Train hits student

A University student suffered a broken elbow and received four stitches on his forehead after he was involved in a collision with a train while he was driving down Pike Street early Saturday afternoon. Matthew J. Reynolds, 26, of Charlotte, North Carolina, didn't see the Conrail train coming and tried to get across the tracks before it got there, according to the Bowling Green Police Department's report.

Reynolds' car was trapped under the front of the 57 car train and dragged about 105 feet. At one point Reynolds' vehicle was partially trapped under a box car.

Charter amendment sent for approval

A charter amendment recommended by the Senate Executive Committee of the University will go to the president and the Board of Trustees for final approval. The amendment focused on attaining congruency among all parts of the charter. An amendment was added to the charter in the Spring of 1994, eliminating grounds for appeal. It was discovered that the amendment only fixed one section of the charter. The change will focus on academic dishonesty discovered after graduation, matching the punishment given to the same crime discovered while still at the University.

Robert Holmes, Vice Chairman for Faculty Senate, said the amendment was the cause of an oversight on the part of senators voting on the first resolution. "The change should have been made before," Holmes said. "Someone prepared the resolution without knowing what they were doing."

Business college holds fair

The College of Business Administration will hold a freshman business fair for freshmen who have yet to decide on a specialization for their business degree on Oct. 17 from 3 to 5 p.m. in the 2nd floor lounge of Business Administration Building. Academic Adviser Linda Bakkum said each college department will be represented by faculty with information about their program and careers in that particular field of study. Bakkum said refreshments will be served and prizes awarded to some in attendance.

Green Warehouse burns down

GREEN, Ohio — A candy warehouse burned down Monday while firefighters struggled with a failing water supply, officials said.

As Green Fire Department firefighters tried to get the fire under control at Linneaus Candy Warehouse, the water supply slowed to a trickle and was lost for about five minutes, fire Chief Robert Calderone said.

"It was pretty frustrating this morning," Calderone said. "We had it all set to stop it and two hours into the fire, we lost water altogether."

A chief hearing examiner recommended in a report issued Monday that the Ohio Civil Rights Commission order a dismissal of a complaint made against the University Journalism Department.

The recommendation, which will be forwarded to the five OCR members, is the result of a March 21 hearing concerning a complaint filed by John Hartman, who applied for a faculty position in the Journalism Department in April 1994.

Department Chairwoman Nancy Brendlinger said she was very pleased with the decision.

"I never thought the man had a case. I knew that his race and his gender had nothing to do with the hiring decision," Brendlinger said. "I expected the Ohio Civil Rights Commission to be reasonable and find for us, but it's a great relief when you find out that the system really does work."

Hartman, who teaches journalism courses at Central Michigan, said he was not hired so the department could keep its accreditation. The ACEJMJ states a department must reflect society, which it defines as 20 percent minority and 50 percent female. Debbie Owens, a black female who was hired for the position, fulfilled the department's requirement.

Hartman said he will file an appeal with the commission before the Oct. 28 deadline. He said he has several problems with the report.

"There are several troubling aspects to the document," Hartman said. "One is that it suggests that whites who suffer discrimination have to be held to a higher standard than minorities who suffer discrimination."

Hartman said he also had a problem with the standard Chief Hearing Examiner Franklin Martens used with higher education.

"Another concern is a suggestion that Universities should not be held to the same standard with regard to their hiring practices as other public entities," Hartman said.

Martens stated in his report that higher education is not above the law.

"While universities are not exempt from scrutiny by the Commission, it should be noted that as long as the decisions involve professional judgment of various members of the faculty, they should not be disturbed," he stated.

Clif Boutelle, Public Relations director, said the report approves of University procedure.

"The recommendation supports the University position that no discrimination took place in the hiring of a journalism faculty member," Boutelle said. "The recommendation also supports the University's contention all along that the job search and the hiring was conducted in an appropriate manner."

Hartman said he still intends to follow through with a lawsuit against the Journalism Department and their accrediting agency, the Accrediting Council on Education in Journalism and Mass Communications. Hartman filed the suit in federal court in July.

Book depository dedicated

Area schools' joint effort yields library storage facility

Jay Young
The BG News

Northwest Ohio leaders gathered in Perrysburg Monday to dedicate a $3.1 million library storage facility.

A joint effort between the University, the Medical College of Ohio and the University of Toledo, the 14,800 square-foot Northwest Ohio Regional Book Depository contains 10,000-square-feet of space for the high density storage of materials. Rows of specially designed 30-foot-high shelving, which reduces the space requirements for storing massive amounts of materials, provide the equivalent of more than 24 miles of shelves.

The presidents from the institutions said cooperation between their schools made the depository possible.

"The project represents a real collaboration, a partnership," University President Sidney Ribeau said. "I think it shows something we need more of in the state of Ohio and elsewhere, and that's how people at the state level can come together with local regions to make things happen that are good for the citizens that we serve."

Toledo President Frank Horton said the depository should just be the start of cooperation between the institutions. He said working against each other should go no farther than the football field.

"Competition should remain on the playing field. I think the key here is collaboration," Horton said. "We look forward to using this facility for many years in the future."

Paul Yon, University Archival Collections director, said the Ohio Board of Regents-funded facility will clear valuable space in the Jerome Library.

"It releases some space on main campus so we can put more contemporary materials on site, which I think will be in greater demand by University students and the University community."

Yon said the new building will save his department money.

"It saves us some money in the purchasing of hardware and shelving," Yon said. "It could save us thousands of dollars. It enables us to look toward compacting a lot of materials on our archive floors."

The structure also has two-way interactive video telecommunications equipment hardwired to Jerome Library. In turn, the library is linked to MCO and UT.

"The telecommunications equipment makes it possible for the depository staff to meet with our staff on the main campus without ever leaving Perrysburg," said Linda Dobb, University library dean.

The building is the only book depository serving Ohio's state-assisted educational institutions not located on a campus.

Located at 12764 Levis Parkway, near the I-475 and State Route 25 interchange in Perrysburg, the depository was constructed as an attachment to an existing building which houses Bowling Green's Great Lakes Research Institute.

Student workers use a modified fork lift, nicknamed "Eleanor," to shelve and retrieve stored library materials at the Northwest Ohio Regional Book Depository.

TWA explosion still mysterious

Pat Milton
The Associated Press

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — The Navy is nearly ready to pack up its scuba gear and underwater robots, leaving the mystery of TWA Flight 800 to an investigative army hunting a solution with microscopes and computers.

