporations to fund programs at MSC in a period of economic decline.

Riccards said "a happy student and a well-regarded student" would be the best way for MSC

Higher education cited for failing to include humanitarian qualities

Dr. Franklin Littell, in a lecture that compared university learning today and its lack of humanity with education in the Nazi era, challenged us to work for reform in our universities to prevent a repeat of the horrors of the Holocaust.

Littell, a Methodist preacher for 55 years, spoke on March 15 at 8 p.m. in Kops Lounge. He was the second lecturer in the series titled: "New Departures in Jewish-Christian Relations," sponsored by the School of Humanities and Social Sciences.

Littell asked, "How would you answer the charge that the typical product of the modern university is a technologically educated barbarian?"

Today's college graduate is "someone who knows how to do something highly specific in the technical sense and is not inhibited by questions of morals, ethics or religion," he said. These graduates may not be any different than those that masterminded the Holocaust, said Littell.

"After all the Holocaust was not perpetrated by ignorant superstitious savages out in the bush someplace, the kind we like to look down our long educated noses at. It was planned, supervised, designed and rationalized by professors and Ph.D's., not to forget the MD's. of course.

Acting President Dr. Richard Lynde who is among the final candidates from which the new president will be selected.

to regain its pre-eminence among state colleges, rather than in a major investment in media consultants and other such devices.

"The role of the president should include more communication with legislators" said Riccards, "so that the message of what's being done is spread."

Asked about the increased rate of adjuncts in the school, he said he felt "a decrease in adjuncts will come only when they become so expensive that they are not an alternative."

Himmler was proud of the large number of Ph.D.'s he had in his department," Littell said.

"The Holocaust was a watershed event in human history, not only something unfortunate that happened to the Jews, but something very unfortunate that happened to the credibility of Christianity," he said.

He said, we blamed the Holocaust on Pagans, calling the Nazis Pagans; but Littell emphasized that Christendom was responsible.

He noted that Hitler was a Roman Catholic and he told the audience that "We must deal with the truth."

Littell said, "I think it would be a very risky bet to say that Temple, or Northwestern or cont. on p. 5

"Satanic Verses" seeks to excite Moslem world

By Tammy Burke
Correspondent

"The Satanic Verses" may be the most unread, bestselling book in recent history" said Dr. Tom Benediktsson at the Institute for the Humanities' discussion of Salmon Rushdie's controversial novel, on March 15.

This statement was evidenced by the fact that only one person in the audience admitted to have read one-third of the book.

Nevertheless, the discussion led by Benediktsson, Dr. Faiwzia Afzal-Khan of the English department, and Dr. Adele McCollum of Philosophy/Religion focused on to why this novel has caused such an uproar in the Islamic World.

McCollum said this book was Rushdie's way of ridding himself of Islam. This highly complex book satirizes and questions every aspect of Islam. According to one Moslem observer, "The book attacks Islam in its essence."

According to Afzal-Khan and McCollum, Rushdie knew that he would be creating controversy when he wrote the novel. Afzal-Khan went as far to say he "overstepped his bounds to inflict his anguish on others."

The consensus of the audience and the speakers was that Rushdie does not deserve to die for it.

Ambrosia addresses SGA

auto accidents and air pollution.

Ambrosia said, "The only person that could stop a toll increase is the Governor. I don't expect anything to happen before the next governor gets into office. I can't even predict how it is going to be resolved."

One solution Ambrosia offered was the substitution of a gas tax for the toll booths. He said that a tax of one and a half to two cents per gallon of gas would compensate for the lack of tolls.

The Parkway was originally designed to open up the shore area to recreational traffic, but it is now used by motorists who commute to school and work.

Ambrosia told the 26 attending legislators that he also disagreed with the job freeze put into effect by the executive order of Governor Kean.

"The job freeze has wreaked havoc on the social services of the state," Ambrosia said. "Literally, people are going to be dying in the streets, and in their homes, because there are not enough DYFUS (Division of Family Services) people."

Ambrosia, who is chairman of the committee for this issue, said that if Governor Kean wanted to, he could remove the job freeze tomorrow.

A tax increase was something Ambrosia was certain of. Ambrosia said, "We have to raise taxes in this state. We doubled our budget; we went from $6 billion to $12 billion under the Kean administration."

He added that there is no way

N.J. is going to get money from the federal government. "The state will have to pick it up," Ambrosia said. "We are going to have to put a progressive income tax in."

Ambrosia also talked about the problems with car insurance. Ambrosia said, "The JUA (Joint Underwriters Association) was very badly run. We should go back to square one and not get involved in a state-run insurance system. The Governor is the number one culprit in this, and if he was here, I would tell him."

Pollution was one issue Ambrosia said was close to his heart. "We generate enough sewage sludge to fill Giant Stadium three times a year," Ambrosia said. He also mentioned that we accept garbage from other states to keep our incinerators running.

Ambrosia added that his brother and sister graduated from MSC, and he knows this institution well. "There is a commitment to making our college system one of the best in the country," Ambrosia said.

Senator Cardinale, a republican representative of Cresskill, will speak with the Student Government on April 12. The meeting is at 4 p.m., and students are invited.

Sigma Phi Rho and Phi Beta Sigma fraternities were found guilty this week in connection with a riot which occurred in the Student Center on March 4.

