Gains made in Bosnia talks

DAYTON -- Bosnia peace talks produced some dividends Thursday as Croatia and the Muslim-led government agreed to a good-faith exchange of 600 families. The United States offered proposals for a settlement and for separating rival armies and paramilitary units.

Candidates clash over issues

Tax abatements, income tax debated by mayoral hopefuls

Amy Johnson
The BG News

Different views, ideas and issues have emerged through the course of the 1995 mayoral race in Bowling Green.

Tax cuts, the city's rate of growth and the idea of a greenbelt surrounding the city are a few of the issues Mayor Wes Hoffman and democratic mayoral candidate John Hartman have debated.

Hartman claims his opponent gave $5 million of the taxpayer's money away. Hoffman, however, said he firmly believes that no money is being given away.

"We are not giving money away," Hoffman said. "The only money going somewhere is through tax abatements, which are side bar agreements in which factories or new industries give a certain amount of money to the schools."

The city operates on property taxes, which are directly given to city schools, he said.

Hartman, however, said he strongly opposes tax abatements because they give hundreds of thousands of dollars away that he believes should be used instead for schools.

"It is known that businesses have to give either money or services to the city," Hartman said. "But many donate equipment and this equipment can't pay a teacher's salary."

Hartman has also proposed to cut the city's income tax by 10 percent.

"The money collected from the citizens can go back into their pockets," Hartman said. "Then they can donate money into industrial growth if they wish to do so."

Hoffman said a mayor does not have the authority to cut 10 percent of the city's income tax.

"A reduction in the income tax can't go into effect without the council's OK," Hoffman said. "Joyce Kepke, president of city council, would probably never pass such a cut."

Hartman said the addition of industries, such as steel plant, make the city less attractive.

"Industries, such as a steel plant, can damage the economy and the quality of life in Bowling Green," Hartman said.

If elected, Hartman said he plans to build a greenbelt around the city.

"We do not need urban sprawls to interrupt Bowling Green," Hartman said. "A greenbelt will help preserve our heritage and our University community."

But according to Hoffman, a greenbelt is an attractive idea that is not very realistic.

"It is a very costly idea because the city would have to buy all the land around the city,"

Hoffman said. "If Hartman wants to cut taxes, then building a greenbelt around the city will not cut taxes."

"If money for a greenbelt is provided, then things that are done for the residents that are free, like leaf and trash collection, street lighting and recycle collection, may cost the residents money," Hoffman said.

Hartman has criticized his opponent for accepting a $1,000 donation and two $500 donations from individuals in the community. He claims that accepting donations risks the mayor's independence.

"When you accept large donations from residents it can threaten the officeholder's independence," Hartman said.

According to Hoffman, when running for elections candidates often solicit funds.

"I received the $1,000 from my own campaign manager," Hoffman said. "I have never and I will never base my judgments as mayor on who gave me money during my campaign."

"If I felt someone was giving me a big chunk of change to do something for them in the future, I wouldn't take it," Hoffman said.

Since Hartman teaches journalism at Central Michigan University, Hoffman said his teaching will conflict with his duties as mayor.

"People want to see the mayor at all times of the day," Hoffman said. "He could do the job, but [he] won't be doing a good job."

Hartman said his access to cellular phones and fax machines will enable him to fulfill mayoral duties.

"Today business can be done from anywhere," Hartman said.

However, Hoffman said no one can shake hands with a fax machine or have a cup of coffee with a cellular phone.

Students react to Canadian voting

Jennifer Schab
The BG News

The defeat of the referendum to declare Quebec independent was the right thing for Canada, according to Canadian students at the University.

Michelle Pilling, a junior communications major from Ontario, said she was not surprised by the outcome of the vote.

"I was opposed to it," Pilling said. "It would have hurt the rest of Canada had Quebec separated."

Pilling said if Quebec were to separate from Canada, athletes from Quebec could no longer compete for Canada.

Pilling also said she has friends from Ontario who go to school in Quebec whose tuition would be affected.

Jeff Deline, a senior sports marketing major from Ontario, said he did not think it would be as close of a vote as it was, but he did not believe Quebec would become a separate country.

"I think French-Canadians get too many privileges as it is," Deline said. "I think it's good for Canada to stay whole."

Deline said his little sister attends school in Montreal and if Quebec would have separated she would have had to transfer.

However, he added that he feels separation would not have caused too many changes for him.

He said that if Quebec did separate they would be in debt to Canada and it would hurt them the most.

Mark Kasoff, director of Canadian studies said the vote was a cliff-hanger.

"The closeness of the vote was a loud wake-up call," Kasoff said. "For Canada to move on there is going to have to be some serious discussions."

Kasoff said there are three directions Canada needs to go in. He said there needs to be some formal recognition that Quebec

Registration to go on-line

Jay Young
The BG News

A part of the University registration process is going on-line this month. The change will allow students to identify about 6,000 classes from a computer.

The classes to be offered during the spring semester are listed electronically along with the times and day offered and, in some cases, the names of professors who will be teaching them.

The Web pages also include the courses being planned for the 1996 fall semester. The days and times of the fall courses will be listed after students register their interest so departments can determine the classroom space needed.

Laura Waggoner, University Student Services director, said she is pleased with the improvement.

"We're very excited to be able to do this," Waggoner said. "We're hoping that with it being on-line that not only will students have up to date information, but that they'll get information on-line."

Waggoner said student use of computers would permit the University to print fewer schedule books. Fifty thousand 80-page fall and spring semester course schedule books are printed each year at a cost of $12,000. The spring semester books will be available today.

The schedule book can be accessed through the University's welcome page or by pointing the Web browser to <http://www.bgsu.edu/offices/2/Fregistar/class/schedule/>.

Marley tribute this weekend

Peace, love, togetherness promoted through reggae legend

Dawn Keller
The BG News

In the aftermath of the O.J. Simpson trial, one word is seldom spoken: unity.

The 12th annual "One Love: A Tribute to Bob Marley," has been organized to promote peace, love and togetherness, according to Foster Amey, an organizer of the tribute.

The University Caribbean Association will sponsor the longest-running tribute at a college campus to Marley Saturday at 9 p.m. in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom.

Marley will be remembered for more than his music, according to Errol Lam, an organizer of the tribute.

Although Marley was known for leading an energetic, guitar-driven rock-reggae band and singing sensitive ballads, he will be remembered for being a living symbol of the struggles of oppressed people for liberation, Lam said.

"His songs, known internationally, send messages about women's issues, revolution, apartheid and other social issues," Lam said. "But his time is yet to come."

"His record is still a top-selling album -- people are still getting his message," Lam said.

Lam said Americans especially need to understand Marley's idea of unity.

"In past weeks, events have shown that the nation is still divided," he said. "It's more important than ever that his message is understood."

"The University continues to talk about multiculturalism,"

Amey said. "We are different, but it's important to realize that in our difference lies our strength."

Marley's best-known compositions are "One Love," "Jammin'," "Exodus," "Could You Be Loved," "I Shot the Sheriff" and "Get Up, Stand Up."

"[Marley] put reggae music on the map," Lam said.

The tribute will feature reggae music from The Ark Band, and will cost $2. The event is non-alcoholic and open to faculty, staff, students and residents.

Court rules for gay adoption

Joel Stashenko
The Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. -- In a ruling hailed by gay rights advocates, New York's highest court declared Thursday that unmarried people -- gay or heterosexual -- have a right to adopt their partners' children.

Since state laws recognize that single adults can adopt, regardless of sexual orientation, the right must also be extended to partners in gay or heterosexual relationships, the Court of Appeals decided in a narrow 4-3 vote.

"To rule otherwise would mean that the thousands of New York children actually being raised in homes headed by two unmarried persons could have only one legal parent, not the two who want them," Chief Judge Judith Kaye wrote.

New York becomes the third state after Vermont and Massachusetts whose highest court has recognized the right of a person in a homosexual relationship to adopt the other partner's child, according to Suzanne Goldberg, a spokeswoman for the gay rights group Lambda Legal Defense

E.A.R. to the Ground ...

We happen to be walking along Thurstin Avenue earlier this week, and to our great surprise, it appeared as if the construction on the street was just about finished.

Let's not get too excited, though, some people threw pumpkins onto the street on Halloween night. There may be a rule that construction workers have to take a week off when pumpkin gets smeared on a street ...

It's safe to say that there are numerous reasons why a particular individual chooses a particular residence hall in which to live. One of the conceivable reasons why people requested a hall in McDonald Quadrangle is that they had functioning stoves on some of their floors.

Unfortunately for these students the McDonald stoves were all removed from the hall last month.

We hope the students who didn't get meal plans because they planned to cook most of their food on the stoves are eating, just the same.

The 1995-96 campus phone books are finally here and the question on everyone's mind is "Where was that picture taken?"

If you look at the back cover of the book there's a woman in a University sweatshirt studying on some steps. At the top of the steps are numerous marble columns.

If you've been around campus, you'll have noticed that we don't have any buildings on campus with marble columns. The picture was actually taken at the Toledo Art Museum.

Now don't get us wrong, it's a nice picture, but shouldn't a photo on a campus phonebook be somewhere on campus?

Well, the world series is over and the Indians lost. Just when you die-hard Cleveland fans thought you could forget ...

It was an unfortunate way to end the season but it's still one of the best runs any sports team from Cleveland has seen in a long time. Hopefully, the team will come back intact next year and go to the series again.

But a couple of left handed starting pitchers would be a nice way to upgrade the team.

Advertising should be a sin

When Moses came down from Mt. Sinai with the Supreme Being's B.C. version of "How to Make Friends and Influence Hedons," the Big Guy told us all we'd need to live a happy and fulfilled life.

And for the most part we Americans are able to abide by God's canon. We try not to steal. Murder is out of the question. Haven't seen a golden calf since the Nixon administration. And there ain't too much coveting goin' on.

But there is one little law that we seem to fudge. And often we'll fudge it with a jingle.

"Thou shalt not lie."

Now don't get me wrong. For the most part, we don't go for the big, bad awful, "The Holocaust doesn't exist" kind of half-truths. Hey, the majority of our culture won't even bite on the "Thurstin Avenue is a priority for the city" kind of candidate lie.

But there is one fine little falsehood that holds a special place in the hearts, minds and living rooms of most Americans.

It's the thing that makes us want to smile when we Coke. It's what makes us wonder if Eric Estrada has a license to drive that taco. And it gave us the "Owens Community College" song.

I'm talking about advertising. Like most things, commercials aren't just a matter of truth or lie, good or bad, Mother Theresa or Brent Musburger. It's a shady gray area.

