MARION, Ohio -- The school board decided it will permanently ban students who take weapons to school.

"We're sending a message to our students and also to parents that school has to be a safe environment and students who do not respond to that policy will be excluded from school," River Valley Superintendent David Kirkton said. "We're very serious about this thing."

The new rule applies to students at least 16 years old because they are not required by law to attend school. The board took the action Tuesday.

The school board will use the new policy when a student 16 or older is convicted of at least one of nine felony crimes on school property, including illegal possession of a deadly weapon, Kirkton said. That student then would be expelled.

Judge denies parole:

CINCINNATI -- A judge said the state should not grant parole to a man convicted and given a life sentence in prison 12 years ago for killing his wife and forcing his sister-in-law to have sex.

The Ohio Adult Parole Authority said last month that it is considering early release for Thomas Hale, formerly of suburban Reading. Hale was convicted in 1981.

"This was a particularly vicious murder, kidnapping and two rapes in which the victim was scalped," said Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Thomas Nurre. "It is inconceivable that early release would be considered in such a heinous crime."

Nurre sentenced Hale to consecutive terms of 15 years to life for murder and seven to 26 years on three separate counts of kidnapping and rape.

By law, the presiding judge and prosecutor's office must be contacted by the parole board before early release is considered.

Nurre said that Hale was estranged from his wife at the time of the slaying.

Hale's sister-in-law testified at the trial that she was forced to watch as Hale shot his wife three times. She said Hale then held a .38-caliber revolver to her and raped her.

Clinton praises war veterans

President speaks at Arlington Cemetery

by Terence Hunt
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- President Clinton saluted American veterans Thursday and said the United States must never shrink from what is necessary "to keep our nation secure and our people prosperous."

"A grateful nation remembers," the president said at Arlington National Cemetery after placing a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldiers.

He called attention to the presence of 17 Army Rangers who took part in the fire fight in Somalia in which 18 Americans were killed Oct. 3. Praising their "great ability, success and unbelievable valor," Clinton said, "We are proud of them." The audience stood and applauded.

Clinton later visited the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Martinsburg, W. Va., and said America can pay part of its debt to veterans by assuring them comprehensive health care under his national plan.

"We know we have a moral obligation to protect their security," Clinton said. "I wanted to come here to this hospital today to drive that point home."

Clinton's relations with the military, strained by his avoidance of the draft as a young man, were aggravated by his efforts to lift the ban on homosexuals. With the end of the Cold War, he also has had to oversee a shrinking of military forces and cutbacks in military spending.

He used the occasion of Veterans Day to sign a bill increasing the cost-of-living allowance for the nation's 2.5 million disabled veterans. He also said he had fulfilled his pledge to declassify virtually all documents related to Americans missing in action or held as prisoners in Vietnam.

"Our generation is being asked now to decide whether we will preserve freedom's gains and learn freedom's les-

Ohioans remember sacrificing soldiers

by Lisa Cornwell

Amid flags, military color guards and patriotic music, Ohioans observed Veterans Day in ceremonies around the state Thursday.

Gov. George Voinovich addressed a Veterans Day remembrance on Fountain Square in downtown Cincinnati. He spoke of the sacrifices made not only by veterans, but also their wives and children.

Voinovich toured a Veterans Administration hospital's substance-abuse clinic in Cincinnati and spoke at an induction ceremony for the Ohio Veterans Hall of Fame. Inductees included Ohio Sen. John Glenn, a former Marine pilot in Korea, and astronaut Neil Armstrong, from Wapakoneta.

In Cleveland, about 200 veterans and others gathered for a ceremony commemorating Veterans Day and the 75th anniversary of the armistice that ended World War I.

Two World War I veterans from the Cleveland area, 97-year-old Stanley March and 92-year-old Andrew Jurcak, received commemorative medals.

"Nov. 11 will always be a big day for me," said Jurcak, who served in the U.S. Army. "I just wish the younger generation would have more respect for our armed services and veterans."

Margaret Stano, 69, who also attended the Veterans Day ceremony, agreed. She said the country should place more emphasis on Veterans Day and the sacrifices veterans made.

But the 69-year-old Cleveland resident said she is happy that women veterans are getting recognition for their contributions.

President Clinton on Wednesday proclaimed National Women Veterans Recognition Week to coincide with Veterans Day, and a new Vietnam Women's Memorial was to be dedicated in Washington on Thursday.

Keynote speaker pays tribute to famous writer to obtain support for trade agreement

by Ginger Phillips
human diversity reporter

The Department of Ethnic Studies continued its tenth annual Ethnic Studies Conference and tribute to writer James Baldwin with a keynote speaker Wednesday night.

Houston Baker, a former president of the Modern Language Association, and director of the Center for the Study of Black Literature and Culture read selections from Baldwin's works and other celebrated African-American authors, and spoke on society's definition of multiculturalism.

Baker

"Until some of these things begin to change, I think I'll remain funky and black and talk to you out of that tradition," he said. It makes little sense to define multiculturalism unless each person examines their own presence in society.

Baker related a story about one of the early events in his life which has helped him examine his own presence and that of blacks in society.

The experience gave him optimism that blacks could still maintain their close identity with each other while being successful in a white society.

Baker said he grew up in Louisville, Ky. in a town called "Little Africa" where everybody was black and poor.

He said one day when he was four, his uncle came to his house

"I joyfully see myself as on the left and I don't see myself sliding to the right," Baker said.

He said when he looks in the mirror and sees himself there is no way he is moving into a non-racial definition of multiculturalism.

"I see myself as a funky black male in a very racial country," Baker said. "That's who I am. I was raised that way."

He said many racial problems still exist which prevent the change to a non-racial society. Baker recalled a time when a cab driver would not pick him up because of his color.

WASHINGTON -- With a delicate tax provision hanging in the balance, Ross Perot invited a key group of senators for cocktails and dinner at a downtown Washington hotel.

"It was a stag affair, a sociable cocktail hour, a meal served in very good taste," recalls Russell Long, the former Louisiana senator who at the time, two decades ago, was chairman of the tax-writing Senate Finance Committee.

"Mr. Perot made some entertaining remarks, very appropriate to the occasion. Then the party dragged out a while," Long said. "People got to know the man. He must have gained a vote or two. When the smoke of battle had cleared, he'd won."

The anecdote is a reminder that long before he stepped out as head of a populist political movement and a leader in the fight to defeat the North American Free Trade Agreement, Perot was well known in Washington as an effective wheeler and dealer. His presence was felt from the White House to Capitol Hill.

E.A.R. to the Ground ...

Memo To: H. Ross Perot

Re: Why are you still here? It has come to our attention at Ear to the Ground that you, Mr. Perot, must be the sorest loser in American political history. We feel it necessary to inform you that the campaign is over, and someone else actually won.

At first the folksy grandfather image was cute. But we're tired of your charts, your opinions, your snappy one-liners, the sound of your voice. We don't mean to be critical, Mr. Perot, but it also might help to know what you're talking about.

We've always considered you a bit eccentric, but your NAFTA knucklefest is a classic trip into Perot La La Land. Vice President Gore may as well have debated a bull terrier. Certainly, a dog could have produced more relevant facts.

And what's with your weird claim that the Mexican Mafia wants you dead for opposing NAFTA? It's too late to bow out gracefully Ross, but please do it anyway. The only one left listening is yourself.

No, you weren't going crazy. Almost everything was closed yesterday, and lots of people stayed home, including our University cleaning staff. So why were we here? Veteran's Day is meant to honor those who serve our country and protect our freedom. And after all, many University students are Persian Gulf Veterans.

Yeah, it can be a cheap excuse for a free day. But we're being serious here. Veteran's Day deserves at least the respect and reflection given to the Fourth of July. We can't experience the day fully while constructing equations in calculus.

The Gideons were on campus Thursday distributing New Testaments to students. What bothered some of us is that people seemed to be afraid of them. The Gideons were not screaming about the horrible sins college students commit. They were simply offering a smile, a hello and a Bible to all who walked by.

Perhaps people think every religious figure who comes to campus is going to be like the notorious Brother Jed and so they dodge them. The Gideons were just asking for a smile - next time give it to them because they are the good guys.

Winds of change continue

The winds of change is still blowing in the air. People are not finished getting rid of the incumbents, and are still seeking political change. The off-year elections that took place last week was clearly evident of that. People are fed up and they are willing to get rid of the local politicians to bring in the new.

Every time the elections come around, voters call for change and to get rid of the incumbents. But when election day rolls around they end up voting the incumbents right back into the very same office that they've held. The reason they end up doing this, is because they like their own local politicians, and want the other incumbents out. Due to the fact that we tend to re-elect most of the incumbents in the area we live in, we never see a real change. This is beginning to shift. This slight shift in direction began during the presidential campaigns of 1992.

In 1992 many people were calling for change for the sake of change, while others were calling for change because they were simply fed up. Former president George Bush became a victim of the call for change. Many were fed up with the new tax increases that were implemented in 1990. These new taxes caused the recession and many people their jobs. The recession lingered on for so long and it cost the former president his job.

The wind of change was blowing again earlier this year on April 20, when Republican Richard Riordan defeated Democratic city council member Michael Woo for mayor. This was a race that had national attention, because Los Angeles had a soaring crime rate, unemployment at nine percent, and a crumbling infrastructure. This race also followed the riots of the year before, which left racial tensions. This was the beginning of the president's decline in influence in support of candidates.

Then shortly after Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison, the former State Treasurer of Texas, won the Senate seat vacated by Lloyd Bentsen. Hutchison built her campaign campaigning against Bill Clinton's tax-raising budget plan. She beat Democrat Bruce Krueger, who was supported by the president and was advised by the administration's staff.

The elections that occurred last week was also a big win for the Republican party. Democratic National Committee Chairman David Wilhelm even acknowledged that the Republicans had a "good day."

In New York, incumbent mayor Democrat David Dinkins lost to Republican Rudolph Giuliani. Dinkins was given support by Bill Clinton and White House officials campaigned for him twice.

In New Jersey, Republican Christine Todd Whitman beat the incumbent Democrat James Florio to become the state's new governor. Florio's campaign was directed by Clinton political aides James Carville and Paul Begala. This was not only a victory for Republicans, but also a message to those who raise taxes. Clinton was hoping that Florio would win, to prove that voters can forgive those who raise taxes. Florio gave New Jersey the largest tax increase in history and the people responded by voting him out.

