Actions spark rights forum

Students to voice police concerns

by Zora Johnson staff reporter

In response to student con-cerns over infringement of rights by city police, Undergrad-uate Student Government and the University Activities Orga-nization are planning a Student Rights Forum.

The forum will be held Mon-day at 6 p.m. in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom. It will be open to any student or member of the community, said Kelly McCoy, USG national, state and commu-nity affairs coordinator.

"The focus will be on prob-lems that off-campus students feel that they are having with police," McCoy said. "But peo-ple can bring forward any issue to which they would like city officials to respond."

Since the beginning of the year, almost 100 inquiries about city police actions have been filed with Student Legal Services, said Marcy Wilks, SLS secretary. The complaints include police actions in party break-ups and open container violations.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM USG and SLS met with Bowling Green Police Chief Galen Ash last Friday to present their concerns.

"The meeting went well, but we want students to have a chance to present their griev-ances in person," McCoy said. Ash and Thomas Botava, lieu-nant in charge of uniformed officers, have agreed to attend

Invitations have also been ex-tended to other city officials such as Mayor Bruce Bellard, John Quinn, president of City Council, and William Bess, di-rector of public safety, McCoy said

"The forum will be run according to Robert's Rules of Order, with students being acknowledged by the chair," McCoy said. "We want to keep it from becoming a shouting match, because we realize that it's an emotional issue."

McCoy said that she felt city officials were willing to listen to student complaints.

"I feel that they are receptive and want to work out the prob-lem," McCoy said. "Our ulti-mate goal is to be able to air students' grievances to city offi-cials and to come up with a satisfactory solution to the prob-lems."

Following the forum, USG will hold its first traveling meeting of the year. Open to all students, the meeting will be held Monday at 8 p.m. in the Off-Campus Commuter Center.

Interest in animals helpful

Officer's hobby now job

by Jim Nieman staff reporter

Diane Johnson's hobby has become a full-time job, and her full-time job has helped to ex-pand her hobby.

Johnson is the animal control officer of the Bowling Green Police Department. Before she applied for the position six years ago, she had trained dogs with her husband for nine years and taught dog obedience for six years.

Her husband is an officer with the city police, so she was aware that the animal control officer position was opening at the de

Since then, Johnson has taken comes across in her work. The list includes squirrels, raccoons, rabbits, birds and banded pigeons.

"It was a field that combined not only law enforcement, but animals, which was the field that I was most interested in," she said.

Although she attended the Ani-mal Control Academy in Tusca-loosa, Ala., and took basic police training at Owens Technical College, Johnson said "on-the-job experience was the most help-ful."

SHE SAID animal control has changed a lot over the years. She said the image of a dog-catcher with a net who has no compassion for animals is misleading.

"Animal control . . . is now a profession," Johnson said. "Most of the people who have gotten this far already have an interest in animals."

Johnson explained how her job is different from that of a dog

"A dog warden can only en-force section 755 of the Ohio Revised Code," Johnson said. Section 755 says dog wardens may only catch dogs.

"Animal control officers in most communities are sworn police officers and (can catch) a variety of animals," she said.

"I've never had to use one (tranquilizer gun) - I had it loaded in a couple of cases, but I approached it with a Ketch-all pole and used it on it."

A Ketch-all pole is a pole with a noose that can be tightened around an animal's neck. So far in her career, Johnson has used the Ketch-all only on her most rambunctious animals.

The majority of the animals Johnson deals with are dogs, she said. "And almost all the dogs that I catch, I catch with a leash."

HOWEVER, THERE is a third way to catch animals that she uses a great deal - a box trap. A box trap is a small metal cage with food in it. When the animal takes the food the doors fall down and the animal is

"We've had a little dachshund that's been hanging around in one particular area. It's really wary of strangers," Johnson said. She said a woman had been leaving food for it for several days. The dog stayed in one area because the woman was feeding it. This allowed Johnson to set up a box trap and catch it.

"Those are the types of animals that it is great to pick up. If not for the lady putting food out for the dog, it's hard to say how it would have gotten food." She added that the dog probably would have died because of the Johnson used the example of the day she captured the dachs-hund to illustrate a typical day.

"I picked up a cat, picked up a raccoon, and I picked up a domestic bunny rabbit," Johnson said. "My job involves dogs, cats and nuisance wildlife."