"It's definitely the beginning of a new phase once we get all the pieces up from the ocean," said FBI Assistant Director James Kallstrom, the agency's lead investigator.

"But nothing much will change. There just won't be things coming in the front door anymore," he said. "We will be concentrating on what is already there in the hangar."

On Monday, the aircraft hangar in Calverton contained more than 90 percent of the pieces of the Boeing 747, which exploded July 17, killing all 230 aboard. Authorities still don't know whether a bomb, missile or mechanical malfunction caused the explosion that spread wreckage like confetti across five square miles of the Atlantic

Letters to the Editor

Many students see Homecoming Queen as a ceremonial and lightweight position — more for the sake of tradition than anything else. Sally Attia, a former RA at MacDonald and an international student leader, sees the position a little differently. She hopes to use the position to comment on multicultural issues, and to find resources for programs that promote intercultural understanding. In an election year, these may sound like empty words. But Sally has proven her commitment to building community, working for World Student Association and UAO to bring people of different races together. Sally has been instrumental in the building of friendships across races, ethnic groups and religions. I hope many undergrads will head to the Union to vote for Sally Attia for Homecoming Queen.

I read with some interest Andrea Wood's editorial in Monday's BG News and thought it important to comment. I applaud Ms. Wood's attempt to do research before writing from emotion. There are points, however, that should be clarified.

First, while the crime and police employee statistics she reports may be correct, they have no meaning as they are presented. Are these figures high or low? Rather than look at raw numbers, rates of offending should be examined, since this allows you to make comparisons. Such an effort would show that the assault rate is less than half that for the State of Ohio, and one-fourth the size for the U.S. The rape rate is 60 percent of the Ohio rate and 73 percent of the U.S. data. In terms of the police numbers, the rate is almost identical to that for local law enforcement agencies across the U.S.

Second, even if campus security was comparatively understaffed, increasing the number of officers would not reduce the level of crime. Police officers typically appear AFTER a crime is committed, take reports, and do their best to identify and arrest the offender. Rarely do they stop a crime in progress.

Third, the use of arguments from victim advocacy groups should be considered in light that these groups rarely look at the scientific evidence and typically provide the "politically correct" position. While many of their suggestions make sense, others are founded on misinformation. Indeed, many groups provide contradictory information on how to avoid crime (particularly in terms of how victims respond during sexual assault).

Fourth, Ms. Wood inaccurately quotes me at several places. I did not say that there is an emergency phone every 10-15 feet or that there is a light on every corner of the University. I said "Your parents, home towns, and other employers do not provide ... lights on every corner, or emergency phones every 10-15 feet." This was in response to comments made in earlier letters and editorials by others in the BG News. Ms. Wood also provides other inaccurate information, such as the fact that there are "roughly 15,000 students" at BGSU (according to the Registrar's Office there are 16,791 students at BGSU this year). This difference in numbers is important in making calculations of rates.

While I welcome debate, I suggest that individuals do more than collect raw data, read partisan documents, and report information without knowing what it really means. It is important to be able to put information into its proper perspective. Crime data and information works the same way.

Fruit Loops help with history

Meredith Southard

Good morning. Today is the day I write my big history paper. I have known about this paper for a month and a half now. I have been in a constant low grade panic about it for two weeks. It's due tomorrow. Does this mean that I have started it yet? Absolutely not.

I believe that the paper is supposed to be on the nomadic tribes of fourth-century Europe. This is a subject which not only bores me to tears but also one about which I know next to nothing. I suspect that wringing twelve pages of intelligent commentary out on the topic is going to be on the far side of difficult.

My alarm just went off. It's 7:30 a.m. I lie in bed and let the thought of my paper bounce around in my brain for awhile. It's due in twenty six hours. I decide to skip all of my classes today, that I might focus on pulling something coherent out of my sluggish mind. Thus comforted, I go back to sleep.

I wake up at eleven, and lounge in bed for awhile, day-dreaming of little nomadic tribes chasing each other around a football field. They come to a screeching halt when I realize it's noon and I'm being a slugabed. I run to the shower and bathe in heady anticipation of a day of frenzied composition. This should be over in three, four hours tops, and if I'm lucky I can even make my afternoon classes. I can do the research over breakfast.

One hour and four bowls of Fruit Loops later and I have decided on a title: "Nomadic Tribes of Fourth-Century Europe." I've also discovered that my apartment contains no books on the subject. This is disappointing, because it means I will have to waste time walking to the library and prowling the Main Stacks.

After an hour and a half of nervous searching I have ascertained that Jerome Library also does not contain any books on nomadic tribes of fourth-century Europe. It technically has three, but these have apparently scammed off into oblivion upon sensing my need for them. I storm to the information desk.

"I demand to know why you don't have any books on nomadic tribes of fourth century Europe!" I scream at the guy behind the desk.

"Well, we actually have three, but they're checked out right now," he says. "If you like we can get something for you through Ohio Link."

"Oh?" I raise an eyebrow. "Sure. It'll take about three weeks."

"Three weeks!" I shriek. "That doesn't help me! My paper's due tomorrow!"

I throw up my arms in frustration. Attending my afternoon classes has become a horribly distant dream. I decide that I must turn to that last bastion of hope, the textbook.

Five o'clock finds me parked on the couch watching The Andy Griffith Show. My textbook contains three sentences on nomadic tribes in fourth-century Europe. I have read these same three sentences approximately five dozen times in the past hour and my brain has yet to absorb a single word. Eventually I will have to glean enough information from these three sentences to write a twelve page paper.

Whump whump whump. This is the sound of me pounding myself on the head with my textbook.

My roommates return from class to find me lying despondent on the living room floor. I had resolved that, even if it is none too informative, my paper will certainly take the award for creative nonsense. Surrounded by failed attempts at these, I have begun to grow worried. Apparently my bull-crapping gear is stuck in neutral.

"What I need is a premise!" I bellow at my roommates. I have been snacking on dry Fruit Loops all day, so I am a jittering, twitching wreck.

I wander into the computer lab at 10, laden with half a page of a rough draft and a growing sense of dread. As I sit down before a computer I wonder what I could possibly say about those nomads that hasn't been said a billion times already. I begin to type a paper concerning everything I don't know about them.