I mean, how can you say a Calvin Klein ad is lying? Really, it just kinda tells his side of the story - with naked people.

But the commercial leaves you with the impression that if you use Cal's smelly stuff you'll end up like the people on the commercial. And that people will like you, because of it.

Advertisements exist in a fantasy land where if we buy the right products we'll smell nice, have lots of friends, be able to shoot a basketball really well, and generally find happiness at the end of the green rainbow.

On the other hand, if we forego these worldly goods, we'll miss out on educational opportunities, have dandruff, never get laid and our life will generally suck.

You can see how the expectations fall apart when you don't have the cash to front for the newest fad. And that's the real problem. Most advertisements set up false perceptions of how things are supposed to be. And then when you don't have a mom that worries about window cleaning, your dad doesn't want to give you a Jello pop, and instead of investing the money on improving the University's "advanced technology" we spend $8,000 on new signs, you start to wonder what's real.

So should we ban all advertising? Dare we infringe on the first amendment rights of corporations? Could we completely cut out that lovable "Hey Vern" guy?

Nah. If we go around banning stuff then we're no better than any other folks who stymie the voices of opposition. Besides, that Vern guy sure does tickle my funny bone.

And anyway, the corporate sponsor is a necessary part of American life. Why, this paper wouldn't even exist without its advertisers. And what a fine group they are, always willing to support the paper.

I hope.

So as Jane Fonda said, "if you can't beat 'em, join 'em." Simply make a commercial that tells the "extra stuff" that the sponsors couldn't get in during their paid message.

The next time you open up your favorite teen publication to discover another cute little Absolut ad, you won't find the traditional golf hole in the shape of a bottle. Hey, that's pretty true. I mean most of my buddies like to booze it up on the golf course. But it doesn't really tell the whole story.

What about the role that alcohol played in a certain tanker accident. I propose a bottle in the shape of a dead seal. The caption could read: Absolut Exxon Valdez. Or what about the fact that over half of the domestic violence cases in America occur after one party has been drinking.

Maybe a bottle in the shape of O.J. and the caption: Absolut Wife Beating.

Kinda Catchy.

Flip down a couple of pages in the very same magazine to see a Marlboro ad that reads "Great times - Black Lungs."

Not only educational, but also big fun.

And speaking of educational, how about those spiffy new BGSU spots that're running on some of the local radio and television stations?

While these gems will surely bring in some new students at the cost of $10,000 commercial production, you have to ask yourself, "Are the ads really representative of the average student's experience?"

"That's a good question," Fred D. Connor, the commercials' producer said.

In case you haven't seen the spots, they basically involve a group of four or five high school kids gathered around in the hallway of Central High School. Throughout the course of "normal conversation" some kid brings up the Electric Falcon, BGSU's very own electric car, as a reason for attending our fair University.

"Neat," I thought. "When did we get an electric car?!"

What else is so great about our Midwestern college? Listen and learn.

"This University will give me computer skills that I will be able to take with me into the business world."

Well, that's true enough - if the other 90% of companies that use IBM's switch over to the Mac.

In all fairness to Fred he seemed like a pretty good guy. And he was just doing his job.

"We're just trying to present the positive parts of the University to our target audience," Fred said.

At least he had the decency not to use a jingle. Moses would be proud.

Joe Peiffer is the Friday columnist for The News. He would like to thank Bo, the Rugby guy, for his kind words.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Organization needs review

Editor's Note: This letter is in response to "Homecoming coverage poor," a Letter to the Editor in the October 30 BG News written by Steve Snyder.

I have several problems with your letter about Homecoming. I am writing in regards to your perceived actions or inactions of The News, your so-called commitment to this campus, and the effort of the committee and advisers from UAO. Not only are you statements truly misguided, but they lack any substance for this debate.

The News by no means must cater to UAO and be a conduit of the desires of UAO. I applaud and commend the efforts of The News to challenge the status quo of this campus and its operations. I find it deeply troubling that such a powerful organization, with a budget of $225,000, 500 members, and a full time staff, would crumble with the first sign that anyone would question its actions.

The News does not and should not feel compelled to follow the old standards of news. It is high time that The News takes a more proactive stance and demand more of the organizations on this campus and question everything.

If The News does not find the story newsworthy, they by no means should print the story regardless of what organization should benefit or suffer from the report.

You sir, are not a journalist and should not try to attempt to act as one. You also should not demand that your face or story be printed in The News because your feelings suggest to you that you participation in a story is news worthy.

I am extremely glad that you can sleep better at night knowing that your position as a top five King candidate was not biased and was based on your so-called commitment to this campus.

If you feel better that your effort of 100 percent to this campus was the sole reason for your top five finish and not your role as president of UAO, you may have a point. But to know that your organization is in charge of the selection process, selects the committee members, coordinates the questions that are asked, and ultimately selects that top 10 that will be voted on, clearly does not look good and borders on unethical actions.

Now, I am not suggesting to you that you do not deserve an opportunity to participate in the Homecoming process, but to know that your organization facilitates the operation and has a direct hand in the selection of the top 10 candidates, I lose sleep at night to know that such an unethical and biased competition can exist on behalf of Bowling Green State University.

As for your dedicated staff and organization, I question how such a body did not have the vision to divorce itself from the selection process and make a selection committee comprised of a diverse student population.

Why is it that the same organization that does not allow itself to have open and campus-wide elections, not allow for some other selection process to exist? I would hate to think that the members of UAO would be so closed-minded and perpetuate a sense of self-preservation, that they would not possess any type of innovation to make the Homecoming process more ethical.

Why is the powerful and distant UAO so defensive about the Homecoming process? Is your organization so afraid that students may actually be questioning where and how their general fee money is being spent? Why is your organization afraid about being examined, what else is there to hide and question about UAO?

Once again UAO has suggested a secret agenda and a sense of self-perpetuation to me. UAO should take a deep look at itself and re-examine its mission to this campus before others do the examining of you.

Coach thanks rugby club fans

On behalf of the players and coaching staff of the Bowling Green State University Rugby Football Club, I would like to thank the many fans, roommates, girlfriends, and parents that have supported the club in its drive to win a National Championship for the University.

Your presence on the sideline is a significant reason the club sports a 26-2 record and is in the Sweet 16 of the National Collegiate Rugby Championship. We easily had more fans on our sideline at every single one of our away games than did the home team.

In particular I would like to thank the 300 fans that braved a stiff wind and chilly temperatures to cheer the club on to victory over Miami on Sunday. It was thrilling to see all of you caught up in the excitement of the match when you paced Bruce Broad down the sideline.

Lastly, a special thanks to the BGSU Women's rugby team who, after a hard day and hard night at the Ohio Univ. Halloween Tournament, left Athens early to be on the sideline for our Miami game.

Again, to all of you - Thank You!

Mostly MIDI series opens with No World Improvisations

No World Improvisations, featuring American composer/double reed virtuoso Joseph Celli and Korean composer/kumungist Jin Hi Kim will open this seasons Mostly MIDI series on Friday in Bryan Recital Hall of the Moore Musical Arts Center. The program will feature a variety of new works and improvisations by Celli and Kim.

Celli will perform on double-reed instruments from around the world, including the Indian Uukha veena oboe, English horn and electronic Yamaha WX-7. Kim is the world's leading virtuoso on the Korean Komungo, a six-stringed zither, as well as the electronic Komungo. She will play the changgo, a two-headed drum.

During the past 25 years Celli has premiered more than 35 works by such composers as Karlheinz Stockhausen and Pauline Oliveros, as well as performed music of his own.

The founder and director of O.O Discs Inc., Celli is among a handful of American virtuosos recognized for developing a new instrumental language and performance repertoire for his primary instruments, the oboe and English horn.

As well as for her performances on the komungo, Kim is internationally recognized for her compositions, which fuse Asian traditional and Western experimental music with electronic and computer technologies. Co-builder of the world's only electronic komungo and MIDI changgo, she has received commissions from Lincoln Center, the Kronos quartet and the National Endowment for the Arts, among others.

The Mostly MIDI series is sponsored by the MidAmerican Center for Contemporary Music at the College of Musical Arts. The series features contemporary music incorporating the latest innovations in electronic, computer and video technology performed by University faculty, as well as guest composers and performers.

Friday's concert is supported in part by the University's Asian studies and ethical cultural activities programs.

In Brief

Novelty pens to be pulled from shelves

AKRON - Pens that resemble blood-filled syringes were a hit with nurses, distributors said.

But police worried that the gimmick would give children the message "that a needle is a toy."

So the University of Akron bookstore removed the syringe look-alikes from its shelves. And the Atlanta-based marketer said the company will switch to a Thermometer Pen.

"They have been pulled," bookstore manager Stan Lohman said Thursday. "This was a no-brainer."

Lohman said the pens - shaped like syringes and filled with red ink to make it look like blood - were removed Wednesday after campus police raised concerns.

Akron police and an officer from its anti-drug youth program said the pens could be attractive to youngsters and confuse them about the dangers of syringes, Lohman said.

"I have two kids," he said. "It never occurred to me that it could be put in that perception. I deal with adults all day long. I sold these in the past as a gimmicky type of thing to nurses. It never occurred to me in any way, shape or form that it could be a bad thing."

Elizabeth Dole cites husband's 'incredible energy'

DES MOINES, Iowa - Elizabeth Dole told Republican activists Thursday her husband has "the energy of 10 people" and his good health answers any questions about whether Bob Dole is too old to be president.

"You do not need to worry about the energy level," Mrs. Dole said. "This man is absolutely blessed with that."

Mrs. Dole's made her remarks at a Republican breakfast club during her opening campaign swing on behalf of her husband, who is 72. She announced Monday that she is taking a year's leave of absence from her post as head of the American Red Cross to campaign full time for her husband's is a distinct society. He also said there also needs to be a return to a constitutional amendment process of unanimous consent so Quebec has veto power, and more devolution of authority away from federal government to provincial government.

"I wasn't surprised how close the vote was," said Henry Garrity, chairman of the Department of Romance Languages. "The problem with the closeness of the vote is that the losing side won't believe they lost and the winning side won't believe they won, and problems will not be solved."

"With the division of culture and language both sides need to sit down and try to listen to one another or this problem will come up again."

"The outcome of the election shows a deep division in the province of Quebec," Garrity said. "The outcome is bad for everybody. And the outcome still would have been bad if it had gone the other way."

bid for the Republican presidential nomination.

Dole moved early in his campaign to deflect questions about his age by releasing his medical records. Mrs. Dole said her husband's hectic campaign schedule proves his health and vigor.

"You want someone who has the energy and the drive," she said. "Bob released his medical records at the time that he announced, 40 years showing exceptional good health."

