Salaries top budget goal, Senate says

A Faculty Senate committee has recommended faculty com-pensation and operating budgets be high academic priorities in the budget.

John Bentley, chair of the budget committee, said the committee will try to "enhance the money allocation" to faculty compensation and the operating budget as a result of these prior-ities being recommended, but he cannot say at this point whether the budgets will actually increa

Additional money for the budgets can result from a modest state subsidy increase, a modest tuition increase and a reallocation of money within the budget, Bentley said. The Board of Trustees makes student scholarships. At the meeting, some senators expressed concern that only two priorities could be listed. Other senators mentioned some of the items listed could be achieved with little cost, and what is important educationally might not cost a lot.

Office bomb injures three

ATHENS, Greece (AP) - A bomb exploded in the Athens Chamber of Commerce building in downtown Athens yesterday, injuring three people, one seriously, and damaged a conference room, police said.

Said. Early police radio reports said there were "fears that there are dead and injured." Later, police said no one was killed and that three people were injured by glass shards. Police said the bomb went off under a chair on the sixth-floor conference hall where about 20 people were having lunch.

"Obviously the explosion was politically motivated since we are having elections for new members in the Chamber of Commerce," Dionysios Sotiropoulos, vice president of the Athens Chamber of Commerce, said in an interview.

No one claimed responsibility for the explosion, police said.

New form of insulin developed by Tim Baker reporter

University professors and a professor at Medical College of Ohio may have developed a way for diabetics, for the first time, to take insulin orally.

Diabetics now must inject themselves daily with insulin to stay alive because diabetes is a disease in which the pancreas either stops or doesn't produce enough insulin

Until now, insulin, which is necessary to control the amount of glucose, or sugar, in the blood stream, could only be injected into the blood stream because if taken orally it would be digested.

"Insulin has the same chemistry as a piece of meat and would be digested in the small intestine if swallowed,"said Murray Saffran, professor of biochemistry at MCO.

To solve this problem, Douglas Neckers, chair of the chemistry department at the University, and visiting professor Sudesh Kumar from India developed a plastic coat-ing which protects insulin from the digestive fluids in the small intestine.

According to Saffran, the plastic coating is a modification of the plastic used to make a modification of an associated solution of the coating He said the modified plastic of the coating See Diabetes, page 5.

As the Christmas season approaches and wish lists to Santa Claus will be filled out by children and adults around the world, the BG News would like to voice its nominations for the people who have earned candy canes and lumps of coal during 1987.

A lump of coal to Donna Rice, Fawn Hall and Jessica Hahn for bringing new meaning to the word "bimbo." Candy canes to Mikhail Gorbachev and Ronald Reagan for making a commitment to ridding the world of nuclear

A serious side of humor

Every once in a while, in spite of myself, I feel the urge to get serious. Today I'm going to do just that. I'm going to get serius — about humor. This semester I've been teach-

There have been plenty of trying times in the class, many which have in-class, many which have and soft volved the computers and software we've been using, but on the whole the students have improved noticeably in their writ-ing and we've had a lot of laughs easy to stop laughing. The recently completed research paper assignment may be one thing that makes it hard for some of my H112 students to laugh right now, but the papers that a few of them wrote reminded me of the importance of laughter. Three of my students did papers on the relationship between humor and medicine, that is, the healthful effects of laughter. What these students found out during their research is fascinating. Simply put, humor and the laughter that it evokes are good for you.

good for you. One of my students shared Dr. William F. Fry's discovery that laughter has the ability to de-screase pain. Fry found that laughter increases the prod-uction of the body's natural painkiller, endorphin, and that patients who involved them-selves in the process of making selves in the process of making others laugh were able to reduce their dependency on painkilling drugs. The most amazing example that my students referred to was the case of Norman Cousins. Cousins, an editor for The Sat-urday Review, was stricken in 1964 with a serious collagen illness, a disease of the connective tissue. Told by doctors that he had only one chance in 500 of a full recovery, he refused to give up hope.

Reasoning that positive emo-tions could cause positive chemical changes in the body, Cousins prescribed for himself a daily regimen of hope, love, faith and laughter. To provide the latter, he watched Marx

The night before finding out the results of the lymph node analysis, I was lying in bed watching television, my head propped up by two small sand-bags. I was not smiling. I happened to turn the channel to a special hour-long salute to "Candid Camera," the very

He had write them that during my last check-up, I had struck him as being in much better spirits. "Craig is smiling again," he had written.

Now, I know a straight line when I see one. "I think I can explain that, Doctor," I said. "It's been a couple of months now and the neck muscles are starting to loosen up, thus physi-cally allowing me to smile. It's as simple as that."

I kept a straight face. He smiled. Then I smiled. Then he laughed, and then I laughed, too. And I had a feeling that, al-though there would still be hard

Christians asked to accept His gift

It was from the perspective of a Christian of two-and-a-half years that I read, first with anger and then remorse, Mike Doherty's column Tuesday. The anger came from the fact that Mr. Doherty's premise was that the only thing that Jesus ever wanted was peace, which is simply not true. All one needs to do is read the gospel accounts (Matthew, Mark, Luke and John) of Christ's life from the Bible to see that this statement is false.

The remorse comes from the fact that most of the United States holds similar misconceptions about the person of Jesus Christ. For some bizarre reason the words of a Jimi Hendrix song come to mind when I think of what Christ really wanted. "Will I live tomorrow? Well, I ted was for you and I to accept that gift.

