Student remains in critical condition

A University student is still in critical condition after being hit by a car driven by Jonathan M. Laabs, 19, while jogging Nov. 9. Anne Gehring, 110 Alpha Xi Delta, was lifeflighted to St. Vincent's Medical Center after she fell and hit her head on concrete curb on Manville Avenue.

The lower half of Gehring's body was under the car, according to Bowling Green City Police reports.

Gehring suffered a skull fracture and leg fracture from the accident.

The case is still under investigation, according to Bowling Green City Police Chief Galen Ash.

Ash to resign from investigative unit

Bowling Green Police Chief Galen Ash resigned from the Ohio Organized Crime Investigations Commission effective Dec. 31, claiming others should have the right to participate in the committee.

The committee, which has been in existence for more than 10 years, creates task forces to deal with problems throughout Ohio.

Ash, who is the only remaining original member of the committee, said participating in the commission has been one of the great experiences of his life.

"I loved it," Ash said. "It was great, but it's time to let someone else have that experience."

Friends unseat Axl, Arsenio in People poll

NEW YORK - Goodbye, old friends - David Caruso, Arsenio Hall, Mike Myers, Axl Rose. Hello, new "Friends" - Jennifer Aniston, Lisa Kudrow, Matt LeBlanc, Matthew Perry and David Schwimmer.

People magazine's annual list of the 400 hottest celebrities is out, and the "Friends" stars were big winners. The five other cast members join Courtney Cox, a holdover from 1995.

Ah, but the losers. Caruso, who swapped "NYPD Blue" for obscurity, is off the list. Ditto ex-talk show host Hall, ex-"Saturday Night Live" star Myers, and once-hip Guns N' Roses frontman Axl Rose.

Goodbye also to singers Jackson Browne and David Byrne, funnyman Chevy Chase, former CBS anchorwoman Connie Chung, rapper Hammer and "The Bridges of Madison County" author Robert James Waller.

Election gains offer promise for education

Jay Young
The BG News

Higher education should be in good hands after last week's election, according to President Sidney Ribeau and the director for University Government Relations.

Phil Mason, government relations director, said the five seats gained by the Republicans in the general assembly mean the Republicans will control education funding.

"It's very clear that the Republicans have a significant and strong hold on the general assembly," Mason said. "When you combine that with the Republicans already controlling all of the state-wide positions. They pretty well have control."

Mason said the current political situations in Ohio favor higher education.

"It's clear to me that higher education is one of the top three or four priorities for the governor," Mason said. "This being his last budget opportunity, I think he will want to make some extra effort for all of education, including K through 12 and higher education."

President Sidney Ribeau said he was pleased with the election results, especially the reelection

Summit focuses on diversity issues

Participants in multimedia event plan for student, faculty discussions

Jay Young
The BG News

Diversity will take center stage tonight during a multimedia campus diversity summit in 113 Olscamp Hall from 7 - 9:45 p.m.

About 10,000 college students, faculty and administrators from around the country are expected to participate in the multimedia event. Participants will spend time looking at diversity issues at campuses across the country then break into smaller groups and discuss diversity at the University.

Lorna Gonsalves-Pinto, Academic Affairs research associate, registered the University for the summit.

"Since our leaders are interested in bridging communities, I thought this would be a marvelous opportunity to do that," Gonsalves-Pinto said. "I'm hoping it will be the start of an ongoing process as we come to terms with diversity."

She said it is a great opportunity for everyone at the University to educate themselves about diversity.

"It will make students more aware of not only diversity, but how the issue of diversity is addressed and dealt with on campuses across the county," Gonsalves-Pinto said. "It is going to allow Bowling Green State University students, faculty and staff to dialogue with each other on issues of diversity."

Diane Regan, executive assistant to the College of Arts and Sciences dean, helped prepare for the event. She said organizers hope consistent discussion about diversity results from the summit.

"I think we really would like to actively engage students, faculty and staff in a conversation about what diverse groups of people experience at Bowling Green," Regan said. "We will be continuing the activities after the summit, which is another way to keep people talking about the issues."

Pat Patton, manager of employment in Human Resources, coordinated individuals to facilitate the group discussions in Olscamp. Patton said groups will be formed randomly and will explore the current conditions at the University and what a diverse community should be.

"We're hoping that we can get small groups to discuss how they see things. We will make note of what people's concerns are, and we will try and get back together and evaluate the information," Patton said. "I hope they will come back with a positive attitude about what diversity is and I hope we will develop a vehicle to keep a continuing dialogue about diversity."