"That's what makes the job so intresting – the variety," she

"MOST OF the wildlife we catch is released in the country, usually in the Portage River area," Johnson said. She added that state law requires a wild animal be released within 24 hours of its capture.

Johnson said that 80 percent of the dogs that she picks up are claimed by their owners at the city dog shelter. She said that Bowling Green has a very high percentage and says the na-tional average is about 30 per-

She said only about 30 percent of the cats she picks up are claimed by their owners at the Wood County Humane Society. She said this figure is also above the national average.

Johnson attributes the high averages of owners retrieving their animals to the community's knowledge of the way the animal control system works in Bowling Green.

"People here know where to call when their pets turn up missing," she said.

When an animal is picked up, if it is sick or injured, it is immediately taken to a veterinarian, she said.

If it is not claimed at the veterinarian's, when it is well, the animal is taken to the Humane Society or dog shelter.

Johnson said once there, the animal is required to be kept only three days. However, she said, the animals she brings in are usually kept much longer because of the probability of them being claimed.

Johnson said the animal control officer is a position that was created to help animals.

"We're not the ones responsible for the pets being put to sleep. It's the irresponsible pet owner," she said.

Kidnappers firm with demands anonymous telephone caller claimed a second captive had been killed, and another said Moslem extremists planned to blow up the embassy.

The battle raged on for control of Tripoli, where more than 500 people have been killed and 1,100 wounded since Sept. 15. The militias supplied by Syria, Moscow's main ally in the Middle East, have the fundamentalists cornered with their backs to the sea and Syrian artillery has joined the battle.

The body of cultural attache Arkady Katkov, 32, was found yesterday, shot once in the head at close range. It was sprawled on blood-stained rocks near the Cite Sportive, a stadium adja-cent to the Sabra Palestinian refugee camp, which was de-stroyed by shellfire in Lebanon's decade-long civil war.

An anonymous caller claiming to speak for the Islamic Liberation Organization gave the lo-cation of the body in a telephone call to a Western news agency.

"WE HAVE carried out God's sentence against one of the hos-tages and we shall execute the ers one after the other if the atheistic campaign against Is-lamic Tripoli does not stop," he said. The four Soviets were abducted Monday in two separate incidents in west Beirut, the capital's Moslem sector.

The Islamic Liberation Organization of the section of t

nization, a Sunni Moslem fundamentalist group, is allied with Tawheed, the Islamic Unification movement, whose black-scarved warriors are fighting for their lives in Tripoli.

FBI searches for a former official a plot to deliver national defense information to a foreign government.

The search, which occurred between last Friday and Tuesday, became known as evidence emerged yesterday that the official, Edward L. Howard, 33, who was assigned to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow as recently as 1963, flew to Texas more than a week ago leaving even his wife in the dark about his whereabouts.

There were these other developments in the case of the missing official suspected of being a spy for the Soviet Union:

The Santa Fe, N.M., district attorney has obtained an arrest warrant for him because his flight violated his five-year probation on a 1984 gun-brandishing incident.

Colleagues who worked with him in the New Mexico state government said he traveled widely on state business to economic conferences in San Francisco, Boston, New Orleans, El Paso, Texas, and elsewhere. They also said his work led him into close dealings with some workers at the Los Alamos National

• In a Minneapolis suburb, Evar Cedarleaf, the father of Howard's wife, Mary, said he hasn't been heard from. "She hasn't heard from him. She has no idea where he is." Cederleaf and his daugther, who returned Tuesday to their Santa Fe home after a visit to Minnesota, was surprised and upset over her husband's disappearance.

And the CIA, the Justice Department, the State Department and the Senate Intelligence Committee all declined to discuss the case. The Senate panel and the State Department said they were awaiting an anticipated Justice statement, but Justice spokesman John Russell said: "Everyone wants us to make a statement and if we're going to make a statement, we'll make one when we're ready."

Limit the habit

Bowling Green would do well to follow the exam-ple of Cincinnati in passing an ordinance to prohibit smoking in many public places

Cincinnati's ordinance, passed Tuesday by the city's board of health, declares smoking a health hazard and restricts the act to designated areas in public places.