I had been eyeing the "escape" key and fantasizing about Barbados when I fell asleep. Now I jolt awake and rub the side of my face where the keyboard pattern has been semipermanently imprinted. It's one in the morning. I decide that 10 pages is good enough and I get myself home.

I waltz into class the next morning, unduly proud of my 10 pages of pure drivel. As the prof collects our papers she reminds us of our final papers, due at the end of the semester. But I am not worried.

I have a whole month and a half.

"Community" takes on many forms

Guest Columnist

How could any of us be hesitant to support community at BGSU? What a warm, tolerant metaphor! The idea of our moving together, arm in arm, toward common goals is inspiration; the idea of community has the capacity to bring out the best in each of us.

But like other high-sounding abstractions that attract immediate applause, the fact that community exists, is about to be found, or will be created is the easy part. But the struggle for the soul or character of the community persists. A standard avenue for hiding the internal conflicts that constitute any institution, whether it be a university, corporation, or church, is to define one cuddly and inchoate idea, e.g., community, by using equally fuzzy attributes to "explain" what the first mushy word really means.

For example, we note with reluctant amusement that the BGSU community is said to have as a core value, creative imaginings. Beautiful! Now there is a substantive ideal! We ask you to engage in some creative imaginings of your own: Can you imagine anyone ever supporting uncreative imaginings? We certainly would never do so. We asked several faculty and students what the term meant to them, and they just grinned. We wonder why.

Another common strategy for ignoring ruptures in the community is to pretend that we can support everything. Football is great; doctoral programs are splendid; undergraduate learning is a focus; honors programs are nifty. This scenario suggests that we all live lives that are infinite in duration, and that the institution has unlimited funds (or at least the capacity to do everything with less).

Conflicts at BGSU and in other organizations are public relations nightmares, but they are real despite the understandable efforts of institutional spokespersons to portray diversity of vision and values in more agreeable terms. Anyone doubting the existence of legitimate, inconsistent diversity at BGSU need only read the editorial page of The BG News where more or less reasonable students articulate with ferocity what university spokespersons would prefer not to notice: There are many versions of community at BGSU, and they are neither compatible nor even on speaking terms despite the well-intentioned efforts of the University's leadership to encourage conversation.

A Letter to the Editor in the News on Wednesday makes this point dramatically. The letter is angry; it speaks forcefully on behalf of one version of community at Bowling Green State University. The letter brands those BGSU students who did not attend the football game on Saturday as PATHETIC. We appreciate the candor of this charge. Apparently, many people at BGSU believe we should call a halt to our lives when our athletic teams are playing "games" and "support" the athletes by our attendance.

We are told by important voices at BGSU that attending a football game is a proper use of time, apparently superior to other uses (at least during game-time). For example, our new provost, Dr. Charles Middleton, was apparently so supportive of attendance at football games that he was willing to take time from his busy schedule to have dinner with six lucky students whose raffle tickets were drawn during the game. In addition, someone with a healthy budget decided that attendance at football games is so significant that even more inducement was necessary to guide students' choice about time usage. Lucky raffle ticket winners received a trip for two to the Las Vegas Bowl or to Orlando, plus three laptop computers.

Our point is that the letter telling BGSU students that they should be "ashamed and embarrassed" because they did not attend a football game reflects a vision of BGSU that may be widespread. But it is not in any respect our vision. We see attendance at football games as just one of many fluffy activities that we might opt for when we decide that we want something to do AFTER we grow tired from making our contributions to personal growth and well-being of others.

Simply put, we don't see attendance at football games as integral to the BGSU community that we desire. In no way is it comparable to the struggle to write a coherent paragraph, develop sensitive listening skills, write and edit a one-act play, evaluate the claims of disagreeing experts, build and sustain intellectual curiosity, or nurture the drive to understand those who label our views as pathetic.

We have no particular dislike for football nor for those who enjoy watching it. As a diversion from life's dilemmas and challenges, football is quite adequate. We know that athletes work much harder than most people can ever imagine. Their diligence is impressive.

But those preparing for medical school in chemistry laboratories and those who are struggling to understand child development in preparation for teaching are also working hard. Yet, where is the crescendo of institutional support for their hard work? Those people work on our behalf without the benefit of photo opportunities, marching bands, and multiple flashy displays of public relations glitz. They're forced to recognize that their expression of diligence is less fashionable than athletic contests.

We did not attend the last football game and may never attend another. Why? The answer is that, given our view of what BGSU should be, we try very hard to find better things to do. When BGSU represents the intellectual values that we embrace, when BGSU gives away free trips to Las Vegas to students who attend Honors seminars, when BGSU films and promotes book clubs with the zeal with which it promotes football, then we will feel at home here. Are you pathetic when you don't attend football games? Or are you pathetic when you can think of nothing better to do with your time?

Executive Decision

Boy elated after Dole mention

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND -- Landel Shakespeare was both pupil and subject on Monday, the day after Bob Dole mentioned his name while discussing education during the first presidential debate.

The debate between Dole and President Clinton was the first topic of the day in Landel's second-grade class at Our Lady of Peace School. Classmates greeted the 7-year-old with applause and a note of congratulations on a blackboard, said his father, Delvoland Shakespeare.

Dole mentioned Landel, who participates in a test school voucher program, to illustrate the need for school choice. The reference earned the Republican another look from Landel's father, a lifelong Democrat.

"Presidents come and go but Landel - I'll have him with me for the rest of my life," Shakespeare said. "Anybody who supports my son and things for my son deserves a second look."

Shakespeare would not say how he will vote Nov. 5. "I like to keep who I vote for private," he said.

Dole had met with Landel and his father during a July 19 visit to Cleveland. They discussed a voucher program that allows parents to use state money to send their children to private or religious schools.

Landel's parents use a voucher to send him to a Catholic school rather than to one in the financially and academically troubled Cleveland public school district. The tuition costs $1,700 a year.

In Sunday's debate, Dole said money now used to finance the U.S. Department of Education could be used to help students such as Landel.

Bob and Elizabeth Dole step off the Dole campaign plane Wednesday. Dole hit the ground running after the Tuesday night debates.

"Well, it seems to me that we ought to take that money we can save from the Department of Education, put it in Opportunity Scholarships, and tell little Lan-del Shakespeare out in Cleveland, Ohio - and tell your mother and father you're going to get to go to school because we're going to match what the state puts up, and you're going to get to the school of your choice," Dole said.