Mrs. Dole joked about any comparisons between Dole and President Clinton, who is often photographed jogging.

"Actually his [Dole's] blood pressure, his weight and his cholesterol are lower than President Clinton's, but we won't make health the issue," Mrs. Dole said. "I can assure you he's got the energy of 10 people."

The issue is something of a balancing act for Dole, who stresses his long experience in Washington when he is appealing to Republican activists who take part in Iowa's leadoff precinct caucuses.

Mrs. Dole also talked about her husband's "vast experience."

"He knows how to do it," she said. "He's been doing it for a long time."

Astronauts play with fire

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - Columbia's astronauts played with fire Thursday, igniting drops of fuel in an experiment designed to improve safety in space and reduce pollution on Earth.

The fuel burned longer than it would on Earth - more than 40 seconds in some cases - and produced more soot than expected. Most of the flames were round, rather than teardrop-shaped, because of the absence of gravity.

Letterman era may be drawing to close

NEW YORK - The era of Top 10 lists, Stupid Pet Tricks and flying canned hams may be winding down.

David Letterman says he'll probably call it quits when his contract expires just before the decade ends.

"I think more than likely we will stay here through the contract, and then that'll be it for us," he told the Daily News. "Unless something dramatic happens, this is probably our last hurrah."

"It doesn't seem like that big a deal to me if I want to retire when I'm in my 50s," said Letterman, 48.

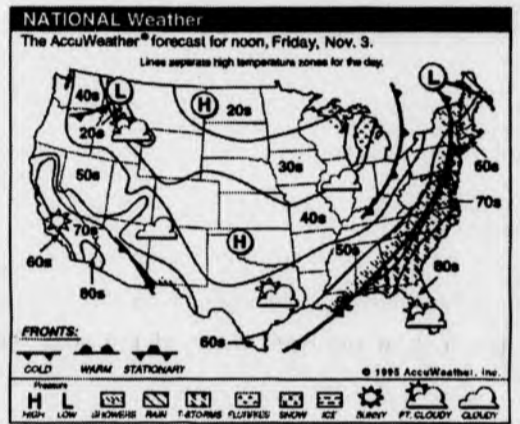

Letterman blamed CBS's declining prime-time numbers for his own ratings, which have fallen behind Jay Leno's "Tonight show" for the past two months.

"Jay, with his success, has had the benefit of a very strong thriving network underneath him. And we, for over a year now, have not had that benefit," Letterman said.

The first phase of Letterman's CBS contract runs through next summer, and the network has an option for four more years.

CBS Broadcast Group President Peter Lund told the News he's confident Letterman will change his mind.

Co-ops present opportunity Employers looking for students with work experience

Dawn Keller
The BG News

Students need to be aware that co-ops are critical to finding good work after graduation, according to Sue Young, assistant director of Cooperative Education.

"Employers are not hiring people without experience these days - they don't have to," Young said. "Co-ops give students experience and a great opportunity."

Students should try to get co-ops during the fall and spring semesters, and start doing it their sophomore year, according to Bruce Smith, director of Cooperative Education.

"Every one thinks the same thing - they want a co-op during the summer," Smith said. "But there is more competition then."

"Students are better off doing it in the spring or fall. There are co-ops available for next spring that no one has signed up for yet."

Last year, University students had internships with more than 400 companies. There are co-ops for students in 45 majors, if students "work the system," Young said.

The office members work with students to help them put their resume together and go through the interviewing process, Smith said.

"The only advice I can give students is to hang in there and keep looking," he added.

A few of the co-ops available are: the Department of Energy's science and research internships at labs across the country, the Student Conservation Association which hires students on natural resource projects, radio and television stations looking for telecommunication and broadcast students, and the Toledo Zoo and Woodland Mall, which offer co-ops in public relations and events planning.

"It's a win-win situation," Young said. "Students can enjoy putting their classroom knowledge to work, earning money and getting the edge in the job market."

Several students said they

Fraternity sponsors food drive

Genell Pavelich
The BG News

The world's largest philanthropy will come to the University this weekend with the annual North American Food Drive.

The event, sponsored by Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, is an international event in which more than 222 of the fraternity's chapters throughout the United States and Canada participate.

Chris Lynch, vice president for Lambda Chi Alpha, said the local chapter raised 920 pounds of food during the event last year.

He added that an event like this is necessary, especially around the holidays.

"Since we are coming up on the holidays, this will help those who may not be as fortunate as us, and all of the food collected is going into the Bowling Green community," he said.

All of the donated food will be given to the Bowling Green Christian Food Pantry, located on 525 Pike Street.

This is the third year the University's chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha has participated in the food drive, Lynch said.

Members of the Delta Zeta sorority at the University will also volunteer to help with the event this year.

Melissa Skusa, Delta Zeta social chairwoman, said the event is a good way to help others.

"A lot of people aren't as fortunate and I would like to see them get some help," she said.

Members of the fraternity and sorority tied more than 1,000 bags to doors of residents all over Bowling Green on Wednesday and Thursday for the residents to put donations in.

The volunteers will collect the bags of donated food on Saturday from 9 a.m. until 12 p.m.

"This is a chance to help someone who does not have as much as you might, and to make a difference all across Bowling Green," Lynch said.

Skusa agreed that the event is a good cause because it can help many people and bring the University Greek community together.

"This helps make us think about how fortunate we are," she said.

With the help of the Delta Zeta sorority, Lynch said Lambda Chi Alpha hopes to collect more than 2,000 pounds of non-perishable foods.

Job opportunities scarce

Education majors may adapt lifestyle for employment

John Wenzel
The BG News

Students who are education majors can expect to adapt their lifestyles when looking for a job, because current statistics indicate that students will most likely have to move to where jobs are available and accept low salaries.

Pam Allen, assistant director of Career Planning and Placement Services, said there are certain markets that have more shortages than others.

"Special education is a very high-demand area right now," Allen said.

Anna McVricker, a senior multi-handicapped special education major, said she is willing to go where the jobs were.

"I'm not concerned about a job at all," McVricker said. "If you're in it for that, you get burned out much faster."

McVricker also said elementary education majors and other over-staffed areas will have a much harder time locating employment.

According to the annual job search handbook from the Association for School, College and University Staffing, the fields of bilingual and special education have the greatest teacher shortages. The fields with the biggest teacher surplus are elementary education and physical/health education, according to the report.

Regions with the biggest demand for teachers include Hawaii, California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona and Texas. Northeast states, including New England states, and Middle Atlantic states such as New York and Pennsylvania have the largest supply of teachers.

Layla Munson, senior English education major, said she agrees special education currently has the largest market.

Munson, who student teaches high-school English in Fostoria, said salary is not a big concern for her.

"Most people who are going into teaching aren't into it for the money," Munson said.

Bob Reed, director of Program Adviseement and Teacher Certification, said there are certain things a student can do to give him or her an edge over the competition.

"Any kind of extracurricular activities [students] are willing to pursue, such as coaching, or any additional certification they can tie into their majors, are helpful," Reed said. "Experience working with youngsters, be it summer camp or Sunday school, is also a plus on a resume."

The Experience Of A Lifetime

Future bright for judge

Bachman looking forward to retiring, pursuing goals

Jim Barker
The BG News

Retirement does not always mean spending sun-soaked days on the beach or on a charter boat trolling for swordfish.

For Municipal Court Judge James W. Bachman, who will hang up his robe at the end of his elected term on Dec. 31, retirement means a good book and a chance to pursue a few lifetime goals.

Bachman, 59, was born in Bowling Green and has spent the bulk of his life in the city. He graduated from Bowling Green High School and went on to graduate from the University with a degree in history.

Afterwards he obtained his law degree from the Ohio Northern University Law School. It was at ONU that he met his wife, Evelyn, also studying law. The Bachmans have been married for 32 years.

Bachman practiced law for 14 years, and has served as a Municipal Court judge for the last 18 years. Bachman said retiring before the mandatory retirement age would give him time to pursue some of his lifetime goals. "Every since I was a little boy, I wanted to do four things," Bachman said. "I wanted to be a lawyer, I wanted to be a judge, I wanted to teach and I wanted to write."

"I've already written one book, 'You Are Commanded to Search,' on the issue of search warrants. I teach a basic criminal justice class at the University, and I've also taught courses at Owens Community College," he said.

Bachman said he has enjoyed his years behind the bench, and has learned to respect the power that passing judgement on the lives of others carries. Bachman said he had trouble just writing out his first verdict.

"About three inches from the paper, the pen froze in my hand," Bachman said. "I thought, 'My goodness, what kind of power I have.' I just couldn't make my hand check off that box."

"I could fine someone, or take away their driver's licenses, or put them in jail. Because I'm a conscientious guy, I've often asked myself whether I'd done the right thing," he said.

Bachman also said he has worked closely with local law enforcement officials in the past on major problems such as the infamous "Merry Madness" and "Frazee Frenzy" parties, which often resulted in mass arrests.

Bachman doesn't shut down the thinking process at the end of each workday. He engages himself in something he calls "five-year projects." From 1983-1988, Bachman researched and read about the word "success." He analyzed the word, obtained various opinions on the context of the word and interpreted its meanings.

Bachman repeated the process with the word "business." Bachman said he now plans to embark on a 10-year project.

"I've got a list of the one hundred greatest works of the Western World. All books," he said. "I'm going to devote the next 10 years to reading them."

Society works with local bars to raise funds

The Multiple Sclerosis Society is working with bartenders in Bowling Green to fund research and help area residents affected with the disease.

The society is working with the bartenders from Easy Street Cafe, Howard's Club H and F.O.E. Eagles 2180 for the annual Understanding, Generous, Lovable You bartender contest.

Money is raised from customers voting for the bar's nominee said Walker.

"Each vote costs 25 cents and I've gotten 4,000 votes so far," said Marge Walker, a nominee from Howard's Club H. "The nominees are chosen because they are familiar with the customers and are known for being friendly."

F.O.E. Eagles 2180 has been in the contest for about seven years, according to Jennifer Phillips, a bartender.

"This year we've raised about one thousand dollars so far," Phillips said. "The customers really enjoy the contest. 'We've had several benefit concerts and all have been successful.'"

Matt Massey from the Easy Street Cafe said there is no rivalry between the bars, everyone just wants to help raise money.

The nominee and bar that raises the most money is declared the ugliest bartender and bar.

Thief arrested near Cleveland

A Madison, Ohio man was arrested in Mentor-on-the-Lake, Ohio in connection with 14 robberies of Little Caesar's pizza shops and Subway restaurants, including a Bowling Green restaurant.

