Death ruled suicide

Man kills wife, friend first

by Don Lee wire editor

The manager of the Bowling Green Sterling Food Store shot and killed his wife and her friend, and wounded one of his two adopted daughters, before taking his own life Wednesday evening, city police said yesterday.

Police Chief Galen Ash said James Reeder, 47, of 702 Wallace Ave., shot his wife, Kay Reeder, 35, twice and her friend Laurel Keller, 35, 611 Springhill Drive, three times with a .45-caliber automatic pistol. The incident occurred at about 6:40 p.m. in the living room of Reeder's home at 702 Wallace Ave.

According to police, Reeder then shot himself twice and shot his daughter, Ginger, 15, in the hip as she came down the stairs after hearing the shots.

Police said Reeder then went into the kitchen and shot himself in the head.

Dr. Roger Peatee, Wood County coroner, ruled Kay Reeder's and Keller's deaths each a homicide, and James Reeder's death a suicide. All three were pronounced dead at the scene, Peatee said.

Ginger Reeder was listed in stable, but guarded, condition yesterday at Wood County Hospital, a nursing supervisor said.

The other daughter, Marilyn, 18, who police said was coming downstairs with her sister when she was shot, was not injured.

INVESTIGATORS from the police department, the county prosecutor's office and the Ohio Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation were at the scene Wednesday night, and continued their investigation yesterday.

According to records in Wood County Common Pleas Court, Kay Reeder had filed for divorce Jan. 14, charging Reeder with extreme cruelty and gross neglect of duty.

Her address was given in court records as 851 Napoleon Road, Apt. 45.

The Reeders had been married for eight and a half years. Marilyn and Ginger, whom Reeder adopted shortly after their marriage, were her daughters by a previous marriage. She worked as a nurse at St. Luke's Hospital, Maumee.

Police continue their investigation into the Jan. 6 murder of University junior Karen Sue Hirschman, 22, who was found stabbed to death in the living room of her apartment at 818 Second St. Ash said BCI is still conducting tests on the two vanloads of evidence taken from the apartment.

Some of the testing procedures take up to five days, Ash said, adding that the police department is "very comfortable" with the pace of the investigation.

Funding cut for 1987-88

Increase in fees anticipated

by Mike Amburgey
staff reporter

The Ohio Board of Regents has reduced the University's instructional subsidy allocation for 1987-88 by $1.9 million, and unless alterations are made in Governor Celeste's proposed budget, University students could face at least a 25 percent instructional fee increase, according to Chris Dalton, assistant vice president of planning and budgeting.

"The $1.9 million reduction is based on a formula model devised by the Board of Regents," Dalton said. "It takes into account the number of students enrolled along with the mix of classes students are taking."

Dalton said since the instructional subsidy has been reduced, the board has arrived at a projected fee increase for students.

"This is a hypothetical model and it's unthinkable that fees would go up by 25 percent," he said.

THIS YEAR'S instructional subsidy amounts to approximately $50.9 million, while the projected cut would bring that amount down to $48.9 million for 1987-88.

"The University gets money from two main sources: state subsidies and student fees. Therefore, it projects a need for fee increases," Dalton said.

The board submitted a proposal to the governor's office for funding for higher education that was substantially trimmed, Dalton said.

The University is not alone in facing subsidy cuts, Dalton said. Other state universities either went up or down on the Board of Regents' subsidy models, he said. Dalton said the proposed budget calls for $992 million statewide in educational subsidies for 1987-88, the same amount funded for this year. A 4.7 percent increase is called for in the academic year 1988-89.

DALTON SAID given inflationary factors, the governor's budget puts state universities in a difficult place.

Matthew Filipic, director of budgets and planning for the Ohio Board of Regents, said the budget would mean more of the cost of education would be borne by the student.

"The state picks up two-thirds of the cost of education (at state colleges) and the student pays one-third of the cost," Filipic said. "Now the student would have to pay for a larger share." He said he didn't have any dollar amounts of any increased cost on the students' part, saying it would vary from campus to campus.

Filipic said universities' budgets increase every year, and the allotments for higher education in the state budget don't accommodate these increases.

"IF YOU have a 5 percent campus budget increase, which is not uncommon given salary increases and inflation, this would translate into a 15 percent increase in student fees," Filipic said.

He said boards of trustees are reluctant to make such increases, but at the same time the boards are committed to excellent education. "These two goals are in conflict. You will have an increase in student fees," Filipic said.

Philip Mason, executive assistant to President Olscamp, said

Campus lights given priority

But extra-funds request too late

Editor's note: this is the second of a two-part series concerning lighting at the University.

by Beth Thomas
staff reporter

Walking alone at night is often avoidable by calling the campus Escort Service, walking with a friend or planning not to go out. But what about the times when being alone is unavoidable?

The Escort Service is not always open, friends are not always available and some trips absolutely have to be made. Having to walk alone at night through dark parts of campus can be a scary experience for University students and faculty members.

Karl Vogt

Do these people have a right to a better lit and therefore safer campus environment where they won't be afraid, or is the campus sufficiently lit now?

These questions are the basis of two requests that have been made to the University for increased funding.

Keith Pogan, associate director of plant operations and maintenance, has requested funds so he can hire another electrician to fix broken lights and replace burned-out bulbs.

He has asked for the money because he has only one electrician working on lighting now, and about 15 lights go out daily.

A request has also been made for additional funding for the actual lights and equipment by the offices of Public Safety and Plant Operations and Maintenance.

KARL VOGT, vice president of operations, said that while lighting is a top priority for the

Israel continues air raids

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Israeli jets attacked a Palestinian camp near the southern port of Sidon yesterday, and Shiite Moslem militiamen battled Palestinian guerrillas at refugee camps in Beirut and in the south.

In Damascus, officials haggled over how to get food into refugee camps that have been cut off for three months.

Police said two people were killed and nine wounded in the Shiite attacks on Palestinian camps in Beirut and near Tyre in south Lebanon.

A dozen Israeli fighter-bombers bombed two buildings used by the mainstream Fatah guerrilla faction near the ancient southern port of Sidon, police reported. Fatah is led by Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Casualties from the Israeli bombing at dawn on the outskirts of the Mieh Mieh camp were given as one civilian killed and three people wounded, including two guerrillas.

There is no known coordination between the Israelis and the Shiite militia Amal, which is attacking the Palestinians on the ground, but they have the common aim of keeping the PLO from regaining the Lebanese base it lost in Israel's 1982 invasion.

IN WEST Beirut, a prominent pro-Syrian Christian politician, Jean Obeid, 50, was abducted yesterday. Police said gunmen in a white BMW intercepted his chauffeur-driven limousine on the seafont Raouche boulevard, fired at the occupants and dragged him out.

Police would not speculate on reasons for the abduction of Obeid, a former adviser to President Amin Gemayel on Syrian affairs.

Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon, has 25,000 troops in east and north Lebanon.

The bombing raid near Sidon was the fifth Israeli air strike on Palestinian targets in Lebanon this year.

Shiite militiamen have surrounded the Beirut camps and the Rashidiyeh camp at Tyre in the south throughout the battle, cutting them off from supplies of food and medicine to replenish dwindling stockpiles. For years the camps have maintained stores of arms and food, often in underground bunkers and tunnels, to see them through times of siege.

Fighting flared at the camps despite a ceasefire arranged by Syria under which the Palestinians would withdraw from Amal territory they captured when they broke out of camps near Sidon in November. Syria supports Amal and anti-Arafat Palestinian factions.

IN RETURN, Amal was to lift its siege of the three refugee camps so food and medicine could get in.

The truce agreement was reached Tuesday after reports that the besieged camps were running out of food and inhabitants were eating dogs, cats and rats. No first-hand reports on life in the camps are available because reporters cannot get through the Amal lines.

The Palestine Red Crescent, similar to the Red Cross, says food and medicine also are scares in Chatilla. It reported an "alarming increase" in typhoid, skin and intestinal infection in the camps and called for "an end to the genocide."

Safety on campus is shared responsibility

The University has always shown concern for the safety of students on campus.

However, a threat to student safety exists on this campus that must be addressed promptly by the administration: insufficient lighting.

Public Safety Director Bill Bess has cited a lack of lighting near the Centrex building, the Business Administration building and South Hall.

Compounding the problem of lack of lighting in some areas is the need for maintenance of existing lighting. Keith Pogan, associate director of plant operations and maintenance, said he has one electrician to work on the estimated 15 lights that need repair daily.

We realize the University is doing as much as it can under the current budget, but perhaps the question should be raised why money to pay for additional staff and materials wasn't requested sooner.

Campus police records show there were 19 reported assaults from Aug. 19, 1986 through Jan. 31, 1987. Yet November was the deadline for requesting an additional electrician.

But in addition to lighting, students must act responsibly. Existing lampposts require $1,100 worth of renovation before they can accommodate more efficient and brighter sodium lamps.

Divestment won't help S. Africa

by Chris Kennedy

The fight against apartheid is an admirable cause and worthy of attention. The divestment movement's interests are well-intended, but the course they seek will not resolve the problems facing blacks in South Africa.

In seeking quick political freedom for South African blacks, the movement is neglecting the complexity of the issue. Divestment will not serve as a means to an end; it will only further increase discrimination.

The primary result of divestment will be white South African firms buying out American corporations. In all likelihood, this will result in employment practices even more discriminatory toward blacks.

Since the limited steps toward equality have occurred largely through American corporations, it would be unwise to destroy the only positive force acting in the country. Divestment does just this.

Even if blacks gain immediate full political representation, the results for the economy of the country would be adverse. The black majority in South Africa is a class largely consisting of less-educated, low-wage workers with little or no managerial representation.