Landel told ABC's "Good Morning America" in an interview Monday from a Cleveland diner that he liked both Dole and Clinton. "They're good people," he said.

Presidential candidates hustle back to campaign trail in East

Tom Raum
The Associated Press

TOMS RIVER, N.J. -- Hustling back to the campaign trail after their first debate, Bob Dole pressed his comeback quest Monday by insisting he's the candidate voters can trust while President Clinton pursued business support in states that normally vote Republican.

Both candidates were trying to build on momentum they claimed from Sunday's showdown in Hartford, Conn., although early polls suggested the debate had produced little movement in the race.

Traveling across New Jersey in a bus caravan, an energized Dole underscored a line of attack he had sounded in the debate.

"When people think of Bob Dole, I want them to think of the word trust. Trust. Trust. And when they think of the word Bill Clinton, I want them to think of the word fear," Dole told supporters gathered on a high school football field. "I trust you, you trust me."

Dole pressed his plan for a 15-percent tax cut by campaigning with Republican Gov. Christie Whitman, who upset Democratic incumbent James Florio in 1993 largely on the promise of a last night when an impartial observer told me I won the debate. And Elizabeth generally knows what she's talking about."

Elizabeth Dole campaigned in her own bus tour across Connecticut, telling a business group in Waterbury that her husband had "known the struggle to make ends meet," a reference both to his recovery from near-fatal World War II wounds and his current lagging presidential campaign.

While Clinton and Vice President Al Gore have made bus campaigns something of a trademark, Monday's tour through New Jersey was the first time Dole has campaigned by bus since winning the GOP nomination.

Dole seemed to revel in the experience, and likened it to Whitman's bus tour during her winning gubernatorial race.

"We've got the momentum on our side," Dole declared. "We're moving. We're moving. We're going to move him right out of the White House!"

Faulting Clinton for raising unfounded fears about Republican plans for Medicare and other programs, Dole told a Toms River audience, "Don't let Bill Clinton scare you."

Carter said he believes these experiences, plus many others, have specially qualified him to lead Wood County into the 21st century.

"As mayor, the county would say things we had to do, and you'd have to spend money to accommodate the county," Carter said.

At the level of county commissioners, Carter said effective people can effectively govern without getting wrapped up in politics.

"We're at the level of government that can be accountable to the public," Carter said. "We're servants of the electorate and not politicians."

Carter said the people of Wood County understand the need for a healthy balance for further growth.

Panel to help voters choose

Voters will have a chance to learn about the presidential ballot Thursday at 7:30 p.m. during a panel discussion in the gym of St. Thomas More University, 425 Thurstin Ave.

Four University faculty members will participate in the panel discussion, which will explore the role of government, military, social safety net, health care, global environment, economy/budget and civil rights.

Political Science Professor Michael Maggiotto said the forum will be a good opportunity for voters to educate themselves.

"We're simply going to explore some of the principle issues of the 1996 campaign, and how the two major candidates come down on those issues," Maggiotto said. "There will be a panel presentation to try and introduce the topic, and from there, in some sort of easily understandable manner, hopefully [we can] open it up for questions and commentary from the floor."

Bill Clinton stands before the American flag Wednesday in Connecticut. Clinton spoke to a group of business owners.

Students can vote for homecoming candidates

University students can vote for any of the following candidates for Homecoming king or queen today and Wednesday in the Union Foyer from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Below is a list of the candidates for Homecoming king and queen.

The candidates were asked to list their three most important activities. The University Activities Association is sponsoring the election. The winners will be announced at half-time of the homecoming football game against Kent Saturday.

Laura Roth is an elementary education major from Mentor, Ohio.

Roth listed her three most important activities as being a member of Chi Omega Sorority, an orientation leader and an Off-Campus Student Center assistant.

Roth

Aimee Lyn Mumma is a psychology and social work major from Toledo.

Mumma listed her three most important activities as being the treasurer for Delta Gamma Sorority, a member of Order of Omega and an University Ambassador.

Mumma

Betsy Hauptman is a special education major from Cleveland, Ohio.

Hauptman listed her three most important activities as being a member of Alpha Xi Delta Sorority, a member of Omicron Delta Kappa and a member of Mortar Board.

Hauptman

Angie Gusser is an interpersonal communications major from Fort Jennings, Ohio.

Gusser listed her three most important activities as being the vice president of Organization of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority, a marketing intern at Therma-Tru Corporation and involved in intramural sports.

Gusser

Michelle Barth is an interpersonal communication major from Strongsville, Ohio.

Barth listed her three most important activities as being the rush chairwoman of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority, a member of Order of Omega and a University Preview Day Tour Guide.

Barth

Katie Keane is a recreation administration major from Fairview Park, Ohio.

Keane listed her three most important activities as being a member of Chi Omega Sorority, a member of the Orientation Board and a University Success Facilitator.

Keane

Laurie Arsenault is a criminal justice major from Millersburg, Ohio.

Arsenault listed her three most important activities as being a member of Kappa Delta Sorority, Morale Overall Chairwoman of the Dance Marathon and a member of Order of Omega.

Arsenault

Sally Attia is an environmental science and psychology major from Alexandria, Egypt.

Attia listed her three most important activities as a member of the World Student Association, a member of the Model United Nations and a member of University Activities Organization.

Attia

Tanny Vonthron is a hearing impaired education major from Huron, Ohio.

Vonthron listed her three most important activities as being the president of Chi Omega Sorority, volunteering and working with deaf children and children with special needs and participating in various campus organizations and activities.

Vonthron

Kristen Woods is a health promotion major from Bowling Green, Ohio.

Woods listed her three most important activities as being a member of Gamma Phi Beta Sorority, a member of the BGSU Children's Miracle Network Dance Marathon and a member of Omicron Delta Kappa.

Ocean bottom.

Two Navy boats, with 100 divers and 450 crew members conducting the salvage operation, are expected to leave within two weeks, said Rear Admiral Edward Kristensen.

Some Navy personnel will remain to supervise the vacuuming or dredging of the ocean floor, which will be contracted out to private companies.

"We want to make sure we haven't left anything behind, but I don't think there is very much buried in the sand," Kristensen said.

If a cause still hasn't been determined by the time the boats leave, thousands of pieces of debris must undergo a closer inspection and be added to the three-dimensional mockup of the plane being assembled in the hangar.

Investigators are still missing key pieces.