In Virginia, Republican George Allen defeated Democrat Mary Sue Terry for governor. George Allen tried to link Terry to Clinton's policies, and Terry was trying to distance herself from the president. She knew that in order to win she would have to do this. It didn't work.

Locally, here in ward one Republican Todd Kleismit won over Democrat Todd Wesseler and Independent Sam Melendez. Perhaps Kleismit even won by the help of the wind of change that is in the air.

The raising of taxes is the key factor that is prompting this wind of change. People are fed up about taxes being raised. In Washington state Initiative 602, which would have repealed $1 billion in taxes passed this by the state Legislature, was narrowly defeated. This could send a strong message to those running for office again in the state of Washington and those in Washington.

Clinton should find big discomfort with all the victories that have been posted by Republicans in the past year. The Republicans are benefiting from Clinton's low approval ratings, which continue to float between the low 40's and mid-50's. Clinton's ratings have never been high, he has had the lowest ratings of all modern day presidents. Certainly we will never see Clinton's ratings as high as George Bush's. I wouldn't be surprised to find this country in another recession around this time next year, due to the new largest tax increase in history. With the new trend of voting out incumbents who raise taxes and fail to accomplish set agenda's, we will probably find Clinton the next unemployed president, and a Republican president back in office.

In other election results, concerning gay rights, Cincinnati and Lewiston, Maine voters overturned special gay rights legislation. In Portsmouth, N.H. the voters said no to special gay rights. All this follows the uproar over Amendment 2 passed in Colorado, which resulted in many calling for a boycott. What are people going to do now, boycott those places. These anti-gay rights initiatives will also be on many ballots in 94 and 96.

"The Democrats want to say, all politics is local. . . Well, locally, Bill Clinton is very unpopular" says GOP National Committee Chairman. With this in mind the GOP is looking towards making big gains in the House of Representatives and the Senate in 1994. The current trend shows that conservatism runs through this country in the social and political arena.

May the wind of change continue, with the return of Republicans in 1994 and 1996.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Animals do have certain rights

The BG News:

Rick Hackbarth's column "Animals don't retain rights" was the least thought out piece of published work I have ever laid eyes on.

It is obvious to me it had absolutely no forethought, let alone research. After reading the article several times, the only conclusion I can come to is that Hackbarth once heard of something called an "animal rights activist," and decided that it must be a silly liberal idea, wanted an excuse to expound on the details of his idyllic childhood, and realized that he could whip off a no-thought column on the subject.

Well, his half-brained effort made me angry. As a supporter of animal rights (and a vegetarian) I feel that the only meat it would be morally acceptable for me to eat would be from an animal I had killed myself. This does not mean that I believe animals have no rights. By hunting for food (not for sport) we are accepting our rightful place in the animal kingdom. We are forced to accept the fact that we are a part of the food chain and that another creature must die so that we can live. That is a hard thing to remember when one's diet is based on pre-slaughtered, neatly packaged flesh.

Beyond hunting, the examples used by Hackbarth were simply ridiculous. He argues that if animals have equal rights with humans, they should be tried and sentenced for killing other animals. What a ludicrous analogy.

With few exceptions, members of the animal Kingdom (humans excluded) do not kill for pleasure. They kill to eat or to protect themselves. Imagine how crowded our court systems would be if humans were arrested everytime they killed another creature to eat or to protect themselves. It would certainly mean no more hunting for you, Rick. And if you are willing to wander out in the woods with a gun and the intent to kill, you had better accept the fact that you might be the one to die.

An animal can only be expected to protect itself and its offspring.

As far as the argument supporting killing the Alaskan wolves goes, it is plain that once again Hackbarth didn't do his homework. Wolves are not the cause of the decline in numbers of caribou. Alaska passed the law allowing wolf hunting because they want to boost their tourist industry with people who "would rather hunt than go to school." Wolves kill only those herd members who are too weak, sick or young to keep up with the herd. The majority of their diet consists of small rodents; they kill caribou only when they can get them.

I don't mind another person holding a different opinion than my own. But if someone is going to attack a position others care about, he or she had better do their homework first to ensure that they understand the viewpoint they are attacking. That seems to be the one lesson hunting didn't teach the young Mr. Hackbarth.

OSA to discuss students' votes

by Larissa Hritsko
student government reporter

In an effort to gain voting rights for student trustees at state universities' board of trustees meetings, the Ohio Student Association, at its monthly meeting this weekend, will discuss ways to ensure that these voting rights are implemented.

OSA, a state-wide student advocacy group for the 13 public universities, is in the process of presenting the idea for universities' student trustees to gain voting privileges in the board of trustees meetings.

Presently, the two student trustees at the University, who are representatives of the undergraduate and graduate body and are ultimately selected by the governor, attend the board's committee and general meetings, said Jason Jackson, president of the Undergraduate Student Government.

The student trustees have the opportunity to voice their opinions on behalf of their constituents, but not to vote on the issues, he said.

The student trustees should have the right to vote, according to Jen Mathe, USG chairwoman of national, state and community affairs.

"Some of the arguments that have been presented why student trustees should not have voting privileges are that the representatives don't have the confidentiality for it," Mathe said. "However, this is a farce because representatives attend other committee meetings which call for the same confidentiality."

Mathe also said it is essential for student trustees to have voting rights at the board meetings.

"Student trustees should be able to vote along with voicing their opinions because the University is a consumer-based institution based on the formulated decisions of the board of trustees," Mathe said. "Although it is argued that faculty and pay decisions are made at the meeting and do not necessarily pertain to the students' interests, I believe these decisions do affect the students through their education."

At the OSA meeting this weekend, the organization hopes to increase the sponsorship of the piece of legislation being presented by state Rep. Mike Stinziano, D-Columbus calling for student trustee voting rights.

If the 13 Ohio districts with state universities work as a cooperative group with this bill, more of the Ohio districts might be willing to follow their lead, said Jackson, the University's representative of OSA.

"Each Ohio school has been busy this last month lobbying for this bill," Jackson said. "Once the representatives with state schools in their districts sponsor the bill the other district representatives will also see the importance of the bill, allowing for student trustee voting rights."

This issue is the main focus of OSA and until it is seen through, no other new issues will be confronted, according to Mathe.

"Last year OSA was focusing on six to eight issues, however, this year the association is devoting all its efforts to this issue and will continue to do so until this happens, in order to increase the quality of education and students' rights [at state schools]," she said.

The bottom line is that students know what is best for students and having student trustee voting privileges could ensure that student needs are met, Mathe said.

Counselors discuss disorders

Eating problems serious for many University students

by Lisa Gallagher
contributing reporter

Eating disorders are a serious and common problem among University students.

The two most common forms of eating disorders are anorexia nervosa and bulimia nervosa. An estimated six out of every 1000 women have anorexia, and 20 percent of college-age women have bulimia.

To help combat this problem, the University has counseling centers and programs to inform students about eating disorders, and where they can turn for help.

"Eating disorders are an attempt to cope, like biting your fingernails," said Elizabeth Yarris, counselor at the University Counseling Center.

Yarris, who counsels women and girls with eating disorders, said there are many social and cultural pressures to be thin.

"Many girls feel they have to

"You need to be specific about what the problem is, but don't label it as an eating disorder. Also let that person know you care. It's important to know what resources are available. Let the person know there are alternatives."

Jean Wright, director of the Wellness Center be thin to be accepted," Yarris said.

"Having a low self-esteem and being a perfectionist can also be part of the problem," she said.

About three to four students each week also go to the University's Wellness Center, which offers mental and physical health programs, for advice about eating disorders, either for themselves or for a friend.

"When people come to The Well, we concentrate on the recovery process and what will help them," said Jean Wright, director of the center.

On Oct. 27, the Wellness Center hosted a program entitled "Food, Mood and Appetite" for students who are currently seeking help for an eating disorder.

"The program talked about what influences a person's appetite and how to control it," Wright said.

"We also talked about the chemical effects of food on the mind and strategies for making peace with food," she said.

Wright and other employees at the center also go to sororities and other groups on campus to inform University women about food abuse.

"We bring girls [to the programs] who have been through an eating disorder and feel comfortable with talking about it with other women," Wright said.

The Wellness Center also distributes pamphlets, fliers and brochures to students about the different types of eating disorders and how to recognize the signs that someone may have one.

The Counseling Center is another place where students can turn for help.

Barbara Coleman, counselor at the University Counseling Center, said it is common to see people with eating disorders in the center.

"We work with many girls who are anorexic or bulimic. Now we are seeing girls who are both, called bingeing anorexic," she said.

Coleman said there have been men at the center with eating disorders, but it is rare.

"Most men who have eating disorders are athletes who feel they have to be a certain weight," Coleman said.

Beauty contest, dances part of Kappa Kabaret

by Ginger Phillips
human diversity reporter

This weekend Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity will celebrate its 22nd anniversary with their annual Kappa Kabaret Weekend featuring speakers, dances and a beauty contest.

Kappa Alpha Psi President Jeffrey Pate said the Kabaret is a way to inform the community of their anniversary and also to raise money for charities and a scholarship.

"It's basically to assist a woman of color in a financial way, rewarding her in a way of scholarship," Pate said.

Pate said Kappa Alpha Psi invites everyone to participate in the Kabaret events in order to help educate others on multicultural issues.

"It's tailored for people of color but inclusive of all the University," he said.

The Kabaret will begin on Friday, Nov. 12, with a speaker from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom. Rev. Calvin Butts will speak on the topic of Black Consciousness and Afrocentricity.

Brian Stitt, vice president of Kappa Alpha Psi, said Butts is part of a black male think tank in New York City.

Later on in the evening from 10 to 2 a.m. the fraternity will have their first dance of the weekend, a Red-One Dollar Jam.

"You wear a red article of clothing and get in for a dollar," Stitt said. "If not, you just pay an extra dollar."

On Saturday, Nov. 13 the Kabaret will continue with guest speaker Shantel Ransom at 2 to 5 p.m. in the Mileti Alumni Center. Ransom will speak on the roles of African American Women in Society.