Greek Council Member Diane Broome said that the judiciary court, in a 14 to 3 decision, found both organizations guilty. As a result, no guests will be allowed to attend an event sponsored by either fraternity. In addition, a member of the Greek Council will monitor the door at each event.

SGA president, Tom Mergola, said the punishment was too lenient. "I think the Greek Council displayed a very ineffective message to the campus," Mergola said.

The council's decision was based on the origin of the altercation, while Mergola concentrated on the severity of the riot itself.

Associate Dean of Students James Harris, also felt the punishment could have been harsher.

Harris said, "My initial thoughts are that fighting is not to be tolerated on campus."

Harris recommended that both organizations be placed on probation, as well as proving that all animosity between them has dissipated. Harris said, "I place a great deal of value in the greek system."

The Greek Council's decision is not final.

Speaker warns against repeat of the Holocaust

Yale today is doing a better job in terms of morals, ethics and commitment to life itself than was being done in the world-ranked universities of Berlin, Heidelberg, and so on in 1924, 1925.

"Universities defend rights without protecting rights, they are long on academic freedom but short on academic responsibility," said Littell.

"Professors cannot deal with their colleagues who are anti-semitic," he said. If they chose to act responsibly, "universities can yank degrees as well as grant degrees," he added.

Littell also compared American tolerance for destructive ideas with that of pre-Nazi Germany.

Germany was a democracy when Hitler took power, but it did not protect itself from Hitler, he said.

We are being frivolous when we fail to take seriously such movements as the Neo-Nazis or Identity Churches which arm themselves and advocate the overthrow of democracy, he added. We need to know the difference between a freedom fighter and a terrorist, he said.

"I am throwing these things in because I want you to think with me about the way in which we fellow citizens; Catholics, Jews, Protestants and, if I may use the phrase, secular humanists, owe it to each other to strengthen and sustain what is in many respects the most remarkable experiment in human liberty and self government made by any people on the face of the earth," Littell said.

Littell answered questions from the audience about the historic setting of Hitler's rise to power, the implications of his ideas to both women's rights and animal rights, and protecting freedom without being repressive.

Littell is the founder and honorary chairman of the Anne Frank Institute, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He is also the author of A Pilgrim's Interfaith Guide to the Holy Land, The Atlas History of Christianity and editor of The German Church Struggle and The Holocaust.

Dean and John Stagmaier Professor of Economics and Business Administration, the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. In his current post for the past six years, Reid previously was head of the department of marketing and business law and professor of business administration there, and before that, a member of the marketing department faculty at Howard University.

He also has served as consultant and staff specialist for the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Administration and on the faculties of Drexel University, the Philadelphia College of Art and St. Joseph's College in Philadelphia.

He holds Ph.D. and master's degrees in business and applied economics from The University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School and master's and bachelor's degrees in general experimental psychology from Howard University. He also attended Harvard University's Institute for Educational Management.

Michael P. Riccards

President, St. John's College, Santa Fe N.M. Before assuming the presidency at St. John's, Dr. Riccards was at Hunter College, City University of New York, first as professor of political science and later as provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Before that, he was dean of arts and sciences at the University of Massachusetts, chairperson and faculty member in the political science department at the State University of New York at Buffalo and special assistant to the New Jersey Chancellor of Higher Education.

He holds Ph.D. and master's degrees in political science, as well as a Master of Philosophy and a bachelor's degree in history, all from Rutgers University. He also was a research fellow at Princeton University.

The board appointed an 18 member search committee on Nov. 3, 1988 on which there are 16 voting members.

During the fall, the position of President was advertised in various publications including The New York Times, The Star Ledger and The Chronicle of Higher Education.

140 applications were received through Jan. 13, 1989.

The search committee, chaired by Dr. Robert Altman, evaluated each application and chose 13 candidates for interviews.

After the interviews, the committee recommended five candidates to the board.

Although the board will make its decision based on the search committee's findings and all other committees formed for the same purpose, students are encouraged to talk to SGA officers to voice their opinions of the candidates and any individual concerns they might have with the candidates.

According to Dave O'Brien, assistant to the president, the board welcomes comments from students, faculty, and staff regarding the candidates.

SOUP pours out students' thoughts

By Valerie Kalfrin
Head Feature Writer

Say "soup" to anyone at MSC and a number of things come to mind. One in particular, though, has nothing to do with vegetable, tomato, or chicken noodle.

In fact, the only food it offers is for the mind.

SOUP, or Student Organized Uninhibited Publication, first arrived on campus earlier this semester. Although independent of the SGA and other organizations, it has its roots in two of the literary groups on campus—the English club and Four Walls.

Tom Violett, president of the English club, came up with the idea for another campus publication last semester. "I had an idea of doing a different kind of magazine," he explains.

"We wanted to give students room to express themselves, to reach a lot of different segments of the population. We didn't want to duplicate Four Walls or The Montclarion. They do a good job with what they do."

Originally meant as a project of the English club, the publication became independent once Violett spoke to students, who felt it should be separate.

He, Angel Mossucco, literary editor of Four Walls, and David Craig met with professors from the English department such as Sharon Spencer, Carol Stone, Rita Jacobs, and Tom Benediktsson. With the help and contributions of about ten other students, SOUP began.