The regulation applies to retail stores, restaurants, banks, office buildings and offices, elevators, restrooms, libraries, hospitals, health clinics, museums, auditoriums, gymnasiums, concert halls, arenas, swimming pools and public transpor-tation including taxicabs, buses, trains, ferries and limousines for hire.

The ruling exempts public bars, bowling alleys and private parties in meeting facilities.

Although we applaud the board's restrictions on so many public places in the ordinance, we particularly support an anti-smoking ordinance for the Studies have indicated that smoke does not only affect the person holding the cigarette, it also endangers the health of others breathing the smoke-filled air. So in the workplace, where many spend 40 breathing hours each week, it is most important that the air be as clean as possible.

We are not, of course, challenging anyone's right to smoke. What we are disputing is the right to smoke in the presence of those who have chosen not to take it into their own lungs.

Smoking can be especially annoying to those with allergies, resulting in sneezing, coughing and red,

It is apparent to any non-smoker that many smokers will nurse their habit in the presence of a non-smoker, regardless of the non-smoker's wish. Therefore, an ordinance is necessary to keep smoke in rooms set aside for the purpose.

That way non-smokers could avoid the irritation and health hazards of tar and nicotine, making their decision to have smoke-free lives more feasi-

Marx deserves study

by Frederic Krome

As a graduate assistant, I am teaching the history of socialism and communism in the modern world. I did not choose the topic myself, however, even though I am not a socialist I enjoy teaching it. Socialism arose in response to genuine needs and problems in society. Which brings me to Karl Marx and Bill Melden's column of the September 26 BG News.
One does not have to be a socialist or communist to study Marx. Some people believe that the current disorder and violence in "marxist" states have as little to do with Marx as the fanaticism and cruelty of the Inquisition and Crusades had to do with Jesus. Mankind has always taken ideas and changed them over time to suit them-selves. Jesus spoke of love and honor, Marx spoke of exploita-tion, what became of their ideas after they died is something entirely different. Melden is cor-rect when he says that Marx is rect when he says that Marx is one of the most influential thinkers in the modern world. His view of Marx seems to imply two things: first, that he has not read much of Marx's writing, and second, that he does no wish Marx to continue as one of the most influencial thinkers of the modern world.

Let me address the first issue. Marx did not come from a long line of "second-rate rabbis and fifth-rate scholars". He came from a very distinguished line of Rabbis and scholars. Some of his ancestors were among the most famous of Jewish thinkers in western Europe. The term Rabbis, at the time, implied not only a religious leader, but also a student of the Talmud - the collection of Judaic law. Rabbis acted as judges in their commu-nities because they were excluded from the mainstream Christian culture. Marx's father changed his religion for political reasons. Karl, although scornful of religion, was brought up in a tradition of systematic schol-arship and thought. His work, whether we agree with it or not, was the product of years of study and research in the British archives.

Marx actually wrote a very adroit critique of 19th century economics. At that time western Europe was going through a massive industrial revolution. The result was great misery for the worker, as well as incresed production and profits. Socialproduction and profits. Socialism arose in response to these conditions, and appealed to those who were, perhaps, better off than they were a hundred years before, but who had not yet enjoyed the fruits of this industrial revolution.

There are many problems.

There are many problems with Marx's theories of historical development. I do not believe that Marx was totally correct in his understanding of history. However, he was not totally incorrect. Whether Mel-den or I like it, Marx has had a great impact on modern civiliza-tion as has Darwin and Freud (the next two columns, Mr. Mel-

I should reiterate that I am not communist. But I can see that there are problems with our world and we should be concerned about them. But to place blame for our problems on Marx because people use his philosophy for evil ends is misguided. One could make the argument that we should disregard the teachings of Moses, Jesus and Mohammed because people pervert their work. I do not believe in disregarding any of them. No matter what one's religious or political beliefs, one should try to learn as much as he can about the world. That includes study-ing Marx.

Society made Darwin a "god"

Editor's note: This is the second of three commentaries on influential thinkers of the modern world.

by Bill Melden

The Los Angeles Times now informs us, breathlessly, that computer scientists in Houston have "stumbled accidentally" onto the largest prime number ever encountered. The Cray X -MP supercomputer ever encountered. The Cray X – MP supercomputer, after an unprecedented three hours' worth of rumination, spat out the number two raised to the 216,091st power minus one, which contains over 65,000 digits. Thank God, I say. My own calculations had only led me as far as the number two raised to far as the number two raised to the 216,090th, and the frustration was causing me many a sleep less night.