The results of their assuming a leading role in government would be economically deleterious since they are not prepared to administer the highly-complex economy of South Africa.

If they follow the path of Zimbabwe, we can expect nationalization of other socialist projects which would stifle economic growth. The South African economy, which is at present a marginal first-world economy, would quickly decline to third-world status.

Therefore we should not seek an immediate and complete change, but instead emphasize a longer term and more stable evolutionary process. It will be a slow process but it is in the best interest of all concerned.

American companies should maintain their interests in South Africa. They can serve as a catalyst to foster the creation of a black middle class through fair employment practices, including managerial representation.

Since political power often follows economic power, the creation of a black middle class would also be the creation of a new political class.

This economical approach will be a slow but orderly transition to political freedom, but we must not relent in our pressure on the South African government for full political equality.

Profit: worth all other costs?

by Richard L. Moore

The other day I began to think about the shanty which sits in the middle of the circle in front of the Union. I had forgotten about it. The shanty arose out of a wave of interest in Bowling Green's investment in the South African government.

The shanty, I assume, is supposed to symbolize the harshness of life in South Africa for the blacks in that country, and the reason for divestment. I believe the problem lies in the marketing of the issue.

If we look at the issue from a strictly conservative standpoint, a whole new light is shed on the Dark Continent. By conservative, I am speaking of those of us who remain true to the basic values upon which this country was built: the love for freedom and democracy which our president is using as the foundation to build his "New America."

I admit I am not aware of the exact figures on how many black South Africans work for which American companies, and I really don't think that is the issue. The issue is whether or not these "American" companies would be at the same advantageous position if the system in South Africa allowed all people those same unalienable rights that they receive in our country. I think you will see that the only reason that these "American" firms are in South Africa is that they reap the benefits of a cheap foreign labor force.

The reason these "American" companies are in South Africa is not that they feel their presence will help the black South African - their reasoning is purely economic. The Constitution in this country does not allow for exploitation of anyone, and these companies must take their business elsewhere because our Constitution stands in their way of making a buck.

these companies will go to raise their profits - selling government secrets, sending computers to the Ruskies. How far will they go?

The fact that these companies are in South Africa raises two other important questions. (1) How many jobs have they taken from the American worker? (2) If these companies are manufacturing and selling these goods in South Africa, does this not add to our already enormous trade deficit, or at least not help to lessen it?

I am not an economist, but it seems only logical that if an American factory is over there it cannot create jobs over here. These companies deny everything that this country stands for - freedom, justice and equality to name a few - in order to increase their bottom line.

On the second question, it again seems only logical that if American goods are being manufactured and sold in South Africa, they are no longer exports, as they would be if they were manufactured here at home.

As a business student I can see why a lot of people have trouble dealing with the simple fact that it's morally wrong to be in South Africa. After all, morality and business don't mix, right?

As a citizen, however, I have to question the economic effect that this has on our country. When these so-called "American" firms invest in South Africa they are in fact divesting from the good ol' U.S. of A.

By taking away American jobs and helping to support an overwhelming trade deficit, these villains of democracy are only helping to weaken America's position as leader in the world economy.

UWC serves all

As an undergraduate who has received tutoring at the University Writing Center in a field outside of English 110, 111 or 112, I was quite disturbed to read your article about the Writing Center's "revamping" (Feb. 12).

First of all, it is my understanding that the University Writing Center is geared toward writing assistance in all academic areas. And, even though Dr. Morgan stated that "no one will be turned away (in other disciplines)," I cannot help but feel that "until we figure out a way around it" is behind that statement.

Second, if Dr. Morgan is simply bringing the Writing Center in line with the other laboratories on campus, why is Dr. Verne Cain losing her job on June 30? This makes no sense, considering the fact that the other labs on campus have directors.

Third, I find it appalling that Dr. Morgan and her superiors have taken it upon themselves to act in the best interest of BGSU students and faculty to "revamp" the Writing Center to cater to English 110/111/112 students. What she (and the "others") failed to realize is that those of us who came to the Writing Center did so because it was University-wide.

Finally, the "University" in University Writing Center is not redundant, as Dr. Morgan stated. For those of us who have survived General Studies Writing, it is a descriptive title which makes us feel comfortable utilizing the services of the center's tutoring - in all areas of academic writing.

Ad Club defended

I was disappointed to read Susan Darrow's unfair attack of Feb. 11 on the Advertising Club. The organization does not, as Ms. Darrow implied, support the Ku Klux Klan or neo-Nazis. In fact, one "terror" of the Third Reich that we would oppose was its tendency to accuse, try and convict without gathering all available evidence or giving the accused the right to be heard before trial and conviction. We feel that Ms. Darrow did just that to us.

The "collectibles" sale was sponsored by the Ad Club as a fund-raiser. We publicized it for the company which brought it in, in exchange for a percentage of proceeds. We were told the collectibles were authentic movie posters and political buttons. Thousands of items were offered for sale.

As their adviser, I am proud of these 90 young people and their accomplishments which have brought recognition to BGSU. The organization is primarily directed toward career development and public service. (In fact, our next speaker, the director of the BBB's Children's Advertising Review Unit in NYC, will be addressing an important ethical issue from the consumer's viewpoint.)

agency. We are not a political organization.

As a citizen, I agree with Ms. Darrow's views that a casual view of "Hitler, white supremacy, genocide and hatred" as mere historical artifacts is "dangerous." As a faculty member, I am disappointed that a member of the administration would attack rather than support students who generally make a constructive contribution to the campus.

Writer selfish

David Thoreen should be pumping gas instead of teaching. He'd be performing a contribution to society more valuable than wasting students' money and time.

Thoreen is a teacher who doesn't want to teach. As a student at Bowling Green State University, I am frightened by this attitude. I am sure that there are other graduate students who would have been overjoyed to teach his Craft of Fiction class. Did he trick the University English department into thinking that he could benefit his students by teaching a class in which he has no interest?

I can't help but think that David Thoreen is a classic example of a bad teacher. His attitude reflects anger and frustration as a writer. However, his attitude is so pervasive he can't help but turn his frustrations to innocent students.

A student pays for a teacher who is excited to teach, not one who is arrogant and self-serving. If I spend $300 to take a creative writing course, I'd rather not take it from an immature "serious" writer with an attitude problem.

Mr. Thoreen must think his intellect is huge: "the larger the audience, the smaller the intellect," he says. An intriguing theory which handily explains his publishing failures to his own egotistical mind.

John Steinbeck, William Styron, and J.R.R. Tolkien all have wide audiences. Good writers work hard at their craft to, among other things, become recognized by prospective editors. Thoreen's "starving artist" attitude is old and dull. How much longer will he use it as an excuse for being a poor and defeated writer? Teaching is certainly not the answer.

Protesters criticize Latta

by Mizell Stewart III
managing editor

Members of several area activist groups staged a demonstration yesterday in front of the Federal Building in Bowling Green to protest Rep. Delbert Latta's support of President Reagan's administration policies in Central America.

The participants charged that Latta, R-Bowling Green, supported the president by advocating increased military aid to the contra rebels in Nicaragua. Latta's local office is inside the Federal Building.

Dan Koppel, junior physics major and co-president of the Social Justice Committee, said the Reagan administration supports terrorism.

"I believe they're doing things in the wrong way," he said. "If the people in Central America want to run their own government in their own way, they should

Bowling Green resident Elizabeth Schuster organized the protest, with assistance from members of the Toledo Area Committee on Central America and the 5th District Committee on Central America. Students from several campus activist groups also participated.

ANOTHER CONCERN of the protesters was the so-called "Montgomery Amendment," which allows the president to deploy military troops, including state national guardsmen, at will for training exercises. National Guard members may be sent on exercises without the consent of state governors.

Nora Dandar, of Tiffin, said she was concerned because she has a son in the National Guard.

"I don't want my son to go down to Central America - it's not Reagan's privilege to tell others how to run their countries," she said. "It makes me mad . . . and Latta votes with Reagan all the way down the line."

Marcia Bedard, assistant professor of sociology at the University, said funds being used to support the rebels could be better utilized here at home.

"We've sent hundreds of millions of dollars down there in military aid but there are hungry and homeless people in this country that could use that money," she said. "Funds being spent there can help get our own people on track."

Latta was out of town and the only person working in Latta's office yesterday was an office employee. Despite this, Bedard said she believed the protest was successful.

"Whenever people show they're concerned, I think it means something," she said.

A Latta representative reached by phone yesterday had no comment.

Budget

he is concerned about possible fee hikes at the University, but does not expect increases of 25 percent or more.

"I can't envision the president and trustees moving in that direction," Mason said.

Mason said he and President Olscamp will be spending a lot of time in Columbus trying to influence legislators to work out a solution to regain the lost instructional subsidy.

State Representative Randall Gardner, R-Bowling Green, said he is concerned about the proposed budget and the problems it poses for University students.

"I'M CONCERNED that education isn't receiving priority at the same time other departments within the budget are seeing increases," Gardner said.

The Ohio General Assembly is scheduled to meet the first week of April in Columbus to hold hearings on the budget, Gardner said. He said a number of other legislators don't agree with the proposed budget.

Lighting

University, the requests, made in January, were too late for the 1987-88 budget.

He said the salary for an electrician would be about $17,000 and the requested materials would cost about $44,100.

He said the request specifically asks that the electrician be hired before the materials are purchased.

"I don't know where we're going to get the monies to accommodate it," Vogt said.

He said the funds might be provided by redistributing some funds within the department, but the money definitely will be provided in next year's budget because it is an important problem.

Sherry Gibson, senior French and Russian major, locks the doors at University Hall. BG News/Pete Fellman

Program revived

Student campus security officers assist police

by Jared O. Wadley
staff reporter

Many of the 113 burglaries reported to the campus police within the last six months were the result of students not locking their rooms, according to Bill Bess, director of public safety.