The first issue was received well by both students and faculty. Violett recalls letter he received from Dr. Jean Armstrong, vice president of academic affairs, in which she called SOUP "a cut above" the other magazines she had seen.

SGA President Tom Mergola also approached SOUP after the first issue.

"He asked us if we wanted to apply (to become part of the SGA). We're not interested right now. A lot of people on campus have an SGA bias, and say if we're independent, they'll contribute," Violett says.

Contributions are what SOUP hopes to get from the student community, while giving something to the students as well. In addition to gaining recognition for MSC, SOUP hopes to be a learning experience for the students as well.

Unlike Four Walls, a strictly literary publication that judges each piece before printing, SOUP aims to be "less critical." However, Violett maintains that SOUP will not be completely "hands-off" to submissions.

Aside from any grammatical corrections, critiques and advice will be offered if necessary instead of rejecting a piece completely.

"We'll really accept any kind of writing," Violett says, meaning poetry, short stories, essays or something completely different. Artwork is also accepted.

"We want to be a clearing-house for students' opinions, expressions, and writing that's as least editorial as possible. We won't judge whether it's in (the publication) or out. Students don't learn that way."

In addition, SOUP hopes to bring a social awareness to MSC through articles about topics such as the homeless; however, Violett maintains that SOUP will not become a soapbox for anyone or a place to showcase the work of those involved with the magazine.

Once off the ground, SOUP will be a monthly publication, and with its budget, will sponsor workshops and seminars with faculty members. "Professors are dying to work with students, outside the classroom," Violett says.

Independence is one aspect of the publication that has both its advantages and its problems. SOUP has no official editor or officers; those who organized it work as a group. Dr. Benediktsson has been asked to be an unofficial advisor by those involved; he plans to let SOUP remain a "student-run thing."

Because of its independence from the SGA, though, SOUP receives no funding and has no place to meet. For the first issue, students were charged either fifty cents, nothing, or whatever they wished to pay.

"We didn't want to tell people they had to pay for it," he says. "It was incredible, though. Everybody gave at least fifty cents for it."

While SOUP is relying on monetary contributions at the moment, it does have a bright future. Several bookstores in Montclair have expressed interest in selling the magazine, although no offers are definite yet.

In the future, Violett hopes for some criticism from the campus. "We want their critical response so we can improve," he says. "If people aren't responding, they really aren't reading it."

SOUP's second issue is due out at the end of April; those involved hope it will make a greater impact on campus.

Whatever the response, SOUP's future hinges on students sampling this food for thought, and offering some of their own. In this case, too many "cooks" can only enhance it.

Canadites must address student apathy at MSC

The question of student apathy has often been addressed by administrators and professors alike. However, it has never been considered a very important issue—it was just one of those persistent topics that never seemed to die, like insufficient parking or lines at the registrar's office. In fact, the issue of student apathy has hardly been mentioned this academic semester—until the candidates for MSC's presidency came on campus.

When Acting President Richard Lynde was asked during his presentation if the apathy on campus bothered him, the question was neatly evaded with the standard excuse: the majority of students on campus are commuters, and don't participate in activities.

If our own acting president is making excuses for us, then what are students to think? That it's acceptable to be apathetic?

Much more interesting were the fresh solutions that came in from other candidates.

Of course, the immediate excitement generated by these solutions must also be balanced with harsh reality: Lynde may seem pessimistic next to his competitors, but he also knows MSC far better than they do. The unnerving question that comes of this is: Is he not only realistic, but right?

He may be. There are several hard facts that no pep talk will overcome: the majority of students that attend MSC commute, and the majority also hold jobs off campus. These facts translate into a fairly bleak picture of your average MSC student: a person who arrives on campus only to attend classes, grab a slice of Rat pizza and rush back home or to a job. There is not a lot of participation potential there.

Can a dynamic president change that pattern? Maybe. There are potential participants out there who do have the time and energy to add to student activities. Hopefully this possible change in student apathy can have a positive affect on the forthcoming SGA elections. Considering that Mergola ran unopposed and only a dismal number of students even bothered to vote, we have some work ahead. If someone can tap that potential, then a change is needed.

Gentle George is off to a slow start

The wolves are howling at President Bush's door already. His administration has been accused in recent weeks of being adrift, suffering malaise and lacking an agenda.

The story from Washington is that Attila the Preppy is receding into history and George the Wimp is on the march—or limp. Critics are seizing on the slowness of his appointment process, the lack of a specific legislative program and as evidence that Mr. Bush may not be up to the job.

Well, I'm as willing to declare a presidency a failure as the next fellow—more so, actually—but I generally like to wait until he's been in office a full 90 days before I do it. I realize that a know-it-all columnist should be able to declare an administration in terminal disarray in six weeks, but I like to give a new kid on the block the benefit of the doubt. I'm conservative that way, if no other.

Admittedly, Gentle George has started slowly, particularly for someone who was supposed to bring the advantage of continuity to the office. In his first 100 days in office Franklin Roosevelt put the basic structure of the New Deal in place. The chief accomplishment of Mr. Bush's first 100 days will be the confirmation of his Secretary of Defense.