At what point, one wonders, does the sheer zaniness of modern science become apparent to the twentieth century man? Although the scientists who found the latest prime number admit that it will be of no practical use to anyone, the discovery was greeted with wonder and awe, rather than the horse-laugh it deserved. But then, the most cynical and iconoclastic reporters on earth become trembling acolytes when they approach the altar of Science: such is life in what Jacques Ellul calls "the technological society."

It has been a week since we cast an adoring eye on the first person of the modern Holy Trinity, the ineffable Marx. If our zeal has flagged since then we will certainly be renewed and refreshed today, for today we move even closer to the contemporary godhead. There may be some benighted souls in this vale of tears who resist the wisdom of of tears who resist the wisdom of Papa Marx, but who among us does not fall into fits of religious ecstasy at the thought of the second person of the trinity, the incomparable Charles Darwin?

incomparable Charles Darwin?
Darwin, who was hatched in England in the year 1809, was a man of many parts. He studied medicine at Edinburgh, slicing and dicing many a corpse with the cheerful gusto of the born researcher; when he realized that the healing arts would one day bring him into rather intimate contact with live human beings, he shuddered and left beings, he shuddered and left the stethoscope (though not the scalpel) behind him. Not for Darwin the moans of a woman in labor, or the inarticulate agony of a cancer-ridden factory worker, or the whimpers of an injured child; no, these were meant for lesser men. Already he yearned for the fellowship of the root and the weed already the root and the weed; already he heard the siren song of the he heard the siren song of the Galapagos turtle.

Stifling these noble instincts for a time, he went to Cambridge to study for the ministry of the Gospel. Alas, the teachings of Jesus Christ proved as repellent to him as the complaints of a menopausal society matron, and he fled the cloisters with wings on his feet and a curse on his lips. One way or another, he vowed, he would another, he vowed, he would bring to ruin this vile religion and its primitive explanations of the world he saw around him.

Eventually, of course, he became a naturalist, and around the time the noble Andy Jackson was shambling into the White House, he set sail on the Beagle for forward places. House, he set sail on the Beagle for faraway places: places where he would be largely untroubled by human society or divine philosophy. After five years at sea, he felt that he had acquired an understanding of several million years of biological development, and he un leashed his Origin of Species upon an unsuspecting world.

In retrospect, his theory of evolution by natural selection (which was promptly and properly dubbed "Darwinism") seems inadequate and even presumptions and has been critically and the property of the control of the co scenns inacequate and even pre-sumptuous, and has been crit-icized by biologists and geneticists ever since it was first published. Everyone knows that fundamentalist Christians despise the theory; indeed, that is all that many people know about fundamentalist Christians. What is not so well known is the opposition to Darwinism which comes from thousands of emi-nent scientists, from Mendel in Darwin's own day to Richard Goldschmidt in our own. That, however, is beside the point: for Darwinism is no longer a scientific theory, but is rather a dogmatic and aggressive religion. No snake handler in the red hills of Georgia is as fanatical in his faith as the average Darwinian professor; no sputtering pastor in the Moral Majority is as intolerant of the beliefs of others as the modern evolutionist.

Darwinism, in fact, has become a sort of academic fascism, trampling all over free inquiry and academic freedom in its insistence on the purity and finality of the Darwinian revelation. There is room in the halls of Science for every type of crank and crackpot imaginable, but there is not so much as an inch for anyone who questions Darwinism. There are serious, Darwinism. There are serious, even compelling arguments to be made against the Darwinian twaddle, but few students are allowed to hear them. Darwin's flyblown theses have become the Holy Writ of a profession that does not believe in holy Darwin, one supposes, would love it. He was an oaf and a coxcomb whose only original insights were rife with inadequacies and contradictions, but in today's mad world, he has achieved godhood. The turtles would be proud.

Records don't need ratings

Rock 'n' Roll ratings labels would ban the good with the bad

by Mark R. McDermott

I feel moved to reply to the column by Bruce Edwards about all those terrible rock music lyrics and knee-jerk liberals who want to prevent true Americans from keeping this kind of garbage away from our poor dumb kiddies.