The Kabaret will begin on Friday, Nov. 12, with a speaker from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom.

The final event of the weekend, the Kappa Kabaret Dance, will take place from 7 to 12 p.m. in the Ice Arena Banquet Room. Stitt said during the semi-formal dance the winner of their Miss Krimson and Kream contest will be announced. The contest is a way to show people that fraternities do treat women in a positive manner, he said.

Stitt said the Miss Krimson and Kream is not a popularity contest because the winner is selected anonymously through an essay contest.

"We pick a topic for them to write on," Stitt said. "We vote on their essays."

Grads rethinking priorities

College students returning to the comforts of home

by John Williams
College Press Service

A surprise is waiting in store for thousands of college students after they graduate -- instead of getting that job they dream about and setting up their own apartment, many find themselves returning home to live.

The members of Generation X have a new tag: the boomerangers.

Many factors play into this scenario, say two Florida State University professors, that are forcing graduating college students to return to the nest. A weak job market and low-paying jobs are among the causes forcing graduates to rethink priorities and goals and perhaps come to a conclusion that it's time to pack up and move back with mom and dad. Or move in with mom. Or dad. Or mom and her boyfriend. Or dad and his companion.

"There's nothing illogical about it, to kind of live off of your parents for a while," said D. Ray Bardhill, dean of FSU's School of Social Work. "You're grown, so you can do your own thing. Many families don't find a problem with this at all. Parents inherently want their children to do well. Why should the parents live well and see their children do without?"

It is estimated that a substantial portion -- some estimates range up to 40 percent -- of the 19 million adults between the ages of 18 and 34 live at home with one or both of their parents. There are no studies that indicate the number of recent college graduates who have returned home, but Bardhill and Nicholas Mazza, who also teaches in the School of Social Work, believe the number is high.

Bardhill theorizes that the adolescent period of human development, in which parental dependency is a strong factor, is expanding chronologically. "It's a modeling kind of message that can be unhealthy. As long as you're dependent on your parents, you're dependent on them," he said. "We as a culture have extended adolescence until around 28. That's unfortunate. What we're creating is a dependent society."

What the boomerangers are looking for, Bardhill theorizes, is instant material gratification that is nearly impossible for most recent graduates to obtain.

"Our society brainwashes us through a barrage of ads that we're failures if we don't keep up with the Joneses and buy the newest and most improved commodities in the marketplace," Bardhill said. "Our materialistic mindset begins as very young children and intensifies as we enter adulthood."

This, combined with the fact that the job market is fairly tight right now and is going through some fundamental structural changes, is forcing young adults to make the decision to move home for a while.

There can be several attendant problems involved in this, said Mazza, including the fact that students have been living as independent beings, and returning home can put a crimp in their style. Conversely, their parents may not have been static in their personal growth since Junior left for college, so they may have some big adjustments to make, too. This can include divorce, entering new relationships or a new marriage.

"For the college student returning home, the critical issue is readjustment," Mazza said. "You have a young adult returning home, so perhaps from the student perspective there may be some tendency for the parents to be involved more than he or she may find necessary."

"Clearly, returning home from the college students' perspective can be a sense of disappointment and failure, so while the practicality says they may need to return home, emotionally this could be devastating."

The situation doesn't necessarily have to be all bad, he said.

"It has potential to be healthy or unhealthy depending on the circumstances. It can be a temporary solution and still move forward and maintain some element of hope," Mazza said.

What about a sense of freedom and independence and such issues as staying out late and maintaining your love life?

Bardhill suggests that the young adult and the parents work out what both sides can live with, but with the caveat that the parents do rule the roost.

BG students start Semper Fiedelis support society

As a way of celebrating the 218th birthday of the Marines "a few good men" and women involved in the University's Marine program met Wednesday to carry on the tradition of the Marine Corps by establishing one of its traditions at the University.

The students met in the Offenbauer Towers Wednesday to have the first campus meeting of the Semper Fiedelis Society, a national marine organization.

Zach Green, a reserve in the Marines is the founder of the society at the campus which is intended to be a fraternity and support group for Marines on campus.

"Semper Fiedelis is the motto of the marine corp. It means 'always faithful,'" Green said.

The group was formed to bring the marines on campus closer together, he said.

"A lot of marines and a lot of potential marines are unaware that there are others on campus. Basically we'd just like to get to know each other better," he said.

Ruth Ristivy, another marine, said she plans to be active in the new organization. She completed the officer training program this summer and will be commissioned as a second lieutenant upon graduation in 1995.

"I think the Semper Fiedelis Society can really be a learning experience for people looking to get into the marines. We can show people the history and the traditions of the marines and let them know what we stand for."

"I think the Semper Fiedelis Society can really be a learning experience for people looking to get into the marines" Ristivy said. "We can show people the history and the traditions of the marines and let them know what we stand for."

"I also think it can be helpful to me personally. I'll get to know all the people a lot better than I did before," she said.

In addition, he would like the organization to work on service projects both on and off campus. He is hoping to get the group involved with the University of Toledo's Marine organizations and the University's ROTC program.

sons," the president said.

"We are being asked to decide whether we will maintain the high state of readiness that stood behind our victory, or fritter away the seed corn of our security," he said.

He also said the nation is being "asked whether we will swell the global tide of freedom by promoting democracy and open world markets."

"To honor those who served in Europe and Korea and Vietnam and the Persian Gulf, in scores of posts at home and abroad, let us today resolve we will not shrink from the responsibilities necessary to keep our nation secure and our people prosperous," the president said.

Veterans Day marked the 75th anniversary of the end of World War I, and Clinton presented a commemorative medal to Stanley Coolbaugh, representing 30,000 surviving veterans of that war. He also gave medals to four vets at the hospital in West Virginia.

Clinton, at breakfast in the East Room, said the United States at times is faced with a pivotal question: "To what extent must America engage with the rest of the world?"

NAFTA treaty gains support

by Katherine Rizzo
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- The ranks of the undecided narrowed Thursday as three Ohio fence-sitters came out in favor of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Reps. David Hobson and John Kasich, both Republicans, and Rep. David Mann, a Democrat, announced they will vote for the agreement.

That leaves just two undecided Ohioans: Republican Paul Gillmor and Democrat Tom Sawyer.

Mann's decision means he is bucking the labor unions who helped him win his congressional seat. Organized labor opposes the treaty for fear it would cause an exodus of factory jobs to Mexico.

Even with union support, Mann expects a tough re-election campaign. He won his seat last year with 51 percent of the vote and he is on the early list of races the GOP is targeting.

"The politics say vote no, the merits say vote yes," Mann said Thursday. "The merits just say it's right."

Mann said he examined evidence of American companies harming the environment at plants in Mexico, paying Mexican workers less per day than Americans make in an hour, and moving factories to take advantage of the low wages and lax enforcement of environmental laws.

"I agree with the reality of the problems that they describe. I just don't agree with the solution," Mann said.

"I believe NAFTA will help to make our nation better by helping to create new jobs," he said. "If you take those tariffs down we ought to be able to sell more."

Kasich supported NAFTA from the start, but later pulled back. He said he reconsidered his position after listening to the arguments against the treaty.

"Many opponents have legitimately questioned whether this agreement will cause American manufacturers to move to Mexico," he said. "I am convinced these fears are unfounded and in fact, NAFTA will translate into more jobs and more opportunity for Americans."

Hobson said he was persuaded to vote for the treaty in part by state Agriculture Director Fred Dailey, who produced statistics showing increased exports of farm products from Ohio to Mexico.

The point was underscored by the Ohio Farm Bureau, corn growers, soybean growers, pork producers, cattlemen and other agricultural groups.

"I've heard from many farmers in my district who tell me that they want to increase their opportunity to sell more of their products in Mexico," he said.

Hobson said he also took into consideration Navistar International Corp.'s announcement that the truckmaker will not close its body plant in Springfield, Ohio, as the United Auto Workers Union feared.

The implementing legislation for the treaty also included language that Hobson and others requested to protect the broom, flat glass and glassware industries.

"The decision ultimately comes down to whether we are better off with or without NAFTA," Hobson said.

For Gillmor and Sawyer, there's nothing but more pressure ahead from both sides of the NAFTA debate.

Judges feel drug law unfair

by Laurie Asseo
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- When 19-year-old Keith Edwards was caught selling crack cocaine, the judge who sent him to prison for 10 years said it was "one of the unfair sentences that I have ever had to impose."

It was Edwards' first offense, but federal law gave U.S. District Judge Alan H. Nevas no choice.

Now, as part of the big crime bill nearing a vote, Congress is considering an "escape clause" to let some first-time offenders avoid strict mandatory minimum sentences. Instead, they would be sentenced under federal guidelines that give judges more leeway to fit the punishment to the crime.

Many judges would welcome that.

Nevas had told Edwards, who was arrested in 1991 in Hartford, Conn., "You deserve to go to jail, but 10 years is going to be very, very tough, and I hope that you don't come out embittered and hardened and tough, and angry at the world."

Now, Perot assails lobbyists as "fellows with thousand-dollar suits and alligator shoes."

During Tuesday's televised debate with Vice President Al Gore, Perot bristled and called Gore a liar when he suggested Perot had lobbied on tax matters in the past.

"We are being sold out by foreign lobbyists," Perot said. "We've got 33 of them working on this in the biggest lobbying effort in the history of our country to ram NAFTA down your throat."

Gore shot back: "I served in the Congress, and I don't know of any single individual who lobbied the Congress more than you did, or people in your behalf did, to get tax breaks for your companies."

Perot's criticism of lobbyists is "pure hypocrisy," said John Buchanan, a former Republican congressman who investigated Perot and his former company, Electronic Data Systems, in the 1970s.

Federal law sets mandatory minimum sentences for drug cases tried in federal courts. The sentences are based on the amount of drugs involved, and there is no exception for first-time, nonviolent offenders.

Opponents of long mandatory sentences for first-time offenders say they are unfair and counterproductive. But supporters say they are the only way to make sure judges impose substantial terms for serious crimes.

"Yes, there are going to be individual cases of injustice," said Richard Samp of the Washington Legal Foundation, which supports mandatory minimum sentences.

"But there were many more cases of injustice before mandatory minimums, where judges were imposing lesser sentences than the crime warranted," he said.