But that doesn't mean things won't get better down the road. The problems facing him are big; perhaps a deliberate style is called for. In any case, he wasn't elected to do things, he was elected not to do things, primarily raise taxes, burn the flag and let Willie Horton out of jail. These he has not done, which I'm sure accounts for his relatively high approval ratings in the polls.

The encouraging thing about the Bush administration thus far, at least to me, is that it has been so different from the Reagan administration. The efforts at media manipulation have been so inept as to be endearing, and there's been no playing peekaboo with a president sheltered from contact with the outside world by a palace guard for shouting of questions over the roar of helicopters. Mr. Bush has made himself accessible to the media and has been able to handle tough questions without making a complete ass of himself. That indeed is a change and a welcome one. A president may not have all the answers, but he should recognize the questions.

President Bush even came around a little on the AK-47 issue the other day. He OK'd a ban on imported assault-style rifles, pending a review of whether the semiautomatic weapons are being used for sporting purposes. This was a switch from his previous position that rifles don't assault people, furloughed criminals do. Now if you get caught in the cross fire of a drug shootout, you can take comfort in the fact that, chances are, you'll die American.

I find amusing, however, the notion that it may be "sporting" to hunt with a semiautomatic weapon. I would have thought that a real sportsman would depend on his skill and marksmanship to bring down game, rather than the ability of his gun to shred his prey. What do these people use for fishing lures, dynamite?

Still, it's a start. We have to be patient with Mr. Bush. He's only little.

Even the Senate's rejection of John Tower as defense secretary has a plus side for the president. He made the egregious error, born of loyalty, of proposing as his defense chief a man who combined the libiso of Harpo Marx, the drinking habits of W.C. Fields and the ethical sensibilities of Spiro Agnew, but he was saved from his folly by the ineptitude of his efforts to support the man.

Now, having shown himself a steadfast friend to the fallen Tower, he will have a defense secretary in place who has the respect of Congress and the good opinion of mankind.

It could be that Mr. Bush will prove to be a lucky president which, as his predecessor demonstrated, is often better than being a good one.

Not that I really think he will. It seems to me that the flaccidity of his administration's early days has been just what one would have expected from so vacuous and small-spirited a campaign and the days ahead will see more of the same.

But I really think we should give the guy 90 days or so before we make a definitive judgement.

Economic pressure provides stability

Boris Yeltsin is publicly campaigning for office in Moscow on the grounds that his free market agenda has been insufficiently implemented under perestroika—Walter Mitty time in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, but it is happening.

In China, a national congress convenes, and is finding it difficult to repress Chinese intellectuals who threaten to pound on the table and demand greater freedom than they are fitfully permitted under the post-Mao regime. It is even being debated whether the huge portrait of that ugly man should be removed from the prominence it has in Tien An Men Square. Remove a picture of the Great Helmsman? Rather like plucking the heart from revolutionary China—certainly the equivalent of plucking the windpipe from it.

And in South Africa, the Dutch Reformed Church sheepishly admits that all the time, all those years, it was mistaken about the inherent justice of apartheid: You cannot be a Christian in good standing and endorse apartheid. The meaning of this, coming from what amounts to the established church in South Africa, cannot be overestimated. Those who clung to apartheid as a means sanctioned by Christian tradition of solving the problem of mixed races suddenly stare down and keel of their proud vessel is gone.

It is not to give in to economic determinism to reflect on the proximate pressures bringing about these reforms. The late Alan Paton over and over again stressed that reforms would come to South Africa as a result of economic pressures. Paton himself was something of a scrambled socialist, but he always insisted that the need of South Africa for black technicians and for black economic patronage would edge the nation away from apartheid. As that which the nation clearly needs becomes transparent, the reigning church re-examines its doctrines and conforms to the transcendent message of the Bible, which has to do with neighborliness, not fences.

And what is it that tempers the appetite of Mikhail Gorbachev for bloody expansionism? Answer: There is no evidence that his appetite is tempered, but much evidence that his appetite cannot be sated because of what George Bush might call "the economic thing." In Afghanistan, his legions came upon one U.S. Stinger too many, and to mount the kind of military campaign he'd have needed to kill another million Afghans (or 2, 3 million) would have strained his sparse resources; so he had to retreat. As also retreat, however ambiguously (the Cuban troops aren't due home until 1991), from Namibia. So far, he has yet to retreat from Cuba (cost: $8 million per day) or Nicaragua (cost: over $1 million per day), but he relies on his successful guile to get West German banks and other centers of capitalist sentimental greed to finance these sallies together with his ongoing rearmament.

And of course in China, the reign of Deng Xiaoping brought in nothing less than a transfiguration of the agricultural picture. In four years, production increased by 350 percent. The demonstration—what a semi-free agriculture would do that socialized agriculture could not do—is the starkest evidence that the turn to the right was a turn in the necessary direction. The Chinese communists are not likely to renounce their phantasmagoria explicitly, nor to sacrifice what they call socialist centralism. But they are driven, driven by the laws of the market. And the relative civil serenity of the one-party state permits a prospective rise in economic production that is proving impossible in the chaotic political situations in so much of Latin America.