This is a strange argument coming from someone who identifies himself as an assistant professor of English. Doesn't he realize that many of the people who are leading the fight against "Porno Rock" are also the same ones who got the "pornographic lines" excised from current high school editions of "Romeo and Juliet"? Who want to make certain the property of the pr Juliet"? Who want to make cer-tain our schools have no dictionaries with "those words" so our kids will never find out about them? Who are leading the fight to keep our schools free of such "perverse works" as "Catcher in the Rye", anything by Judy Blume, or "1964" (nice to know Blume, or "1984" (nice to know they agree with the Russians on some things, eh?)? Maybe by banning more books, Edwards will have fewer to worry about.

Of course I realize there is much wrong with rock music. Edwards did not indicate his own musical preferences, whether it was Frank "One More for the Road" Sinatra, Elvis "Devil in Disguise" Pres-ley, or Country "Beer Drinkin' Truck Drivin' Cheatin' Man" music in general, but we'll have to assume his musical tastes are all free from nasty drugs, sex, or occult references. Then again, I don't much like Twisted Sister don't much like I wisted Sister either, but anyone can see from their album covers that this is not Sunday School material. Adding a rating label would only tell the kids what they already know. Certainly Prince has done some raunchy material, but he's also done bits like "Ronnie Talk to Russia Before It's Too Late." I wonder if those good Republican senators' wives are also concerned about our kids hearing pernicious political material as well.

t will aroue that Rock 'n Roll is not so much art as it is commerce, that your ability to express yourself really depends well your last record sold. But there are many musi-cians who are highly considered cians who are highly considered by society, and who have made reference to sex or drugs on occasion: people like Paul Simon, Bruce Springsteen, even Kenny Rogers. These are the people who will be faced with the choice of either rewriting their work, usually the products of months of sweat and toil, or having their next album slapped with a "D/A" or "R" sticker and dumped in the "porno" bin along with W.A.S.P. or Black Sabbath. And since many of these self-appointed watchdogs would then try to make sure all these proscribed records are not carried by their neighborhood shopping center, we will, in effect he having the had with the shopping center, we will, in effect, be banning the bad with the Now, being banned in places can do wonders for sales of . can do wonders for sales of heavy metal records (look what it did for "Lady Chatterly's Lover". Who reads it nowadays when you can get it at Waldenbooks?), it will probably not do any favors for Conway Twitty or Elton John.

One of the best arguments against record ratings was given by none other than Donny Osmond on ABC's "Nightline" program recently. He said he was concerned that under a rating system be a record. ing system, he would be required to do his records with an eye toward avoiding a "safe" or "G" rating if he wants it to sell at all. That program also fea-tured Frank Zappa, whom Ed-wards labels a "semi-musician." This is a man who has practiced his particular "semi-musicianship" for over 20 years, and whose compositions have been recorded by a number of others; but then what do Jean-Luc Ponty, Pierre Boulez, and the London Symphony Orches-tra know about music? While I can't think that record stores would be obliged to clear out half their stock when it is suddenly declared smutty, I do recall that K-Mart banned Steve Martin's first album because he used "that word". He also won a Grammy for that year.

I must also question Edwards' logic when he says "Spare me your tales of how Swedish erotica has reduced sex crimes in Scandinavia (their suicide rate is the highest in the world)."

First, he is already rutting the is the highest in the world)." First, he is already putting the music under discussion in the music under discussion in the same category as visual pornography, and then he is suggesting that erotica is what's behind Sweden's high suicide rate. Where's the proof? For all we know, it could be those depressing Bergman movies.

Maybe instead of rating and Maybe instead of rating and banning pop music, which would only continue its 30-year tradition as music the kids love because the grownups hate it, maybe we should consider just why songs by morons in studded leather and white greasepaint say something to youth that others cannot. If you can figure that out, I know several record comout, I know several record company executives who'd like to hand you a few million dollars.

Finally, we'll have to face up to the fact in order to stay effecto the fact in order to stay effective, the First Amendment will have to be applied indiscriminately. If we set up a committee to decide on the suitability of Motley (Vehicular Manslaughter) Crue, they may next decide whether "Imagine" or "God" by John Lennon or "I Wish I Had a Rocket Launcher" by Bruce Cockburn should be allowed on the airwaves. Since I have already heard at least one conservative call Bruce Springsteen a ready heard at least one conservative call Bruce Springsteen a traitor for writing "Born in the USA," I'm quite afraid that it can indeed happen here.