One will notice that my ac-count of Jesus' purpose is ob-viously brief and seemingly unsupported; this is intentionally so. One could easily find quotes from the Bible and other prestigious sources (such as Jimi Hendrix songs) to support abso-

"It was inconsistent," Notaro said. "The staff never pressed Rich to file charges last spring, but now they make the RA press charges. Last spring, M.J. even watched when they did it to Rich and encouraged Rich to let them do it to him."

Clarence Terry, director of minority recruitment, is putting his newest program, the Minority the Barry and States and St ity Host Program, into effect as part of his efforts to increase minority enrollment at the University.

The program allows high school seniors to spend a week-end on campus. They arrive Thursday nights and attend classes on Friday with their guide and then they experience a touch of University life through the weekend activities of their host.

"The program has already at-tracted 12 interested persons. We hope to attract a minimum of 40 to 50 students a year," Terry said.

The hosts for the programs have been the members of the black sororities and fraternities on campus, but anyone interested may participate in the program.

"We invite students with a high school grade point average of 2.5 or better. After we find out a particular high school student is interested we let their host is interested we let their host call them and set up a weekend that is good for both of them," Terry said. "By getting more students on campus we hope that they will go back and tell their friends about their experi-ences which will promote a posi-tive image of the University and increase enrollment."

Next year the office of re-cruitment wants to invite students with very high grade point averages and let them stay with faculty member as their host. This is not limited to just minority faculty members — any fac-ulty may participate, Terry said.

Another phase of recruitment efforts is the second President's Breakfast which is Dec. 16 at the Toledo Sheraton Westgate. Counselors and advisers of both public and community schools and community leaders discuss aspects of the University with faculty and University Presi-dent Day Observed dent Paul Olscamp.

"The first one was in Cleveland and it went over very well. As a result we have been able to get more students with better grade point averages interested in the University," Terry said. "We are a little ahead of ourselves as far as applications received and the number of students admitted than we were at this time last year. This is due to the direct student contact with prospective students," he ad-ded.

The CAA also indicated to the budget committee that faculty compensation should not be achieved at the expense of the second priority of the operating budget, said Bentley. Operating expenses, which in-clude instructional needs such as paper and duplicating, were Second grade students at Kenwood Elementary School are learning Spanish.

Twice a week for 10 weeks, two University stu-dents, Sarah Spiesman and Emily Trumbull, have been teaching the language and vocabulary such as colors, numbers and parts of the body.

Teaching the students is very exciting, said Trumbull, a senior business education major. She said the students learn quickly and show a lot of enthusiasm which is encouraging. "I don't get too many students who have trouble catching on, especially with a lot of practicing," Trumbull said. She said if the students do have a little trouble she tries to work with them on an individual basis so they won't get behind. Trumbull said it is important to encourage the

"The budget is lean for this next year, and the budget com-mittees have to make some real-istic choices," he said. "We have to weigh the urgencies as best as we can."

A small state subsidy increase has and will impact the cost of tuition, Bentley said. "I would bet that all state uni-same expenses (as the other universities), so if BG didn't (raise tuition), then it would make what we have to offer weaker." As far as faculty compensation being a top priority, Bentley said faculty salaries at the Uni-

Money to benefit handicapped students

by Melissa McGillivray maging editor

Because Handicapped Services now has a "zero budget" for direct student services, some would like to see the University allot funds to that area.

Rob Cunningham, coor-dinator of Handicapped Ser-vices, said he is looking into the possibility of requesting funds from the Board of Trustees for the Board of Trustees for direct services such as special tutoring, reader service and

"It's something I'm in-vestigating. I'd be crazy not to," he said. The current role of his office is to assure compliance with federal laws and statutes which

Some of those strides include computers that help people who can't type with both hands by allowing them to operate the computer with their mouths, he said.

transportation. At Ohio State University and other schools, mini-vans take students from class to class. But Cunningham said providing transportation would bring in the difficult issue of liability.

Cunningham said he relies heavily on Academic En-hancement to help in through use of the writing lab and the Study Skills Center.

While "BGSU isn't necessar-ily state-of-the-art in adaptive-ness," Cunningham said the Student Recreation Center is one of the most accessible faci-lities of its kind lities of its kind.

He also said he believes no disabled students are really in need, because his office con-tacts them and their instructors to work out accomodations.

There are only 60 disabled students on campus, compared to 148 disabled students at the better-equipped University of Toledo, he said.

But he hopes that if the Uni-versity becomes more accessi-ble, more disabled students will attend.

Since he came to the Uni-versity in January, he believes the situation has been improving. Disabled students receive help from Campus Safety and Security, the University Book-store, the Escort Services and others.

But to provide direct ser-vices, the department would need more funds, he said.

Phil Mason, executive assistant to University President Paul Olscamp, said the first step in gaining such funds would be a request from Handi-capped Services for the allocation. The request would then go through the budget process, and the decision would rest with the

Gerontology major says more facilities needed

by Melissa McGillivray managing editor

She moves slowly and metho-dically through campus amid the fast-paced lifestyles of other University students.

And while many of those students rely on automobiles or sheer speed to get around, Alice Bender uses a cane or her trusty three-wheeled bike.

A car accident on icy roads during her freshman year at Ohio State University left her in a coma for two months and disabled afterward.

After extensive speech and physical therapy, the junior gerontology major came to the University three years ago after attending Wright State Uni-versity in Dayton — a school that prides itself on its facilities and services for displace the and services for disabled stu-dents — and Defiance College.

At the University, Bender said the facilities are adequate, but the services are greatly lacking. "This school needs more funds for disabled people," said Ben-der, who said she does not want to blame Handicapped Services for the problem. "Those people are all very nice — we just need more money."