The national videoconference will feature Ronald Takaki, professor of ethnic studies at the University of California, Berkeley, and moderator Farai Chideya, CNN political analyst.

Several events to promote diversity awareness are scheduled in addition to tonight's summit. They include: A panel display in the Jerome Library, theatrical performances and an interactive bulletin board in the University Union.

Union director promotes community

Jay Young
The BG News

Editor's note: This is the second part of a series about campus leaders.

When the University Union was less than 10 years old David Crooks was using it as a student to expand his education. Today, as Union director, Crooks is trying to keep that facility together so students have the same opportunity he did.

Crooks received his bachelor of arts degree in history in 1963 and his masters of education in 1964 from the University. He said the Union provided him many chances to be involved as a student.

"As a student, I spent a lot of time in the Union," Crooks said. "It afforded me opportunities to participate in activities. It afforded me a great opportunity to interact with other students, both casually and formally in organizations."

As a student, Crooks was chairman of the hobbies committee and worked for the University Activities Organization. He said the Union was a meeting place for many of the activities he coordinated, but it was also "the place to be" for students who had time to burn.

"The Union was the central campus space where if you had a minute to relax, you went to the Union," Crooks said. "You could find somebody to talk to and relax with."

Crooks began working in the Union in 1985 as food service manager. He said as director he attempts to provide the same opportunities to today's students that he found at the Union when attending the University.

"I try to provide the best possible environment in the University Union for the campus community," Crooks said.

Providing such an area becomes a bigger challenge everyday for Crooks. With a University population about three times the size the Union was built for, the ability to provide quality space is tough.

"I think we need to accept the fact that the University Union as a facility is in serious need of renovation," Crooks said. "We're kind of like a little dutch boy with his finger in the dike. Every day we have several holes pop through the dyke and we're not very efficient at running the facility that's in need of major renovation."

Crooks said his job becomes frustrating when maintenance problems have to become priority one.

"I spend more time doing some of those things than I'd really like to spend, but it's the nature of what I have to do right now to keep the building functioning at the highest possible level it can function at," Crooks said. "It gets frustrating when you can't fix things that need to be fixed."

Despite a building that needs a lot of attention, Crooks said he really enjoys his work.

"I love it," Crooks said. "There are days when I think I was born to be a Union director. I have a lot of opportunities to work with students and help students continue to pursue things they have a serious interest in."

As director, Crooks holds the keys to all of the space and services students need to make events happen in the Union itself and on the Union Oval. He said he does everything possible to make sure student groups who want to make something happen have everything they need.

"Never am I predisposed to say 'no,'" Crooks said. "I'm always predisposed to say, 'How can we make this work?'"

Crooks said he has been able to make a variety of things work while director. Everything from a simple philanthropy to providing space for the AIDS Quilt to working with the Secret Service. "It's really a full gamut of experiences as the director of the University Union, because if you're there long enough almost anything that could happen anywhere in life is going to happen in a university union."

Letters to the Editor

I am sure that this letter that pertains to the infamous problem of inadequate commuter parking spaces is one of hundreds of letters that arrive at The News every month. However, this letter also stands to declare, and I speak for the majority of fed-up commuters, that the parking at Bowling Green State University "sucks".

Before I start ranting and raving about the problem, though, a few issues need to be addressed! First, if I recall correctly, a parking violation cost a student $25 last year.

Well, evidently, that was not bringing in enough money for the university so they decided to double it this year. Does anyone else think that $50 is just a little too expensive for a parking ticket? Obviously, I could get a ticket at another school and not pay as much for a mere parking violation (e.g.: a parking ticket at the University of Toledo & the University of Georgia cost $15).

Second, not everyone has all the time in the world to play what I call the "parking game". In other words, this is when a commuter migrates from lot to lot (and from lot to lot) looking for an empty space or badgering another student for their space. Not everyone has the time and gas to do this everyday!

Last, but not least, accommodations do need to be made on those days we're running late! This includes parking in the grass or inappropriate lots (faculty/staff). As a result of our impatience, we get a $50 ticket! If President Ribeau wants to build community and truly help students, then he should devote his time and attention to this problem.

This should have been at the top of Ribeau's "To Do List" when he first became President. However, it is not too late to remedy the situation by lowering the cost of tickets and constructing another commuter-only parking lot!

Food. We need it to survive. But not all foods are appealing to everyone, and some are downright disgusting to many. Bugs, ape brains, jellyfish—you might think people would never eat those things on purpose, but they do. Even worse are the things we all eat every day without realizing it. And you thought the food on this campus was bad!