John D. Hedge, 35, admitted to the Oct. 16 robbery of the Bowling Green Little Caesar's and 11 other restaurants, according to Bowling Green Police Detective Sgt. Brad Conner.

Hedge allegedly robbed a Little Caesar's in Mentor-on-the-Lake. Police were able to get a picture of Hedge, which victims identified in a photo line-up, according to Mentor-on-the-Lake police Officer Gerilyn Deutch.

"We traced him through his girlfriend," Deutch said. Hedge then asked the girlfriend for money, and Cleveland police apprehended him at a meeting where she was to give him the money.

Deutch stressed the importance of inter-agency cooperation in catching Hedge.

"Fourteen different departments, and everybody pitched in," she said. "Now we all get sit down and sort out the mess to make our cases."

Hedge will eventually be charged in Bowling Green, according to Conner.

Legislation to benefit 'Other Ohio'

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS — A move to decentralize state government picked up steam when a Senate committee passed a bill that would allow the headquarters of state agencies to be located outside Franklin County.

Members of the Senate State and Local Government Affairs Committee voted 6-2 on Wednesday to pass the bill, sponsored by state Rep. Lynn Olman, R-Maumee. The full Senate will consider the bill next week.

The measure would remove the legal requirement that all state government departments have headquarters in Franklin County. Columbus is the county seat.

"This is an important day for the 'Other Ohio' because now, once and for all, we're going to be able to put the argument of whether this will be for the good of all the citizens of Ohio to bed," Olman said Wednesday.

The "Other Ohio" movement is made up of residents who live mostly northwest and southeast of a line that connects Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati.

Organizers of the "Other Ohio" movement say they no longer are going to be quiet and watch the lions' share of state money and jobs go to the three C's.

Sen. Steve Yarbrough, R-Toledo, said he will introduce an amendment next week to remove a provision that requires General Assembly approval after the analysis before a department could be moved to a city outside Franklin County.

"I don't think we need that," Yarbrough said. "If you're taking the Other Ohio issue seriously ... the three Cs could gang up and you would lose anyway. Any proposal ought to stand and fall on its own merits, once the cost-benefit analysis is done," he said.

If an amendment is introduced and adopted next week, the bill is likely to wind up in a joint Senate-House conference committee appointed by House Speaker Jo Ann Davidson, a Republican from the Columbus suburb of Reynoldsburg, and Senate President Stanley Aronoff, R-Cincinnati.

Drug operation busted

Woman missing after overhearing conversation

TOLEDO — Cynthia Anderson was last seen on Aug. 4, 1981, sitting at her desk inside the office of Neller and Rabbitt where she worked as a legal secretary.

Her family has searched since then, hiring private detectives and appealing to the media for help. Her disappearance was featured on an episode of the television program "Unsolved Mysteries."

Although the Lambertville, Mich., woman has not been found, authorities believe they know why she disappeared: she overheard a conversation between the alleged leader of a drug operation and her boss, respected attorney Richard Neller.

"I'm just shocked, devastated. I don't want to believe she's dead, but I know she probably is," her father, Michael Anderson, said Thursday in an interview from his Toledo home.

"If she knew something about Neller's drug dealing, she would have gone to police,"

A member of the DEA federal task force use a bulldozer to search for the body of a missing woman in Perrysburg, Ohio, Thursday. Legal secretary Cynthia Anderson of Lambertville, Mich. has been missing since April 4, 1981.

Anderson said. "That's just the way she was, honest, caring."

A federal grand jury on Wednesday indicted nine people on drug-related charges, including Neller, 49, of Toledo, and Jose Rodriguez Jr.

Authorities said they have enough evidence to show Ms.

Anderson's death was part of a drug conspiracy, but not enough to file murder charges, said Toledo police Detective Larry Scoble.

Ohio militias 'in disarray'

Membership rising, groups on the decline, says official

Katherine Rizzo
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Militia membership seems to have doubled in Ohio since the Oklahoma City bombing, but the groups may be on the decline, a state official told Congress Thursday.

"The state command level of the Ohio Unorganized Militia is all but disbanded and the county-level groups are in a general state of disarray," Ted Almay, superintendent of the Ohio Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation, told the House Crime Subcommittee.

Almay said the bureau he heads, part of the Ohio Attorney

Oklahoma City federal building bombing. The suspects arrested there have denied the suspects were members.

"The state command level of the Ohio Unorganized Militia is all but disbanded and the county-level groups are in a general state of disarray."

General's office, estimates the state's total militia membership at 500, up from 250 before the

in the bombing have been associated with such groups in Michigan, although militia members

Sean Conover, formerly a state commander with the Ohio Unorganized Militia, agreed with Almay there is disarray but said "the numbers are grossly underestimated."

"Let them believe what they want to believe. We know the truth, and that goes for all things about our government, about our heritage and about the American way of life," Conover said in a telephone interview from his Dayton, Ohio, home.

State bill could provide money

Highway construction dollars lie in redistribution of gasoline taxes

John Chalfant
The Associated Press

COLUMBUS — Ohio could have an extra $146 million a year to build roads if it stopped using the gasoline tax to pay for the State Highway Patrol, legislators were told Thursday.

Rep. Mike Shoemaker, D-Bourneville, outlined for the House Ways and Means Committee his bill to make more money available for highway construction without raising taxes.

Money from the gasoline tax no longer would be used for enforcement and administration of motor vehicle laws.

The tax amounts to 22 cents per gallon. Of that total, 13 cents, or about $700 million a year, goes to the Ohio Department of Transportation.

A total of 6.3 cents, about $340 million, is channeled to local government for highway purposes.

Shoemaker said 2.7 cents, or $146 million a year, goes to the Ohio Department of Public Safety, mainly to pay for the patrol.

He said that if the patrol instead relied on money from the income, sales and other taxes that make up what is known as the general revenue fund, money from the gasoline tax could give ODOT cash needed to work on a backlog of highway projects.

"I do not have a problem with the highway patrol, and I have the highest respect for the duties that the highway patrol performs," Shoemaker said.

But he said motorists believe that the tax they pay at the gasoline pump goes for blacktop and concrete.

"I don't think the public understanding is that $150 million of that is not going directly into highway construction or maintenance," Shoemaker said.

Sgt. John Born, patrol spokesman, said the proposed switch in funding could produce a public perception problem of a different kind.

Almost half of the money generated through fines from traffic tickets the patrol writes goes into the general fund, although the patrol does not receive any general fund money in return.

"The current system eliminates the perception that we're writing tickets to generate revenue for ourselves," Born said in an interview.

The public safety department has not taken a position on the bill.

But the Ohio Contractors Association endorsed the concept last month as a way to deal with what it described as "a monstrous shortfall" in money for highway maintenance.

Courts will not release record

The Associated Press

DAYTON — An appeals court on Thursday refused to order the release of information contained in arraignment records of a woman accused of killing her 4-year-old daughter and then reporting her missing.

The 2nd Ohio District Court of Appeals said certain information on Theressa Jolynn Ritchie's arraignment sheet is exempt from disclosure because it is trial-preparation material.

WDTN-TV had asked for release of the material and other police documents related to the investigation, saying that they are public records. Prosecutors and attorneys said release of some records could jeopardize Mrs. Ritchie's and the public's right to a fair trial.

Montgomery County Prosecutor Mathias Heck Jr. said he was pleased with the court's decision.

"We don't want to try it (the case) in the press," he said.

Calls to attorneys for WDTN and Mrs. Ritchie were not returned.

Mrs. Ritchie, 24, has been charged with murder in the death of Samantha Ritchie. She has pleaded innocent. Her trial is scheduled for January.

Ernest Vernell Brooks, a neighbor of Mrs. Ritchie's, has pleaded guilty to gross abuse of a corpse, tampering with evidence and obstructing justice.

Police have released few details about the case.

Last week, the appeals court refused to order disclosure of most of the records requested by WDTN, but said it would review the arraignment sheets and the defendants' previous criminal records in private before making a decision on those documents.

In Thursday's ruling, the court ordered the release of Mrs. Ritchie's and Brooks' previous criminal records, except for portions obtained from the FBI, the Ohio Bureau of Criminal Identification and Investigation or a national computer network that would show offenses committed outside the state.

Heck said the appeals court would release the records.

Rise in drug use noted in survey

Sandra Soblera
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- Marijuana use by black males as young as 11 years of age has tripled in four years. For white girls, it's more than doubled. And teens who carry guns or join gangs are more likely to use cocaine, a national survey says.

"This is madness, pure and simple. And we all have to do whatever we can to get it out of our lives."

President Bill Clinton

Against this bleak statistical backdrop, President Clinton said Thursday he will convene a White House conference to counter messages to teens that it's "cool, sexy, attractive" to drink or get high.

"This is madness, pure and simple. And we all have to do whatever we can to get it out of our lives," Clinton said in a speech before the Community Anti-Drug Coalitions of America.

The one-day conference, slated for January, would bring together police, academics and clergy, and officials in government, education and media to seek ways to reduce crime and drug use among juveniles, Clinton said.

As the president spoke, the Atlanta-based parents' group PRIDE released its annual survey of drug use and violence in junior and senior high schools.

With illegal drug usage by high school students steadily climbing over eight years and currently hovering near 35 percent, overall teen drug use will, in three or four years, reach 1979's all-time high of 51 percent, said PRIDE president Thomas J. Gleaton.

And junior high students seem to be leading the way.

"Clearly, the new movement back to drugs is led by younger students," commented Doug Hall, a PRIDE spokesman.

The survey of 200,000 students in 32 states found that marijuana use in grades 6 through 8 skyrocketed during the 1994-95 school year. It measured 13.3 percent for black males for a 195 percent increase over the 1991-92 report; 6.7 percent for black females, a 253 percent increase over four years; and 7.2 percent for white females, a 118 percent relative increase.

Slightly more than 10 percent of white males in the same age group reported using marijuana last year, a 79 percent increase over the 1991-92 school year.

Proof of carbon-filled tropics found

Lauran Neergaard
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- Scientists working in Brazil have found the first proof that undisturbed tropical rainforests soak up huge amounts of the carbon dioxide that people produce by burning fuels.

The measurements, published Friday in the journal Science, show the southwest portion of the Amazon rainforest absorbs one ton of carbon dioxide per every hectare of rainforest every year. A hectare is 2.47 acres.

"Virgin forest sequesters carbon from the atmosphere," wrote John Grace of the University of Edinburgh, who led a team of ecologists from the United Kingdom, Australia and Brazil. "The whole of tropical South America may act as a carbon sink."