But for several students, not locking doors could make University buildings susceptible to burglary or vandalism. These students are helping campus police with some of their duties at night.

These campus security officers lock buildings and assist Public Safety officers so that they have time to patrol and take care of other business.

Ralph Bratt, investigations and security services lieutenant, said the CSO program started in November after it was discontinued five years ago due to lack of funds.

Sherry Gibson, senior French and Russian major and one of two women working as CSOs, said Public Safety worked hard to revive the program because it helped officers with some of their duties.

Roger Swope, a corporal in investigations and security services, said the students work three hours every day, patrolling the campus with radios. Two groups of two walk around campus locking buildings and patrolling the area.

Gibson said the students never walk alone. If a CSO is absent, his partner works with the other group. To avoid confrontations, she said they are discouraged from following a pattern when they lock buildings.

"It's something different because it's not repetitious," Taylor said. "It's better than working in a cafeteria or in the library because there you do the same thing day in and day out."

Gibson said she thought it would be interesting to be a CSO. She said she wanted to make more money, so she applied once she saw the job posted in the Office of Student Employment.

"I feel like I'm doing something worthwhile - that's what I like most about the job," Gibson said. "Also, you have to be trustworthy because you have access to many offices. We are the eyes and ears of the department, but we are not spies."

SWOPE AND BRATT meet with the CSOs frequently so that they can discuss any problems or comments. Gibson said the CSOs receive many compliments about their work, especially from other officers.

She also said CSOs may open buildings if the program receives more funding. Gibson said CSOs have done other work besides locking buildings.

They patrol parking lots for cars that have been vandalized. Also, CSOs assist officers if they need help. They are told to call officers if necessary.

Gibson said if CSOs see someone breaking into a car or building, they must report it immediately because they should not get into any confrontations.

Some CSOs, including Gibson, helped with the security during Vice President George Bush's visit in October. She said she watched one of the University Union doors to make sure unauthorized people did not enter.

She said this prevents confrontations because if people don't know their schedule, they won't try to take the CSOs' keys or try to jump the students.

BEFORE LOCKING a building, CSOs shut off lights, check for hazards such as leaking pipes or open windows and ask people to leave the premises.

"They are saving the University money by locking windows and turning the lights out," Bratt said. "They are very conscientious, and they do a good job."

"In the future, we will be fortunate to have another group like the ones we have now," he added. "We couldn't be happier and hope it continues."

Stephen Taylor, sophomore social justice and criminal justice major and a CSO, said he was interested in the job because it appeared adventurous and it would help Public Safety officers.

Students aided with job search

by Maria Kromer
staff reporter

Every major does not automatically turn into a corresponding job position, and the placement office is available to help students find employment opportunities, according to JoAnn Kroll, director of the office.

JoAnn Kroll

"It's incumbent upon students deciding where they want to go and having an idea of the kind of work they want to do," Kroll said. "We help identify job prospects, facilitate contacts between students and employers and assist during the evaluation."

For most careers, there is not a direct one-to-one correlation to what one studies in school and one's job title, according to Kroll. Job openings are in broader career fields, and students can apply their expertise to jobs not directly labeled as their major, she said.

As an example, Kroll said a person majoring in romance languages could possibly find a job position within a business, and the placement office can help direct the student to the opening.

Students who register with the placement office go through a number of workshops and seminars that help them obtain the skills, competence and attitude to compete successfully in the job-search process, as well as provide interview skills, Kroll said.

Students can go through the workshops before interviewing or simply interview without it, but those who do go through the seminars receive first choice in signing up for interviews, she said.

Kroll recommends everyone use all the services available however, for within the program a student creates a credential file which can be mailed directly to potential employers who don't have formal recruitment programs on campus.

The on-campus interview is the most visible and easiest way to get a job, Kroll said, but jobs are not always found through one-to-one interviews. Referrals have been made beyond the on-campus interviews, she said.

Group researching fee usage

by LeWonnice Belcher

What is starting out as a class project may end up saving students a lot of money on their bursar bills, said one member of a group called "BG Vice."

Christine Loisel, a junior interpersonal and public communications major, said the group of concerned students was formed as a result of a class project in IPCO 203: "Small Group Communications." The group will try to determine how much of a yearly profit the University is making from student expenses.

Instructor Edith Churchman told the students to form their own groups, find a problem that exists in the Bowling Green community or on the University campus and come up with recommendations on how to solve the problem.

The group decided to focus its concentration on the parking fees, meal coupon book prices, textbooks, drop-add fees and group billing.

Loiselle said when the members of her group got together to try to come up with a problem, "...everyone in the group complained about the prices of things on campus, so we decided to do something about it."

Loiselle believes that a lack of a major response is due to student apathy and not enough information. She cited the student legal fee as an example.

"Two dollars doesn't sound like much, but $2 multiplied by 16,000 students really adds up," Loiselle said. "Most students don't know they really don't have to pay that (the legal service) fee."

The members of the group will also be contacting University officials to get their input on the situation.

Loiselle said she has received some responses from students, but not as many as she expected. She said most of the students surveyed are more apt to respond when asked directly about the situation.

She said those students who responded believe the University is using the money inappropriately. Instead of statues and various paraphernalia, she said the students want more parking lots and better funding for groups like the Escort Service.

Loiselle believes that a lack of a major response is due to student apathy and not enough information. She cited the student legal fee as an example.

"Two dollars doesn't sound like much, but $2 multiplied by 16,000 students really adds up," Loiselle said. "Most students don't know they really don't have to pay that (the legal service) fee."

The members of the group will also be contacting University officials to get their input on the situation.

Loiselle said she believes when students do learn where their money is going and how much the school is profiting, they will then want to respond to the problem.

"At the end of our survey we have to come up with a recommendation for solving the problem," she said. "If the response is large enough, we will go to the University officials. If the students aren't happy with the results of the surveys, we will try to do something about it and help the people."

Students can contact the group at OCMB 6270 to discuss their feelings about the money circulation.

"People reacting to a problem is what really provokes a response and a solution," Loiselle said.

Marines transfer embassy guards

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Marine Corps has recalled at least five of its U.S. Embassy guards in Moscow in the two months since another guard was charged with spying for the Soviets, Pentagon sources said yesterday.

The transfers do not involve allegations of espionage, but rather charges that certain military "good conduct" regulations were violated, officials said.

One source, who demanded anonymity, said the recalls had been prompted by allegations that some of the guards had allowed an unauthorized visitor into their barracks.

That report could not be immediately confirmed.

The sources were also unable to say precisely how many Marines had been transferred, putting the number at between five and eight.

The sources said the Marines had been transferred to the Quantico Marine Base in northern Virginia pending completion of an "administrative inquiry" that bore no relation to the probe of Sgt. Clayton Lonetree, the former Marine guard who is now being held at Quantico on espionage charges.

"THE MARINES are looking into some violations of military regulations," said one official. "No charges have been filed against anyone yet and nobody is being confined to quarters."

Robert Sims, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, declined to discuss the transfers yesterday or say how many men had been moved. But he said none of the moves involved spy allegations.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur Hartman, in an interview with The Washington Post, said the investigation of Lonetree "had revealed that other things were happening."

Agents beat Moscow protesters

MOSCOW (AP) - Security agents beat protesters and used snowplows to drive them off a Moscow street yesterday, the fourth day of rallies seeking the release of Jewish activist Josef Begun.

Police briefly detained 14 people, including Begun's wife and son.

The agents, who wore civilian clothes, also roughed up Western reporters and television crews covering the protest, which drew about 20 people at Moscow's Arbat shopping mall.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov later told reporters that young toughs, not security agents, were responsible for breaking up the protest.

However, it was clear at the scene that the plainclothesmen were not teen-age vigilantes. They were well-organized and were backed by uniformed police and snowplows.

All of those detained - seven at the protest site and six on their way there - were released after a few hours. Six were fined $77 for "petty hooliganism." Police also briefly detained a Western correspondent.

THE PROTESTERS, many of them Jews, had been gathering daily at the Arbat mall since Monday. They demand to be allowed to emigrate and call for the release of Begun, a Hebrew teacher who was sentenced in October 1983 to seven years in prison for "anti-Soviet agitation and propaganda."

Authorities did not interfere with the demonstrations on Monday and Tuesday, but on Wednesday plainclothes agents shoved the protesters off Arbat Square.

Yesterday, the demonstrators lined up along one side of the brick-paved mall which runs through one of Moscow's oldest districts. Within minutes, they were surrounded by about 50 plainclothesmen.

A small snowplow began circling the demonstrators, forcing them to move back and forth across the mall.

Reagan to keep consulting allies on SDI

WASHINGTON (AP) - The State Department differed yesterday with U.S. arms control director Kenneth Adelman on the need to consult the Western European allies about the "Star Wars" missile-defense program and on a major arms treaty with the Soviet Union.

Appearing before an American Legion group, Adelman said he doubted the allies "have any qualifications" to interpret the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty and they had already

"let us know why they don't like the broad interpretation."

But the State Department said "we fully intend to continue to consult closely with the allies on ABM treaty issues, as well as other subjects related to SDI (the Strategic Defense Initiative, the formal name of the Star Wars program)."

Phyllis Oakley, the department's deputy spokesman, stressed she was stating "the policy of the U.S. government on this issue."

She said the Reagan administration had made "a serious commitment to consult" before any steps are taken on Star Wars research that might affect the allies. Secretary of State George Shultz had made that point clear, she added.

THE U.S. SEARCH for a defense against missiles has sparked controversy in Congress, Western Europe and the Soviet Union. Critics assert that testing or deployment could be in conflict with the 1972 treaty.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and some of his senior advisers are pushing for a broad interpretation of the agreement to clear the way for new experiments with Star War technology.