In Brazil, inflation brings unemployment, stultification and grinding poverty. Brazilians complain of having to make payments on their staggering national debt, and the burden is real. But that burden is being met by the simple expedient of printing more money, with the result that inflation will be on the order of 1,000 percent during the year. In Peru, also suffering from a heavy debt, it didn't work for the demagogue who serves as president simply to suspend payments: The Shining Path guerrillas are as implacable as the guerrillas in El Salvador, and the tumult begins by discrediting democratic stability, and ends by terrorizing those who seek to keep democracy in place. Venezuela explodes under the burden, and Carlos Andres Perez, president for the second time, considered calling in the army, settling instead for a curfew.

But the knock on the door—in Brazil, Peru, Venezuela—may come from the army the next time around. Economic forces bring discontent, but progress requires political stability. They say the market is ruthless. But one can only be glad for the pressures it exerts.

Time for students to clean-up MSC

To the editor:

It's time for spring cleaning. Let's pitch it in before we strike out.

The cans, wrappers, bottles, papers, they are all around. Are we a dump? Can we get our pride back?

The Montclair State Softball and Baseball teams are pitching away in Florida. Let us pitch it in here at home! For all those bodies getting in shape let's shape up our campus. For all those home runs let's do some pinch hitting ourselves here at MSC.

M. Scott Peck, in his book The Road Less Traveled speaks of love and how it takes effort against inertia. How true. Too true is the effort needed for MSC to delight us with its cleanliness.

Coming to MSC this morning I was struck by the sight beginning on Valley Road, of loveless thrown cans, bottles, containers, newspapers, wrappers—just everything that folks toss wherever, as though our land were their own private trash can.

How come? The Student Center has a recycle bin next to the Pepsi/Coke machines on the 1st floor. There are stone, black, and blue top cans all over.

Perhaps you will join the Conservation Club and set aside a whole day for the campus to remember our environment and clean it up. There are enough examples in every corner of the campus to illustrate a photographic essay on cleanliness in the Time/Life manner.

Let's choose a day where we could all pitch in. Maybe the SGA could provide bags and we could all instill a little pride back to MSC. Let's seize the day with MSC's motto Carpe Diem.

There's enough for all of us. Team work makes hard jobs easier. It's worth the effort. Let's go for it.

Library respondsLibrary tries to be fair to all students

To the editor:

In her letter to the editor, The Montclarion March 9, 1989, Kristin Roome claims that she never received a straight answer about her request for a refund from two library books for which she paid.

The Library's policy is not to give a refund once payment is received for our books. The process of refunding and accounting for the money refunded, withdrawing the information which we keep for our books (and then re-adding the same information for these books), and the possibility of refunding money for a book which we have reordered, makes the giving of refunds very difficult, and costly, for the library.

In February, 1989, the first time Ms. Roome contacted me about her situation, we had taken the many steps we have to follow to account for the monies collected for these books and to withdraw the information about these books from our records. We had even reordered one of these books.

Ms. Roome also claims that the overdue fines for these books would have been seventy cents. The books were due on May 23, 1988. The fines would have been much more than that. She could even have returned the books in October during our amnesty month and avoided paying any overdue fines.

Ms. Roome was not referred to the Business Office until almost four months after the books were overdue. We did try to notify her about these overdue books. On July 18, 1988, we sent her a certified letter notifying her of the overdue books. The Post Office returned the letter to us on August 10, 1988, as "unclaimed."

The Library tries to be fair to individual students, while developing policies which protect the entire student body. By not returning her books on time, Ms. Roome deprived fellow students of the opportunity to use these books. The circumstances regarding Ms. Roome's request for a refund were thoroughly reviewed. There was nothing in Ms. Roome's situation which necessitated an exception to our refund policy.

Stories from the Big Apple

By Lynn M. Cowan
Editor-in-Chief

The film New York Stories is the result of the combination of three directors' slices of New York culture—"Life Lessons," by Martin Scorsese; "Life Without Zoe," by Francis Ford Coppola; and "Oedipus Wrecks," by Woody Allen.

"Oedipus Wrecks" is without doubt the finest film of this trio—unfortunately, it is also the last, so you have to sit through the other two before it. Allen is at his neurotic best in this scene of New York Jewishdom, complete with the standard psychoanalyst and an embarrassing mother.

Allen plays the son of Sadie Millstein, a squat bundle of terror who doesn't have any reservations about informing his fiancée of his bedwetting habit as a child. Allen's mom greets her son by saying, "You look awful," and constantly needles him about his eating habits and the fact that he is marrying too soon.

A special source of angst for Sadie Millstein is the fact that her son has changed his name to Mills. "He hates this apartment," she confides to Mia Farrow, his fiancée. "He thinks it looks too Jewish."

Allen vents his frustrations to his psychoanalyst: His mother talks too loud, she embarrasses him—his life is a living hell. "What I'd really like," says Allen, "is for her to disappear quietly."

His wish comes true when he takes mom out to a magician's show and she's selected for the disappearing act. After an initial amount of shock when the trick actually works, Allen settles into his new life without the shadow of his mother. He feels better, his sex life improves and he hardly misses mom.

All this takes a turn for the worse, however, when Allen steps out of a deli one day to discover dozens of cars piled up and pedestrians gawking at the sky. He looks up, and lo and behold—Sadie Millstein has been transformed into an apparition the size of the Good Year blimp.

She admonishes Allen from her lofty perch, "Look at you! You look awful!" She then proceeds to share all her baby pictures with hundreds of astonished New Yorkers down below.