All drug crimes are inherently violent, Samp contended, because drug selling is a violent industry.

Congress has legislated mandatory minimum sentences for many federal crimes, but they are used most often in drug and weapons cases. Some states have similarly strict laws. In Michigan, for example, a first offender can be sentenced to life in prison without parole for possessing 1 1/2 pounds of cocaine.

Federal sentences allow no parole, although convicts can earn up to 54 days a year in "good time" credits.

Terry Van Gundy of Le Claire, Iowa, served 49 months in federal prison on his five-year sentence for possession with intent to deliver a kilogram of cocaine.

"Granted, I'm guilty," he said in an interview. But he contends he would have served less time if he had committed a violent crime and been prosecuted in state court.

"The 14 months I was on bond [before going to prison] was more than enough to convince me" to stay away from drugs," Van Gundy said.

Drug suspects can get shorter sentences under the federal mandatory minimum law only if prosecutors certify they cooperated by turning in other drug offenders.

Nicole Richardson, 21, drew a 10-year prison term after being convicted of helping her boyfriend sell LSD in Mobile, Ala., in 1990.

The sentencing judge said everyone else convicted in the sale was more culpable than Richardson. But all got shorter prison terms -- five years at most -- because they helped prosecutors.

Richardson never handled any drugs or money, said her lawyer, Richard Shields, although she did tell the LSD supplier where to find her boyfriend and went with her boyfriend to get money from the supplier.

Her main offense was failing to "dissociate herself from those people. It's just ridiculous," Shields said.

However, Paul McNulty of the First Freedom Coalition, a new group that promotes strict drug laws, said the threat of a long mandatory sentence helps prosecutors break up drug organizations.

Men's basketball faces uphill battle

Inside strength will be focus of Falcon offense

by Mike Kazimore
sports writer

TOLEDO -- The Bowling Green men's basketball team is in the opposite situation that it was in last year, but the end result -- a bottom of the pack finish -- should be the same.

Last year BG entered the season with an experienced backcourt and a relatively inexperienced front line. With the departure of the senior guard tandem of Michael Huger and Vada Burnett, however, head coach Jim Larranaga will have to rely on his front court players if he hopes to be successful.

Success is something that the Falcons -- who have serious questions to be answered in the backcourt -- are not supposed to generate this year -- at least in the eyes of the MAC media. In fact, BG was picked to finish seventh in the MAC media pre-season poll.

One of the major reasons that the Falcons were picked seventh is because of their backcourt situation, something that Larranaga labeled as a major concern.

"Right now, replacing our backcourt is a major concern of mine," Larranaga said. "We have three guys battling for the point guard position in Mike Swanson, Mick Milnark and Antonio Daniels who is a freshman with good size and ball-handling skills. One will start, one will back him up and the other one will be a second-team backup."

Whoever happens to win the starting slot will be given plenty of help in handling the ball and starting the offensive sets Larranaga said.

One area where the Falcons have no question marks is in the pivot where they return the MAC's 1991-92 Freshman of the Year in Shane Kline-Ruminski. Ruminski, who averaged 12 points and 5.4 rebounds per game last season, will be the focal point of this year's offense.

"We will certainly try to establish Shane Kline-Ruminski's scoring ability around the basket," Larranaga said. "He will become our primary inside threat and our main focus will be to put the ball in his hands on a regular basis and allow his inside game to open up the outside game for other people."

"The improvement of Floyd Miller's inside game will also TOLEDO -- The Mid-American Conference basketball race sizes up to be a shootout, with as many as six or seven teams in a position to challenge for the league title.

The MAC coaches agree the talent level will be near an all-time best. Fans will enjoy more up-tempo play as college basketball reduces the shot clock from 45 seconds to 35 seconds.

Western Michigan coach Bob Donewald's team was the consensus pick by the media as the pre-season favorite Thursday. The MAC media voted the Broncos as a heavy favorite with 27 first-place votes and 476 total points.

"We'll take it [No. 1 selection] and go; we have a good team in place," Donewald said. "The ranking has no bearing on our team, whether we're picked first or tenth, we just have to go out and play."

Ohio University was second with 13 first-place votes and 440 points, followed by Toledo, Ball State, Eastern Michigan, Miami of Ohio, Bowling Green, Kent, Akron and Central Michigan.

Four of the top five players in the league return, including Ohio's Gary Trent, Ball State's Steve Payne and Jeermal Sylvester and Western Michigan's Leon McGee.

Trent pulled off a rare double as a freshman last season, a unanimous choice as MAC freshman of the year and MAC Player of the Year.

Western Michigan returns all five starters from a team that went 17-12 last season and finished third in the conference (12-6).

Returning first-team All-MAC selection Leon McGee (14.3 ppg/3.6 rpg) will move from shooting guard to point guard for his senior season.

"This will be the best basketball the MAC has had in my years," Donewald said. "As a result of NCAA reductions in grant and aid, the kid that might be 13th or 14th man at an Indiana or Purdue is looking somewhere else."

"The MAC schools are a viable alternative."

Parents, seniors to be honored at v-ball games

by Jamie Schwaberow
sports writer

The Falcon volleyball team is heading into its final weekend at home and is taking on Kent Friday at 7 p.m. and Akron Saturday at 4 p.m.

Friday night is Parents' Night in BG to start off the weekend's exciting events.

Kent is coming into Bowling Green in 7th place in the Mid-American Conference with a 5-9 league record. They are led by junior Amy Filiaggi who is among Kent's career best in kills, digs, block solos, block assists, and total blocks.

Lindi Morrison has also provided a spark recently, being named MAC Player of the Week last Monday.

Earlier this season the Falcons played a solid steady game to defeat the Golden Flashes by a score of 15-6, 15-12, 15-4.

"We played good consistent volleyball and had good ball control last match against Kent," BG coach Denise Van De Walle said.

Saturday is BG's Senior Recognition Day. The two seniors who will be recognized are Nicky Mudrak and Amy Morgan. Mudrak is the team captain and a three-year letter-winner and Amy is a two-year letter-earner.

Mudrak is coming into the weekend 17 kills shy of 750 for her career. She is also leading the team with 1.32 blocks per game, and is 4th in the league in that category.

Akron is tied for 4th in the conference with Toledo with a 6-8 record. The Zips have many players in the top ten in league statistics, including Lisa Blanchard who is leading in digs per game with 3.92.

Van De Walle feels that the net play will be very important in this match.

"We need to make them work hard on defense with our offense and our blocking."

Akron as a whole is 3rd in the league in aces per game. Lisa Blanchard and Patti Godzinski are 8th and 9th, respectively with .37 and .36 apg.

The Zips have played good on Saturday afternoon games this season, noted BG assistant coach Ernie Gilbert. The Falcons, however, have lost to only league-leading Ball State in MAC home games this seasons.

"This is a big weekend for a lot of reasons for everyone involved," Van De Walle said. "Our reason is because of our Parents Night, senior recognition, and it is our last home weekend of the season."

"For Kent, Akron and Toledo, this weekend is big to attempt to clinch a tournament spot."

The Falcons have already clinched a tournament spot and are just playing to receive a good seeding now.

"We've been real appreciative of our fans this season and we would really like to see a lot of fans here this weekend to give Nicky and Amy a nice good-bye showing," Van De Walle said.

Linemen lead Notre Dame

The Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. -- Finding the marquee players on No. 2 Notre Dame's offense is like stargazing on a cloudy night. Just because they're hard to see doesn't mean they're not out there.

The second-ranked Fighting Irish quietly have become the nation's eighth-highest scoring team with a quarterback that doesn't throw much, running backs who seem to change every play and receivers who are best known for their blocking.

But the Irish are anything but subtle.

They batter opponents behind an offensive line that weighs nearly 1,500 pounds combined and could be the finest unit ever at a school known for its outstanding offensive linemen.

"I'd have to say it's the best offensive line I've played against," said Irish defensive tackle Jim Flanigan, a senior who has practiced against many talented linemen.

"I know that was one of the big question marks at the beginning of the season, but with the rushing yards we've produced this year I don't think there's any question that they are one of the most dominant lines in the country."

While No. 1 Florida State has scored a best-in-the-nation 44.3 points a game this season with its thrill-a-minute offense, Notre Dame is not far behind at 37 points a game.

The smallest member of the Notre Dame offensive line that will start against the Seminoles on Saturday is center Tim Ruddy, who weighs 286 pounds but also is the strongest player on the team with a bench press in excess of 500 pounds.

The Irish favor a low-gear, low-profile style that the small and quick Seminoles will be hard-pressed to stop.

"We'll have to beat them off the ball, that's the only way," said Florida State defensive end Derrick Alexander. "You don't beat them off the ball, they are going to drive so far ahead because of the size difference as well as the athletic ability."

Notre Dame is working hard this week to devise a scheme to slow down Florida State quarterback Charlie Ward, a virtual lock to win the Heisman Trophy.

But it could be the 260-pound Alexander who has the most unenviable job Saturday when he lines up across from 6-foot-4, 299-pound tackle Aaron Taylor.

Taylor, an All-American at guard a year ago, is the only offensive lineman among four finalists for the Lombardi Award, given to the nation's best linemen.

"If I can just hold my ground I feel like I've accomplished something," said Alexander.

After a slow start this season, Notre Dame's offensive line has manhandled most opponents.

The Irish average just over 275 yards rushing a game, and have run for better than 300 yards each of the past four games, including 426 in their last game against Navy.

The line, which has had 10 different starters this season, has turned no-frills tailback Lee Becton into one of the nation's most productive runners. Becton, a junior with only average speed, can tie a Notre Dame record against Florida State with his fifth-straight 100-yard game.

Cross heading to Districts

by Paul Markoff
sports writer

The Bowling Green men's cross country team will engage in possibly its final meet this weekend as they run against the Midwest's toughest competition at the NCAA District qualifying meet.

The meet takes place in Bloomington, Indiana at the University of Indiana where the Falcons will battle three of the top 20 teams in the nation.

This stiff competition includes Michigan, Notre Dame and Wisconsin. The top three finishing teams and the top 20 individual runners will advance to the NCAA finals. Unfortunately for BG, the race couldn't have come at a worse time.