Shultz told a House appropriations subcommittee Wednesday that the administration was studying "a large and difficult record" on the ABM treaty and would make its interpretation available to Congress.

Extended Medicare coverage proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan proposed yesterday that Congress protect 30 million elderly Americans "from the worst fear of old age" by enacting insurance covering the devastating costs of catastrophic illness.

Overruling conservative opposition, Reagan recommended that the government cover all hospital and doctor expenses under Medicare after a patient had paid $2,000 out of his own pocket. The extra coverage would add $4.92 a month - $59 annually - to Medicare recipients' $17.90 monthly "Part B" premium.

The program, the result of more than a year's debate within the administration, would not cover long-term nursing home care or expenses such as prescription drugs and eye or dental care.

Reagan's announcement provided momentum for an issue that already has widespread backing in Capitol Hill.

"I think there is a very good chance of legislation," said

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater. "There will be a lively debate but I expect legislation to pass, and I think the Reagan plan will be the basis for that legislation."

SEN. DAVID Durenberger, R-Minn., the ranking Republican on the Senate Finance Committee's health subcommittee, said, "This is by far a better way for people to protect themselves from catastrophic expenses. . . . The most serious criticism that can be offered of this proposal is that it is far too little."

Led by Attorney General Edwin Meese and the budget director, James Miller, conservatives had fought against the plan as it was being developed, arguing that it relied too much on the government and not enough on the health industry.

"The proposal I'm announcing today is a giant step forward in helping those who before now would have had to make a choice between financial ruin and death," Reagan said in a speech to junior high school students.

News Digest

COTA takes ruling to court

COLUMBUS (AP) - The Central Ohio Transit Authority yesterday asked a judge to disregard a state labor board's ruling and extend a back-to-work order against striking bus drivers and mechanics that was to expire at midnight.

Franklin County Common Pleas Judge Frederick Williams was expected to issue his decision at a hearing last night.

Mich. pesticide suit settled

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (AP) - Five migrant farm workers who said they were sprayed by pesticide while working in a field have agreed to a $20,000 settlement with a crop-dusting operation.

Rajshekar Muruliah, head of Byron Ag Aviation in Byron Township, agreed to pay the money to be shared by Maria and Eloy Martinez and Letticia, Anabella and Alicia Amara, according to an agreement filed Wednesday in U.S. District Court.

In a lawsuit filed last year, the workers said they were planting celery on a farm near Jenison in June 1985 when they came in contact with pesticide being sprayed from a helicopter flown by Maruliah.

The lawsuit alleged the helicopter sprayed them again less than a half-hour later, and contended the workers were visible to the pilot.

State examiner arrested

MANSFIELD (AP) - Less than three hours before local Democrats met to choose a new director for the city's scandal-ridden Finance Department, police arrested the leading candidate on charges of aggravated arson and theft by deception.

Richland County Prosecutor John Allen, who approved the charges against Debra Fenton, acknowledged that the investigation had been speeded up when it appeared she would be the Democrats' likely choice to replace L. Norman Walker.

Walker resigned Jan. 30 after pleading guilty to two counts of theft in office.

Fenton, 33, is accused of hiring an unidentified man to set fire in January 1984 to a Mansfield duplex she owned. Fenton also faces a charge of theft by deception in connection with an $11,900 check she cashed from the company that insured the duplex.

Stokes eyeing mayoral post

CLEVELAND (AP) - Former Mayor Carl Stokes said yesterday he will run for that office again in two years unless the current administration improves or other promising Democratic candidates come forward.

Now a municipal judge, Stokes, 59, was the first black mayor of a major American city when he became Cleveland mayor in 1967.

"Unless there are changes in the two conditions I outline,

I will run. I don't anticipate any changes, but we are dealing with human events," he said.

BG chases WMU and CCHA title

by Tom Skernivitz
sports reporter

For a hockey team with a 27-5-2 record, a national ranking and a home-ice berth in the first round of conference playoffs, the word 'regroup' might seem a bit unorthodox.

But according to Bowling Green's 'word-of-the-day' list taped to its locker room wall, 'regroup' is exactly what the squad has decided it must do after last week's series against Michigan State.

The Falcons enter this weekend's series against Western Michigan minus several positive attributes they possessed before the Spartans defeated and tied BG last week.

GONE FROM the Falcons is their Central Collegiate Hockey Association first-place slot, a 16-game winning streak and the confident spirit which they hope to regain tonight in Kalamazoo, Mich.

"We feel we skated our best game of the season (last) Saturday night, but Michigan State also skated a great game," BG coach Jerry York said. "Now we have four tough games left and we're going to have to keep skating well and try to regain first place."

THE BRONCOS should live up to York's billing as a 'tough game.'

WMU's 14-14 CCHA mark puts them in fifth place - one point away from fourth place Illinois-Chicago and a home-ice berth in the playoffs.

The Broncos' incentive to overtake the Flames combined with their billing as last season's CCHA playoff champions should make the series more than just a prep for the upcoming post-season games in two weeks.

Several individual battles should add further interest to the series which BG leads this season 2-0.

Broncos' defenseman Wayne Gagne leads the CCHA in scoring with 74 points on 11 goals and a whopping 63 assists. Gagne needs only three points to surpass the mark for most career points by a NCAA Division West defenseman. The senior currently owns 226 points (40-186).

Gagne is not alone when it comes to lighting up the scoreboard, though.

BG's Paul Ysebaert remains in the hunt for the CCHA scoring title along with Michigan State's Mitch Messier. With 68 points, the Falcons' junior center ranks third in scoring behind only Gagne and Messier (71 points).

The CCHA's most prominent freshman also meet face-to-face this weekend. When the votes for the league's Rookie-of-the-year are counted, the names of WMU's Paul Polillo and BG's Nelson Emerson should appear most often.

Polillo has the edge on this season's highly-touted group of freshman. The center leads all rookies with 59 points on 16 goals and 43 assists. He is also eighth

Ray Knight reaches agreement with Orioles

BALTIMORE (AP) - Ray Knight wanted a chance to play regularly and to feel needed. He got both, but paid a price to get them.

Knight, who rejected an $800,000 offer from the New York Mets after being named the Most Valuable Player in the 1986 World Series, accepted a $475,000 pact Wednesday for a one-year contract with the Baltimore Orioles.

By reaching various incentive goals, the 34-year-old third baseman could come close to matching the $645,000 he made last season, and add an option year.

Knight started his postseason negotiations with the Mets by seeking a two-year guarantee of $2 million. He later scaled down his demands to $850,000 a year, but the Mets balked and then declined to offer him salary arbitration.

Knight, who now becomes the first World Series MVP not to return to his team the following season, thought he could recoup on the free agent market. To his dismay, the offers were few and the deal from the Orioles was the best available.

Baltimore General Manager Hank Peters said he pointed out to Knight during their negotiations that, at least in the American League, no other clubs were in need of a third baseman.

"He was a perfect match for us, and we were a perfect match for him," Peters said.

"The incentives are very fair," Knight said Wednesday night in Springfield, Mo., where he was attending a sports banquet. "And, although it's not as much money, it's seemingly a more solid situation. I'll play everyday, and really, that's all I had hoped for."

The Mets had indicated that Howard Johnson and rookie Dave Magadan probably would share most of the playing time at third base in 1987, dimming Knight's chances for extensive action.

He should have no such problem with the Orioles, whose 10 performers at third base last season committed 40 errors and drove in 50 runs.

Knight batted .298 with 11 home runs and 76 RBI last season. "I'm really not sure about changing leagues," said Knight, who has spent his entire career in the National League with Cincinnati, Houston and the Mets. "But it's really a nice feeling to be appreciated and wanted."

General Manager Frank Cashen of the Mets said Knight even inquired about coming back to the Mets on May 1, the date when unsigned free agents are allowed to rejoin their former teams.

"But we felt all along that we would be sending the wrong signal to Howard Johnson and Dave Magadan," Cashen said, "making them look over their shoulders all during spring training, waiting for Knight to arrive."

Swimmers travel for last MAC meets

Men also to host intra-state rival OSU

by Al Franco
sports reporter

The Bowling Green swim teams wind down their season this weekend before gearing up for their Mid-American Conference meets.

The BG men's swim team has a busy weekend. Friday, the squad hosts Ohio State University, and Saturday they travel to Muncie, Ind. to face Ball State.

The tankers have an overall record of 5-5 with a 2-3 mark in the MAC.

The meet against OSU starts this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. at the Rec Center's Cooper pool. This will be the last time the BG tankers are at home before they host the MAC conference meet March 5-7.

The OSU tankers have an overall record of 5-1 but have lost to the only Big-Ten opponent they've faced.

BG and OSU have faced a common opponent in Kent State. BG beat KSU by the score of 126-66 in five-place scoring, while OSU beat them 80-24 in three-place scoring.

In order for BG to win, they have to put the wraps on OSU's Mark Birnbrah. Birnbrah has done everything but sell popcorn in the stands for the Buckeye tankers.

The 6'6" 195-pound junior from Columbus owns half of the top times on the team. He has swam in eight different individual events and three relays.

On Saturday, BG faces the BSU squad that has an overall record of 5-4 and are 2-2 in the MAC.

The BG women's swimmers will travel with the men's team to Ball State. The women's team, currently in second place in the MAC, has an overall record of 6-4 while carrying a 3-1 mark in the MAC.

The BG women tankers faced the BSU squad in the Tori Stubbs Relays held at Cooper pool in October. In this non-conference meet, BG outscored BSU 218-152.

The Ball State women's team is 6-6 and 1-3 in the MAC.