A late night newscaster catches wind of a story and comments, "Mrs. Millstein has a son who changed his name to Mills. Not much is known about Mills except that he is a lawyer and he used to wet his bed."

The whole of New York joins Sadie's fight to keep everything in Allen good, clean and Jewish, and strangers in the street stop him to ask if he's dressed warmly enough or whether he's eating properly.

His mother's drive to stop her son from marrying too soon takes on epidemic proportions, as she screams yiddish insults at his bride from above the Empire State building.

Finally, Allen is pushed to desperate means. He enlists the help of a Jewish psychic who in turn takes the place of his fiancée. At last, Allen found a woman with whom his mother can connect. However, he must now live with the fact that his wife is just like his mother. Only in New York.

Nick Nolte proves he can actually do more than growl in a film when he stars as a successful, lecherous, middle-aged artist in "Life Lessons." The camera work couldn't be better, as the frequent shots on all areas of Nolte's young assistant's (Rosanna Arquette) anatomy contrasts with the violent images on his canvases.

At first, Nolte's character stirs feelings of sympathy as the stumbling, over weight artist struggles to recapture his assistant's dying love. It is almost pathetic when Nolte, resembling Grizzley Adams with paint stains, ends his feeble attempts at seducing Arquette after she says, "Do you love me?," waits for the affirmative, and laughs, "Well, I don't love you."

Nolte bumbles after the lithesome Arquette in scene after scene, promising her, "I'd do anything for you." Every time Arquette threatens to leave, the artist gets desperate, promising to keep their relationship non-sexual and saying, "You're going to leave the city? Where can you go? Where else do you get free room and board, a salary, exposure to some of the top people in your field, and invaluable life lessons?"

The final scene of "Life Lessons" adds a surprising twist to Nolte's character. Arquette has left for good, and the artist is "mingling" at a new showing of his work.

He comes across a beautiful bartender, who confides in him that she, too, would like to be an artist. Nolte asks her how she is surviving in the city, and she admits it's tough.

Finally, the camera fixes on various parts of her anatomy, and Nolte looks her in the eye and says, "You know, I need an assistant. You get free room and board, a salary, exposure to some of the top people in your field, and invaluable life lessons." The artist is suddenly transformed into the lecherous fraud he has shown glimmers of previously, and the scene closes.

"Life without Zoe" is a miserable mess. Considering that 85 percent of the cast is under 14, the acting ability displayed is passable, but the plot is silly and reeks of television sitcoms. The only good things that can be said for "Life without Zoe" is that it's short and it does give a view of how a very small percentage—the obnoxiously rich—live in the Big Apple.

For anyone who enjoys the City, these three New York Stories will have something for everyone.

Commentary:

Why are good concert tickets hard to find?

By Oren Silverstein
Staff Writer

There are certain things a person accepts as a given when going to a concert. Things that happen so often that people believe them to be inevitable. Like what, you say? Well, here are a few examples.

First, there are the people who believe that their goal in life is to find out how much alcohol a human can possibly consume without bursting into flames when someone lights a cigarette in their vicinity.

That is if the crack security force hasn't confiscated all your supply already. Of course, these same security people are never around when one over-zealous fan is beating another into a grease spot three rows in front of you (not that I'm so concerned about the one being beaten, it's just that they're blocking my view).

If your refreshments are confiscated, there is always the snack bars provided every fifty feet. For only $3.75, you can get a drink with a chunk of ice in it roughly the size of the one that took down the Titanic.

I won't even comment on the food, let's just say that everyone knows that there are terrible things in hot dog, but in an arena hot dog you can taste them all.

From the snack bar, it's just a quick trip down the hall to the souvenir stand. For an investment somewhat less than the national debt, you can show your allegiance to your favorite artist. Choose from a wide selection of band t-shirts, sweat-shirts, tour programs, buttons, headbands, boxer shorts, drinking glasses, jumper cables, condoms, shower caps.....Okay, I got a little carried away here, but you get the idea.

I am willing to accept all of this and more because I guess, it's part of the fun or at least it's part of the experience. The one thing that I will not put up with, and neither should you is the near impossibility of getting good seats at a show.

I've been to around twenty shows. Out of those twenty times, I've had floor seats a grand total of three times. For the rest of the shows, I had seats that ranged from decent to ones that I swear were in different time zones.

At this point, you, the reader might say "Stop whinning Oren, that's just the way it is; cest la vie and all that." I disagree. It doesn't have to be that way because those in power are taking advantage of us, the consumer.

Did you know that arenas are allowed to sell to the licensed ticket broker? These are the same brokers who are somehow allowed to sell tickets from anywhere from double to ten times their original price.

You might think that if you get to the box office the first few days tickets are on sale, you won't have to worry about that. Wrong. It is perfectly legal for the venue to sell to licensed brokers after as little as twenty four hours after tickets go on sale.

While we're on the subject of ticket thieves...oops, I mean brokers, how come they are allowed to remain in the business? Doesn't New Jersey have an anti-scalping law? If you look on the back of a ticket it says that it cannot be resold for more than $3 or 20% of its original face value.

I've heard of Springsteen tickets going for as much as $500 each. I dunno, I'm no math whiz, but I believe that that's a little more than a twenty percent increase on a $20 ticket.