The FBI is seeking any metal that would have surrounded a hole created by a bomb or missile. And the National Transportation Safety Board is eager to find a missing fuel pump and six missing fuel probes, which could, theoretically, have sparked the explosion in the center fuel tank. The NTSB also wants more of the center fuel tank, about two-thirds of which has been found.

As metal and aluminum fragments arrive at the hangar, they are immediately viewed by FBI forensic experts for unusual pitting or scarring.

Bomb-sniffing dogs regularly check the debris.

More offense needed

The Falcon football team has regrouped after Saturday's disappointing loss to Toledo and has its sights set on Kent and this week's Homecoming game.

Coach Gary Blackney discussed the team's fledgling offense Monday during his weekly press conference. BG is 103rd out of 111 Division I-A teams in total offense through five games.

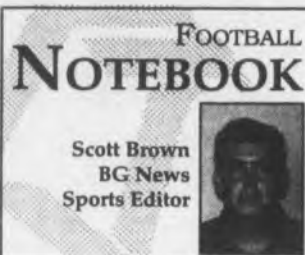

"Offense is a concern," Blackney said. "Probably my biggest disappointment outside of losing the game Saturday was the fact that we didn't come off the ball and run the ball for at least 100 yards, which we had done for every other game, including Alabama."

The Falcons were held to just 59 yards of net rushing against the Rockets, by far a season low.

Blackney also talked Monday about quarterback Bob Niemet, who was shouldered with much of the offensive burden due to the rushing stalwart handed out by Toledo. Blackney had said after Saturday's game that the Falcons can't expect to put so much pressure on a sophomore quarterback and expect to win.

"He's still learning and growing," Blackney said. "You're hoping each week that you're going to see improvement by large gains, in large amounts, from week to week. That hasn't happened."

"It's not all on Bobby Niemet. If we catch four or five of those [dropped] passes on third down that we had, we keep drives going and [Bob's] stats improve."

Niemet was 14-of-37 passing against the Rockets for 220 yards. For the season, he has completed only 52 of 121 passes (43 percent). He has thrown two touchdowns and seven interceptions.

Blackney went on to term Niemet's performance to date as "average."

"Again, go back and look at Erik White when he was a sophomore," Blackney continued, referring to the quarterback that led BG to back-to-back MAC championships in 1991 and '92. "He turns around one year later and he's the best quarterback in the MAC."

"I think it's very, very hard to be a sophomore at this level."

Again, Niemet didn't get a whole lot of help from his teammates against the Rockets Saturday.

"We've just got to go back and work on blocking and being physical and playing with great effort and great enthusiasm," Blackney said. "If we can get Courtney [Davis, running back] to the line of scrimmage, he has proven that he can do a lot of things with the football."

Cates is cleared to play

Running back Keylan Cates has been cleared to play by his doctors in Columbus, Blackney said Monday.

"I don't see him coming back for a few more games yet, but he'll be involved in practice," he said. "He still needs to get his conditioning back before he would be able to play."

Cates is rehabilitating after suffering a ruptured ACL during spring practice.

Hamilton approaches record with Saturday performance

Damron Hamilton's 155 receiving yards Saturday against Toledo was the most by a Falcon receiver since Mark Szlachcic's school-record 189-yard day in the California Bowl in 1991.

"He's made some big plays for us, but, like the rest of the offense, he has to develop more consistency," Blackney said. "He has a lot of athletic ability, and he has asserted himself as a go-to guy for us."

The BG News/Hideki Kobayashi
Falcon coach Gary Blackney conducts a post-game interview with WBGU's Jason Gibbs following the Central Michigan game Sept. 28. Blackney said Monday that the offense needs to improve in almost every area.

Tiger Woods eyes Ryder Cup

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS - Tiger Woods and Davis Love III were playing a nine-hole practice round in Georgia a few weeks ago when the subject first came up.

Barely a month into his pro career, Woods was already trying to figure out a way to play in the Ryder Cup.

"He said to me, 'Do you think if I won two or three times before the Ryder Cup team is picked that I would make it?'" Love recalled. "I told him if somebody could not pick you after you won two or three times, it would be amazing."

The way Woods won his first pro tournament Sunday, it might be amazing if he doesn't win several more in the next year before the Ryder Cup team is selected.

Playing with the poise of someone whose game is far past his years, the 20-year-old Woods stormed from four shots off the lead to beat Love in sudden death and win the Las Vegas Invitational.

Not since a 22-year-old named Jack Nicklaus beat Arnold Palmer in a playoff to win the 1962 U.S. Open has a golfer burst on the scene with the game and the confidence Woods has shown in only five tournaments as a pro.

"All he thinks about is winning," Love said. "I don't think Jack Nicklaus ever went into a major trying to make the top 10. Obviously, someone taught him that from a young age. He understands it quite well."

Woods is not the youngest golfer to win on the PGA Tour. But he served notice that he has something far more important than the length he uses to overpower the golf course: the winning fire Nicklaus used to win 70 tournaments, including 18 majors.

He's already fielding questions on his place in the game, and on how good he thinks he might be over the years. His answers are short and to the point.

"I really don't know," Woods said.

His fellow players do, though. "He's obviously the next great player and we're going to have to work to beat him," Love said.

"He's got tremendous length and he's got all the shots," said Keith Fergus, Woods' playing partner on Sunday.

What may have been even more impressive than the win was the way Woods did it, in front of thousands screaming "Tiger, Tiger," and "Bring it home, Mr. Woods."

The throng of fans, estimated at 25,000, were testament to the impact Woods has had on the game. Tournament officials estimated there were some 10,000 more people at the tournament Sunday than a year ago.