Extend Grace's measurements globally and the world's remaining tracts of tropical rainforests could be absorbing a billion tons of carbon dioxide every year -- a fully one-sixth of the amount produced annually by burning fuels, said Pieter Tans of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

"It's a pretty important finding," said Tans. "It's clear the forests are helping us" balance the so-called greenhouse effect.

The carbon dioxide content of the atmosphere has been rising slowly for decades and today is 30 percent higher than at the turn of the century, Tans said. Much of this increase is attributed to burning fuels and cutting down and burning forests.

Many scientists are convinced that increased carbon dioxide could cause a global temperature increase known as the greenhouse effect, where the gas molecules prevent the sun's heat from being reflected.

School bus hijacker killed

Scary ride leaves children crying but unharmed

Nicole Winfield
The Associated Press

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.-- For 75 terrifying minutes Thursday, an edgy man with a small bag stood on a school bus with 11 disabled children aboard, repeatedly reaching into his jacket as if he had a gun and threatening to blow everyone up.

Four times, the bus, surrounded by police cars as it traveled 15 miles of Miami-area highways, came to a stop at the hijacker's request. Several times, he crouched down and gathered his whimpering young hostages around him to shield himself from the police.

When negotiations failed, police shot him to death at the door of the bus and dragged him into an alley.

When it was over, the crying children -- some of whom have autism or speech impediments -- were taken into Joe's Stone Crab restaurant, where the hijacker was a waiter, and were given Cokes, french fries and ice cream.

Seven-year-old Brian Morales called the hijacker "a bad person."

The hijacker was identified as Catalino "Nick" Sang, 42, a native of the Dominican Republic who had lived legally in the United States since 1984 and went to church every day.

Sang walked off his job Wednesday night, telling his boss he couldn't handle the pressure. On Thursday morning, Sang asked his daughter to pray for him, went to church, became hysterical and started ranting, said Fred Taylor, director of the Metro-Dade Police Department.

"He was not coherent and he made several threats. He was disturbed, yelling. He was not rational," Taylor said.

Sang had been angry with the Internal Revenue Service and initially said he wanted to go to an IRS office, police said. The nature of his tax dispute was not immediately known. An IRS spokesman said the agency cannot discuss a private citizen's taxes.

"We were hostages because he owed money to the government," said Nubia Castellanos, a mother ordered onto the bus by Sang as she helped her autistic son get on.

During the hijacking, Sang carried a bag and told police he had a bomb. But the device turned out to be one of the children's respirators and police found no weapon.

The youngsters were on the way to their school, Blue Lakes Elementary, when Sang forced his way aboard at a stop near the church off the Palmetto Expressway southwest of downtown Miami. He pushed aside Ms. Castellanos and told bus driver Alicia Chapman in Spanish, "I'm taking control," police said.

Mrs. Chapman, Ms. Castellanos, a school aide and 13 children, who are in kindergarten through fourth grade, were on the bus when Sang seized it. The aide, Ms. Castellanos, her child and another student were let off during stops ordered by the hijacker before the bus reached Miami Beach.

A convoy of pursuing police cars, lights flashing, quickly formed around the bus as the vehicle, with the door wide open and the bus driver obeying the rules of the road, traveled at a cautious 35 mph to 40 mph, below the 55 mph limit.

"The bus driver said she felt threatened, because the subject, when he argued with her, would reach inside his jacket. She thought he might shoot her," said Pat Brickman, a Metro-Dade police spokesman.

The ordeal, broadcast live on national television, ended outside Joe's Stone Crab, a popular restaurant at the southern tip of Miami Beach. The bus came to a stop; one child jumped out and police fired one shot at Sang.

Day of the Dead celebrated

Mexican ritual helps departed souls 'find peace'

Sara Silver
The Associated Press

MIAHUATLAN, Mexico -- Soledad Lopez spent two weeks preparing a candlelight dinner for an aunt and uncle she hasn't seen in years. But the feast she offered them Thursday was symbolic: her relatives are long dead.

Although Ms. Lopez doesn't believe, as many Mexicans do, that the spirits return on the Day of the Dead, she says her tamales and spicy chocolate mole sauce should help the departed souls find peace. And the effort doesn't hurt her, either.

"The ritual helps us to remember the details of their lives," said Ms. Lopez, a practicing Roman Catholic.

"After suffering from the pain of our loss, we come to accept death through celebration," she said, heaping giant marigolds, white mums and red flowers called borla on the graves of her relatives.

Mexicans visited cemeteries, lit candles and offered sweet breads and candy skulls in honor of ancestors Thursday, marking one of the country's most mournful and colorful traditions: the Day of the Dead.

Thousands of residents from Miahuatlan filed silently passed a single blue cross, illuminated by three dim bulbs during an all-night vigil in the local cemetery. It ended before sunrise Thursday.

Economic recession has made for muted ceremonies this year -- namely smaller heaps of flowers, fewer candles and fewer tamales sent in baskets. But Mexicans throughout the country took part in the national holiday.

Sitting on her husband's tomb, Natalia Navarro sings while two musicians perform Thursday in a cemetery in San Insidlo in Mexico City.

Ms. Lopez's grandchildren scampered among the graves, playing hide and seek around gray tombstones in a haze of fragrant incense. The youngsters squealed as firecrackers boomed to salute what is believed to be the return of the souls of the dead.

"This gives children a different idea of death," said Lopez' daughter-in-law, Lucina Garcia, who runs a clothing shop in the southern mountain state of Oaxaca. "We keep the traditions so we can pass them on."

In the cities, the day is heavily influenced -- and at times crowded out -- by a U.S. import, Halloween. But traditions are fiercely defended in many parts of the Mexican countryside, such as Miahuatlan, a town 50 miles south of Oaxaca City.

Day of the Dead pre-dates the All Saints Day celebrations of the Roman Catholic tradition brought by Spanish colonizers in the 1500s.

Zapotec Indians in this region worshipped the goddess Huitzilopochtli with food, incense and flowers on a special holiday when the dead were believed to parade around their communities.

Victor Alcazar, an amateur historian in Miahuatlan, said Dominican friars who arrived in 1528 mixed indigenous traditions into the celebration of All Saints Day with Masses to alleviate tormented souls said to be in purgatory.

"Spending the night in the cemetery is a dramatic way of paying homage to the dead, but altars in the home are most typical," said Alcazar.

Images of happy, living skeletons drinking, dancing and even marrying permeate Oaxacan art.

Military still taking heat from Japan

Eric Talmadge
The Associated Press

TOKYO -- With anger at the U.S. military already at the boiling point over the rape of a schoolgirl, an Okinawan court today heard another grisly tale -- this time of a Marine accused of beating a woman to death with a hammer.

The resumption of the trial of Marine Pfc. Joshua Hill came as Defense Secretary William Perry wrapped up a trip to Japan aimed at calming the furor over the rape of a 12-year-old girl on the island in southern Japan two months ago.

The arrest of three Americans for the rape has sparked massive demonstrations throughout Japan -- including a rally of 58,000 people last month, easily the largest anti-base protest ever held on Okinawa.

Perry's apology for the rape and announcement that a committee will be set up to review possible reductions in the U.S. military presence on Okinawa, where more than 27,000 troops are stationed, drew few cheers from local leaders, however.

"Okinawa can't be placated with a statement like that," said Seiken Tobaru, mayor of Ginowan City, which is near major U.S. military bases.

Okinawa's Gov. Masahide Ota, who is seeking far deeper cuts in the troops than Washington or Tokyo appear willing to accept, is to meet with Prime Minister Tomiichi Murayama on Saturday to discuss the issue. Okinawa is also likely to be featured prominently in talks between Murayama and Clinton this month.

Local media, meanwhile, jammed into the Naha District Court to cover the resumption of Hill's trial, which began in September and has had sporadic sessions since then. A much larger crowd was expected when the trial for the two Marines and a sailor charged in the rape begins next week.

Naha is Okinawa's state capital.

Hill, 20, of Youngstown, Ohio, has admitted he struck Kanako Kinjo, a 24-year-old saleswoman, several times in the head, but says he did not intend to kill her.

According to prosecutors, Hill and Kinjo's former boyfriend went to her apartment May 10 to get a sweater Hill had left there.

Prosecutors believe Hill persuaded Kinjo to go for a drive and upon returning to her home beat the woman repeatedly with a hammer he and Argotsinger intended to use to force their way into the apartment had Kinjo not been home.

Difficult season for BG

Some fat to chew on ...
• One of the biggest disappointments in college football this year has to be the Bowling Green Falcons. BG was picked to finish first on 38 of 40 ballots by the omniscient media that we are. Now, the Falcons (3-6) are alone in ninth place in the MAC.

Reasons for their demise are numerous. Of eight returning starters on defense from last season, only three are currently starting. A knee injury to center Cal Bowers made a bad offensive line worse. And who would have thought the loss of wideouts Rameir Martin and Ronnie Redd to graduation would be as great as it is?

Peter McNeeley is more respected than MAC football and the Falcons' inability to even compile a winning record in the division is unbelievable.

• The least known BG star is Falcon soccer goaltender Scott Vallow. Including Tuesday's 0-0 tie at Kentucky, Vallow's goals against average is a microscopic 0.49, good for second in the nation.

• Proof that all the hoopla that surrounds Deion Sanders, mostly created by himself, is more than anyone can handle: In his Cowboy debut Sunday against Atlanta, Sanders was caught on replays for holding and grabbing receivers well past five yards at least four times. Any mention from Fox's John Madden in the booth or the boys on ESPN's Primetime? Nope. Sanders was seemingly above criticism. When the replay was shown they talked of Deion's ability to make up ground. Easy to do when he's along for the ride on the receivers' shirt.

• Does anyone need any more proof that, when healthy, Mario Lemieux is the best player in the NHL? Prior to Wednesday night's game, Lemieux tallied back-to-back hat tricks against the Gordon's Fisherman of New York and the defending Stanley Cup champion New Jersey Devils. Both on the road.

When coming back from his one-year hiatus from hockey due to back problems, cancer surgery and anemia, it is widely known that Lemieux hit the weights hard in the offseason. But one of the most telling stories of Lemieux's comeback is that prior to this summer, when he attempted to touch his toes, he could never reach less than two feet from the floor. At the end of this past summer, he could touch the floor.

• Think Penn State is empathizing with Ohio State about OSU's situation in the politically correct football polls? Reminiscent of the Nittany Lions of last year, the Buckeyes are undefeated with one of the best offenses in history, but are doomed to finish no higher than No. 2 if all things remain status quo. The Rose Bowl connection of the Big Ten, the imperfect bowl coalition and pitifully weak schedules of Nebraska and Florida State have Ohio State feeling like the red-headed step child.

• Anybody seen the vaunted Steelers running game? It's probably hiding with the stingy Browns defense.