Consequently, Bender and other disabled must do almost everything on their own, she said, adding that being unable to write often makes that difficult.

To alleviate the problem, she uses carbon paper and asks stu-dents around her in classes to take notes for her. Cassette tapes are too expensive, she

The only way she can receive scholarship aid is by keeping her grades up, she said, which is difficult without adequate ser-

Transportation is also a prob-lem for disabled students, she said. Bender cannot drive and must use her own three-wheeled bike to get around.

For one class, she volunteered service in a nursing home and had to find her own way to get there, she said.

While other schools have shuttle buses or underground tun-nels, the University has no such facilities. As a result, Bender is not able to attend classes during spring semester.

"There's nothing around here — you really have to work and struggle," she said, compared to Wright State, where there are underground tunnels and other services for students. services for students.

Bender said she believes if the Board of Trustees would allot more money for disabled ser-vices, more disabled students would be attracted to the University.

And that, she believes, would help the morale of disabled University students and help edu-cate those who are not disabled.

'There are a lot of snobs around here — people do a lot of rude things," she said.

On several occasions, people have hung up on her because she speaks slowly or stutters, while others have let doors slam in her face when her hands were full with a cane and books, she said.

"It's too bad they have to be that way," she said. "It makes me feel stupid. It's frustrating and maddening. A disabled person has feelings like anybody else."

At Wright State, it was easier to make friends because disabled people are more accepted, she said.

"I have thousands of acquaintances here, but it's hard to get close because a lot of people are afraid of you." While some students, teachers and the Handi-capped Services personnel are "really nice," Bender said she would like to see the University do more to aid disabled students.

"I know that there are physi-cally disabled people on this campus who need their sup-port," she said.

Board of Trustees, he said. Mason said such services as writing, math and tutorial are now provided by the Uni-versity's Writing Lab, Study Skills Center and other offices.

COLUMBUS (AP) — The owner of the NFL St. Louis Cardinals told a delegation from the city yesterday that he will not move his team to Colum-bus, a broadcast report bus, said.

Columbus lawyer Mel Schottenstein said Car-dinals owner William Bid-will told him and other members of the delegation in St. Louis that he needs more of a commitment on a stadium than Columbus can guarantee, according to WTVN radio.

The delegation also in-cluded Ohio State Uni-versity President Edward Jennings, who had said Ohio State would allow the Cardinals use its 85,339-seat Ohio Stadium until a new stadium is built for the NFL team.

Bidwill has told officials in St. Louis that he is dissatisfied with the capacity of Busch Stadium, which seats only about 54,000. Columbus was among several cities trying to lure the Condinate including

BG cares for the homeless

by Nancy Erikson

A rugged-looking man gets off the northbound bus at the Lehman Ave. station and heads toward St. Thomas More University Parish. Although no one knows him, he walks with a familar stride.

His name is "Jim," and this is his once-amonth visit to the parish.

According to Sister Evelyn Craig, "Jim has been on the road for 38 years. We don't really know where he's from, but he visits us here at St. Thomas More at least once a month."

She said he comes for a day and works on the grounds, usually doing small jobs such as cleaning. He works for food and a place to sleep for a night.

On the following morning "Jim" boards the bus on his way north, and is not seen "I guess I started getting really involved with the poor when I was working in Cleveland. Students in that diocese motivated me to learn more about all the aspects of our society. Students here in BG have really motivated me too," Craig said.

She said student organizations and residence halls have been enthusiastic about helping the parish with certain drives and with the soup kitchen. These usually involve collecting toys or canned foods for the poor and making soup for the kitchen in Toledo.

While these students are enthusiastic about the drives, Craig has noticed that they often do not realize that the food, clothes and toys go to people in Bowling Green.

"I think we all tend to overlook things

Sister Evelyn Craig

for another month.

"There are a lot of people like Jim that do not have homes. Often they ride the buses and trains, going north and south, from Dayton to Toledo and back again. Bowling Green is a popular city to stop in, as is Findlay," Craig said.

Many of the homeless people who come to Sister Evelyn are also migrant workers from Texas and other southwestern states. They come to Ohio because local farms offer work in the Bowling Green area.

However, many of them do not have a place to stay when they get to Ohio. They can find temporary shelter and food at St. Thomas More until they can take care of themselves.

"I try to help people help themselves. There are also people in Bowling Green that are poor. When they come to me, I often give them vegetables and breads so that they can have enough money to buy some type of meat," Craig said.

She added these people will often give something back to the church by donating toys or clothes their children have outgrown.

"This is a great exchange because the clothes and toys go to good use and the people giving them feel like they are contributing, too, not just receiving," she said.

Helping the poor and the homeless is often very rewarding. Usually this is not something that someone sets out to do.

Often a person just finds himself getting more and more involved. like this in our own community. Poor people are always somewhere else. It is uncomfortable for us to see it. We don't even look these people in the eye when we pass them," Craig said.

Students tend to agree with Craig's observation.

"I don't think there is enough contact with the campus world and Bowling Green the city. It is as if the two worlds don't even know the other exists," said Laura Praeger, freshman speech and hearing therapy major.

Praeger is a member of the Honors Student Association (H.S.A.) and helped with the preparation of soup for the soup kitchen before Thanksgiving at St. Thomas More along with other organization members. This is not the first time that Praeger has been involved with community service.

"When I was in high school, we used to have a thing called Project Charlie. We went to elementary schools and helped kids build up their self esteem. Also, we gave them safety tips..." she said.