"The team is not at full strength right now," BG coach Sid Sink said. "We've lost two of our top seven runners."

The two runners to which Sink is referring are Brad Schaser and James Devaney. Schaser will miss the meet due to back spasms which occurred during the Mid-American Championship two weeks ago.

"The doctor informed us that Brad is not to run for at least one week," Sink said. "It's somewhat disappointing after a successful season for Brad."

Devaney, on the other hand, will not run due to problems with his shins.

"We're afraid James may have a stress fracture. He will be out for quite a while," Sink said.

Filling the spots of Schaser and Devaney will be Dave Exner and Tom Williams. The rest of the squad will include Eddie Nicholson, Derric Kenne, Brian Butler, Tim Arndt, and Dave Lincicome.

Sink feels the race will be quite a challenge and that there is a slim chance a few Falcons may qualify.

Scoreboard operators, stay alert!

Tomorrow's Mid-American Conference matchup between Bowling Green and Central Michigan does not figure to be a grueling, defensive slugfest.

On the contrary, sparks are expected to fly in Mount Pleasant when the ball is kicked off at 1 p.m.

The Falcons, (5-0-1 in the MAC, 6-2-1 overall), are one of the MAC's premier offensive squads, averaging a league-best 26.6 points per contest.

Central, however, is the premier offensive team, pounding out 436 yards and racking up over 26 points a game.

The Chippewas (4-3 MAC, 4-5 overall) are led by senior quarterback Joe Youngblood, who is by far the MAC's best passer.

Youngblood is averaging 249 passing yards per contest, and has thrown for 2,078 yards and 16 touchdowns. His passing efficiency of 148.22 is conference-best.

Falcon head coach Gary Blackney believes Youngblood offers Central a deadly double threat.

"The thing that makes him multi-dimensional is not just that he is an outstanding passer," Blackney said. "But he's a good runner."

"He's able to scramble and he's able to take off with the ball."

Youngblood's talented arm will lay much of the defensive responsibility upon the shoulders of the defensive backfield, one of the most productive areas on the squad.

The secondary has gone through a little adjustment lately, as Steve Ayers has been inserted into the boundary cornerback position, and Darnell Staten moved to strong safety.

"The more we evaluated it," Blackney said. "The more we felt like (Ayers) might be the fourth-best defensive back."

"That's a process that's ongoing. We're always trying to find the best people to get on the football field. This makes us a stronger secondary than we have been."

The young defensive backfield, which lost every starter from last year's squad, has been celebrated for its outstanding play this season.

Safety Steve Rodriguez, who made all of six tackles last year, is one big reason for the celebration.

Rodriguez is third on this year's team with 65 tackles, including 28 solos. He leads the secondary in both of those cate-

Name	Tackles	Assists	Total	Break-ups	Int.	Yards
Steve Rodriguez	28	37	65	2	2	0
Darnell Staten	26	20	46	2	0	0
George Johnson	24	16	40	3	3	55

Steve Ayers	14	6	20	1	1	20

gories, and has also been credited with two fumble recoveries and two interceptions.

Blackney sees Rodriguez and Staten as the keystones to the Falcon pass defense.

"Over the course of the season, of course, (the secondary) has played very well as a unit," Blackney said. "I would have to say that in terms of consistency and performance, that Darnell and Steve have probably played as well as anyone back there."

The entire defense will have to be on its toes Saturday, as the Falcons try to retain at least a tie for the MAC lead.

MAC race a tight one

The Associated Press

Preventing someone from winning a league championship is no substitute for actually winning it yourself.

But for a handful of teams in the Mid-American Conference, it may have to suffice.

Ball State, Bowling Green and Western Michigan all enter the final two weeks of conference play with their fingers crossed that they can continue to win while the others somehow and in some way stumble.

Ball State and Bowling Green lead the MAC with marks of 6-2-1 overall and 5-0-1 in the conference, with Western nipping at their heels at 6-3 and 5-1.

On Saturday, Ball State plays at Akron (5-4, 4-3 MAC), while Bowling Green travels to Central Michigan (4-5, 4-3) and Western entertains Toledo (3-6, 2-4).

Adding to the crazy stretch run is that nobody has an easy road. Ball State hasn't been overpowering but has won four MAC games - by eight or fewer points. The Cardinals play an injury-ravaged Akron team that is coming off perhaps its best performance of the year, a 19-7 victory over Eastern Michigan.

"Akron is an awfully good team," said Ball State coach Paul Schudel. "They dominated Eastern as well as anybody has. I'm sure this will be one of our tougher games of the year."

Akron coach Gerry Faust said he has lost 16 players to season-ending injuries so far. The latest is quarterback Marcel Weems, who went down with a knee injury against Eastern.

"I don't think we want to take on the role of spoiler," Faust said. "For the media, they're the ones who like to use the word

'spoilers.' I think really our focus is on playing a really good football team that's right there in the hunt and see how we measure up, even knowing full well where we are as far as the standings."

Western coach Al Molde said there is a danger in watching the scoreboard. A week ago, the Broncos led 34-6 going into the fourth quarter at Ohio U. but ended up having to break up a pass in the end zone to win 34-28.

"We don't want to be distracted by hoping that something happens," he said. "If we end up a half-game out of this thing at the end and we've played our best, then we'll be happy with that."

Western finishes up next week by hosting Bowling Green, while Ball State entertains Kent.

Other games Saturday find Miami of Ohio (2-7, 1-6) at Kent (0-9, 0-7) and Ohio U. (3-7, 3-5) at Eastern Michigan (4-5, 3-3).

Two women harriers aiming for Nationals

by Eric Bishoff
sports writer

The Bowling Green women's cross country team heads into the final meet of the year on a positive note.

BG coach Steve Price feels that his team, going in to the NCAA District championship, feels his team is prepared.

"We have had good workouts by a few individuals and should be ready," Price said. "We have set goals for ourselves that I feel the team can reach."

Price says the Falcons have set three goals:

- 1) to finish - at the very least - in the top 12
- 2) to beat one or more of the Mid-American Conference teams that beat them at the MAC Championships, and 3) to finish in the top 12 at District.

The NCAA District Championships are being held at the cross country course on the campus of Indiana University. The field will consist of 30-35 teams with the top three teams continuing on to the NCAA National Championships.

Of the teams competing in the Midwest District, two of the nation's top 25 teams will compete. The University of Michigan is ranked third and the University of Notre Dame is ranked 17.

The top three ranked teams in the top ten for the District meet are: Michigan at #1, Notre Dame #2, and Minnesota #3.

Western Michigan at #7 is the highest-ranked MAC school.

Competing in the District Championships are all of the Division I schools in the states of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Individually for the Falcons, they have two runners that coach Price feels have a chance at qualifying for the national meet.

"If Tracy Losi can deal with her sore foot, then I think she will finish the season strong," Price said. "Laura Hall should also compete well at the meet."

If the Falcons are to compete as a team this weekend, then they will have to have good days out of their three, four and five runners.

allow Shane to play on the perimeter where his ability to shoot the perimeter jump shot will make him a dual threat."

In order for Ruminiski to become the offensive force that Larranaga hopes he will be the guards must be able to get him the ball in a scoring position. With such a young backcourt this could be a major problem.

Larranaga hopes, however, that the experience of the inside players will help the inexperienced guards in this area.

"I think that it's harder for an experienced guard to get an inexperienced post player the ball than it is the other way around so I think that we'll be okay in that respect," Larranaga said. Another major concern for BG comes in the form of rebounding -- especially on the defensive side of the ball. In order for the Falcons to play the up-tempo kind of game that they want to they must be able to crash the boards in a more effective fashion.

"If we are able to rebound we should be able to run. If you control the backboards then you can determine your own fate in terms of whether or not you want to run or walk. We would like to be a running team as often as we possibly can and we will be pushing the ball."

According to members of the MAC media, the Falcons, who are 100-100 during Larranaga's reign as head coach, may be lucky to push the .500 mark this season.

three other starters. Guards Chad Estis (9.0 ppg) and Gus Johnson (9.9 ppg) are definite threats from behind the three-point arc while Trent (19.0 ppg/9.3 rpg) will be even better this season according to his coach.

"We are more talented than any team I've had in my five years, but the team is still inexperienced," Hunter said.

Toledo will return its most experienced group during coach Larry Gipson's three years at the helm, returning all but one key player from last years 12-16 fifth place MAC team.

Gipson's three guard offense will have a year's experience with seniors Sam Brown (11.8 ppg) and Archie Fuller (14.4 ppg/3.1 rpg), as well as sophomore Craig Thames (12.2 ppg/4.8 rpg), all capable of taking over a game on a given night.

"Almost every team has three or more starters back from last season, from top to bottom the conference will be strong," Gipson said.

Ball State will try and defend its MAC co-championship under first year coach Ray McCallum, a former assistant at Wisconsin.

The Cardinals were 26-8 last year, including a 14-4 MAC mark which tied them with Miami. Ball State won the MAC Tournament and advanced to the NCAA Tournament for the third time in five years.

Returning to the 1993-94 squad are first-team All-MAC picks Payne (12.4 ppg/9.9 rpg) and Sylvester (14.1 ppg/4.6 rpg). Payne is currently ineligible but has been working out with the team and McCallum hopes to have him back when league play begins in January.

"I know the league from my playing experience 10 years ago and I think the league is changing towards a more athletic style of play," he said.

Eastern Michigan coach Ben Braun will look to the pre-season and non-conference road schedule to test his team and ready them for MAC play.

The Eagles return senior guard Ellory Morgan (15.5 ppg) and junior center Theron Wilson (9.0 ppg/4.4 rpg) to try and improve a team that went 13-17.

"We have several experienced players returning but I'm also excited about the six new players we are bringing in," Braun said. "We should be a formidable team and highly competitive in the MAC race."

Miami, O. will add a touch of Kentucky style basketball this season under first-year coach Herb Sendek, a former UK assistant under Rick Pittino.

Sendek's up-tempo style, similar to that employed at Kentucky, will be a significant change for Miami which has made its mark the last two seasons with a deliberate, defensive approach.

Senior center John McKenna (8.2 ppg/4.9 rpg) has been a member of two straight MAC Championship teams and will be the leader for the Redskins.