Swim teams host Irish

Falcons hope for good start under Julian

Brad Beebe
The BG News

In their first meet of the year, and under new head coach Randy Julian, the men's and women's swim teams will compete against Notre Dame University today at Bowling Green's Cooper Pool.

This will be a special meet for Julian because he is playing the team for which he coached for the last five years and also because it is his first meet as a collegiate level head coach.

BG will compete at 16 meets from November through March. Two of the meets will include the MAC Championships in late February and the NCAA Championships in late March.

Julian discussed the goals that he wants to accomplish for this year.

"The characteristics of trust, communication, integrity, and character are very important for this team," Julian said. "If we can be successful with these personalities, we will have a very successful ending of the year as far as personal best performances and performances within the conference."

Last year, both Falcon squads were swept by Notre Dame. However, BG and the Irish have played each other very evenly over the years. BG's men's team is composed of mostly veterans which include captains J.T. Neuffer, Paul Henderson, and Mark Klappner.

"Our men's program, this senior class, beat Notre Dame as a freshman and sophomore class," Julian said. "So they know how to beat Notre Dame."

"We match up pretty well on paper," said senior Mark Klappner. "It will come down to each event. We have to take one event at a time."

BG women's team contains mostly young players, but has a good group of upperclassmen assisting them.

"We have a lot of young freshmen women," Julian said. "They will gain a lot of experience after this weekend."

"We're really excited for this meet," said women's team captain Mo Sullivan. "Notre Dame will be tough, but we're both very competitive teams."

Since the Falcons aren't completely healthy, the depth of Notre Dame could pose a big problem for both Falcon squads.

"We're thin when it comes to the depth factor," Julian said. "The ND women's team will be the best, deepest squad we'll face all year."

Julian discussed what it's going to take to win this weekend.

"We have to have some great individual performances, head to head competition. We have to expect success."

Falcons close home slate

Ohio provides opposition for regrouping Bowling Green

Scott Brown
The BG News

Who could have foreseen this?

Bowling Green wraps up its home football schedule Saturday against perennial MAC cellar-dweller Ohio University (1 p.m. kickoff at Perry Stadium), and the Falcons come in ranked below the Bobcats in the conference standings.

Ohio is in eighth place in the league, standing 2-5-1 overall and 1-3-1 in loop play. Bowling Green, the preseason MAC favorite, is alone in ninth place at 3-6 overall and 1-5 in the conference.

The Falcons carry the weight of a four-game losing streak into a game where they are still the decided favorites over an opponent they have beaten twice by a combined score of 52-0 over the past two seasons.

"In the past, we've been fairly successful in going against option teams," BG coach Gary Blackney said of the wishbone-oriented Bobcats. "I think we have a pretty good concept of how to defend the option, and now it's just down to getting our players in a week's time ready for it."

Ohio owns a win against Akron this year and a tie with Kent on its league slate. The Falcons opened their MAC schedule with a win over Akron but have followed with five losses in a row.

The focus for Bowling Green will be shutting down an Ohio option attack that ranks fourth in the league in rushing offense.

"The option forces you into a real disciplined style of football in terms of assignment football," Blackney said. "In general, you have to put two people on the fullback and a defender on the quarterback and a defender on the pitch and then you need an alley player.

"What they force you to do in assignment football is slow down your pursuit."

The Falcons are 12-0-1 in the last 13 years against Ohio.

Blackney comes into the game confident with his team's defense, one of the few bright spots in last week's 17-0 loss to Western Michigan. Against the Broncos, the BG defense held its own after being roughed up a week earlier against Toledo.

"I really think some exciting things are happening with our defense right now," Blackney said.

The big concern, however, is the offense and the continued lack of production. Since scoring 37 points and beating Big East opponent Temple on Sept. 30, the Falcons have scored 26 points in four games with a pair of shutouts.

Although reluctantly so,

Blackney admitted that the inconsistency of the offensive line has been one of the key factors in the offense's lack of production.

"I really hate to sit here and single it out," Blackney said. "If I had to say something really positive, Chad Bukey is really playing like an all-conference player."

Mistakes, however, have played a big part in the self-destruction. Penalties and turnovers continue to haunt the Falcons. They were flagged for 103 yards against Western Michigan and continue to turn the ball over - their -1.22 turnover margin is next to last in the MAC.

"It's a different person all the time," Blackney said.

Redshirt freshman quarterback Bob Niemet will start again for the Falcons against Ohio. Senior Ryan Henry's status remains in doubt.

The BG News/Jon Rasbach

The Falcon hockey team will hit the road for the first time this season tonight when they visit Clarkson University in Potsdam, N.Y.

BG icers will get familiar with Clarkson

Pat Murphy
The BG News

Falcon hockey coach Buddy Powers gets to see another team he is familiar with this weekend when the Falcons travel to Clarkson to play the Golden Knights.

Powers coached against Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference member Clarkson while he was at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, which belongs to the same conference.

"They have the [ECAC] Rookie of the Year last year in goal," Powers said. "And they have three or four real good forwards we have to be aware of but most of the guys that have come in weren't much of a factor when I was there two years ago."

Clarkson, which dropped their opening series against Denver 4-3 and 4-2 over the weekend, has sophomore Dan Murphy in goal and is led by junior center Todd White up front. White scored three times in the two games against Denver.

"They're a pretty good team.

They're usually picked as one of the top teams in their league," said Falcon right wing Mike Johnson. "They still have quite a few good players and it's going to be a couple of tough road games."

BG plans to make the 600 mile plus trip to Potsdam, N.Y., where Clarkson is located, Thursday. The Falcons will not only have three days of practice at the Ice Arena but plan to practice at Clarkson's Cheel Arena Thursday.

"It basically cuts a day out of your practice," Powers said about the distance to Clarkson.

Falcon defenseman Matt Eldred said BG could use a road trip after their five game homestand.

"I think it's going to be good in a way," Eldred said. "Maybe we'll get away and have a little time to concentrate on hockey and not worry about a lot of the other extracurricular stuff. We can really concentrate on what's

NBA season opens tonight

Wendy E. Lane
The Associated Press

When the season opens Friday night, the NBA's list of missing persons will be long indeed.

There's the injured starters, like Shaquille O'Neal, Chris Webber and Rik Smits. There's the suspended, like Luc Longley and Charles Oakley. And don't forget the locked-out referees.

Charlotte's Alonzo Mourning is on the trading block as rumors circulate he could be missing from the Hornets' roster by tip-off time.

Making up for all the absences, however, is the presence of His Airness, starting his first full season with the Chicago Bulls since 1992-93.

A record 14 games Friday night will include the NBA debuts of two Canadian expansion teams. The Toronto Raptors tip off in the SkyDome against the New Jersey Nets, and the Vancouver Grizzlies visit the Portland Trail Blazers.

But the long list of injured stars around the league takes some of the glitz off the big opening night.

O'Neal, the league's leading scorer last season, is out six to eight weeks with a fractured right thumb injured when he was hacked by Miami's Matt Geiger. Geiger, in turn, was suspended for the incident and will miss the Heat's opener Saturday.

"With Shaq out, it only makes teams hungrier to beat us," Orlando's Anfernee Hardaway said. "Almost 90 percent of our offense was centered around Shaq. If I didn't say I dread not having Shaq, I'd be lying."

Smits, the Indiana Pacers' center, is out for three weeks after having a bone spur removed from his leg. New Jersey forward Derrick Coleman is receiving medical treatment for an irregular heartbeat, and no one knows when he'll be back.

The Washington Bullets are so depleted by injuries they had to sign assistant coach Derek Smith to a 10-day contract and put him on the floor.

"No way in my mind did I envision this," said Smith, who hasn't played in the NBA since 1989.

Webber is out nursing a dislocated shoulder, and veteran point guard Mark Price, traded from Cleveland in the offseason, is out indefinitely with a sore left foot.

If Webber hadn't gotten injured, he'd be serving a suspension Friday for fighting with Longley in an exhibition game. Chicago's starting center was slapped with a suspension as well.

"With Luc out, obviously we're starting right away with a deficit," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. "I'm concerned about who's going to show up in a uniform."

on hand."

This weekend's games conclude the early season portion of the Falcon's non-conference schedule, with only a tournament in December in Minneapolis left other than league play. But after two wins over non-conference foe RPI, two more against Clarkson could pay big dividends later in the season come NCAA Tournament time.

"It's real important down the line. We swept RPI now we've got to take these games," Eldred said. "They're a better team than RPI and it will be a good opportunity for us to play a good team and be challenged."

Falcon defenseman Quinn Fair said he expects to be in the lineup this weekend. Fair missed last Saturday's game against RPI with an injured shoulder. He practiced everyday this week.

Spikers in must-win situation

Jeremy Yohe
The BG News

Ask head coach Denise Van De Walle about the importance of this weekend's volleyball matches against Eastern and Central Michigan at Anderson Arena and two words come to her mind.

Must win. "Each match means the same," Van De Walle said. "We've got to win them all."

With a 5-8 Mid-American Conference record, the Falcons find themselves in seventh in the standings and must win out the season to have a chance at making the post-season tournament. On Friday, Bowling Green will host a 1-21 Eastern Michigan team that has struggled throughout the season.

But Van De Walle doesn't care about the teams past performances, rather that BG pulls out wins from here on out.

"We cannot afford to treat anyone in the conference other than a must win situation," she said. "I don't care what their record is, how they have been playing or how many wins and losses they have, that's irrelevant right now."

"What is important to us is to be focused and prepared to play to win."

The Falcons shouldn't have much difficulty in disposing of the punchless Eagles. EMU ranks last in the MAC in kills, digs, assists and hitting percentage. The Eagles' lone win came against Toledo earlier in the season.

Just ahead of BG in the MAC standings is Saturday's foe, Central Michigan. At 6-6 in the MAC, the Chippewas are also entertaining thoughts securing the final seed for the tournament.

Along with BG and Central, Kent (8-5) and Ohio (8-6) are also locked in the battle for the final spot.

"They [CMU] are in the same boat we are," Van De Walle said. "Central, OU, Kent and ourselves are feeling the same pressure of all vying for the fourth seed."

BG's offensive attack will be looking for the continued good play from their outside hitters to help keep the attention of the Falcons strong middle attackers, senior Carlyn Esslinger and junior Lori Hilton.

"We had a lot of success out of the middle and we've really needed our outside attackers to really step up -- and Marnie Simpson and Shayne Crumley have stepped up.

They have really elevated their offensive game and we need that because the whole conference focuses on our middle attack."