She added she has never worked directly with a church before and she found the experience to be rewarding.

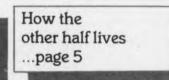

"I had a lot of fun with H.S.A. preparing the soup. It was a good time and I helped people, too," Praeger said.

The general consensus of the event

He also agreed with Praeger, adding that he did not realize that a lot of the people he has helped live in Bowling Green.

"It's sad. People don't have enough food or clothes. I'm not in contact enough with this type of thing. I want to do more. I think most students do, they just don't realize that it is right here," Albertino said.

U2 cools charity work

NEW YORK (AP) - U2 is a quartet whose lyrics illuminate social consciousness, political protest and Christian sensibility and whose music and performances rock out

But now the Dublin-based band is trying to cool its benefit activities.

Last year U2 was on the benefit Amnesty International tour, with Joan Baez, Jackson Browne, Bryan Adams, Peter Gabriel, the Neville Brothers, Lou Reed, Sting and the Police. It also played a Self Aid show in Ireland with other Irish performers and is currently on the second American leg of an 18-month world tour.

"Music has to be music again for awhile. If it keeps getting caught up in side projects, even though they're great causes, it eventually gets used up as a power," said guitarist the Edge before an recent concert at Madison Square Garden.

Edge was born David Evans. He said the nickname was given to him because of the shape of his chin. "I was about 15, the age of no sense. I'm still part of the age of no sense; I'm 26."

Edge rejects the description of U2 as musical do-gooders. "We're a great rock 'n' roll band. We never set out to change the world; we set out to write some good songs and overturn a few stones with our lyrics. We've got a lot of unanswered questions, like everyone else.

"Now we've decided to do no benefits with the exception of things we can not possibly turn down." Those include recording a track on a tribute record to Woody Guthrie with proceeds going to the fight against Huntington's Disease, which killed Guthrie. In October, "A Very Special Christmas" was released by A&M Records, with tracks by U2, Bruce Springsteen, Bon Jovi, Whitney Houston and others. Proceeds are to go to Special Olympics Inc., which runs sports programs for the mentally handicapped.

U2's latest LP, "The Joshua Tree," has remained at the top of the charts for more than 30 weeks. The single, "Where the Streets Have No Name" was also moving up. It's the group's third U.S. hit, following "With or Without You" and "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For."

U2's first hit single in 1983 from its third album, "War," was "Sunday, Bloody Sunday," about the conflict in Northern Ireland. But the group never asked Americans to take sides, the Edge said.

Edge and his wife, Aisling, and their two small daughters live in Dublin. When not touring and recording, he pursues photography, plays with his children, writes songs and practices guitar.

U2 started in 1976 after drummer Larry Mullen, 14, stuck a note on Dublin's Mount Temple public high school bulletin board asking for rock musicians. He rounded up singer Paul Hewson, known as Bono, guitarist the Edge and bassist Adam Clayton. Edge went to college for one term, dropping out when U2 signed with Island in 1980.

Geldof: Ethopian famine will return

MEKELE, Ethiopia (AP) - Rock singer Bob Geldof toured relief centers here to call attention to crop failures that threaten an even worse famine than the one that killed 2 million Africans in 1984-85

There are no starving children visible yet, "but they will be here," Geldof said Thursday as he visited feeding centers in the Tigray region, which lost 75 percent of its crop to drought.

In Eritrea, the province to the north, there was a total crop failure, and relief efforts in both regions are hampered by long-running civil wars.

Geldof, who helped raise $140 million to feed millions of Africans during the earlier famine, called for a truce between the fighting factions.

In Geneva, The International Committee of the Red Cross on Thursday appealed for $82 million to assist potential famine victims.

New games are fun...but some old ones were better

by Jenny Heinlein

'Tis the season of joy and happiness; But your Christmas tree will not be happy unless two of the seasons hottest new games are beneath its lovely branches.

Pictionary and Whatzit? are two new games this year that promise to be fun and popular.

If you've ever watched the game show "Win Lose or Draw" and have enjoyed watching people sketch their way to big bucks, you'll love Pictionary. The object of the game is to identify through sketched clues as many words as necessary to advance to the finish square, and correctly identify the final word. The catch is you cannot include letters, numbers or the number symbol.

The game is a great for parties because it can be played with a lot of people. As a matter of fact, it is supposedly more fun with fewer teams but more players per team. If your sketches are funny or original they can be submitted to appear in the "Pictionary Book of Greatest Sketches" that will be published in the future.

The game is available at K and K Toys in the Woodland Mall for $24.99. A second edition and a children's edition are coming soon.

Whatzit? is a new game by Milton Bradley. The object of the game is to solve codes, called Whatzits, and race to the Winner's Circle space on the gamdboard. Once in the Winner's Circle you only have to solve a Whatzit to win the game.

Whatzits can be described as word pictures. For example the answer to HARMgood is more harm than good. There are also Wicked Whatzits which are more difficult to solve.

The local paper that I receive from home has already begun running the traditional "Letters to Santa," and for the first time in my life I actually need a translator for a Christmas list.

There is not a single toy on these lists that I recognize. These are not the typical letters that you would expect from kids. A letter from an eight-year-old named Joel particularly struck me as scary. He re-

The game can be played with three to six players, so it makes for an excellent family game. If there are more than six players, teams can be formed. Whatzit? is available at K and K Toys in the Woodland Mall for $21.99.