Bowling Green coach Jim Larranaga's major concern is in the backcourt, where inexperienced Mike Swanson, true-freshman Antonio Daniels, and former walk-on Mick Milnark will compete at point guard.

This may be the eighth-year coach's toughest job yet as he tries to win a MAC Championship which has eluded him in each of his first seven years.

The Falcons best MAC record under Larranaga was 10-6 in 1987.

Center Shane Kline-Rumniski (12.0 ppg/5.4 rpg), forward Floyd Miller (7.2 ppg/5 rpg) and forward/guard Shane Komives (9 ppg/2.6 rpg) are the leading returners for BG.

"Shane Komives has not practiced in the last two weeks because of an ankle injury so that is a concern," Larranaga said. "We are in the opposite situation from last year. We will be experienced in the front court while our back court people will be inexperienced."

Kent is at least a year away. Coach Dave Grube will dress a team which includes three freshmen, seven sophomores and two seniors.

Akron enters its second year as a member of the MAC and has a lot of room for improvement following a 3-15 inaugural league mark.

Central Michigan first-year coach Leonard Drake will need a miracle to finish anywhere but near the basement.

The rookie coach inherits a team which lost its top four scorers from a year ago. After coach Keith Dambrot was fired for racial remarks, the next five best players also quit, leaving Drake with an eight-man roster.

The Insider Magazine is published every Friday during the academic year by the Board of Student Publications of Bowling Green State University.

Opinions expressed by columnists do not necessarily reflect the opinions of The Insider Magazine.

Readers are encouraged to voice their opinions to Insider Magazine with Letters to the Editor, which will be published in each issue. Entries should be submitted to Insider Magazine, 214 West Hall, Bowling Green, OH and they should include a phone number where you can be reached for conformation.

From the Editors...

As of this writing, the once great Bernie Kosar has gone to the now great Dallas Cowboys, where he'll be used as a safety net, should Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman need someone to get him a drink of water or maybe run a few errands, or whatever.

Kosar will also be on hand to QB the 'boys if Aikman's nagging hamstring injury continues to keep him off the field. And, did you ever notice that hamstring injuries are almost always considered "nagging"? You never hear of groin injuries referred to like that. ("Well, Ray, Esiason's out for three weeks with a nagging groin injury.")

And the campus has been buzzing about Kosar's new football home, about how he'll be going from quarterbacking the 5-3 (but let's face it, mediocre) Browns to the 6-2 (and the closest thing to a Superbowl shoe-in) Cowboys.

We here at The Insider, after much consideration, have taken the following position:

Who cares? Kosar's been washed up ever since Elway thrashed him in the last of a trio of championship games.

That was 1989. Today, Kosar's Mike Brady hair now comes complete with a Mike Brady arm. And if you think an "athlete" with all the mobility of Art Modell will do anything more than take Troy Aikman's dinner order, than you probably think Brian Sipe will be starting this Sunday.

That is all.

ALICE IN CHAINS

(Please send all angry letters to "I Hate You For Saying Anything Bad About Bernie Kosar," c/o The Insider, 210 West Hall.)

Enough about sports. This week, Jeneveve Sutton, a freelance writer extraordinaire, chats with a little group you just might have heard of -- they call themselves The Beatles.

No, wait. That's wrong. They call themselves Alice in Chains.

Sutton got their attention this summer at Lollapalooza and reported back to we here at The I. (And the cover art is courtesy of Bullethead, a new shop in BG that's opening Saturday to supply you with all sorts of rock and roll paraphernalia. Thanks Bullethead.)

And there's more in store. Mary Katharine Okorn examines the effects of last week's rally against the Bowling Green Politics Department.

David Coehrs profiles a University radio duo, The Big Hairy Posse, who's gaining popularity by leaps and bounds and who really, really enjoy using their E-mail.

As usual, we have a big mess of music reviews to help guide you in your listening endeavors. This week, we look at Pearl Jam's new one, assuming you haven't already purchased it.

And, whether you want him or not, you got him: the one, the only... Dr. Dave.

Thanks for reading and drive safely.

From ...Us.

Protest needed more focus

Well, it seems as if last week's rally against the Bowling Green Police Division sparked some serious debate over the hidden agenda and moral turpitude of a principal rally organizer, Michelle "Micki" McQuate.

Unfortunately, the lurid details fueling speculation about the genesis of the "Protest Against the Police" are relevant to those who chose to support what seemed like a good cause -- prioritizing crimes against women.

At face value, one would be hard-pressed to articulate a problem with women wanting serious attention paid to their safety and security. However, there is a serious problem when hysteria and hidden motives facilitate potentially false notions about what the police in this town are doing to protect the women who live here.

The protest organizers should have attempted to contact the police department to find out exactly what kind of investigation it was conducting. Because they didn't make attempts to contact the police and discover the nature of the investigation, they just assumed nothing was being done.

Perhaps they assumed nothing was being done because no perpetrator was behind bars, or perhaps they assumed nothing was being done because McQuate said the police didn't give her any gauze for her bleeding nose or water for her parched throat when she was attacked.

I first heard that a rally was being organized in the context of a women's studies class. In retrospect, I realize there was probably no better place to lobby for supporters than in women's studies classes, but now I question the ethics of a plan that looks ill-conceived -- well-intentioned certainly, ill-conceived nonetheless.

We were told that the police weren't doing anything to protect us. We were told that they weren't even attempting to find out who the rapist was, or even make connections between the rapes, when in fact, the police claim that they networked with other police agencies in the area to facilitate incarceration of a suspect.

It made sense to us, and I'm sure it made sense to the rest of the innocents who attended the rally -- but would it have made so much sense if we had been aware that the police, in reality, had the FBI conduct a profile of the suspect?

Would we have been so willing to participate and carry signs and march to the police station if we knew that the police canvassed the neighborhoods where the rapes took place, distributed packets to patrolling officers informing them of the details of the crimes and conducted decoy operations with female officers, among other things? Probably not.

I wonder how participants would have reacted had they known that Micki McQuate is fresh from being convicted by the Bowling Green Police Department for criminal mischief and quoted on record as referring to an ex-roommate as a "nigger." Isn't McQuate the same person who called for sensitivity training for women and people of color?

Isn't it conceivable, given McQuate's reportedly volatile disposition, that she had a hidden agenda against the police when she claimed they did nothing to find her attacker?

It was morally reprehensible that the organizers led people down the street under false pretenses. I'm not saying that the false pretenses were deliberately fabricated. I am saying that it was irresponsible to organize and conduct a march without making any attempt to contact the police and find out what they were doing.

However, all of this does not negate the possible validity of the claim that the police need sensitivity training. As a matter of fact, anyone who believes that women bring rape and assault on themselves when they walk alone, when they wear shape-flattering clothing, or when they walk after dark needs to do some serious re-evaluation of their expectations for women. Women are right to refuse to drastically alter or limit their lifestyles simply to protect themselves from the brutality of men who are so inclined to brutalize. (Please notice I did not refer to all men -- I am not of the school of thought that believes all men are genetically predisposed to want to overpower those physically weaker than themselves.)

Police Chief Galen Ash's comment that if the rapist wasn't caught it was the fault of everyone who publicized it is illustrative of my point, to say nothing of the impaired logic of the statement. (Rapists aren't any more inclined to run and hide than murderers -- yet normal publicity of a murder isn't said to hinder apprehension of the murderer.) It seems as if the police division, and those who adopt the "change your ways" attitude, want to put the blame on women all the way around -- it's our fault that we're getting raped because we walk alone and because we want to heighten awareness of crimes against women.

Maybe the organizers of the protest would have had better success if they had been more focused about what was making them angry and uncomfortable. Perhaps now a mutual dialogue between the police and the people concerned with heightening sensitivity to women's issues can foster an attitude of mutual responsibility and respect between both parties.

'Innocence' shows Scorsese's brilliance

by Todd Stanley
contributing writer

Martin Scorsese has always used New York as a major setting for his films. From "Goodfellas" and "Taxi Driver" to (obviously) "New York, New York."

Having grown up in the city, Scorsese has always shown the dirty but realistic side of street life. But with the scoring of Best Direction awards from the Academy for his gritty films "Raging Bull" and "Goodfellas," Scorsese seeks a change of pace by keeping the same setting of New York but drastically switching the scene to the high society of the 1800's in Edith Wharton's "The Age of Innocence."

Taken from the Pulitzer Prize winning novel, the story concerns the tribulations of one Newland Archer (Daniel Day-Lewis) and his infatuation with Countess Olenska (Michelle Pfeiffer) who happens to be the cousin of his fiancée May (Winona Ryder).

At first denying his love for Olenska, he is eventually overcome by it. This spawns problems because Olenska is in the middle of a messy divorce from a rich husband who lives in Europe.

Newland happens to be her lawyer in this case, thus complicating matters further. It comes down to whether or not Newland will have the nerve to go against the grain of society and tell his fiancée that he no longer loves her, to be with the Countess Olenska.

Helping Scorsese tell his beautifully stunning tale are the fine performances by Day-Lewis and Pfeiffer. For those of us remembering his previous roles in "My Left Foot" and "Last of the Mohicans" Day-Lewis is almost unrecognizable.

He acts wonderfully, but he doesn't look the part. The hats that his costumes require him to wear look awkward, and he seems uncomfortable in the party scenes, where he is constricted. But Day-Lewis manages to overcome this and turn out a subtle but sure performance that shows off another layer of his amazing acting depth.

Michelle Pfeiffer subtly sizzles as Countess Olenska. Her performance is the backbone of the film and she may get her Oscar after being ignored twice by the Academy for "Fabulous Baker Boys" and last year's "Love Field."

Winona Ryder seems to be having a tough time adapting from the teenage parts to the adult roles she has recently taken up.

She still looks 15 years old and physically incorrect to play Archer's fiancée. She has a problem with the costuming as well and seems to be wearing dresses that are two times to big for her.

The focus on costuming is very important because it plays a major part in the beauty of the film. Such scenes as the dances, dinner parties and opera are visually stunning because of the costuming.

But Scorsese is the real star of the film. As always, his presence is felt through various camera movements, such as the view of the opera through the opera glasses, the reading of letters by only showing certain words and beautiful overhead shots of dances.