After the meet at Ball State, the women will prepare themselves for the MAC conference meet at Ypsilanti, Mich. February 26-28.

HOCKEY: The icers travel to Western Michigan for a pair of 7:30 p.m. games tonight and tomorrow. Trailing Michigan State by a point with four games left in the regular season, the Falcons can ill-afford anything but a sweep.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL: The cagers carry their school-record 20 wins to Kent for a 5:00 p.m. matchup with the Flashes. Now 20-2 overall and 11-0 in the Mid-American Conference, the Falcons are making a strong bid for a top-20 ranking.

MEN'S BASKETBALL: The fourth-place Falcons attempt to gain their second road victory of the season at Kent State tomorrow in a 7:30 p.m. contest.

MEN'S SWIMMING: The tankers host Ohio State today at 4:00 p.m. in Cooper Pool. Tomorrow they will swim against the Cardinals at Ball State.

WOMEN'S SWIMMING: The Falcon women also travel to Muncie, Ind. for a dual against the Cards.

Bengals, Reds squabble over scoreboard

Reds want new one, Bengals have different idea

CINCINNATI (AP) - A judge Thursday urged the Cincinnati Reds and Cincinnati Bengals to resolve a fight that prompted him to issue a temporary order preventing installation of new scoreboards or removal of existing ones at Riverfront Stadium.

Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Ralph Winkler issued a 14-day, temporary restraining order to prevent the city, as operator of Riverfront and landlord for the Reds and Bengals there, from issuing permits to allow installation of the new scoreboards or removal of the old ones. He said the order will expire Feb. 26, but that he will consider extending it another 14 days if the dispute is not settled by then.

Winkler, who has presided over previous lease disagreements between the two professional teams, urged them and the city to resolve the squabble. The judge said the fans would benefit by having the new video replay scoreboard that the Reds want to install.

"There's no reason it can't be resolved if the city's willing to go some, the Bengals are willing to go some and the Reds are willing to go some," Winkler told lawyers for the three parties in court Thursday. "You've got a major-league stadium right now and a minor-league scoreboard."

The Bengals went to court to obtain Winkler's order after the Reds moved cranes into Riverfront Stadium on Wednesday to begin tearing down the old scoreboards.

Mike Brown, Bengals' assistant general manager, said his team has made a settlement proposal to the city and Reds. Brown declined to discuss the plans.

The Bengals say their stadium lease with the city gives them authority to approve stadium structural changes. The Bengals also object that the new scoreboard would block the view from 158 upper-level seats the teams sell for its home games. The Bengals also contend they should receive a portion of advertising revenues from the new scoreboard and advertising panels that the Reds want to install. The city has offered to add those 158 seats to a lower seating deck for Bengals games.

"The question here is money. It's the sale of those seats. It's a revenue-generator," said James McCarthy, an assistant city solicitor representing Cincinnati.

Under the existing lease agreement, the Reds own the scoreboard and have rights to receive the advertising revenues. Hamilton County owns Riverfront Stadium and leases it to the city, which subleases it to the Bengals and Reds.

The Reds want to install state-of-the-art video replay scoreboards, saying they and the Chicago Cubs are the only National League teams that have antiquated scoreboards. The Reds say they can no longer get some parts for their scoreboard, which dates to 1970 when Riverfront opened.

Work had already been halted Wednesday because the work crews lacked a building permit the city says is required. McCarthy said the work would likely remain stopped until the city's building department reviewed the plans.

McEnroe continues search for new glory

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) - John McEnroe says it will be several more months before he's playing at his best.

Seeded fifth in the U.S. Indoor Tennis Championships, McEnroe said he has yet to recover fully from last year's nearly seven-month layoff.

"Maybe some time in April I'll feel like I should really start to be on my game. It's taken more time than I expected," McEnroe said Wednesday night after beating Paul Annacone 6-3, 6-4.

SECOND-SEEDED Jimmy Connors also posted a second-round victory in $315,000 U.S. Indoors, beating Andre Chesnokov of the Soviet Union 6-1, 6-3.

The matches were the first tournament appearances this year for McEnroe and Connors.

"I can't walk off winning like I did and say he really caused me any problems," Connors said after his match, "but his game is a good game."

"He plays well," Connors said of the young Russian. "I think he'll get more experience and he'll play better. It'll come."

McEnroe, who lost to Tim Mayotte in the final of the U.S. Pro Indoor in Philadelphia last week, said he has to quicker starts on the court.

"GUYS ARE more ready to play me. They're really pumped up," he said. "They always were, but maybe they sense that I'm not getting out quite as good."

In other second-round play, Sergio Casal of Spain scored a 6-4, 6-3 upset of countryman and doubles partner Emilio Sanchez, the tournament's No. 6 seed; and Elliot Teltscher scored another upset by defeating No. 15 Milan Srejber of Czechoslovakia 6-2, 7-5.

TOP-SEED Stefan Edberg of Sweden and No. 4 Brad Gilbert won second-round matches Tuesday.

The tournament continues at The Racquet Club of Memphis through Sunday.

Dear Jimmy,
I heard it through the grapevine
That there ain't no mountain high enough
To keep us from having a thrill at KD Big Chill.
So here's the lowdown on the Motown

This time we won't be Beach Boppin, but we'll be peach schnappin—So tie your pants, and get ready to dance. If you're ready to cause some commotion, then I second that emotion!

Colonists' fear fueled witch scare

by Karin Nevius
Friday reporter

Superstitions have been the cause of mass hysteria in different periods of history. The witch scare of American colonial days represents the worst outcome of widely held superstitions.

Considered a unique period of America's history, the witch scare actually had been raging throughout Europe and England before appearing in the American colonies. Jack Santino, professor of popular culture and folklore, said that it is speculated that hundreds of thousands of people were killed for witchcraft in Europe.

In contrast, "between 28 and 32 people were killed as witches in America," Santino said. The year 1692 is the year remembered for America's witch trials, and also signals the near end of the witch hunts.

Colonial society and its ability to believe so stridently in witchcraft was described by Santino as basic Puritan society. "They were closer in mindset to 1420 and medieval thinking than 1776 and rationalism," Santino said. The people did, in effect, literally believe in the supernatural and the influence of the devil.

Richard Skaggs, professor of history, stated that there was no question that the people strongly believed in witchcraft. "The question is whether or not those accused were guilty of witchcraft," he said.

Society at the time was undergoing changes.

"America hadn't become its own country yet. . . . Whenever society goes into a change and people are feeling as though they're losing control, a reaction occurs. The outbreak of witchcraft was this reaction," Santino said.

An economic shift was one of the causes of stress in Puritan society, according to Skaggs. "Medieval attitudes were that money-making is evil, and elements of Massachusetts society had become involved in international commerce," he explained. The economic equality of people was upset, and obvious differences between rich and poor became apparent. "Modern capitalism upset everyone's place," Skaggs said. "Commercial capitalism replaced the attitudes of the medieval village."

"With their beliefs in the supernatural and the other social circumstances, the witch trials were a logical extension" — Jack Santino

The result was accusations of people who were, in retrospect, probably innocent. "It's conceivable that people were practicing witchcraft," Santino said. "It's doubtful that they were the ones accused."

The people who were accused were marginal in society in most cases. "People who were outside the normal social realm . . . usually of a lower economic group. Old ladies living alone were frequent targets," Santino explained.

Skaggs agreed that social deviance attracted the accusations. He defined hysteria as "a reaction of relatively powerless people to the forces that were readjusting their community from the outside world." Children, females and servants, who had the least control over their lives and destinies, fed the hysteria.

Old family grievances and animosities displayed themselves in accusations. "It was a way to put people in jail," Santino said.

Skaggs emphasized that there were not deliberately false accusations. "The concept of false accusations in the 17th century is not there. They honestly believed," he stated.

This unquestioning belief in the supernatural is the key to understanding this period in history. Many social, economic and political elements combined to create an uncertainty about the future, and people reacted by trying to control something with their old and trusted beliefs.

"With their beliefs in the supernatural and the other social circumstances, the witch trials were a logical extension," Santino said.

The preoccupation with witchcraft gradually faded as the 18th century advanced, but similar hunts occurred in later history. The Red Scare — accusing celebrities and politicians of Communism — led by Senator Joseph McCarthy in the 1950s is a recent example.

Superstitions harbored worldwide

by Jenny Hudson
Friday reporter

Friday the 13th is here and once again the citizens of the most powerful nation on Earth are running around like crazy people knocking on wood, avoiding black cats and throwing salt over their shoulders only to get it in someone else's breakfast cereal.

But what if someone said they couldn't clean their boots on their feet because it would bring unemployment, couldn't make a sketch of the building they work in or they would be discharged, or couldn't add a piece to their house or an old person would die?

These three superstitions all happen to be from the island of Jamaica, but Jamaicans do not hold the copyright on strange practices and legends. The various nations of the world all have an odd belief or two regarding what is lucky, unlucky and what should be avoided at all cost.

A good place to begin here would be superstitions surrounding birth and children. To prevent evil spirits from taking possession of a baby before baptism, the Chinese throw a right shirt-sleeve or left stocking into the cradle. In Belgium, a little heart of red or blue silk is hung around a baby's neck to protect it until it is baptized.

One other little gem here: When a baby is born in Albania, its face is rubbed with an egg so that it may is sure to be the master. What happens if she gets in with a bag of Fritos and a diet Dr Pepper and has the groom hand her the remote for the VCR?

Superstition also dictates that in Sweden, the bride touches her naked body, while sitting in the bridal chair, with as many fingers as she wishes children.

Death is also a heavy-duty topic for take hold of the middle finger, or else the spirit of the person will haunt them.