By the way, where do these places get all these great seats? They never seem to be sold out when you call them. Many places say that they get their tickets from people on the streets; the fans.

Let me ask you this: you're a fan and have just been waiting in line for seven and a half hours in the blazing sun or the freezing cold to get tickets for someone you waited months or perhaps even years to see. Do you mean to tell me that you would just sell them to the first person who offers you money for them? I thought not.

Well what can we do about it? The answer is simple. Stop using the services! For God's sake, these people are businessmen, they want to make money. If there is no demand, then there is no need for the suppliers.

Think before you use these ticket brokers next time; do you really need to see Bon Jovi from the 10th row that badly? Get only a fair seat and use that fifty bucks you've saved and spend it on something else. Don't make it more difficult for the rest of us to get seats.

The next step is harder. You need to write letters to everyone that will listen. Write to record companies, promoters, the venues, radio stations and the artists themselves. If no one takes action, those who can do something about it will only think nobody cares.

The most important people to write to are your government representatives. Every week a nice chunk is taken out of your pay for taxes. We are supposed to get something in return. If enough people protest, maybe we can get the legislation changed.

We have the vote now. We have a voice; we have the power; we can make a difference. As author Paddy Cheyefsky once wrote in his novel Network "I'm mad as hell, and I'm not going to take it anymore." You shouldn't have to either.

SpeakEasy: A cabaret to sizzle the STS stage

By Barbara Smith
Staff Writer

Al Capone, Bugsy Malone, the Flapper, the Charleston and prohibition spells the roaring '20's, and for the Studio Theatre Series of MSC, adding dazzling song and dance, it means SpeakEasy: a Musical Cabaret.

Over one dozen crooners and tappers will be heating up the joint with the best of Broadway, jazz and popular song hits that made the 1920's roar.

The Studio Theatre presentation of SpeakEasy: A Musical Cabaret runs Thursday through Saturday, April 6-8, and April 13-15. All shows begin at 8:00 p.m. No reservations are accepted and seating is by general admission.

Inside the speakeasy, the joint will be jumping with music, romance, sex and glamour. It will be dripping with danger as the hoidy-toidy of society rub elbows with gangsters.

Put to music, this hot spot will be shaking with the rhythms of Cole Porter, Irving Berlin and George Gershwin's: "Puttin' on the Ritz," "Let's Misbehave," "How Long Has This Been Going On," as well as many other toe tapping, finger snapping hits like: "Baby Face," "The Shiek of Araby," and "The Charleston!"

This original musical was conceived and directed by MSC faculty member Eric Diamond. Scott Schneider, technical theatre student in the department, will be the scenic and lighting designer. Mark Kalet will stage manage the production. Assistant to the director will be Hilary Nugent.

Alumni Kim Palmissano returns to choreograph the show. The musicians include: Eric Diamond on the piano, Craig Scoppa on the drums, and Mathew Hurst on the saxophone.

Shieks, shebas, gangsters, and dumb Doras include: Jay Bardin, Peter Casbar, Candy Cordes, Chris DeBari, Denise Dobrosky, Antoinette Doherty, Marcelino Felicaiano, Jase Hudnut, James Hyler, Deanna Jividen, Carolyn Kowalski, Peter LiVecchi, Gena Lustig, Gina Millevoi, Donna Nagy, Sam Newman, Laura Pavlich, Reginald Ros, Celeste Russi, and Jeffery L. Wingfield.

Ticket prices are: standard, $3.; MSC students with ID, $2.; faculty, staff, and senior citizens tickets are also discounted. For directions or further ticket information call 893-5112 during business hours.

The STS 1988-89 season concludes with A Staged Reading, May 18-20.

Gonzalez and Monaco will make you believe

By Kenny Peck

Wrestlemania ran wild The success of Karl Monaco and Pete Gonzalez this season (and in the last three seasons) is something that everyone can relate to. The two were able to overcome all the odds in their quest to be Division I national champs. Yes, they fell a bit short, but their determination and desire is something that many people can learn from. They were truly the best they could possibly be. Credit is certainly due to MSC wrestling coach Steve Strellner and his staff as well.

They never listened when people told them they were from a small, Division III school. Imagine a wrestler from Montclair State facing a wrestler from Iowa State, a wrestling powerhouse for years, for the national championship.

To put it in perspective, imagine the MSC football team facing Notre Dame in the Fiesta Bowl, or the basketball team facing Duke this weekend in Seattle. It's amazing, really. Yet no one really flinches. Gonzalez and Monaco don't really seem fazed by it either, but that's probably because they knew all along where they'd be come March of 1989. And something tells me they know where they'll be in September of 1992. Then maybe people will realize the talent these guys really have.

Tops several Div. I schools in Florida

Baseball team can play with the best of 'em

By Al Langer
Sports Information Director

Considering the challenge that was facing the 1989 MSC baseball team when they took to the air ten days ago for its annual opening season Florida trip, an optimist would have had to say that a .500 record coming home was one to be proud of.

After all, an opening schedule that consisted of four Division I schools and four Division II schools was designed to toughen the team for its northern opponents, not to grab some wins in the sun. So what happened?

The Indians, ranked third in the country in Division III the week they left for Florida, showed the collegiate world that they can not only play with Division I schools, they could beat them.