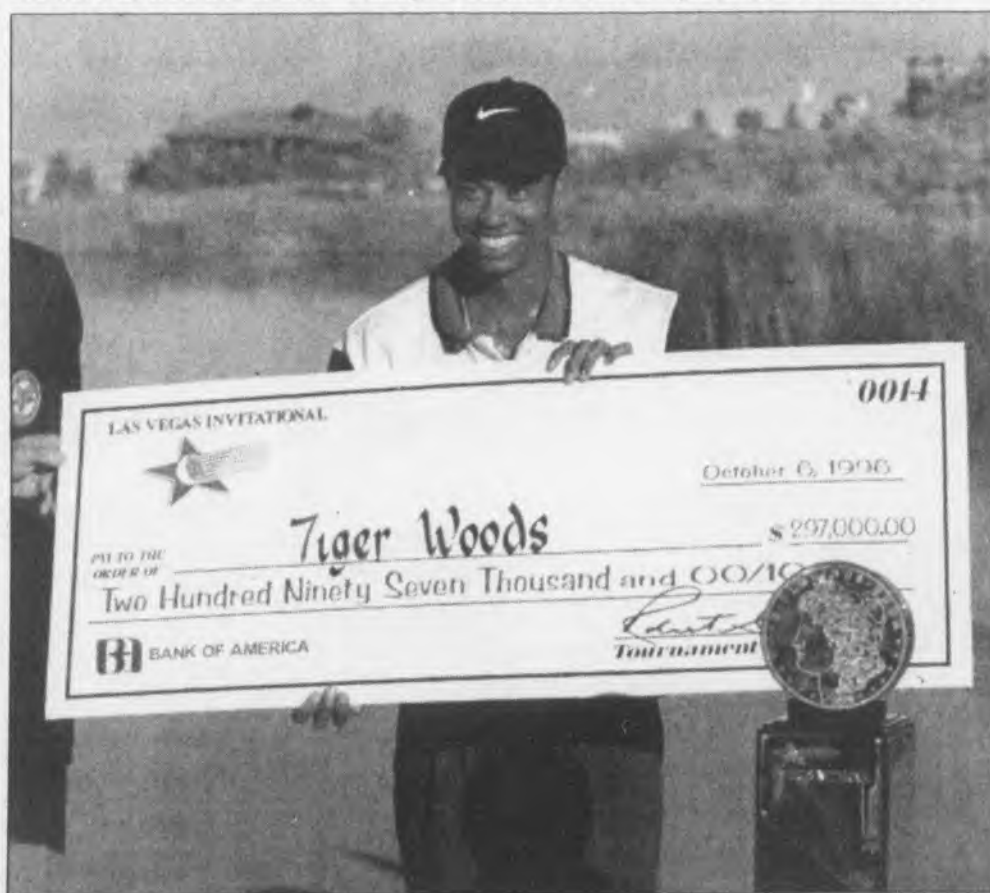

Woods blew past a leaderboard that included names like Love and Fred Couples, then calmly laced a 9-iron within 20 feet of the cup on the first playoff hole to seal the victory.

"Knowing that I hit the shots when I had to down the stretch and coming from behind to win is very satisfying," Woods said. "What really makes it great is how many players were between me and the lead at the start of the day. I knew I had to post a low score and I did."

The win not only earned Woods $297,000, but it also gave him a two-year tour exemption and a spot in next year's Masters.

The only surprise to Woods, though, was that he thought this should have been his second win, not his first.

"It should of come at Quad City," Woods said of the tournament he led last month only to falter in the final round. "I learned a lot from that blunder.

Tiger Woods smiles after receiving a check and trophy for winning the Las Vegas Invitational on Sunday. The victory earned him $297,000, a two-year exemption on the PGA tour, and a spot in the Masters.

"He's obviously the next great player and we're going to have to work to beat him."

Davis Love III
PGA player

Coming down the stretch, I applied it here. I stayed very focused."

Woods, who was carrying his own bag and living in a dorm only a few months ago, seemed more impressed by the size of the winner's check than he did by his accomplishment.

"I like that figure," he said, pointing to the $297,000 first prize.

The first prize check brought Woods' earnings to $437,194 and gave him an added incentive to enter the last two tournaments of the regular season despite being in pain from a groin pull that he reinjured in the third round.

Woods is now 40th on the money winning list, and, with winnings of another $170,000 or so in the final two tournaments, could jump into the top 30 and qualify for the season-ending Tour Championship.

"What you've seen here is just the tip of the iceberg," said Butch Harmon, Woods' coach. "This is the first time in his life he's been allowed only to play golf. He's had to go to school and try and make his grades and not practice in good conditions and had to do all the things that a youngster does."

Now, with his concentration totally on his game, Woods can post what sounds like an ominous warning to his fellow pros.

"I go to every tournament trying to win," he said. "Otherwise you shouldn't even show up."

Morris ready to resume career

The Associated Press

OWINGS MILLS, Md. - Running back Bam Morris took the practice field for the first time for the Baltimore Ravens on Monday, participating in light drills in preparation for Sunday's game against Indianapolis.

Coach Ted Marchibroda said he expects the former Pittsburgh Steelers standout to carry the ball a dozen times, complementing starter Earnest Byner. Morris, who last played in the Super Bowl last January, signed with the Ravens as a free agent on Sept. 24, but has been unable to play due to an league-imposed drug suspension.

"[His biggest challenge] is learning the offense and learning as much of the system as he possibly can," Marchibroda said. "By the same token, you're not going to use him a great deal of the time because he's not quite ready yet."

Morris said he was excited to resume his football career, and hopes to put his well-publicized troubles behind him.

"Mr. [Art] Modell and the Ravens organization have given me a second chance," Morris said. "It's just time to come back and prove everybody wrong. People make mistakes, and I think that people are due for a second chance. This organization gave me one, and I'm going to make the best out of it."

Morris ran for 1,395 yards and 16 touchdowns in his two years in Pittsburgh, but was released when his drug problem came to light following the 1995 season.

In other news, Marchibroda said he was calling a special coaches' meeting late Monday to decide what to do about the Ravens' beleaguered defense.

The team's biggest concerns revolve around the pass rush and the secondary, both of which offered only token resistance to New England in Sunday's 46-38 loss. Patriots quarterback Drew Bledsoe passed for 310 yards and four touchdowns as Baltimore's defense sank to 13th in the AFC.

"We'll have a meeting and we'll see what transpires," Marchibroda said. "I don't know what it's going to mean. We'll have to wait and see."

While Marchibroda ruled out the possibility of acquiring help, he said the likely response will be to shift around personnel. Two boosts to the defense could come with the likely return of safety Eric Turner and defensive end Anthony Pleasant on Sunday.

Turner, who came out of Sunday's game against the Patriots early in the second quarter after spraining his left ankle, is listed as day-to-day, and will likely return to action. Pleasant, out since Week 1 with a more serious ankle injury, also will be ready, according to Marchibroda.

Florida puts out champs

The Associated Press

Try to figure out the last time a team from the state of Florida wasn't in the running for the national championship.

Florida, Florida State, and Miami, usually ranked No. 1 at some point during the last 14 seasons, are at it again. The Gators are No. 1, the Seminoles No. 3 and the Hurricanes No. 6.