A personal favorite comes from Jamaica and says that one should never kiss a dead person on the lips or their teeth will fall out. (The kissers, not the dead persons.) No problem there.

If a journey overseas is on the agenda soon, check out these words of advice. When setting out on a trip in India, it is considered bad luck to hear the chirping of a lizard. An old Bavarian custom for a father going on a trip includes drinking a glass of wine and then throwing a few drops over his shoulder to ensure a safe return.

In Oriental countries, to meet a camel on a bridge is said to insure good luck for the remainder of the journey. That is, of course, unless the camel spits in someone's face and runs them off the bridge.

In Egypt, if a person meets a camel and doesn't say "God preserve us," the camel will shortly fall and break its legs.

never blush for its actions.

The myths surrounding love and marriage also contain some interesting practices. In southern India, the bridal couple swear eternal fidelity to each other by pouring milk over each other's heads.

From Wurtemberg, Germany comes the superstition that if the bride gets into bed first and makes the groom hand her a glass of water, she superstitions throughout the world. Australian aborigines gash themselves at a funeral until the grave is covered with blood. This is to strengthen their dead friend, but what it does for the mourners and the squeamish is up for debate.

Friday the 13th: Part... never-ending sequel

by Mickey Molnar
Friday reporter

Arguably the most repulsive and brutal slayings in motion picture history occur in each "Friday the 13th" installment. What they do to the plot is inhuman.

Yet slasher film aficionados are not interested in intellectual stimulation but rather in the amount of suspenseful gore-laden murders. The plot simply serves as a medium between one human carving to another.

While the story line has basically remained unchanged, these low-budget films have reaped millions at the box office. The ingredients of a "Friday the 13th" picture include innocent children, camp counselors with hormones in overdrive and more alcohol and mind-altering drugs than could be found in any Geraldo Rivera special. The setting is Camp Crystal where homicidal maniac Jason Voorhees gives a new meaning to the word dissection.

The first installment "Friday the 13th" (1980) features Jason's mother avenging his death 20 years ago. Jason drowned in Lake Crystal while two camp counselors were engaged in intense sexual maneuvers.

In "Part II" Jason substitutes for his decapitated mother whose head he has placed on a bizarre altar. Throughout the film, Jason stalks the campgrounds wearing a burlap sack while proving to be the ultimate in coitus Interruptus.

The third offering was filmed in 3-D which brought Jason's vast array of weaponry into your box of Goobers. Our crazed slasher sports his trademark hockey mask as he dishes out but also receives his fair share of slashing.

Jason seemingly dies for the second time in "The Final Chapter." Did this bring the series to a tragic end? Not quite. In "Part V: A New Beginning," a pinch-killer assumes the role of Jason and continues his consecutive teen killing streak.

Slasher film aficionados are not interested in intellectual stimulation but rather in the amount of suspenseful gore-laden murders.

In the latest film of the series, "Part VI: Jason Lives," our slasher returns as a zombie and eventually gets trapped underwater at the film's conclusion. Since the censor's ax is often bloodier than Jason's, an X-rated version may soon be available on videocassette. While Jason ferments, the script for the next episode is being considered.

The series is expected to conclude in 1993 with "Friday the 13th: Part XIII." An appropriate title would be "The Sequel That Wouldn't Die."

Slasher moviemaking just business as usual

by Deb Gottschalk
Friday reporter

When entranced in a movie, especially an action-packed adventure or horror film, it is easy to get so involved that the actors on the screen seem to really be suffering, or experiencing life.

Sometimes it becomes difficult to separate "real life" from the movies.

There is one job that destroys these illusions and keeps real life in focus. That is the job of guarding the sets to movie productions.

Arno Moyens, member of the Los Angeles Police Force, often guards television and movie sets. Instead of seeing actors and actresses as real life people, being chased by villains or robbing banks, to him they are "very real people doing their jobs."

Take for example, Friday the 13th Part Three. Those who viewed the film know that many people in the audience let out a few screams, and many eyes were peeking from behind hands.

Heart rates had a tendency to speed up when the innocent girl was fleeing from Jason, regardless of the fact that he biologically should have been dead three movies ago.

In reality, Jason is just an actor, and the innocent girl is no more afraid of him than she is of her own dog. For the police officers who guard these sets, and for all others involved in its production, "That's how it is," Moyens said.

And with good reason. Remember the lake that the boy in The Andy Griffith Show walks around, while he carries his fishing pole and whistles? According to Moyens, that is the same lake in which the girl in Friday the 13th skinny dips.

The lake the boy in The Andy Griffith Show walks around, while he whistles is the same lake in which the girl in Friday the Thirteenth Part Three skinny dips.

Now is it scary?

Obviously she didn't think so. Not only did she swim in Franklin Canyon Lake in North Hollywood, an area owned by the City of Los Angeles Water Department, she got paid close to $5,000 for that one scene, Moyens said.

This was well deserved since the movie was filmed in November, a cold month even in California. While the production crew stood under heaters and Jason had a wetsuit, it was bare skin for her.

Pathways to love

by Donna Scenna
Friday reporter

A surprising amount of college students practice beliefs concerning love and relationships, according to a study completed by a Harvard professor.

Superstition is an irrational belief in or notion of the ominous significance of a particular thing, circumstance, or the like according to Webster's New World Dictionary.

There are a variety of games students can play that pertain to their future paths of love. Since today is Friday the 13th, why not try some of the following games?

Tear the petals off a daisy and repeat the words, "He loves me, he loves me not, he loves me" until all the petals are torn off. The last petal will reveal if his love is true.

Take an apple, twist the stem and say the alphabet at the same time. Whenever the stem rips off it's supposed to be the letter of the boy you like.

Scream "padiddle" whenever seeing a car with only one headlight and steal a kiss from a date.

If your car passes under a yellow light three times in a row, you're supposed to touch the ceiling of your car. Supposedly, a date should be in your future plans.

Try to peel a label completely off a beer bottle. If you're successful, then you will get lucky that night.

Take an empty teacup and saucer and turn the teacup upside down. Next, lift up the teacup and if there is a continuous ring that person will have a happy marriage.

Finally, get ready for Sadie Hawkins Day. The first person you see will be the person you will marry.

Sci-fi subculture

by Lisa Lattimore
Friday reporter

Faithful followers of shows like "Dark Shadows," "Twilight Zone," "Dr. Who" and "Star Trek" are interested in much more than the limited special effects, bad acting and flimsy props. These fans feel a definite community sense with one another.

"Part of it becomes just a point of identification with a big group. It's like having automatic friends," said Laura Goosetree, graduate student in popular culture. "It's just another type of subculture. The thing that makes it unique or more interesting is that it's based on mass media rather than an ethnic or religious subculture," she added.

Most of these science fiction fans feel they are set apart from the rest of society. They refer to those who aren't into science fiction as "mundanes." According to Judy Strange, also a graduate student in popular culture, "It makes you feel apart from the mainstream. You feel different, but not different in a bad sense — different in more of a superior sense."

Strange enjoys gathering with friends to watch "Dark Shadows." She first remembers the show when she was very young. "My grandmother wouldn't let me watch it because she said it was too scary. It was scary then. It's certainly not now," she said.

Now Strange watches the show for the humor rather than the horror. "Their special effects are just incredibly awful," she said. "And everything is overacted." Still, the show is very popular and even has its own fan club and newsletter.

Strange and Goosetree periodically attend science fiction conventions. "Confusion," the most recent convention they attended, took place in Plymouth, Mich. These conventions usually include a guest of honor who is an author or artist, discussion panels, masquerade balls, a continuous video room, and a hucksters' room which sells all types of science fiction items.

School spirits: University ghosts

by Deanna Griffith
Friday staff reporter

The University is home to many things: faculty, students, animals, ghosts, insects and plants. Ghosts? Yes, the University is home to at least four known ghosts — because ghosts are not easily detected.

One ghost is said to reside in Shatzel Hall. Until the late 1950's Shatzel Hall was a residence hall, at which time the residents ate meals in another campus building.

According to campus folklore a student who lived in Shatzel Hall was having difficulty in all aspects of his life. While everyone else was at the other building eating, the student hanged himself in a second floor room.

The ghost is said to reside in the room where the student took his life. Again, according to campus folklore, the cleaning staff has refused in the past to clean the premises at night because of the building's unusual resident.

It is rumored that a second ghost resides in the rafters of the Eva Marie Saint Theater (main auditorium) in University Hall.

The myth says that "Alice" was an actress at the University several years ago. She graduated midway through the semester and was returning to accept the University's "Actress of the Year Award" when she was killed in an accident. As the story goes, "Alice" lives in the rafters of the theater looking for her award.

In order to have a good performance in the theater, producers of plays must appeal to "Alice" to help their production be a success.

The University's third ghost is known to roam the halls of Prout Hall. Some people believe it's the ghost of Alice Prout, for whom the hall was named. According to John Brooker, Prout Hall resident, "Whose ghost is really roaming the halls is questionable."

The most recent known encounter with the ghost happened two years ago. According to Brooker, "One of our reputable residents woke up in the middle of the night and his Christmas lights and decorations were shaking."

"When he looked up he saw a greenish figure of a woman floating around the ceiling and disappeared through a vent." Brooker added that the resident "still believes today that he saw the ghost."

To most residents of Prout Hall, the ghost is more a joke than serious business. Brooker commented that "whenever a light flickers, they say 'It's just Alice walking the halls' or 'It's just Alice taking care of business.'"

Chi Omega Sorority house is home to the University's fourth and most active ghost, known to Chi Omegas as Amanda. No one really knows who Amanda is, but there are two traditional tales.

One originates from the time in the University's history when the area where the sorority houses are located was still a park. According to Margaret Kelley, Chi Omega's past president, "There was a Bowling Green woman who loved to come to the park. When she died she came to 'live' at the house although she wasn't a Chi O."