No Christmas tree should be without them. quested from Santa "a Crimson stun, GI Joe foreward observer, amo dump, Mauler M Tank, AWE Striker, and a Conquest X30." For that delivery Santa should be dressed in camouflage and combat boots. What are those things he's asking for? Are they actual toys?

What happened to the days when all kids wanted were Barbies, board games, bikes and an Etch-a-Sketch? Doesn't any one remember when the most technical toy was the Lite Brite?

According to Jim Hammon, manager of K 'n' K Toys in Woodland Mall, these traditional toys "sell quite a bit more slowly" than their 80s counterparts. But the store occasionally gets calls for them and does carry some in stock. Hammon foresees them "eventually being phased out."

They are being replaced by things like this year's big seller, remote control cars, he said. Many of the new breed are based See Old Games, page 11.

How the 'other half lives

by Brenda Young, Lauren Newkirk and Jennifer A. Anthony

Editor's note: On the eve of exam week. three Friday Magazine writers took a look at the "other" lives of some of the University's instructors.

Have you ever sat through a lecture and wondered about your teacher?

Has your mind ever strayed from the interesting material being disseminated by a prof to thoughts of "I wonder how old he is?" or "She doesn't seem like the married type." Well, believe it or not, teachers are human beings and they do lead lives beyond the lecturn.

Bob Beard

When Bob Beard, Assistant Professor Emeritus in HPER is through with his fall bicycling class, he heads back to his home in Gardner, PA, where he and his wife Joan run a youth hostel.

Beard and his wife took over the hostel on April Fool's Day 1985 after he became eligible for retirement from the University. The Beards became interested in hosteling after staying in hostels on bike tours. They started out volunteering as house parents in the Bowling Green hostel before taking over their own. Beard said that they first became interested in running a hostel after they saw what hosteling involved.

Youth hostels are an inexpensive way for young people to travel on hiking and bike tours. In exchange for their own services - by helping out with chores - youths get a warm meal and a comfortable bed. Chores include simply cleaning up after themselves, making beds and doing dishes— average household jobs.

Beard said that the basic premise of hosteling is that travelers leave a place in better condition than it was in when they arrived.

Hostels started in Germany in 1909. Since then, hostels have been orgainized in 80 countries. Each hostel is different from any other. American hostels are built in converted churches and old city jails, among other locations. The Beards run their hostel in a mansion that was built in the 1700s.

Since becoming involved with hosteling, Beard has become an instructor in hostel management training courses and leadership training courses. Beard teaches the cycling section of the leadership courses in Bowling Green every August. The leadership courses train people to lead tours.

Those little plaques that adorn the walls of historical buildings are not just put there at random. Tons of research must be done to determine whether or not a building deserves recognition.

after receiving her M.A. Since starting the business she has consulted for cities in Michigan, including Tecumseh, Mason, and LaPier; a 300-square-mile patch of Colorado for the Army Department; and an automobile exhibit in Greenfield Village.

Haynes said that historic preservation is a documentation of the past — that is, the tangible, touchable side, rather than the written. She said that history is something that we cannot lose.

After a building's history is researched and the structure is found to have historical value, it is be nominated to the Historical Register.

Haynes spent 7-8 weeks in the field when conducting research for the Army Department and National Park Service in Colorado. She had to cover 300 square miles of the state searching for evidence of historical architecture. She said that everyone kept warning her to watch out for rattlesnakes, which were common to the area, but she never met up with one.

Her work for Greenfield Village sent her to libraries all across Southeastern Michigan. She said that before she started this research she did not really know much about the car and how it fit into American culture. Over the course of her research she came in touch with the original material put out on the automobile — everything from books and advertisements to Valentines depicting the car.

Because of her research for the auto exhibit, Haynes now teaches a class at the University thath involves the place of the car in American culture for the past hundred years. She has not done much consulting since taking her job here, but hopes to continue as a private consultant.

"I want to return to consulting, but I also really love teaching," she said, "I really hope that I can continue to do both."

Haynes said that historic preservation is an important part of keeping our culture alive. She said, "Everything has a story-these buildings and books mean something. We need to get in touch with history, to listen to the story it has to tell."

George R. Horton

Dr. George R. Horton, a professor in the College of Technology, spends his spare time carving decorative sculptures out of wood. He has a heritage of woodworking that reaches back over 100 years.

The last four or five generations of his family have been dedicated to carpentry and construction, as well as to pride and interest in their family tradition. Horton said he worked with wood during his childhood, carving small toys with his father and grandfather.

Horton put himself through college as an apprentice, finishing wooden furniture and working with rough construction. However this is not his favorite aspect of woodworking.

Just five years ago Horton took up the sculpture and carving of decorative decoys and shorebirds. He said he most enjoys working on them during vacations spent at his cottage at Lakeside, Lake Erie. It often provides relaxation, relieving him of stress.

"I'd really like to stress the importance of the practice and study of all aspects of woodworking. There is some talent involved, but it's not nearly as important as knowing exactly what you're working with," Horton said.

Dr. Robert K. Clark

You may recognize him as the overstressed husband in a St. Vincent Medical Center newspaper advertisements or as the coffee-drinking farmer in a GMC truck commercial on television. Off the screen, he is Dr. Robert K. Clark, professor of Radio Television and Film.

Clark's acting career goes back to his childhood days when he performed local theater in Cheyenne, Wyo. While in high school, he involved himself with radio and continued with it while attending the University of Wyoming. After graduation, Clark went to work at a radio station in Vermont. He quickly became bored and went on to pursue a graduate degree at the University of Tennessee. There he worked for the university's broadcast service producing college academic commercials.