Remember, they burn books as well as records.

Her office is barely large enough to house a desk, chair and file cabinet. The room is made even smaller by the large piles of flyers and pam-phlets growing up from her desk and the cardboard boxes carpeting the floor.

Sprouting from these piles and making their way up the nosters issuing walls are posters issuing warnings on the hazards of not locking your bike and the unsafe practice of walking alone after dark.

Sgt. Charlotte Starnes is the coordinator of the University's crime prevention pro-ty's crime prevention program, a program she helped create two years ago. "When I accepted this appointment I started from scratch," she

She received a special merit award in September at the 23rd Annual training con-ference of the International Association of Women Police held in Anchorage, Alaska. The award was given for her dedication of prevention of criminal acts and the effort to put forward community relations at the University during the past 16 years. Since its inception the pro-gram has grown to include an scort service, a block-watch program, operation identifi-cation and the fingerprinting of children of University em ployees.

Getting the program off the ground has meant many extra hours for Starnes, including taking work home at night.

"Its a job that keeps you very busy. Every night I have something to take home and work on, but the people you meet and have the opportunity to work with are great," she said.

She laughs as she points to a canvas bag full of folders and papers, "see that bag? It goes home with me almost every night."

Recalling the time she had to fold 5,000 filers to distribute to off-campus students, "Now that was a lot of work," she said, then laughed.

But the hard work hasn't dampened the police sear-gent's spirit.

She prides herself on being the first black woman to complete the training program at the Ohio State Police Academy's Basic Police School. She gave up a promising music career - including training at the Julliard School of Music to help people.

Starnes said she gets the most enjoyment out of her job when she sees the expressions on the faces of students when she can help them.

"To see the look on the face of a student who left a ring in a restroom . . . and come to the station with really no hope that we have it (and we do) . . . you ought to see that look! It seems to say, 'Oh God, there are some honest people around,' "she says.

The main goal of Starnes job is to lower the crime rate at the University, a goal she takes seriously. The results of her work are evident in the monthly crime reports put monthly crime reports put out by the department. Com-parisons of previous crime rates show crime at the Uni-versity has fallen in the past Enthusiasm is the one trait necessary to keep people in-terested in preventing crime, she said, a trait Starnes tries to transfer to the people she works with on a daily basis.

"Once we get people en-thused in the program they work to get others enthused and crimes start to fall," she Getting as many people as possible involved in crime prevention and watching the crime rate fall at the University are Starnes' long-term objectives. But in the short term she has a single goal that's evident to everyone who steps into her office.

"There is one thing I must accomplish - to clean my desk," she said.

According to Bergerson, the savings and loan corpora-tion, owned by Commercial Credit Co., will continue operating from its remaining 90 offices which serve 300,000 customers.

Bergerson said customers are being notified of the clos-

USG pledges to support lobbying for concerns

For the first time, Undergraduate Student Government will be sending a full delegation to a meeting of the Ohio Student Association.

The meeting will be held this Saturday and Sunday at Cleveland State University. A full delegation for the University is six people.

sity is six people.

OSA represents students attending any state-funded institution of higher education, and Bowling Green is one of 12 member schools.

"Basically OSA advocates student rights on state campuses," said Todd Baker, copresident of OSA and a student at Kent State University.

"We want to see student views considered when deciviews considered when decisions are being made that affect them."

USG has long been a member of the student lobbying organization, but in recent years has been lax in its involvement, said Mike Mc-Greevey, USG president. This year, McGreevey has pledged USG support of OSA.

"In the past, students have been unaware of what has been going on with OSA," McGreevey said. "We want them to get more involved and take a stand on issues at hand."

BAKER SAID he is pleased with the renewed support from USG.

"Last year the Bowling Green student government was not as involved in OSA as it should have been," Baker said. "It is important that students have input so that Bowling Green views are taken into account."

"Through such programs as Action-Reaction, we will find out what issues our constituents feel they need further representation on,"

McGreevey said. OSA has been involved with

"Ohio is a low-tax state and state funding of higher educa-tion is a perennial problem," Baker said. "Because of this we have been extremely in-volved in lobbying against such things as Reagan's cuts in federal aid to students."