But what's that you say? Scorsese replacing blatant cussing with subtle innuendoes, violent fight scenes with arguments in which the voice barely raises above the level of a whisper?

And dirty bars and family kitchens replaced with extravagant dinners where the food is placed upon the plate to form a literal work of art?

Scorsese does it all beautifully and with such precision that I hope to see more of the like from him in the future.

"The Age of Innocence" is a stunning accomplishment with simple flaws. The pace might be a little slow for Scorsese fans, so be warned; you must listen extremely carefully to catch many of the subtle jokes and inciteful dialogue.

Pfeiffer and Scorsese have given the Academy a tough decision come the end of the year and the film is something even Wharton would be proud of.

"The Age of Innocence" is currently showing at Southwyck Eight Cinemas at the Southwyck Mall as well as Franklin Park Cinemas.

Radio free Bowling Green

The Big Hairy Posse brings an easy going anarchy to the University airwaves

by David Coehrs
staff writer

The University president was in a meeting when they called his office live, over the airwaves, so they talked with his secretary. It was obvious she didn't want to speak with them.

"He's not really in a meeting, is he? C'mon, we've heard that one before."

"Who did you say is calling?" the secretary asked, clearly annoyed.

"I'm Gleek the Space Monkey," one answered.

"And I'm The Friendly Fellow," the other chimed in.

"We're Men On Radio. Do you know when President Olscamp will be in?"

It was only about 8:30 a.m., but this maniacal new Thursday morning radio team on WFAL, AM 680, was already out of control. They were still laughing about the phone call while one readied a CD for play and the other welcomed guests who had squeezed into the cramped studio.

Of course it's all just wacky, nutty fun from 6 to 10 a.m., and a great start for two radio delinquents who began working together only two months ago.

These University sophomores prefer to bask in their 30-odd column inches of newspaper fame under their radio pseudonyms. They like the mystique associated with keeping their true identities a secret, while still being recognized from the Men On Radio flyers plastered around campus.

"We have a lot of potential to do some major damage," The Friendly Fellow said.

"We've been told that we're walking the razor's edge. WFAL isn't licensed by the FCC, but we do have to be careful what we say. Basically, we'll try anything short of what could land us in trouble. We do have to draw the line at some point."

"We want to take chances. We want to be the radio guys that people on campus are talking about," Gleek the Space Monkey added.

Toward that end, Men On Radio think nothing of taking good-natured potshots at their unsuspecting studio guests, some of whom they pull right off the sidewalk in front of West Hall, headquarters for WFAL. On a recent morning they interviewed the cleaning person who earlier had vacuumed the studio on the air.

Once they're in front of the microphone, guests discuss hard-hitting, topical issues, such as the benefits and special qualities of their favorite fruit juices, or any other strange subject the radio team can conjure up.

Men On Radio are game for practically anything. Recently, they performed an entire show naked, although they kept just enough modesty to paper the studio windows first. A female listener was phoned over the air and invited to join them in the studio.

"Are we talking totally naked? Can you see nipples?" she asked.

They also called their mothers to proclaim their nudity and received advice about condoms from Gleek's mother.

Another memorable show included an interview with a University student who sells Star Trek merchandise and has mingled with the space opera's stars.

"He had lunch with Scotty [actor James Doohan] and watched him chew," The Friendly Fellow deadpanned.

"They're crazy, certifiably insane," said George Privateer, WFAL program director. "I think they're right on the edge. From the word of mouth I've heard around campus, they're one of our more popular radio shows. I'm behind them 100 percent." On a recent Thursday morning they were hoping to make University president Paul J. Olscamp a member of what they call "the most intense radio fan club in existence," the Big Hairy Posse.

No, they're not exactly sure where that name came from.

They only know that it was borne of the same bizarre inspiration that gave them their weird radio monikers and fuels their smartass on-air personalities.

The club was started to attract listeners but has taken on a life of its own.

"We've gotten overwhelming response," Gleek the Space Monkey said. "We talk to people who have seen our flyers, and we're amazed at the number of requests we've gotten for memberships. People are looking at this as a cool thing to be part of."

Current membership stands at about 200, and Men On Radio are shooting for a total of about 500 members.

"After all, it's a fraternity of love and a sorority of happiness," The Friendly Fellow joked.

Big Hairy Posse members receive a membership card, a newsletter and the chance to be surprised — and they do mean surprised — with breakfast in bed, courtesy of the radio team. Members also have to be on guard against unexpected early morning phone calls. The radio team also is negotiating with local bars to promote Big Hairy Posse nights.

They met while standing at urinals in a Conklin Hall restroom and claim they became instant friends after agreeing that "this feels great." They discovered each other's warped humor while hosting separate radio shows last school year, and decided they had to be a team. Although they admit to friendly competition on the air, they're having a great time playing off each other. And they always seem to crack each other up.

"It feels like we've been doing this forever," The Friendly Fellow said. "And no matter how much fun we're having we always look for ways to improve the show," Gleek the Space Monkey said.

He proudly confesses to swiping his name from a character in an old cartoon series. And The Friendly Fellow? He remembers that he and Gleek were drinking one night and he came up with the name Lothar. That was tossed out in favor of just plain Bob, which also died a quick death when he drank another beer to jar his brain cells and came up with The Friendly Fellow.

They hope to remain a permanent, if weird, fixture on WFAL, but a post-college career together in the real world of radio drive-time doesn't seem likely. Gleek the Space Monkey is more interested in the television spotlight, and The Friendly Fellow has a serious eye on law school.

But those goals are in the future. On a recent Thursday morning they were busy hosting a debate between Bowling Green's First Ward city council candidates Todd Kleismit and Todd Wessler — about their favorite fruit juices. Candidate Sam Melendez was late, so they reminded him with a "jerk"-filled message on his answering machine.

The Men On Radio audience would expect nothing less.

The Big Hairy Posse, comprised of Gleek the Space Monkey and The Friendly Fellow, are always getting into some sort of crazy monkey shinses.

'Nightmares' not too frightening

by David Coehrs
staff writer

Nightmares & Dreamscapes
Viking Penguin Press, 816 pages

The man needs a vacation. That means you, Stephen King. Nightmares and Dreamscapes, your latest excursion into short storyville, reads like a tepid compilation of discards and throw-aways from your starving artist days. And according to your book's self-absorbed introduction, one or two of them actually are.

This voluminous tome is touted as the third in a trilogy that began with Night Shift, King's stellar 1978 collection of short frights. The scary sheen faded somewhat with his second installment, 1985's Skeleton Crew.

The bloom is definitely off the rose with N & D. King seems to have scoured nooks and crannies for this padded bunch of clunkers and near-misses.

There is very little here to goose the scaredy-cat reader. Even King, who has described his writing as the literary equivalent of a Big Mac and fries, seems to hedge on his bet that this effort is worthy of his usual Midas touch.

N & D begins with one of its strongest entries, a nifty tale of love-driven revenge called "Dolan's Cadillac." Dolan is the arrogant, stone-hearted mobster who blew the wife of a mild-mannered teacher to smithereens because she saw too much.

What Dolan doesn't count on is the power of love and the teacher's infinite store of patience. Together, they allow him to concoct an ingenious, fool-proof plan to even the score with Dolan on a lonely desert highway. Nice.

Unfortunately, King feeds the reader this tasty hors d'oeuvre and then offers a mostly bland smorgasbord.

"The Night Flier" a pale thriller about a vampire pilot (no kidding) and the investigative reporter hot on his trail, spends too much time in the air. A brief, bloody climax in - where else? - an airport is all fangs and no bite.

There's also "Chatter Teeth" a ridiculous story that reads suspiciously like it was meant to evoke serious chills. A traveling salesman's encounter with a murderous hitchhiker takes a perfectly idiotic turn, thanks to some novelty chattering teeth. What starts out ominously becomes a real bowser.

The list of dogs continues. "It Grows On You" and "Suffer the Little Children" are two interesting ideas that suffer from confusing, almost incomprehensible endings. "Sneakers" is ghostly but dull, and "The End of the Whole Mess" is adroitly self-descriptive.

If King proves anything with N & D it's that he's not afraid to borrow or recycle. "The Doctor's Case" is his egotistical attempt to revive Sherlock Holmes and emulate the impeccable Arthur Conan Doyle. "Home Delivery" is an admitted rip-off that capitalizes on the carnivorous zombies created by his friend, film director George Romero.

In the "Notes" section King expresses his own disappointment with what proves to be the book's worst offering, a disgusting attempt to gross out the reader called "Dedication." (Yet he still felt the need to include it.)

His apt description of this literary bomb also wholly describes Nightmares & Dreamscapes quite succinctly:

"This one bites, I think."

The doctor is insane!!!

by Dave Baskind
The College of Knowledge

Let's just start off at "Dr. Dave's Incredible College of Musical Knowledge" with the music questions. That's what we're here for. Isn't it? First, the previous question:

Who was the first group to have their first 4 songs all reach No. 1 on the U.S. pop charts? Was it:

- (A) The Jackson Five
- (B) The Beatles
- (C) The Twist-Offs
- (D) Wham!
- (E) The Rolling Stones
- (F) Primus

Now let's try this week's question:

In the late '80s/early '90s, three groups (yechh!) tore up the charts. First was that Swedish powerhouse duo, Roxette. Next were those lip-synching weirdos, Milli Vanilli. Finally, there was everybody's favorite East Coast quintet, New Kids on the Block.

Which brings us to the question: Between Roxette, Milli Vanilli and New Kids on the Block, how many total songs did they propel to the top of the U.S. pop charts?:

- (A) None
- (B) Three
- (C) Five
- (D) 10

If you know the answer to either (or both) of these questions (or if you just want to take a stab at the right answer), send in your entry, along with your name, address and phone number to "Dr. Dave's Quiz" c/o 214 West Hall - or toss it in the wooden box in 210 West Hall before Tues., Nov. 23.

Each winner will receive BOTH a FREE one-item large pizza from Campus Pollyeyes at 440 E. Court AND a FREE promo cassette from Finders Records And Tapes at 128 N. Main.

WHAT A DEAL!! YOU COULD WIN!! ENTER NOW!!

Thought of the day No. 1: No matter what room you're in, it's always room temperature.

Thought of the day No. 2: Why advertise a psychic fair?