"I quickly found that in teaching, you're the lowest person on the totem pole if you don't have a Ph.D.," Clark said. He attended Ohio State University for two years and earned his degree, then came to Bowling Green, where he did the news five nights a week on WBGU. He also served as program manager.

Clark has been active in community theater for the past five years with a group called "The Black Swamp Players." "My favorite was doing the Henry Fonda role in 'On Golden Pond' three years ago," he said

Last year he signed with a talent agency in Toledo that provides models for television and voices for radio. Although his intention was to work in radio, but there's been a great demand for models in his age group

Clark portrays an overstressed husband in newspaper advertisements for St. Vincent's Medical Center. He is shown with his "wife" in various situations, eating junk food, lying around, or yelling at the kids. He is also becoming famous for his performance as part of a farmer trio in a local television commercial for GMC trucks. He praises his prized truck claiming that it works harder than his two boys!'

Dr. Richard Weaver

Anyone who's taken IPCO 102 is familiar with the high-powered energy of Dr. Richard Weaver, the enthusiastic instructor of the course. By just being exposed to him in lecture, you wouldn't think that Dr. Weaver was originally a pre-med major who rebelled against his parents by almost flunking out of his first year of college.

Weaver was born in Ann Arbor and attended the University of Michigan. "I didn't do well my first year," he said. "I was rebelling against my parents because I didn't go to the college of my choice," he said.

After his parents both received scholarships to teach in Pakistan, Weaver got the chance to tour Europe. He took correspondence classes and worked at the United Stated Information Service where he totally reorganized their disastrous files

"One of the things I found out oversees was the value of my higher education,' said Weaver. "People in Europe were astounded when I told them that I attended the University of Michigan. It was perceived to be a very prestigious school."

After having been around the world and having developed an appreciation for his education, Weaver returned to the University of Michigan where he did very well.

As a pre-med major, he was required to take a speech course which he initially dreaded. As it turned out, he enjoyed the class and began to consider speech as a future career. He attended the University of Indiana to get his masters degree.

Weaver taught in Massachusetts until 1974, then came to Bowling Green where he has taught ever since.

In addition to not knowing about his rebellious nature, most people do not know that Weaver was an avid dancer. As teenagers, he and his older sister worked on dance routines together in Europe and actually performed in front of crowds of tourists. Back in America, Weaver gallantly sacrificed himself to serve as a dance partner for one of his sister's friends. "My younger sister and her friends loved to get together and dance to rock and roll and they needed partners," he said. Weaver later married the girl who danced with him.

The thing that Dr. Weaver does the most of these days is writing. In the communications textbook market, Weaver's "Communicating Effectively" is presently the second-best-selling book in the world. So far Weaver has written twelve books and nearly 75 professional articles.

'Three Men and a Baby' is enjoyable but predictable

by Craig Wagner

Most students traveling home for the holidays will have more time on their hands for entertainment. One of the myriad Christmas releases that you may not want to miss is the comedy "Three Men and a Baby."

Directed by Leonard Nimoy (Mr. Spock from "Star Trek"), the film stars Tom Selleck, Steve Guttenberg, and Ted Danson as three yuppie bachelors living in an elegant New York highrise. Their busy lives are interrupted when a baby unexpectedly appears on their doorstep. An attached note claims the infant belongs to Jack (Danson), an actor who is on location in Turkey. Peter (Selleck), an architect, and Michael (Guttenberg), a cartoonist, reluctantly — and often ineffectively — begin to care for the young troublemaker.

When the baby interferes with their work and social lives, Peter and Michael swear revenge on Jack for his irresponsibility. However, when Jack returns, the three men eventually grow attached to the baby, despite its annoying habits.

For some reason, the film-makers felt it was also necessary to spice up the story with a subplot involving heroin dealers,

With Jack (Ted Danson), the other roommate, away on business, Michael (Steve Guttenberg) and Peter (Tom Selleck) tenwho want a certain package that was delivered to the bachelor's apartment. As a result, the three men are subjected to intense police surveillance along with the hourly diaper-changings and bottlefeedings. All of this lands the men in some rather tense — as well as humorous predicaments.

Roger Ebert of the Chicago "Sun-Times" said he had tears of laughter roll-

ing down his cheeks from watching this film. However, that is carrying it a bit far. "Three Men and a Baby" is more cute and amusing than it is hilarious. While the story may be a bit unbelievable, the movie does offer a lighthearted look at the problems the bachelors encounter when they must become instant parents. The three men are smooth operators in the area of romance, but they are rendered almost helpless when it comes to caring for an equally helpless infant.

Selleck, Danson, and Guttenberg all give solid performances, and they interact quite well with each other. However, Danson's portrayal of a yuppie bachelor was somewhat hard to swallow — not because he did a poor job, but because he has been typecast as the very masculine Sam Malone in "Cheers." Having Danson dress in a white sweater while he crosses his arms and sips red wine out of a champagne glass is like making Sylvester Stallone dance in a tutu. For Selleck, this movie has to be particularly promising. "Three Men and a Baby" is by far his best film, and he definitely outshines his two completely capable costars. The self-deprecating and impatient humor Selleck displays in "Magnum P.I." is clearly evident, and it comes across as being very natural — which is his strong point. The best scenes in the movie involve Selleck and his interaction with the baby. The only real criticism of "Three Men and a Baby" must be directed toward Nimoy. The movie drags in several spots, and Nimoy was not able to make a smooth transition from the humorous scenes to the action or dramatic scenes. In fact, the film-makers should have stuck completely with producing a comedy, because the dramatic and adventure aspects of the film did not come off very well — they seem out of place. The baby scenes and Selleck's unique sense of humor were more interest-See Baby, page 11.