But OSA is a non-partisan organization, Baker said. "There has been support of education in both parties, and we have no desire to affiliate because we could alienate people who wanted to support us," Baker said. "We are working on behalf of the students, regardless of political party lines."

USG has put in a bid for the November OSA meeting to be held at the University.
"I think it would be a good opportunity for us to show strong Bowling Green participation with OSA," McGree-

Reporter on patrol in BG

Life of police seen differently from front seat

I arranged to ride in a Bowling Green police patrol car between 8 and 11 p.m. Friday and, though it wasn't as exciting as I expected, it was very interesting.

I reported to the police station at 7:50 p.m. dressed in my dark blue, partly sun-tinted-purple windbreaker. I was trying to look inconspicuous, but how inconspicuous can one look in a police car?

The dispatcher told me to take a seat and that the person I was scheduled to ride with, Patrolman Linda McCool, would arrive in a few minutes. Soon, a man in blue walked through the door and informed me I would be riding with him instead of McCool that evening. His name was Patrolman Steve Karpu-leon. Obviously he had drawn straws with McCool and lost. Before leaving the station, I signed a waiver form that absolved the city of Bowling Green from any responsibility if I should die - or get car sick - and we were off.

ON THE WAY out of the sta-tion, Karpuleon informed me that a prisoner who was being processed for stealing a car had escaped from the police department only 23 minutes before I had arrived. Trying to find the escapee, Ernest Hously, would be our first order of business.

We got in the police car – I was riding shotgun - and I told Karpuleon how uncomfortable I felt because I had never ridden in the front of a police car. His laughter helped to break the ice and we headed south on Main Karpuleon gave me a description of Hously.

"He was wearing a red and

We drove down the road, heading toward Route 6. When Karpuleon looked left, I looked right; and when he looked right, I looked left. We had the situation well in hand.

I asked Karpuleon if police undergo special training to in-crease their powers of observation. He gave an example of one of the training procedures.

"IN THE MIDDLE of class a man came in with a gun and started shooting up the instruc-tor. Then we all had to write a description of the gunman," he

"I guess you went through quite a few instructors," I said. We went east on Route 6, got We went east on Route 6, got off on I-75, and checked the rest stop for the south-bound lanes. As I suspected, Karpuleon said people act differently when he is in his police car than when he is in his own car.

"They'll get so nervous they'll blow a stop sign or something. If they would just relax they wouldn't make those mistakes,"

On the whole, however, he said he sees two to three times as many automobile violations in his personal car than in his police car.

I commented, "If you don't bust anybody else while I'm riding with you, bust somebody for traveling too close to another car - that's my pet peeve."

Karpuleon laughed. He said that one night he was driving borne from work and somebody.

home from work and somebody was tailgating him.

"So I went up to a stop sign and I was still in uniform," he said. "I got out of the car and walked back towards him. He didn't tailgate me anymore."

About this time we were patrolling the city parking lots behind stores on the west side of behind stores on the west side of Main Street, still keeping an eye out for Hously. Instead, we saw a college-age woman jumping up and down in the back of a pick-up. When she saw us, she calmly got out of the truck and got into a car that was next to the truck and prepared to drive away.

"MISS . . . Miss," Karpuleon said to the woman. She got out of her car and walked over to our car and Karpuleon gave her a short lecture on why she shouldn't mess around with other people's property.

She heartily agreed with his reasoning, and also said that the truck was owned by a friend of hers. He said, "OK, have a nice night." Then, as we were pulling away, he said, "I think she was a

'There are a lot of people who do a minor violation and you talk to them for a minute and I often think it's better than giving them a ticket because you don't think they'll do it again," he

After this incident, we headed north on Main Street, past Kroger's, and answered a call of a suspicious vehicle behind Ralph Thayer Chevrolet. It ended up that the car belonged to someone who works at the dealership, but an hour later someone re-ported over the radio that Hously had been picked up -you guessed it - at Ralph Thayer Chevrolet.

The vehicle had nothing to do with Hously, but it was an interesting coincidence.

Karpuleon said of the officer from whom Hously had escaped: "I probably won't let him forget it – a lot of people won't let him forget it."