The trio have been involved in seven of the past 10 games that decided the national championship, setting a standard for excellence unmatched by any other state.

It used to be the Midwest, storied teams like Notre Dame and Michigan and Minnesota. Then came the superpowers at Oklahoma, Texas, Alabama, Nebraska and Southern California.

That's not the case anymore. Since 1983, Miami has four national titles and Florida State one, while Florida lost its chance in last year's Fiesta Bowl. Miami and Florida State each have to No. 2 finishes in that span.

"The college elite are in Florida," said Jacksonville Jaguars tackle Leon Searcy, who passed up Notre Dame and Michigan for Miami and left with two titles. "Just look at the polls - Florida schools have got three in the top 10. That speaks for itself."

Searcy is just one of many reasons the three Florida schools have reached a level of success unmatched by any other state. Top prep players like Searcy used to leave home for places like South Bend, Norman, Okla., and Tuscaloosa, Ala. Now, many of those players are staying home, knowing a national title could be just around the corner.

The state produces prep players like Emmitt Smith, Michael Irvin, Cortez Kennedy and Deion Sanders, kids who go in search of a winner and don't have to look very far to find college football at its finest.

That's why the toughest games for Miami are not always the ones for a national title, why the Gators can win the tough Southeastern Conference every year and still be second-best in their own state.

That's why Bobby Bowden doesn't measure success at Florida State by how high it finishes in the polls or its record 11 straight bowl victories.

"If you want to know how you did, see how you come out in the state of Florida," Bowden said. "That's usually what determines whether you meet your goal."

It all starts again Saturday in Miami when No. 3 Florida State plays the sixth-ranked Hurricanes. And if the Seminoles can make it out of Miami, their regular season end Nov. 30 against No. 1 Florida.

All three schools - the only Division I teams in the state until Central Florida moved up this season - have finished in the top 20 every year since 1990.

Miami stumbled through probation and a bevy of off-field problems last year. The Hurricanes still won their last seven games and ended the year No. 20, their worst showing in the final poll since 1982.

Florida, which had its first shot at a national championship last year, only to be blown out by Nebraska in the Fiesta Bowl, has finished no lower than 13th this decade. That was in 1990, Steve Spurrier's first year as head coach.

And Florida State, which won its first national championship in 1993, has finished no lower than No. 4 since 1987.

This year is no exception. "I don't know what it takes to get somebody outside the state of Florida to be No. 1," Penn State coach Joe Paterno said.

It is a trend that doesn't figure to end soon. As long as the teams keep winning, they will continue to get the best prep players from the fertile state of Florida. And as long as they keep getting those players, they likely will continue to win.

"I had a kid two years ago who wound up at Notre Dame. He could have gone anywhere he wanted, but there was some family ties up there," said Corky Rogers, a high school coach in Jacksonville the past 25 years.

"But you take that same kind of a kid who had no other ties, and it would shock me if he didn't choose a state school."

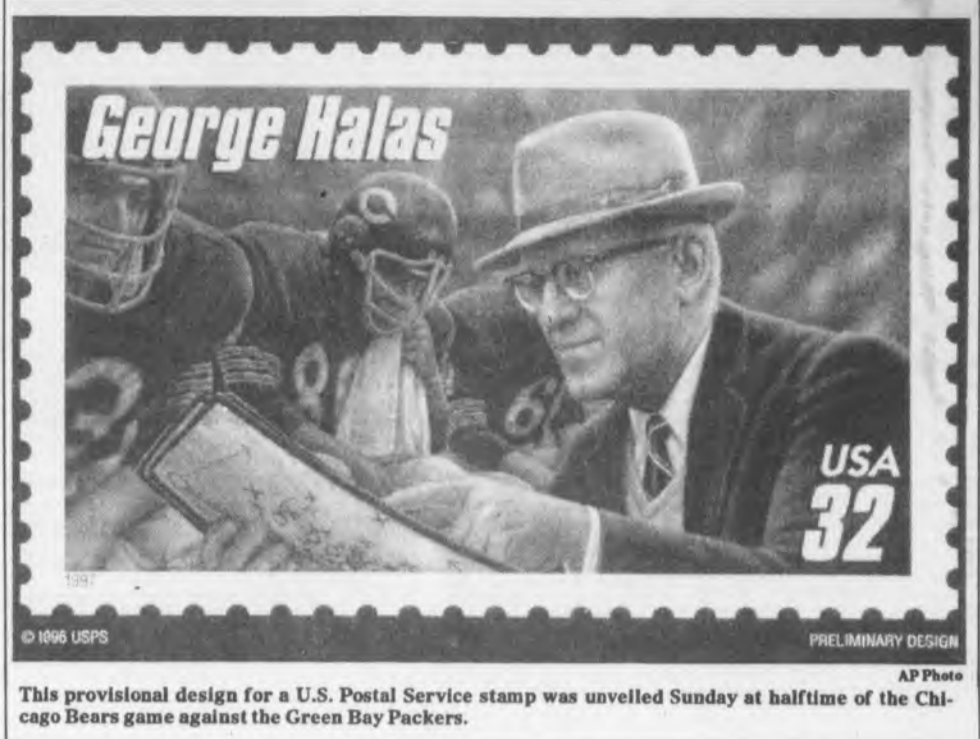

"If you want to see how you did, see how you come out in the state of Florida."

Bobby Bowden
Florida State head coach

"It just goes to show the caliber of athletes in the state of Florida," Searcy said. "That's why you see so many other schools outside the state try to come in and steal the great athletes away from Florida. And the leftovers - if you can call them that - are pretty damn good themselves."

Iowa State found one at Southridge High School in Miami - r Troy Davis is now on pace to become the first running back to rush for over 2,000 yards in two straight seasons.

Still, all three Florida schools do a remarkably good job of keeping the local talent. And there obviously is enough to go around.

This provisional design for a U.S. Postal Service stamp was unveiled Sunday at halftime of the Chicago Bears game against the Green Bay Packers.

On Miami's roster, 65 percent of the players are from Florida. Seventy percent of the players on Florida State's roster are in-state, while the Gators have 77 percent of their players from Florida.

That's true with most college teams. But not every state produces players like Florida, one of only 11 states that allows high school spring practice and one of only three that allows contact in the spring.