The other tale originates from the 1950's, when Amanda was planning to pledge Chi O. The night before she could pledge, she was killed in a train/car accident. Her desire to be a Chi O was so strong that her spirit came to live at the house.

Kelley didn't know if the sorority houses were built in the '50's. She added that there "are a lot of different Amanda stories."

Some of these stories tell of Amanda "turning on stereos and

Defanging Hollywood's Dracula

by Dave Buehler
Friday reporter

Where on earth has anyone not heard of Dracula? What serene place could boast of inhabitants so fortunate as not to be plagued with a spine-quaking dread of Friday the 13th, full moons or the werewolves they supposedly produce?

Where else but Transylvania?

Lajos Vincze, sociology professor at the University, grew up in a peasant village in Transylvania — yes, the place actually does exist.

Transylvania is a district of Romania. Hungary, however, controlled the region for more than 1,000 years and now the area has an ethnically mixed population. People of Romanian descent comprise the majority, while minorities include those of German and Hungarian heritage, Vincze said.

One might expect Transylvanians to be a superstitious lot if one had seen many Dracula movies, as Transylvania is usually the setting for such films.

As a little boy, however, Vincze never wore garlic around his neck to fend off vampires. Nor did he pack one mean wooden stake to keep the fang-some fellows at bay. Actually, he had never even heard of Dracula, let alone carved a few notches into that stake for vampires who lost the draw.

So who is responsible for all those rumors? Vincze said he first learned of Dracula by watching a movie in Buenos Aires, where Vince immigrated after the communist take-over of his homeland.

That's Hollywood. If the movie industry can produce a president from the set of "Bedtime for Bonzo," why not conjure up a few "old" legends about garlic and wooden stakes?

Actually, the Dracula myth does have origins in a real Romanian prince: Viad the Impaler, who had thousands of enemies "impaled" by running poles through their bodies and letting them dangle from those planted poles. But Vincze read of this only after he left Transylvania.

"The Hungarian peasant is not religious and is not superstitious," Vincze said in regard to all the monster lore mistakenly attributed to them. However, the village he grew up in had a few unusual superstitions of its own.

The number "43" was actually thought to be a lucky number. Also, the villagers believed that if a girl washed her face in snow in March (snow being rare there in March), her skin would become fair. The right incantation sung at the sight of the first swallow in spring would rid a girl of all the wrong freckles.

Vincze said one of the local cure-alls worked for him. He was about 4 years old when a neighborhood dog bit him. He was terrified of the animal afterward. By order of Vincze's grandmother, though, some hair of the dog that bit the boy was burned, and Vincze was held so the smoke rose into his face — to cure his fear of the animal. "It worked," Vincze said.

fans." Kelley told of an incident last year in which two girls would set their alarms and the alarms wouldn't ring. "The times were right, and they were in different plugs, but they just wouldn't ring."

In 1979 Amanda was professionally detected by demonologists Ed and Lorraine Warren. According to University archives, they described Amanda as a good-spirited ghost who has a fetish for mirrors. She has short, brown hair and is wearing a long skirt in the style of the '50s.

The description given by the Warrens matched that of Chi O sisters who had seen Amanda in their mirrors. Kelley commented that "having Amanda around doesn't really bother anyone. I think the unit directors are a little apprehensive about Amanda, until they get the whole story."

Kelley added, "The things I've known and heard aren't anything that would cause injury. They're funny." According to campus folklore, if Amanda is talked about a lot she'll start to do things just to let you know she's around.

As a final comment, Kelley added that "it's a house tradition to include Amanda in our composite. This year someone forgot."

It's said that every other year is an active year for a ghost. Well, let's hope this is an inactive year for all campus ghosts, especially Amanda, because she was "forgotten."

Students lead charmed lives

by Betsy Smith
Friday staff reporter

When Friday the 13th comes around, superstitious people are at their peak of fear, and good luck charms are definitely part of the dress code.

Good luck charms date back to the early years of the wandering tribes. It was believed that if one had a charm in his possession it would bring him good luck and success, according to the book Magic by Hutton Webster. Often rituals were part of the tribes' good luck charms. They would do rituals education major, followed rituals before every high school baseball game. "I was a pretty good baseball player in high school, and before every game I had to do these rituals," said Spicer. "If I didn't do them and something went wrong, I knew it was because I blew off the rituals." Some of these rituals included skipping his last two classes and listening to Bruce Springsteen right before the game.

Joe Notaro, freshman political science major, always wore plaid shorts on the day of his football games in high school. "They were my grandfather's and they brought me good dances and sing chants to protect themselves from the angry and evil gods.

The Indians of North America also had rituals and carried charms for protection. Their charms consisted of bones of animals, secret potions, human hair, and stones and pebbles from sacred rivers.

Today good luck charms are a little different. There is the typical rabbit's foot, the four-leaf clover, a horseshoe and the penny, if picked up with the head of Lincoln facing up. People also have rituals they believe are necessary for success.

luck," Notaro said.

Some people have personal items as good luck charms. Jewelry and small trinkets that are family heirlooms are often used. Jim Howell, freshman marketing/sales major, uses a key chain as a good luck charm. "My sister gave it to me and I always carry it. It's like my sister is with me," Howell said.

It is hard to prove if good luck charms work. Their effectiveness is invariably in the mind of the users. If the charm is missing and something goes wrong, it is usually blamed on the fact that the charm was gone; fate has nothing to do with it.

Stevie Ray Vaughan and Stevie Wonder both sang about it. Some people strongly believe in it, while others are skeptical. Are superstitions a farce or is there really something to worry about?

According to Dan Sabolsky, sophomore pre-medical major, many things will bring a person bad luck: walking under a ladder, breaking a mirror, having a black cat cross your path, knocking down a salt shaker, and stepping on a crack.

"If you knock down a salt shaker, you'll have bad luck unless you throw some of the salt over your shoulder," he said. "Also, if you find a penny and put it in your shoe, you'll have good luck all day."

Because Sabolsky can rattle off all these superstitions, one would wonder whether he is superstitious. He replied, "I'm not superstitious, but if I see a ladder I'll walk around it."

Jeni Eyestone, senior music major, believes that even those who claim not to believe in superstitions have something they question subconsciously. "Everyone has some superstition whether they know it or not," she said.

Eyestone said a popular superstition is to say something like "My car hasn't broken down yet" and then knock on wood. Knocking on wood is supposed to protect one's luck because by saying something similar to "my car hasn't broken down yet" is the same as asking for trouble.

"In some ways I guess I am superstitious," said Dave Winstead, freshman sport management major. "Nothing goes my way on Friday the 13th. I have to work that day and I know something will go wrong. It always does."

Winstead thinks he is cursed with having bad luck on Friday the 13th and "will probably trip, fall, and break dishes at work."

Reading a Starscroll is something Carolann Cahill, sophomore business major, strongly believes in. "I always read it because it's always true. If my Starscroll says that something is going to happen, it usually does."

Cahill can be considered superstitious in other ways as well. "One time when I was thinking of breaking up with my boyfriend, I lost a stone in the ring he gave me. I took that as a sign to break up with him, so I did."

Another student who considers herself superstitious is Cheryl Radeloff, sophomore interpersonal and public communication major. "Whenever I take a test, I have to wear my lucky Goofy pin. Since I always pass my test when I wear it, I'm afraid to take a test without it."

Janet Ensor, junior American studies major, never thought she was superstitious but is beginning to wonder. "On Friday the 13th when I go home, there will be a full moon and my car will turn over 66,666.6 miles. It's kind of creepy."

Ensor said to be on the safe side, she will leave school so she is able to get home before the full moon comes out.

Ohio lottery craze in full swing

by Kelly Rose
Friday staff reporter

Last Saturday one lucky lottery player correctly picked all six numbers in Ohio's Lotto game. This player will receive 20 annual installments of $59,613 for choosing the numbers 14, 16, 29, 35, 39 and 40.

The lottery craze has begun in most states with several forms of the game appearing. Ohio has 3-digit and 4-digit drawings, the Lotto, the Super Lotto and Instant Lottery tickets.

Once people buy a ticket, the money goes to the lottery commission. The state has claimed special earmarked funds from lottery earnings, such as education, which receives 30 to 38 percent of the money made. Usually, 50 percent of the gross revenues goes back to the vendors. The rest of the money is used to pay various administrative costs such as promotion.

Stores which sell the lottery get a 5 percent commission on each ticket. The stores also receive an extra commission on winning tickets which it sold. This meant that when Bowling Green's South Side 6 sold a ticket with all six winning numbers, it received a large commission.

In this case, three players had chosen all six numbers correctly and split the $4.5 million jackpot. The owner of the South Side 6 split the $10,000 commission with three other stores. Not bad for a few minutes' work.

But how much of a jackpot does the winner actually receive? Suppose a person won a $20 million jackpot. This person would have his winnings divided into 21 annual payments of $952,380. The Internal Revenue Service will take 20 percent of each of these payments, which will decrease the annual payments to $761,905. That still doesn't sound bad. The winner will also have to pay state and local taxes on his winnings each year. Don't forget that inflation will severely decrease the worth of the $20 million jackpot.

Those still interested in playing need to know the rules of the game. Ohio Lotto players may either mark the numbers chosen from a possible 40 on a bet slip, or the player can have the sales agent let Autolotto pick six numbers at random.

Participants can play two boards for $1 and up to 10 boards for $5. After a bet has been placed, the sales agent will give the player a ticket stating the numbers selected, amount of the bet and the drawing date. The drawings are held every Saturday and broadcast live on television at 7:29 p.m.