We stopped and got some coffee.

"YOU GET to meet a lot of interesting people (as a police officer), and every once in awhile you get to meet somebody who appreciates what we do and that makes the job well worthwhile," he said.

After the short break, we patrolled Bowling Green for about another hour, then picked up the next officer that would go on duty. By the time we drove back to the police station, it was 11 p.m. and time for us to go our separate ways.

The typical routine of a police officer isn't as exciting as it may seem, but the potential for danger is there. It was an interesting experience and I'm glad I didn't get killed – or throw up.

The $8 million response to the recent Farm Aid concert in Champaign, Ill., illustrates the humanitarian response of Americans to farmers' troubles, but is only a small dent in the growing national farm debt, Chafin said. The money would be better spent educating the American public about what could happen if the scattered farm failures of today become widespread, he

Actor dies of AIDS at home

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Rock Hudson, whose brawny good looks made him one of Hollywood's most popular leading men before he was stricken with AIDS, died yesterday at his Bev-erly Hills home at the age of 59.

His illness had focused new worldwide attention on the in-curable disease. He died at 9 a.m., said his publicist, Dale Olson.

Hudson, who starred in 62 films before turning to television with such successful series as "McMillan and Wife," ended his acting career with a 10-episode guest stint on the prime-time soap opera "Dynasty."

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) – Cigarette smoking would be banned from most public rooms in the University of Maryland's 140 buildings under a proposal passed by the Campus Senate. A ban on pipe and cigar smoking was defeated in an amendment to the proposal adopted Monday by the 160-member body. Currently, smoking is allowed in most areas except classrooms and some parts of the libraries.

Public shouldn't be guinea pigs, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) – A Republican congressman, saying the general population should not be "guinea pigs" in the study of AIDS, is seeking support for proposals that include banning young victims from school and shutting down public bath houses. Rep. William Dannemeyer, R-Calif., has already picked up the backing of several colleagues for measures he says will protect Americans from the deadly disease.

Despite unanswered questions about AIDS, Dannemeyer told House colleagues in a letter circulated last week that the political and medical communities have avoided taking reasonable precautions "out of fear of discriminating against the unfortunate victims of this disease."

Corrales feels.
Corrales is having one of those days – only multiplied by 162.
His team was 43 games behind the first place Toronto Blue Jays with a 58-100 record entering last night's game against the Seattle Mariners Mariners.

Mariners.

Most managers hitting the century mark in losses would be lucky to gain the respect of a bunch of 6-year olds in a T-ball league. But we're not talking about an ordinary team, we're talking about the Cleveland Indians.

THE TRIBE management, led by President Peter Bavasi, signed Corrales to a "perpetual contract" including a pay increase. This is not a lifetime contract, but a "perpetual contract."

Perpetual is defined by Webster's New World Dictionary as "lasting forever or for a long time." No one knows about the word forever more than an Indians fan. It has been at least that long since the Tribe has been involved in a pennant race.

The people of Cleveland wonder how much longer they have to wait.

The Tribe skipper is not going to promise a pennant in five years as Sparky Anderson did with the Detroit Tigers, for Corrales is not an Anderson or Billy Martin. But the move will help the future of the dismal

The Indians, going through another rebuilding stage, desperately need stability to bring them from the gallows of the American League East. With a new front office hired before the 1985 season, the manager was the next position to be secured.

Corrales, hired in the middle of the 1983 season, has compiled a 162-219 record during his tenure. A .425 winning percentage in one year is never going to turn heads, let alone a sub .500 percentage after two and a half seasons.

BUT CORRALES cannot be blamed for the mistakes of the previous front offices. Gabe Paul and Phil Seghi left the tepee in 1984 after diminishing the Indians talent to that of a minor league team.

Power and pitching, the essential elements of any contender, have been non-existant during Corrales' span. This year the Tribe has hit rock bottom with league lows of 110 home runs and a 4.94 ERA. The annual excuse of injuries is present, but any manager would be left helpless if his two See Sideline on page 9

The Tribe, even though 42 games under .500, have not games under .500, have not given up entering the final weeks of the season. Cleveland has scored six or more runs several times in the last month against playoff contenders, nonetheless.

The city of Cleveland could get a "perpetual" boost if Corrales gets the Tribe on the warpath.