For a six-year stretch starting in 1987, Florida State and Miami were ranked in the top four at the end of each season. Those teams had great defenses, pro-style offenses and great coaches -

Bowden at Florida State; Howard Schnellenberger, Jimmy Johnson and Dennis Erickson at Miami.

Grace back for two more years

The Associated Press

CHICAGO - After a career-year with the bat, Mark Grace agreed Monday to return to the Chicago Cubs for at least two more seasons, with a club option for 1999.

Terms of the pact were not disclosed.

Grace, a two-time All-Star and three-time Gold Glove first baseman, finished in the NL's top 10 in hitting this year for the seventh time in his nine major league seasons, all with the Cubs.

Grace, 32, batted a career-high .331 - fifth-highest in the league - with 39 doubles, nine homers and 75 RBIs. He lifted his lifetime hitting average to .309.

Defensively, his .997 fielding percentage was second among NL first basemen. He committed only four errors in 1,371 chances.

The .331 was the highest average by a Cub since Bill Madlock's .339 in 1976. It was the highest average by a left-handed Cubs batter since Billy Williams' .333 in 1972.

Yanks and Orioles keep battling

The Associated Press

NEW YORK - For the first time, two teams from the same division are playing for the pennant. The Yankees' four-game lead is gone, forgotten in the age of wild-card baseball.

"I was an advocate for the wild card, anyway," Cal Ripken said Monday as the Baltimore Orioles prepared for Tuesday night's start of the AL championship series against New York. "There were times under the old system when teams won over 100 games and one could not go to the playoffs."

New York, starting Andy Pettitte over David Cone in the opener against Scott Erickson, went 10-3 against the Orioles during the regular season and held off the September challenge to its AL East lead.

But Baltimore became the first wild-card team to advance in the playoffs when it clipped Cleveland, so the Yankees and Orioles are back at it, this time in a best-of-7 series with a World Series berth at stake.

"Whatever happened is in the past. Now everybody is at the same level," said Baltimore's Roberto Alomar, who's likely to be booed loudly at Yankee Stadium for spitting at an umpire on Sept. 27.

Though Alomar apologized, and the umpire, John Hirschbeck, said he was willing to put the episode behind him, the fans aren't likely to let go so soon.

Both teams competed for free agents last fall, with New York's re-signing of Cone and Baltimore's deal with Alomar the main moves. When one signed a pitcher, the other signed one, too. And the competition carried over to the season.

"I think it was fated. I think this was meant to be," Orioles manager Davey Johnson said. "There's always been a great rivalry between the Yankees and Orioles."

With a four-game sweep at Camden Yards following the All-Star break, New York appeared to put the Orioles away. The Yankees opened a 12-game lead on July 29, but Baltimore cut it to 2 games on Sept. 15. Only when New York won two of three from the Orioles in mid-month did the lead seem safe.

"The way they played the second half of the year, I sort of expected this to happen," Yankees manager Joe Torre said.

Both teams have players limping into the series. If B.J. Surhoff isn't ready because of a sore left hamstring and right knee, Mike Devereaux or Pete Incaviglia will start in left field for the Orioles.

New York expects Paul O'Neill to start despite his sore right hamstring, but if it hampers him too much, Darryl Strawberry could get a start.

Worthington Schools

In size, Worthington Schools rank 17th out of the 600 school systems in Ohio, yet, Worthington Schools are often rated among the best. Worthington students, at all levels, consistently score at or above the 70th percentile on national standardized tests, and in recent years, Worthington has boasted of the largest number of national merit semifinalists of all Ohio's public schools. Seventy-five percent of Worthington graduates further their education at colleges and other post-secondary institutions. Worthington's 11,000 students are currently served by 739 teachers, 48 administrators and over 400 support staff. At the center of the rapid growth taking place in Central Ohio, Worthington is a city of contrasts. It is at the same time old and quaint, new and exciting. While preserving the charm of colonial architecture and village greens reminiscent of New England, the city's farsighted planning has managed to attract subdivisions of richly crafted homes and soaring, modernistic corporate centers and retail complexes. In the Worthington School District, seven new buildings have opened in the past eight years to our students and community. The Worthington Schools now provide services at 12 elementary schools, four middle schools and 2 high schools. Career Opportunities: All Teacher Certified Areas K - 12.

Multicultural Career Institute

Applications are now available in the Career Services office for the 1997 Multicultural Career Institute. Students from all academic majors who are members of under-represented groups are invited to apply. Applicants must be full-time students in good standing who have completed 25 credit hours.

The Multicultural Career Institute (MCI) is a program designed to help students from multi-ethnic groups develop or enhance requisite skills for successful transition and adjustment to the workplace. Every year about 50 undergraduate students are selected to attend a two-day career conference where they network with employers from different organizations. Topics for the workshops are carefully selected to address employability issues such as business communication skills, business etiquette, organizational dynamics, and the importance of gaining career related experience.

Employers are encouraged to become involved as speakers at the conferences and as sponsors.

"What to Be or Not to Be"

Undecided about your career path or what major to choose? Want to ask questions of and receive advice from BGSU alumni about the world of work? Then be sure to attend the "What to Be or Not to Be" Career Fair on Tuesday, February 4, 1997 from 1:15-4:00 pm in 101 Olscamp Hall.

BGSU alumni are returning to campus to talk with students about their academic background and how they began their careers. They will be happy to discuss with you the rewards and challenges of their career choice. In addition, they will describe how to get hands-on experience in various career fields. This is a great opportunity to gain up-to-date information from alumni who were once "in your shoes".

Mark your calendars!

Career Fair Success Tips

1) The 60-second commercial When you approach an employer, be prepared to give a 60-second commercial detailing what special skills you possess and specific interest areas you have. Your skills might include research and writing and critical thinking, for example. Proven leadership, strong work ethic, and resourcefulness are other examples of desirable skills. Mention, too, any committees which you have chaired or your role in student government or other organizations. You might also ask the employer where a person with your education and experience might fit into the organization.

2) Don't overlook unfamiliar organizations They could be a gold mine of opportunities. Also, don't assume certain organizations only offer one type of position like sales, for example. They may have many different opportunities for qualified applicants.

3) Ask for a brochure, business card, and follow up with a note of thanks

It's common courtesy to thank the employers for spending time with you. Also, find out when the organization will be coming to recruit on campus or what the timetable is for interviewing applicants.

4) Avoid being vague about your career plans When asked about your interests, be prepared to give a list of jobs in which you would be interested