MSC suffered only two setbacks in the eight game schedule and took three of four from Division I opponents. The two losses came to Florida Atlantic (by a 6-5 score) and the University of Massachusetts (5-1).

John Deutsch

Of the six wins, four were dramatic come-from-behind victories, including a stunning seven-run final inning against Southern Illinois University that turned an 8-2 deficit into a 9-8 win. A two-out, two-run single by Leroy Horn scored Ralph Doerfler and Mark Gavin.

MSC was also down 7-4 in the eighth inning against Michigan State before a six-run rally gave the Indians the victory. A 6-3 deficit against Florida Atlantic was erased as MSC emerged with a 9-6 win.

The Indians were also powered by John Deutsch, who finished the week with a .320 average, two homers and a team-leading 15 runs batted in. John McClain led the Indians with a .387 batting average. The left fielder also had two home runs and knocked in 11 runs.

Michael Brandon also got off to a fast start, as he had two homers and 11 RBI's to go with his .385 average. Transfer Chris Bell (.333, 2 HR's, 9 RBI's) also performed well.

On the mound, MSC started the week a bit slowly, giving up 23 runs in the first three games. But veterans Brian Devins and Wayne Masters keyed a turnaround toward week's end.

Devins finished the Florida swing at 2-0, grabbing a win in relief and then going eight innings against Florida Atlantic for the other.

Masters, 1-0, had perhaps his best outing in a long while as he threw eight strong innings against St. Leo's University, giving up one run while striking out ten. He leads the team with 11 K's.

Fran Gallagher, a junior righthander, is 1-0 as well as he pitched well enough to earn a win against St. Thomas.

The Indian bullpen also looked strong, with freshman Paul Desimone nailing down a save and converted right fielder Troy Bowers registering a win. Senior Jeff Vanderloef also looked extremely good out of the bullpen.

Dominican 9-MSU 4

In MSC's first game back from the Florida trip, Dominican used a five-run seventh inning to key a 9-4 win. Brandon and McClain had three hits each for the Indians, who slipped to 6-3.

The game, originally slated as a home game for the Indians, was played in Orangeburg because of a problem with Pittser field. There is no word on when the field will be available.

Monaco and Gonzalez Div. I All-Americans

By Kenny Peck
Sports Editor

MSC wrestlers Karl Monaco and Pete Gonzalez took their dreams as far as reality would allow them, and it was quite a ride.

Both Monaco and Gonzalez were named Division I All-Americans for their performances at the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I national championships in Oklahoma last week.

Gonzalez finished fifth and Monaco finished second overall. The top seven wrestlers in each class are All-Americans.

The two were both attempting to become only the third wrestler ever from a Division III school to win the Division I championships.

Both wrestlers started out well, as they each won both of their matches on Thursday. On Friday, however, Gonzalez fell to the eventual second place finisher, Michael Stokes of North Carolina State.

"I didn't expect to lose, but I knew he was a tough kid," said Gonzalez. "I thought I had him on his back about 15 seconds into the match, but I didn't get the call."

Monaco, meanwhile, ventured into the finals on Saturday night after two wins on Friday, and faced Tim Krieger of Iowa State, who defeated Monaco earlier in the season, for the national championship.

Krieger took a 2-0 lead early, but in the third period, Monaco appeared to register a takedown near the out of bounds line. But the referee refused to count it, apparently ruling that Monaco's feet were out of bounds, although the replay appeared to show otherwise.

Krieger went on to win the match by a 5-0 score, a score that doesn't reflect how tight the match was.

"It was great to get that far, because that's what you work for all year," said Monaco. "I'm happy with the way it went."

Softball team (11-3) kept Rucker on the edge of her seat in Florida

If MSC head softball coach Willie Rucker didn't have a gray hair before she left for the annual southern trip to Florida, it's a good bet that she has one now.

The Indians, who came home with an impressive 9-3 record after their Florida excursion, made their coach's heart beat a bit faster during the trip with five one-run victories, including a one-run nailbiter over Muskingum College.

MSC, ranked fifth in Division III, started the season with a 3-2 win over Buena Vista, followed by a 5-4 decision over Benedictine, not exactly comfortable scores. In the second game, MSC broke a 4-4 tie in its final at bat to win the contest.

When the Indians were not involved in one-run games, they were busy scoring some runs, as they did in a 19-2 rout against Hope College. MSC also scored 10 runs (against California of Pennsylvania) and eight runs (against Muskingum).

Heavy hitters for MSC in the Sunshine State were Cindy Dormann, who hit a blistering .459 in 12 games with five RBI's, and Andrea Peters, who hit .450 with eight RBI's, six doubles and three triples.

On the mound, Johhna Tolomeo has answered some questions about the MSC pitching staff as she tossed her way to a 6-1 record with an ERA under two. Freshman Lois Fyfe (3-2) has also seen action on the hill for MSC.

Tolomeo ran her record to 7-

1 with a fine performance in the opener of the Indians' double-header with FDU-Madison Tuesday.

The righthander struck out six and walked one, allowing only four hits. Peters had four runs batted in for MSC.

Fyfe threw a one-hitter in the nightcap as the Indians (11-3) rolled to a sweep of the double-header. Tracey Burke led the Indians with two RBI singles in the 10-run MSC second inning.