Shouldn't the people going "know" that it is there without having an ad?

Thought of the day No. 3: Danny Glover? In BG!!! Plus, Peter and Paul! And Mary!! WOW! 'Nuff said.

Thought of the day No. 4: Andy & Cheryl in BG? WOW!

Thought of the day No. 5: What's the deal with Cap'n Crunch? What exactly is he the captain (excuse me, cap'n) of?

Thought of the day No. 6: Ferner, The Browns, The Bengals, that Glenn Frey TV series. You figure it out.

Thought of the day No. 7: Can I print the word "booby" in the paper? Let me know. (Editor's note: Yes, you can print the word "booby," but you can't print the word "nipple" or "nip.")

Thought of the day No. 8: Never trouble trouble til trouble troubles you.

Thought of the day No. 9: This semester seems like it's almost over before it started (35 days and it's done). A final parting thought: Don't part it in the middle. Pick a side and go with it.

See ya in the funny pages.

Alice in Chains uncensored

by Jeneveve
Sutton

Layne Staley waxes metallic

Layne Staley, Alice in Chains' singer/lyricist, has developed somewhat of a reputation since the "overnight" success of 1990's Facelift.

Perhaps some of the rumors have been perpetuated by those jealous of the band's success or those who wish to seem hip by sharing war stories of the late night partying and the drunken binges.

Regardless, the man I spoke with at the Philadelphia Lollapalooza was polite, articulate and pleasantly sober. It seems his reputation precedes him.

Perhaps the rumors are based on typical rock myths rather than fact.

"Last year, it was a special thing," Layne explained, comparing Lollapaloozas, as many folks seem to be doing throughout the day. "This year, take my clothes off, but I agree with what they're saying. I think the crowd they're speaking out to is an uneducated crowd. I think these kids should know this shit before they come to Lollapalooza."

When did he become involved in the anti-censorship movement?

"I went on T.V. and went head to head with Tipper Gore when I was 16 years old. It was prior to the hearings - 1984, I guess. There was a talk show in Seattle, and I heard Frank Zappa was coming to speak against Tipper Gore. I called up the station, me and another member of the band that I was playing with, and asked if we could participate."

I was dying to know what he told her.

"I told her what everyone

“ I went on T.V. and went head to head with Tipper Gore when I was 16...I told her what everyone else was telling her, that she was wrong. ”

it's just a bunch of bands and bad Venice Beach clothing."

I wondered about Perry Farrell's involvement (or lack thereof) in this year's tour.

"He's probably just making money off it now," Layne counters dryly.

His sentiment seems to reflect the thoughts of several bands I spoke with. Regardless, the guys in Alice are having a good time.

"We've become really good friends with the guys in Fishbone. We were friends with their guitar player before, but he's no longer in the band. Tool and Rage Against the Machine are two bands that we really enjoy."

Which brings us to the event o' the day, when Rage Against the Machine came out on stage naked, with 'PMRC' painted on their chests, their mouths taped shut.

They didn't play; they just screeched feedback for 10 minutes and walked off, to protest music censorship and stickering. Needless to say, the crowd was less than thrilled.

"I thought it was really bold and really brave and f---ing took balls - literally!" Layne cracks up.

"I've taken a similar stand for what they took a stand for today. Not in that way - I didn't else was telling her, that she was wrong!" He guffaws.

"She can cause a stir by telling everyone that kids shouldn't listen to these lyrics, and kids are gonna try harder to get the record. I think it's died down quite a bit. Everything's stickered."

Including Facelift and their latest LP, Dirt, for lyrical content. This prompted their involvement in fighting the Erotic Music Bill, passed in Seattle two years ago.

"Ourselves, Soundgarden, Pearl Jam and Sir Mixalot sued the state of Washington," recalls Staley, "and we won. We won the suit and turned the bill around."

"Now there's a new governor, and it's the same thing again. We'll just sue his ass!"

Naturally the final question gnawing in the back of my mind was about the split with bassist Mike Starr.

The rumor mills were having a field day with that one, and I asked if Layne wouldn't mind setting the record straight.

"It's on good terms," he says, shrugging his shoulders.

"I suppose every band says that when a member leaves, but it was the case with our band. It was mutual. Not that we wanted to split up, but Mike was really tired. There were a lot of things he needed to do. He needed to see some people in his family he hadn't seen in a while."

"We [Layne and the rest of the band] needed to keep going, so we had to part ways. We got Mike Inez to fill in; it's working good with Mike. I'm still best friends with Mike Starr."

Take that, you rumor mongers!

If you're into the "unplugged" thing, be on the lookout for Alice in Chains' first acoustic EP, due out before the end of the year.

And be prepared to stand in line for tickets; their two-year headline tour begins next spring.

Jeneveve Sutton is a freelance writer, a graduate of Rutgers University and the Hunter S. Thompson school of journalism. She contributes to 10 national magazines and is considering a real job.

CHAINS GANG: Layne Staley speaks out on censorship, litigation, et al. Alice in Chains are: Staley, Jerry Cantrell, Michael Starr and Sean Kinney.

The freak comes out with 'Black Rider'

Tom Waits strikes again; Pearl Jam-mania continues with 'Vs.'

Tom Waits The Black Rider Island

Who doesn't love a good freak?

Of the carnival freak show variety, I mean.

Sure, we all hate to admit that we're drawn to their grotesqueries, but we gawk at them all the same. But let's not judge ourselves here. There's just no time.

Tom Waits has returned and that's why we're here. Hardly anyone loves freaks more than Waits, who has written countless songs about their everyday cousins, the lost souls of the night — waitresses, drunks, truck drivers, etc.

But for this collection of songs, commissioned by Robert Wilson and The Thalia Theatre of Hamburg as an opera of sorts, Waits threw himself straight into the lion's mouth.

That is, he teamed up with that famous hardcore freak monger, William S. Burroughs.

On "Lucky Day (Overture)" alone we meet Jo Jo (The Dog Face Boy), Milton Malone (The Human Skeleton), Grace McDaniels (The Mule Face Woman), as well as Radio (The Human Torso).

And that's just the first song.

The Black Rider of the album, song and opera title is a devil who sees no sin in removing your skin to dance with your bones, or using your skull for a bowl.

Indeed, he may be Burroughs' most frightening character of recent years, especially as Burroughs "sings" The Rider's fierce confession.

The music throughout The Black Rider is not as percussive as Waits' last outing, Bone Machine. Its orchestration is more kin to Big Time's lush arrangements and the more elaborate pieces from Frank's Wild Years and Rain Dogs.

Still, Harry Partch's ghost shows up here and there (as in the boot-stomp chorus of "Russian Dance").

The Black Rider proves Waits more capable as a composer than his nearly forgettable Night On Earth soundtrack. Maybe that's what letting others (besides his wife, Kathleen Brennan) contribute to the creative process did for him.

Or maybe he just let out all his demons.

Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds

Live Seeds
Mute/Elektra

First, this mild disclaimer:

Nick Cave's first band, The Birthday Party, is one of my favorite bands of all time. Their disjointed rhythms and strangulation-style guitar wrenchings made the early '80s bearable as Duran Duran whined on and on about whatever it was Duran Duran had to whine about.

Forget Big Black or Scratch Acid, no matter how much I've previously praised them. None of their songs could even touch B.P.'s "Big Jesus Trash Can" or "Zoo Music Girl."

Sadly, little the Bad Seeds have done thus far (B.P. broke up in 1983) has equaled that powerful Birthday Party combination of youth, passion and violence.

Nick, older and maybe wiser, has meanwhile fancied himself a writer (a not-so-bad novel to his credit, as well as an awful book of gibberish) as well as a movie star (a few flicks, names of which elude me).

Still, Cave's intensity carries Live Seeds. His gothic stories make for great listening even when the music's less than in your face.

Imagine Johnny Cash, William Faulkner and Harry Crews trapped for a night in a cellar full of fine wine. Imagine the stories they might swap.

From the electric-chair fear of "The Mercy Seat" to the perverse "John Finn's Wife," from "Jack the Ripper" to "From Her to Eternity," Cave's delivery is mesmerizing. He sings these songs as if a gun's pointed at his head, as if his life depends on it.

sure, not so far removed from any number of his characters, whose lives are all about desire and suffering, the grown-up results of too much passion and violence.

-Brian Beatty

Pearl Jam Vs. Sony

Same sound, different words. Eddie Vetter and company haven't changed their style a bit since the release of last year's grossly popular Ten, so if you're a snotty rock critic looking for an audio breakthrough or great musical enhancement, let this album pass.

But if you're just interested in good, straightforward rock and couldn't care less about breaking new artistic ground, Vs. is well worth the money.

Since Vs. was released last month, critics have blasted

Pearl Jam for not changing their sound, which is kind of like asking Jerry Seinfeld to stop making jokes and take his job more seriously — in other words, if it's not broken, don't fix it.

Although it's true you won't find too many surprises on Vs., you won't find it the same as Ten, either. Although the band has retained its distinctive sound, it has not simply rewritten its hits from the year before, like Bon Jovi or one of those other great artistes.

Vs. offers a diverse mix of fast and slow; hard rock and slightly more mellow songs — just about everyone can find one he or she likes.

From the first track, "Go," it is evident Pearl Jam has not lost its edge, with its pounding beat, wailing guitar and Vetter's passion, almost possessed vocal presence. Same goes for the subsequent "Animal," a song pleading for animal rights from the animal's point of view.

Then the Big Snooze sets in with the current radio favorite (for reasons unknown) "Daughter" and a few other forgettable, boring selections. Although the songs aren't bad, they certainly are not the best the album has to offer, and fall a bit on the mundane side.

However, flipping the tape over to the second side's first track, "Blood," will definitely bring you back to life — it must be played at maximum volume to appreciate its utter noisiness and confusion. And you can bet Vetter was sucking on cough drops for a few days after he destroyed his vocal chords on this track.

The next couple of tracks — "Rearviewmirror," with its haunting melody, and "Rats," a catchy song with its trance-like rhythm — are also captivating. And then, as was the case with side one, the songs that follow are rather unremarkable, although "Leash" has some merit.

All in all, Vs. is an audio treat, destined to be blared at just about every keg party within the city limits of Bowling Green for months, just like its predecessor.