The odds of matching all six winning numbers is one in 1,919,190. If a player beats the odds, he will receive 21 percent of total Ohio lotto sales plus any carryover from previous games that did not have a winning ticket. As the amount of matched numbers on the bet slip decreases, the winnings also decrease.

Ohio's Super Lotto is played every Wednesday with a live broadcast at 7:29 p.m. Super Lotto uses 44 numbers instead of the 40 in the regular lotto. Participants can play one board for $1 and up to 10 boards for $40.

Players who match all six numbers receive 35 percent of total Super Lotto sales plus any carryover. More people play this game and there are more numbers to choose from. The odds of matching all six numbers are one in 7,059,052.

Larry Mantel, manager of South Side 6, said lottery players at the store use many methods in attempting to beat the odds. He said some people draw numbers out of a hat while others use birthdays, anniversaries and ages to pick their numbers.

Besides the two lotto drawings, there are also the daily 3-digit pick and the 4-digit drawings four times a week. Winnings in these are substantially smaller than the lotto drawings. These are broadcast every evening, except Sunday, at 7:29 p.m.

"Cash Explosion" is the current instant lottery game. Players rub the covering off the ticket to reveal six prize amounts. Match three amounts and you win from $2 to $500. If the word "entry" appears three times on a ticket, the holder is a semi-finalist with a chance to become a contestant on the weekly "Cash Explosion" television game show.

From the eligible tickets received each week, seven finalists will be selected to appear on the show. One of these finalists will win $50,000 and each of the remaining will win at least $1,000. The first "Cash Explosion" game show was broadcast last Saturday (locally on WTOL, channel 11) from 7:30 to 8:00 p.m. WTOL also broadcasts the daily number drawings.

There are now nine different lottery bills in Congress to establish a national lottery designed to benefit federal government operations such as Social Security. It also could be used to reduce the federal budget deficit or offset the need to raise federal taxes. A recent Gallup poll showed that 62 percent of those polled support the national lottery bills.

Lotteries are not unique to America. More than 100 countries offer some type of lottery. The modern-day United States lottery began in the early 1970s when the 3-digit game appeared.

Theater traditions set folklore

by Keith Cornelius
Friday reporter

Good luck is bad; Bad luck is good; Say "break a leg" and it's understood. This ditty reminds us of one age-old tradition practiced in the theater: tell an actor to break a leg to wish him a successful performance.

The theater, more than any other single institution, has become a breeding ground for folklore and superstition. Due, in part, to a lack of permanence within the art itself, theater traditions are passed on from one generation to the next as a living testament of its own history.

But, where do these superstitions come from? And are they really taken seriously by those involved with theater?

The phrase "break a leg," for example, stems from an old belief that if an actor falls while onstage, the production will have a successful run. If, however, the actor merely stumbles while making an entrance, he will surely miss a cue or forget his lines during the performance.

Another common belief among stage folk is that the final dress rehearsal should not go well. It is considered to be a bad sign if dress rehearsal is close to perfection.

These traditions of the theater were once strongly held beliefs. Each most likely originates from a specific, yet long-forgotten incident. They gradually lost their power over people and became simple lore that provided actors with a scapegoat for the inevitable mishaps associated with any live performance.

Today, these superstitions have become as much a part of the theater language as "knock on wood" has become common to everyday conversation. These ideas have come to represent luck, either good or bad.

It is bad luck to whistle in a theater. Especially in the dressing room.

Never have three candles lit at any one time on stage.

If an actor's shoes squeak while making his first entrance, he will have

Cats are good luck in a theater unless they cross the stage during a performance.

Never use real flowers in a stage performance.

The tag, or last line of a show, should never be spoken until the performance.

Some of the superstitions of the stage are carryovers from traditional folklore. The number 13 is still unlucky. A rabbit's foot should be kept in all makeup boxes. Peacock feathers are evil and should not be kept anywhere in the theater.

There are also superstitions regarding the work of Shakespeare. None of his works should be recited backstage. Macbeth is considered to be especially unlucky and some actors avoid any connection with the play. The ill-fortune associated with this play derives from the Witches' Song that is recited in the text. It is said to have evil powers.

It becomes difficult to pinpoint the origin of most superstitions since variations appear throughout the world.

And contemporary life continually adds to the list.

One reason that theater lore thrives is because of its isolated environment. As with local superstitions, most theaters develop their own repertoire of legends. Often, these local legends are carefully protected from the probing outsider.

A common tradition revolves around a theater ghost. Most theaters are believed to be haunted by at least one spirit. Usually, although not always, this spirit is said to bring good fortune if certain guidelines are followed.

Often, the stage manager will appeal to the ghost to watch over a production. Failure to do so is believed to lead to injury, illness or tragedy during the run of the show.

These superstitions of the theater have become popular traditions in today's world. Few actors still believe in these superstitions. However, adhering to the "rules" provides a sense of reassurance that can greatly reduce anxiety found in this high-pressure environment.

Boomtown — David and David

by Mark A. Zimmerman
Friday reporter

Southern California has long been a haven for talented studio musicians. These musicians form a pool of established artists and producers that others can use on their projects. From time to time, a group of musicians will form a group of their own and reach out for commercial success. David and David is the latest band to do so in the classification that has become known as Los Angeles Rock.

This genre is perhaps best represented by bands such as the Eagles or Toto. However, a comparison of David and David to either of these bands would be unfair. The Eagles was made up of moderately talented musicians who happened to be over-achievers and Toto is one made of extremely talented players who have no soul. David and David has neither of these problems.

There's something not right with a band that sacrifices its own musical integrity for the purpose of mass consumption. Sometimes it is necessary for a band to concede to certain standards to get airplay. How long has it been since the Ramones were heard on commercial radio?

It seems so much more respectable to play the music like they want. On Boomtown, David and David appears to be one of the lucky bands that achieve radio success without sacrificing their integrity.

Boomtown is a good, steady debut. Musically, it is dark and richly-textured. Guitars are the apparent instrument of choice, and they are tastefully supplemented with mandolin, piano, harmonica and an understated keyboard. Most of the cuts are deep and moody, but sometimes their brightness belies the message of the lyrics.

The songs on Boomtown are all likeable, but none of them are destined for number one. Therefore David and David does not run the risk of over-exposure on the debut.

David Baerwald and David Ricketts wrote the music and lyrics for the album and handled all instrumentation but percussion and additional lyrics.

Producer Davitt Sigerson presents the album in a clear, straight-forward fashion. The half-spoken vocals are pushed up center and seem to be emphasized by the music.

As for its content, Boomtown paints a bleak picture of life. The album is filled with images of lost loves, lost lives and lost dreams. This is not the record for someone who needs cheering up.

The world according to Boomtown is a dark, desolate place. One where the bad outlasts the good and all one can do is endure. The MTV hit, "Swallowed by the Cracks," tells the story of three friends who lost their dreams to a tough world. This is in spite of the fact that they swore it would not happen.

Even the song titles are shadowed with bad feelings. Titles like "Being Alone Together," "All Alone in the Big City," and "Rivers Gonna Rise" reflect the emptiness and helplessness with which David and David fill this record.

The new single, "Ain't So Easy," is the desperate plea of a desperate man to hold on to the woman he loves. He wants to make it all better with a kiss, but he won't have much luck since he has to say "Sorry about your eye" in the first verse.

Alice Cooper: still crazy after all these years

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Singer Alice Cooper, who built his reputation in the 1970s on ghoulish makeup, gory stage props and high-volume sound, is making a comeback at 39 to prove that shock-rock isn't dead.

"I kind of semi-retired at 35 and I got bored. I really missed the road," Cooper said in an interview before a recent concert at the Arizona Veterans Memorial Coliseum.

"I'd watch MTV and I'd see all these heavy-metal bands and I'd say, 'I can do better than that.' But people in the music business told me, 'You can't shock an audience anymore. It's all been done.' To me, that was a direct slap in the face. I said, 'Oh, we can't?' They said, 'We've already had the Sex Pistols and we have Ozzy Osbourne now.' I said, 'Ozzy Osbourne scares me as much as a paper bag. I'll give them something to be scared about.' I took it as a challenge."

Cooper and his new five-member band currently are on a seven-month American tour dubbed "The Nightmare Returns." It began last October with the release of his "Constrictor" LP, and the stage show is more graphic than ever.

"It's high-tech, state of the art gore. We use the guillotine again. But this time when the head comes off, it's anatomically correct and there's still life in it," Cooper said with a sinister laugh. "I went out and employed some people who worked on 'The Fly' and 'Allens.' I wanted to put together a show that would really shock people. We had these ideas back in 1975, but we just couldn't do it on stage. Now, the technology has caught up with the imagination."

On stage, the tall, lean Cooper twists heads off Barbie dolls, spears other toy dolls with swords and performs with 19-foot pet boa constrictors draped around his neck.

The persona of Alice evolved from the alter-ego of Cooper. "He's a literary character to me. I can talk about him like Dr. Frankenstein talking about the monster. Alice is my creation. He's an absurd character that can't possibly be true and I'm not him."

Cooper was born Vincent Damon Furnier, the son of a minister. He grew up in Phoenix and listed "a million-record seller" as his life's ambition in

"I'd watch MTV and I'd see all these heavy-metal bands and I'd say, 'I can do better than that'" the 1966 Cortez High School senior yearbook. He legally changed his name to Alice Cooper "because it sounded so sweet and was the direct opposite of what we wanted to portray on stage."
— Alice Cooper

He got back into music after his retirement when MCA Records called Cooper to see if he would be interested in writing the title track for "Friday The 13th, Part VI: Jason Lives" — the 1986 installment of the blood-splattering series.

Cooper, who watches three horror films per night, jumped at the chance and wrote "He's Back (The Man Behind the Mask)."