Esslinger was named Co-MAC Player of the Week with her effort in last weekend's matches against Kent and Akron where she recorded 42 kills (6.0 per game avg.). She hit .310 over the two matches and averaged 3 blocks. Esslinger set the school record in total blocks against Kent with 14.

"Carlyn has deserved it several times throughout the year with her outstanding performances. I'm finally glad that the conference office has recognized her performance."

Cavaliers face rebuilding year

Chuck Melvin
The Associated Press

CLEVELAND -- It's February 1996, and Brad Daugherty is feeling better than he has in years. Trouble is, Daugherty no longer has a job, having been displaced by the NBA's latest phenom, John Amaechi.

This fantasy is brought to you by the Cleveland Cavaliers, who -- no matter how well Amaechi does as their new starting center -- are in for a long season if Daugherty is unable to come back.

"We are a team in transition right now," said coach Mike Fratello, whose team opens its season Friday night in Orlando against the Shaq-less Magic. "We made some bold moves. We traded two of the most productive players in the history of the organization."

The Cavs of 1995-96 will have a decidedly new look, absent Mark Price (traded to Washington) and John Williams (traded to Phoenix). Daugherty, meanwhile, continues rehabilitation of the bad back that has kept him out of the game for more than a year; he'll be evaluated again at mid-season.

"It will have been two years since Brad Daugherty will have played in an NBA game," Fratello said. "We have no idea what's going to happen. We've got to move on. If midyear comes around and he's doing fine and he can rejoin this team, terrific. So be it. We just don't know what's down the road for Brad."

Once they learned that Daugherty, a five-time All-Star, might not be back, the Cavs all but gave up on this season, choosing instead to begin their rebuilding plan in earnest.

They dealt away Price and Williams, stockpiling draft choices as they finally broke up the group that Michael Jordan had kept from becoming contenders; five times since 1988, Cleveland was eliminated by Chicago in the playoffs.

The new Cavs won't have a starter over the age of 27 or a player taller than 6-foot-10.

"There's no question we are a small team," Fratello said. "We can't pretend we're a big team. We'll play the best we can with those people. Unfortunately they're not 7-1, 7-2. But they're tough-minded and they have big hearts."

Cleveland is not totally lacking in experience. Terrell Brandon, who takes over for Price at the point, started 41 games while Price was hurt last year, and although Brandon doesn't have Price's 3-point range, he is a good shooter who penetrates every bit as well as his predecessor.

The Cavs are well-stocked at shooting guard, where Bobby Phills will start, backed up by Dan Majerle (acquired from Phoenix in the Williams trade), Harold Miner and first-round pick Bob Sura, who will also play some behind Brandon at point guard.

The starting forwards, both back from last year, are Chris Mills and Tyrone Hill, while the biggest surprise may be the emergence of Amaechi, a 6-10 free agent from Penn State, as starting center. Michael Cage, who along with Phills and Brandon will serve as a tri-captain, backs up Amaechi.

"When I came into Phoenix, we weren't expected to do a whole lot, and we wound up winning 55 games that first year," Majerle said. "These guys love to play basketball. Not a whole lot is expected out of this year. We've just got to go out, play hard, and like Phoenix in that first year, try to go into a town, get a win and get out."

"It's disappointing for me because I came so close to winning a championship in Phoenix three years in a row, and I know they're going to have a very good team again this year. On the other hand, it's almost refreshing to start off with a new team and to have a chance to help build a program up again."

There is one piece of good news for Cavs fans who grew weary of the tedious pace of Cleveland's games a year ago.

*Yes, you shouldn't give your money away to just anyone, should you? Neither can we. Offer expires January 15, 1996. No payment of principal or interest will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest which will be included in the repayment schedule. The monthly payment quoted above is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $1,254.26, which includes a sample purchase price of $1,179 for the Performa 631CD system shown above. The total loan amount also includes a 6.9% loan origination fee. Interest is variable based on the Commercial Paper Rate plus a spread of 6.25%. For example, the month of October 1995 had an interest rate of 12.17% with an annual percentage rate (APR) of 15.97%. Monthly payments for the total loan amount described above would be $21.54. Monthly payments and APR above assumes no deferral of principal and does not include state or local sales tax. Monthly payments may vary depending on actual computer system prices, initial loan amounts, state and local sales taxes, and a change in the monthly variable interest rate. Personalization options to the loan process, but does not guarantee final loan approval. Subsequent acceptable verification documents must be received before your loan is approved. Weekend provides more than enough reality

The call came around 9 p.m. Tuesday evening and, judging from the sound of my mother's voice, something was really wrong. Even though I didn't even know why my mother was calling me, subconsciously, I heard this voice calling me home. Come hell or high water, I knew my place was with her and I just knew I had to be there. The only problem was, it didn't seem like I could get there fast enough.

And as our conversation started to get past the tears and my rambling questions, she proceeded to tell me that my Aunt Barbara, her 44-year old twin sister, had been rushed to the hospital with a serious heart condition. My mom was in such a state of panic, amplified by sheer terror, that the details she was trying to give me were a bit cloudy and I was unable to comprehend how things could get so bad so fast. All I really understood was "triple bypass on Friday." Things just kept looking even worse.

After I hung up the phone, and after a few more tears had fallen, that feeling that had buried itself in the pit of my stomach began to hurt like hell. Over and over,

I kept remembering how I heard my 11-year old sister's voice in the back of my phone conversation, incessantly asking, "She's not going to die, is she? She's going to be alright, right?" And even across the miles, I could feel everyone's pain and fright.

I kept asking myself what I could do to set everyone's mind at ease even though I already knew the answer to that. I knew there was nothing I, nor anyone, could do for my aunt. But I knew down deep inside that there was something I could do for my mom, and for my sister, and for my dad, for my brothers, grandparents, aunts, uncles, and cousins. I could be there for them, if only just to listen, dry their tears, or hold their hands.

But I guess I wasn't the only one who thought that way because within 12 hours, all of my relatives - my mom's parents, sisters, and brother had begun their trips back home from their new homes in Florida and Maryland. It's as if we all heard the same calling. The funny thing is, although nobody dared to say it, was that we didn't just do it for each other. Each and every one of us knew we had to do it for ourselves.

I guess it's kind of sad, though, because it has been almost 10 years since we've all been together at one time and it took a situation like this to reunite the most important people in our lives, but I guess it is better late than never, though. After all, there's nothing like being at home when you need real comfort.

As all of you read this, I will be sitting in a hospital waiting room in Cleveland, extremely frightened and trying to fight back the tears.

But at least I have the comfort of knowing that I don't have to sit there all alone. I'll be surrounded by my entire family, and together, we'll get through it. That is the meaning of family.

Please keep us in your prayers.

One on one with John Miller

The elections are upon us. Next Tuesday the residents of Bowling Green will cast their ballots for city council and a host of other state and local issues. To give you a look inside the hearts and minds of the First Ward city council candidates WR continues its series with Republican Candidate John Miller. WR's own Joe Peiffer sits down to talk with John about Thurstin Avenue, the pope and redistricting.

Joe Peiffer: The Thurstin Avenue Project..

John Miller: (Laughter)

JP: You know I have to ask this, I mean its taken almost six months so far and its still not done. And for me it's not so much that its and inconvenience, I mean it is, but it seems like to a lot of students that if it were located in a "residential area" that the project will be done by now.

JM: Well, obviously the project has taken far too long. They ran into some rock and gravel that they didn't expect to hit. But think that should be anticipated before projects begin. As far as the residential issue, I know they had similar problems over on Wintergarden Road this summer.

How's the campaign treating you so far?

JM: I'm kind of tired tonight. No, really, I enjoy it. It's interesting. Right now it's just a matter of getting your face out in front of the voters.

JP: I think some people concerned with the fact that you're not a student. How do you reconcile that with a predominately student Ward One?

JM: (Laughter) Well, I think that basically, um, that the way to reconcile that is basically I was not.. it was not that long ago that I was a student.

JM: I still understand what it's like to be a student. But yet I'm also able to be in a position to communicate with city residents, people who are not students.

JP: Do you think people in city government will listen to you more because you're not a student? I seem to get that impression from you.

JM: I don't know that they'll listen to me... they'll listen to whomever the representative is. But I think that maybe I have some experience within the city government, that I can get some things done.

JP: Didn't you run before?

JM: I ran at-large in 1993. We call it the failed campaign of '93. Really, I came away from that experience having learned a few things. I learned that the people of Bowling Green are good people.

JP: That's good, seeing as you want them to vote for you. With all the mailings, door to door and all the... just the grind of the campaign, and then you only get 10% of the students to vote. How's that make you feel?

JM: It's frustrating, because all of us are city residents, and I think it's important for all of us to show concern by getting out in the city and voting.

JP: It seems like every year somebody takes a fall on the Bowling Green railroad tracks. Every year. Last year council was considering closing some of the railroad tracks. What's your feelings on that?

JM: I'm not in favor of closing the railroad tracks at this time.

JP: What would you say to somebody who comes up to you and they're all angry, they're getting a little crazy on you, and they say to you, John, how many times are people going to have to die on the railroad crossings before we get signals or before we close some down.

JM: Well, that's a good question.. What we need to do is get lights and gate up at those intersections. Some of those projects are already under way.

JP: Who would you rather be, the pope or Eddie Vedder?

JM: I think I'd rather be... that's a tough one!

JP: They can't all be softballs, John.

JM: I think I'd rather be the pope. More people listen to him.

JP: He seems happier. In the past, a disproportionate number of students have

Androcles lives up to expectations

George Bernard Shaw is not known for quick and easy evenings of theatre. Shaw tends to write a very cerebral form of drama. He has a tendency to be wordy, preachy and even (yawn) a bit boring. Which is what makes Androcles and the Lion, now showing in the Joe E. Brown Theatre, such a refreshing surprise.

The annual "All-Freshman" show at BGSU has a history of being boisterous, full of fresh talent and easy to sit through. This year's version lives up to all three expectations. Ray Manilla directs this young cast in an upbeat staging of Shaw's re-telling of the Androcles fable with style and flair.

Of course, the flair has some drawbacks. The cast is full of energy, but they also deliver an uneven performance. At times, the energy spills over into bombast and overacting, but this has been kept to a minimum. The major downfall of the ensemble's energy is that the intensity of the show peaks too soon, and the actors have no where else to go but down. This is most apparent at the beginning of Act I.

Even in this relatively short play, Shaw has managed to include some extremely wordy passages. The cast does its best to struggle through these bits, but poor diction and uninspired blocking tend to cloud these portions of the show. At times the actors deliver their lines to other actors who don't even seem to be listening to them.