Columnist is sentimental about Christmas

by Christopher J. Dawson

I think it's painfully obvious that Christmas is fast approaching. I saw my first K-Mart Christmas commercial in mid-November. I knew then that the holiday season onslaught was inevitable. Don't get me wrong. I love Christmas. It is probably the most beloved of the all the holidays.

Unfortunately, it seems to be most loved by all the retailers who see it as their big profit season. To that I say "Bah, Humbug!" Let us remember first and foremost that Christmas is a holiday that celebrates togetherness, peace, and love. Of course it is a religious holiday, but it means different things to different people. No matter what religion one believes in, this time of year is still recognized as a holiday season.

I think one of my favorite things about the holiday season is that it is a time of togetherness. This is the time of the year when families get together. How many of you out there went to Grandma's house for Christmas? I thought so. That was the tradition for my family, and I loved it because the house would be filled with family. Usually the only other time the whole family gets together is for a wedding or a funeral, but the weddings are few and far between, and funerals are not exactly happy occasions.

I always enjoyed going to Grandma's because her town was nestled in the hills, and when there was a lot of snow, it added to the overall feeling. It looked like a Currier and Ives print, except for the steel mill.

There were some years we stayed home for the holidays, but it still was the same because the family visited us, and friends taking the place of missing family members. If some of the relatives were too far away to be with us, they could still be there with one phone call. Those are the happy memories that can make one fondly reminisce about childhood. Of course now things are slightly different, because Grandma has moved to Daytona Beach, Florida. The season isn't quite the same, but after a couple of vacations there, I find I like Christmas on the beach a lot better. Sentimentality aside, I think snow sucks.

I think it is interesting to note that wherever there is hostility in the world, it stops around Christmas. True, the truce is usually short-lived, but it's a good start, and it shows that humanity isn't that stupid after all. Christmas has that peaceful effect on people. It is a hectic holiday, especially Friday/Thom Krous among all the shoppers, but even on the worst shopping day in the most crowded of the malls, people still treat each other with a kindness that is not usually seen. People seem to know that, yeah, all this shopping is a major hassle, but it is Christmas. Aside

Tape recaptures Celtic Christmas

by Dan Phares

The 13th Century is laid out before you as if you were royalty of old that must be enterained by only the finest minstrels in the land. Your royal feast of the twelth night of Christmas is filled with the merriment of all your quests until the mass is slowly silenced by an echo of a hauntingly beautiful refrain. A quick scan reveals a maiden playing the Celtic harp with the beauty and grace of an angel. She plays holiday melodies that keeps you and your quest enterained for almost an hour. This is the mood that Celtic harpist Kim Robertson creates in her latest album "Celtic Christmas."

Robertson is a renowned artist who has trained for many years with the classical harp. She left this promising career when she fell in love with the Celtic harp. Playing a wide range of compositions, some classical, some improvisational, Robertson performs both the works of others and original compositions. On her newly released Christmas album, Robertson plays traditional melodies "God Rest ye Merry Gentlemen" and "Greensleeves," along with compositions by Bach and other 13th century musicians who used plainsong style. All selections are played to perfection.

Robertson has recorded a total of five albums under the "Invincible" label.

Robertson has also contributed to other artist's albums, including a unique vocal and harp series, the Crimson Collection.

If you enjoy listening to top-40, classical, instrumental, medieval or traditional ballads, or if you are in the traditional Christmas mood, "Celtic Christmas" is a worthwhile investment. If you can not find it at a local record store, you can order a free catalog of albums in the "Invincible" label by writing to: Invincible Music Catalog P.O. Box 13054 Phoenix, Az. 85002 Or, for a free sample of the different artist's music under the "invincible" label, write to: Invincible Offer P.O. Box 13054

Elvis laughed off threats; no word on Johnny Cash's reaction

FRIDAY ON MY MIND... sweat. torrents of sweat, rage down from your forehead; your eyes explode within their sockets; your hands, once proud and strong, have melted. Panic, not blood, races through your veins. Sleep becomes your enemy! Food? Hah! You have a better chance of getting elected president. Oh sweet Jesus...it's FINAL EXAM TIME.

Anyway, before you get the razor blades out in that last ditch attempt to garner an Incomplete, click your heels together three times and repeat: it's only a grade, it's only a grade, it's only a grade.

THE FRIDAY TOP FIVE... This Friday's top five topic is the five most polite ways to refuse holiday goodies made by your relatives:

5. No thanks, I'll break out in a gluteal rash.

4. Sorry, I only eat Cajun food.

3. You're kind but sugar aggravates my diabetes.

2. Not now, thanks. I just cleaned out the cat's box.

1. If I eat any more I'll puke.

FRIDAY QUOTE OF THE WEEK "The only certain U ings are death and research papers." Ben Franklin IV

HEY! TURN IT DOWN OR I'LL CALL THE COPS!... Alex Chilton, yes, the Alex Chilton, will be at Paycheck's in Hamtramck next Friday, Dec. 18. Also on the 18th, The Bodeans will be playing Detroit's Ritz club. Finally, The Polish Muslims will be at Alvin's — on the 18th.

THE FRIDAY SIX-SENTENCE NOVEL... This week's title: "Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby?"

"Look, Brother Donald is my spiritual advisor, not yours. He tells me everything without me telling him anything. Hey! At least I quit going to Dr. Misty. Just what in the hell do you expect from me? Maybe you should go sauna off some of that aggression and relax. Maybe even try an aroma-therapy colonic."