Still, the evening's high points outnumber its flaws. The technical elements of the production are smooth and professional. Highlights include Donald Hill's lighting scheme, which effectively transforms Joe E. Brown Theatre into a jungle at the appropriate moments in the script; and Nathalie Highland's costumes, which are sharp and effective.

For an all freshman cast, the level of performance is very high, and the load is shared fairly equally by this ensemble cast. There are some standout performances though, and chief among them is the job that Greg Bader does as the Centurion. Although his enunciation of words is sometimes weak, his facial expressions and knack for comedic timing make him a pleasure to watch.

Other enjoyable performances include David Nault's hilarious performance as the would-be martyr, Spintho. Julie Jackson is solid and sophisticated as the Empress of Rome. And Neil Dunbar digs into his role as the "Christian Soldier" who can't figure out when he should fight.

Perhaps Androcles and the Lion is not the most awe inspiring script in this year's season, but it does make for an entertaining evening of theatre. Although uneven at times, Androcles delivers a concise and comedic version of the Androcles fable. And the most enjoyable part of the experience is the opportunity to witness the future of BGSU's program test their theatrical wings for the first time on the university stage.

Androcles and the Lion plays at 8 p.m. through Saturday in the Joe E. Brown Theatre, located on the first floor of University Hall. There is also a matinee performance on Sunday at 2 p.m. For tickets, call the Box Office at 372-2689.

Mote is hard to define

By Aaron Weisbrod

On November 16, the Bowling Green population is going to have a chance to get down and dirty with the local band Mote in a benefit concert being put on at Howard's Club H.

Well, maybe the audience won't be able to get down and dirty with the local rock quartet, but you will get a chance to check them out in concert along with Evelotto, Ribcage Houdinis, Jimmy Branson, and Giraffe Boy.

Although the current lineup of Mote (Colin Herb, Josh Spitler, Matt Gengler, and Zach Hill) has been around for nine months now, many of the residents still have not had the chance to see Mote live due to the "unfriendly nature" of the BG band scene.

Bowling Green isn't really band-friendly anymore." Zach explained in a conversation at the Union.

There's no place for an up and coming band to play." Added Matt as he consumed his bagel.

As many of the local residents who have taken the jaunt to Toledo can tell you, their lack of BG appearances is a great loss to the music-loving residents of "Funky Town."

Like most good music bands, the two members of Mote present for the interview found it difficult to classify their music's style...

Matt: "It's just kind of moody pop rock."

Zach: "I think it's kind of experimental."

Matt: "At times we sound like a truck falling on your head."

Zach: "It's not a grunge band."

Matt: "I think we get a big, wall of sound feel..."

One of the reasons for the band's unique sound is the fact that Mote's members have such scattered musical influences, ranging from Sonic Youth to White Zombie (Drummer Josh Spitler was formerly the drummer of the local heavy metal band False Face Society).

"Everybody's kind of got their own thing, so it mixes kind of interestingly." Matt mused.

The band will be putting out a 45 single soon ("hopefully before December" Matt said) which will contain the song "Tressils and Garret."

And if you're too impatient to wait for the 16th to roll around, you can always take the drive up to Frankies in Toledo tonight and see them jam with the likes of Xebec and Qronos (who features former members of Fizban's Magic). Mote is scheduled to go on at 10:00 PM.

In closing, it was Matt who told me what fans should expect from Mote when they see them in concert: "It's thought out music. It has nothing to do with image. We just want to write good songs, and we think we get there sometimes."

Don't call me Generation X
Call me a child of the '80s

They call us spoiled. They call us materialistic. They call us childish. They call us confused. And worst of all, they aren't even a part of us.*

For years, our current twenty-something generation has been labeled by forty-something writers as a lost generation - an era ruined by parents who catered to our every whim and the inevitable products of a society that never made us grow up. Calling us irresponsible, indecisive, and insecure, our elders tremble in fear at the thought of placing the future of this country in our hands. And all the while, none of us have ever really been able to understand why.

The following piece, was sent to the editor of WR on e-mail (what would we do without the Internet?) and was printed in The Reflector. We think it helps to put into perspective the society that defines just exactly who we are and how we got that way.

I am a child of the '80s. That is what I prefer to be called. The '90s can do without me. Grunge isn't here to stay. Fashion is fickle and Generation X is a myth created by some over-40 writer trying to figure out why people wear flannel in the middle of the summer.

When I got home from school, I played Atari 2600. I spent hours playing "Pitfall" or "Combat" or "Breakout" or "Dodge 'em Cars" or "Frogger." I never did beat "Asteroids."

Then I watched "Scooby Doo." Daphne was a goddess and I thought that Shaggy was smoking synthetics in the back of their psychedelic van. I hated Scrappy.

I would sleep over friends houses on the weekends. We played army with G.I. Joe figures and I set up galactic wars between Autobots and Decepticons. We stayed up half the night throwing marshmallows and Velveeta at one another. We never beat the Rubik's Cube.

I got up on Saturday mornings at 6 a.m. to watch bad Hanna-Barbera cartoons like "The Snorks," "Jabberjaw," "Captain Caveman," and "Space Ghost." In between I would watch "School House Rock." ("Conjunction Junction, what's your function?")

On weeknights, Daisy Duke was my future wife. I was going to own the General Lee and shoot dynamite arrows out the back. Why did they weld the doors shut anyways? At the movies, the Nerds got Revenge on the Alpha Betas by teaming up with the Omega Mus. I watched Indiana Jones save the Ark of the Covenant and wondered what Yoda meant when he said, "No, there is another."

Ronald Reagan was cool. Gorbachev was the guy who built a McDonalds in Moscow.

My family took summer vacations to the Gulf of Mexico and collected Muppet Movie glasses along the way. We had the whole set. My brother and I fought in the back seat. At the hotel we found creative uses for Connect Four pieces like throwing them in that big air conditioning unit.

I listened to John Cougar Mellencamp sing about "Little Pink Houses" for "Jack and Diane." I was bewildered by Boy George and the colors of his dreams: red, gold, and green.

MTV played videos. Nickelodeon played "You Can't Do That on Television" and "Dangermouse." HBO showed Mike Tyson pummel everybody except Robin Givins, the bad actress from "Head of the Class" who took all Mike's cashflow.

I drank Dr. Pepper. "I'm a Pepper, you're a Pepper, wouldn't you like to be a Pepper, too?" Shasta was for losers. TAB was a laboratory accident. Capri Sun was a social statement. Orange juice wasn't just for breakfast anymore, and bacon moved over for something meatier.

My mom put a thousand Little Debbie Snack Cakes in my Charlie Brown lunch box, and filled my Snoopy thermos with grape Kool-Aid. I wouldn't ever eat the snack cakes, though. Did anyone? I got 2,000 cheese and cracker snack packs, though, and I ate those.

I went to school and had recess. I went to the same classes every day. Some weird guy from the eighth grade always won the science fair with the working hydro-electric plant that leaked on my project about music and plants. They just loved Beethoven.

Field Day was bigger than Christmas, but it always managed to rain just enough to make everybody miserable before they fell over in the three-legged race. Where did all those panty hose come from?

"Deck the Halls with Gasoline, fa la la la la la la la," was just a song. Burping was cool. Rubber band fights were cooler. A substitute teacher was a baby sitter/marked woman. Nobody deserved that.

I went to Cub Scouts. I got my arrow-of-light, but never managed to win the Pinewood Derby. I almost got every skill award, but I don't remember ever doing anything.

The world stopped when The Challenger exploded. Did a teacher come in and tell your class, too?

Half of your friends' parents got divorced.

People did not "just say no" to drugs.

AIDS started, but you knew more people who had grandparents die from cancer.

Somebody in your school died before they graduated.

When you put all this stuff together, you have my childhood. If this stuff sounds familiar, then I bet you are one of us, too.

We are the children of the '80s. That is what I prefer they call us.

By Bryant Adkins

been cramped into Ward One, i.e. the redistricting issue. And it's been a big campaign issue. Candidates have said that it's unfair, SLS filed a law suit, yet I bet we can't find two people in this whole Union that even know what redistricting is? Do you feel it's a priority?

JM: That's a good question. The Federal magistrate is going to be making a decision. That's going to have to be a priority.

JP: Sure.

JM: But that would... It's obviously a big issue.

JP: You feel like it's a priority then?

JM: I feel like it's going to be really quick, yeah.

JP: Okay, what are your feelings about it?

JM: Um, I think basically, um, as you said earlier, I've been around on campus and I've spoken to a number of organizations and I've had various questions come up and not once has the redistricting issue come up. To some people it's extremely vital. Um, the unfortunate thing about that they draw the districts for voter registration and here we are back to our dilemma are people voting here or back in their home town? Basically we're going to have to wait and see what the magistrate decides.

JP: If it was up to you, what would you do?

JM: See, now you're putting me on the spot.

JP: Yeah, I am. But I'm asking.

JM: If it was up to me... I'm going to have to wait and see what the magistrate says.

JP: No, No, No. Oh, no you don't. If you were the magistrate and you were looking at all the facts, what would you do?

JM: I don't know. I can't answer that. I honestly can't answer that.

JP: It's a question that I think cuts to the core of how much student representation you think should be on council. Because if you think that we should have two representatives then it would follow that you think we should have more of a say, but if you think we should be cramped into one ward...

JM: The beautiful thing about campus right now, is you have the students they have the opportunity to elect three at-large members of council and two ward members.

JP: Right.

JM: And basically there hasn't been enough excitement generated on campus about the elections to do that.

JP: So you think students have enough of an opportunity now then? You're saying to me, 'hey look, students can already put five people on council, why do they need more?'

JM: (Silence)

JP: Do you see what I'm saying?

JM: Yeah, yeah, I understand.

And yeah, I think, uh, I think the stu-, the, I would love to see students get excited about city elections.

JP: But so far you haven't seen that from them.

JM: No, honestly I have not.

JP: So you're saying then... See I'm trying to get you to commit here. I got a feeling that you've got an opinion. You just don't want to tell me, but I see the way you're leaning JM: Run that by me again.

JP: You know, it'd be easier if you'd just tell me, but I'll play the hypothesis game. You're saying if students want more representation then they should just get out and vot. We don't need to be redistricting in their favor.

JM: The manner that you present your argument is good... I guess the way you present your argument makes me sound as if I'm anti-student.

JP: What you're telling me is your concerned about your image. I guess I should tell you I'm not concerned about your image. I'm concerned about getting an answer from you.

JM: I honestly have not totally made up my mind as to whether or not we should redistrict.

JP: Okay, fine. Can you do any tricks?

JM: Can I do any tricks?

JP: Any tricks, yeah.

JM: I've got a few card tricks. I'm not going into them right now, but you'd be impressed.