NEWS IN BRIEFS... Brother George fixed the Buick at his Tobias Road estate.

FRIDAY WITH ELVIS... The only column that tells you what Elvis was up to on Friday. On Friday, Jan. 10, 1964, a postcard addressed to "Presddient (sic) Elvis Presley" was mailed from Huntsville, Ala. which not only threatened the KING's life, but also the lives of Johnny Cash, Governor Wallace, and President Johnson. Presley reportedly laughed it off. (My guess is the card was sent by a disgruntled student whose semester grades made it home for the holidays before he did. Peace and love.)

from the painted-on smiles of people who are looking for large tips, people go out of their way to help their fellow man.

There is that aspect of Christmas that all children seem to love - the presents. When you get older, it really gets down to the old saying that "It's the thought that counts" but when you're a kid, it's the amount of gifts that count.

I remember Christmas mornings where there was a stack of presents for me, mostly from Mom and Dad. My presents to them were slightly less. Mom got earrings, Dad got cologne, usually Brut or Hai Karate. The best gifts are the ones you make, because there is a lot more love in something you make for Dad then there is in buying him an battery-powered rotating tie and belt rack.

I still miss getting a pile of toys, though. Clothes are kind of dull, though I think I'd look rather silly getting a Big Wheel or a G.I. Joe Nuclear-Powered Amphibious Missle Assault Attack Vehicle now

Christmas takes on a slightly different

Baby

All in all, "Three Men and a Baby" is an enjoyable, although predictable, film with enough charm to make it worthwhile. Needless to say, the Selleck-Danson-Guttenberg threesome also makes it very appealing, and the movie will probably make more money than it deserves.

"Three Men and a Baby" is rated PG. Running time: 106 minutes.

Faculty art show continues this month

by Carol Cohol

The 38th Annual School of Art Faculty Exhibition which opened Dec. 4 will continue through Dec. 17th. The art show gives students a chance to see their professors' work. It also gives the faculty a chance to see the work of their collegues.

The gallery is open 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 2 - 5 p.m. on Sunday. Even if you are not an art student or an art professor there is still something for everyone to see. The pieces range from political themes to designs and anywhere in between.

Many types of art mediums are used. Ceramics, acrylics, mixed media, collagraph print, pastel on paper, enamel on copper and a variety of ties, watercolor, photographs, and more are featured. Some of the pieces are for sale.

Faculty who have pieces in the show are Ron Bandy, David Cayton, Ronald Coleman, Tom Davenport, Tony Duda (with Ron Jacomini), Don Ehrlichman, Paulette Fleming, Michael Franklin, Kathleen Hagan, Harold Hasselschwert, Tamara Monk Hilty, Thomas Hilty, Randall Horst, Ron Jacomini, Karen Kakas, Robert Mazur, Joan McKee, Tracy Ruhlin, Paul Running, Julie Schnell-Madden, A.R. Tio, Scott Townsend, Ralph C. Warren and Lynn Whitney.

meaning when you're a college student. The most important thing about the holiday season now is that it is a long vacation for us. It means more free food from the home refrigerator. It also means earrings for Mom and cologne for Dad, since we're buying presents with the money we make selling our books back. It also means finals week, but the less said about that, the better.

It means legions of students gathered about the color TV to watch such fare as "It's Christmas, Charlie Brown", "Santa Claus is Coming to Town"(my favorite), "Frosty the Snow Man", and the Geraldo Rivera special in which he travels to the North Pole and finds out that Santa Claus is the CEO of a multinational corporation that holds a monopoly on all toy production in the world, and that all his elves are actually from Hong Kong, Korea, or Taiwan. (I won't even mention Mrs. Claus being admitted to the Betty Ford Clinic for a nutmeg addiction). A new twist to Christmas appeared the other night in my dorm when a tape of obscene, raunchy Christmas carols was heard. Since this is a PG-13 paper, I can only quote some of the tamer songs I heard (This used to be a G-rated paper, until we ran that sex poll). One title was "I'll Be Stoned For Christ-on television programs and cartoon characters. Some games actually revolve around the television itself. VCR games like Clue and football are also becoming popular.

These new games and toys of course reflect the advancement of our technology and our TV-oriented society. It would be unreasonable to expect kids today to like the same things we did twelve to fifteen years ago, especially when they could be controlling a tank or solving a murder mystery on television.

But it is still sad to think that future generations of children won't be "making things with light" as the Lite Brite jingle went, because of advanced technology.

mas". Another was "It's Beginning To Look A Lot Like Syphilis."

True, they're disgusting, but it is easy to get tired of all of those traditional songs especially the ones sung by Robert Goulet that are compiled in albums you order from TV commercials. Besides, we're just typical disgusting college males.

Another thing about the college Christmas college season is the abundance of Christmas parties, but you don't need me to mention those, except for where they are, and how many kegs (of eggnog). Well, there was that one on East Merry, but I digress.

When all is said and done, when the sales are over, the toys are broken, and the batteries for the "batteries not included"presents are bought, Christmas still remains the most beautiful of the holidays. The meaning of Christmas still shines through all of the commercials.

A four-day sale cannot replace the love of a family on Christmas morning. This is a time of the year when everyone should stop their hectic lives and remember the true meaning of Christmas. It is not the music, the food, the presents, the parties, the TV specials, or the decorations. It is love. I wish everyone out there a Merry Christmas, full of love and happiness, and a Happy New Year, with peace and a lot of easier classes.