In Alaska -- At least until the middle of this century, the Inuit Indians considered the partly digested green vegetables and grasses taken from the stomachs of animals they killed to be a great delicacy. The Inuits also put the fins, heads, tails, and guts of fish in earthenware pots that they buried underground, letting the contents decay for several months. When dug up and served, this dish had the consistency of thick paste and a flavor like pungent cheese.

In Ancient Europe -- In medieval times, people ate animal brains, believing that they helped to build thick, healthy blood, and also that they kept the eater's brain healthy.

In Ancient Rome -- The ancient Romans loved to eat, and on special occasions they were known for their extravagant meals. The menu for one particularly lavish feast included pike liver, pheasant brain, peacock brain, flamingo tongue, and lamprey eggs.

In China -- Among the delicacies sold today in the markets of China are:

• Swallows' nests, for use in bird's nest soup. The nests are manmade by a variety of swallows that live near the sea. It mixes its saliva with meat pecked from decaying fish, and then drools thin, sticky threads, which are woven into a nest. The nests are sold dry, and they expand when they are soaked, giving the soup a thick quality.

• Dried jellyfish, sold in thin, almost transparent strips.

• "Vegetable caterpillar", a fungus that has eaten the flesh of a certain kind of caterpillar and is sold encased in the caterpillar's skin.

• Bear paws, for special occasions at Chinese banquets.

In Germany -- Blood from cows, goats and sheep is eaten the dish "Fried blood," and is also used in making blood pudding, a type of sausage.

In Ireland -- Since the 1600s, Ireland's version of blood pudding is made by bleeding cows and boiling the blood with milk, butter and herbs. In some places, the blood was allowed to clot, preserved with salt, cut into squares and put aside for winter.

In Scotland -- Haggis, a traditional Scottish food, is a pudding made from ground heart, lungs and liver of a sheep mixed with oatmeal and fat. The mixture is stuffed into the sheep's stomach and is tied off. The stomach is then placed in a pot of water and boiled.

In Taiwan -- Fresh ape brains are considered a delicacy to the Taiwanese. The dead ape's skull is broken with a stone or wooden hammer, and the brain is scooped out with a bamboo spoon. They are considered to be "brain food," which will improve the intelligence of whoever eats them.

People have eaten human flesh since the beginning of recorded history, but it was the Carib people of the West Indies, whose name (which in Spanish is cannibal) became equated with the practice. Cannibalism has been outlawed throughout most of the world, but in some places old habits die hard.

In Melania, until recently, human flesh was considered a normal, if exotic, food -- especially on the island of Fiji, where it was referred to as "long pig".

In Sumatra and parts of Western Africa, human meat was once sold in markets. Up until this century, the Fang people on the west coast of Africa bartered and sold the bodies of the dead among themselves for food. Not too long ago, the Maori tribesman of New Zealand ate the flesh of their dead enemies after a battle.

What disgusting foods do you eat? None? Think again. Take a look at some of the gross stuff you put in your mouth.

Check out the side panel of your favorite box of breakfast cereal. See the ingredients? They don't look gross, do they?

Well, wait until you learn where they come from.

Gelatin: A thickener that comes from the skins, hooves, and skeletons of pigs and cows.

Whey: The thin, yellow liquid that remains after the protein is removed from milk.

Glycerin: substance left over after manufacturing soap.

Artificial flavors: More than a thousand different kinds of manmade chemicals are used to flavor foods, most of which are known carcinogens (cancer causing).

Natural colors: come from plants and animals, including tropical birds, fish and insects. Carmine, a red dye, comes from the dried, crushed bodies of female scale insects.

Artificial colors: dyes made from coal and petroleum. Again, most of these are known carcinogens.

Presumably, you like an occasional pizza. And opting to forgo the pepperoni and sausage, which incidentally happen to be ground up fecal-containing intestines of pigs, you choose the mushroom topping. Well, did you know that mushrooms are actually grown on piles of horse manure? The manure is heated for days until it turns into compost. It is then spread into beds and sprinkled with mushroom spores. After a few weeks, tiny mushrooms appear, which soon grow to maturity.

Bon appetite!

Recipe for a new and better America

Mike
Wendling

The first of two parts
One thing is evident from last Tuesday's elections: The public is fed up with the American political system. Participation (in the form of voting) is at a 70-year low. American's trust in their leaders has declined since Watergate in the mid-70s. The typical American voter is both cynical and apathetic.

With this problem comes an opportunity for change. What is needed is a series of reforms designed to propel Americans to the voting booth and weaken the concentration of power in the two major political parties.

To these ends, I propose the following reforms:

An attempt to register every American of voting age -- One of the more common reasons people give for not participating in our democracy is the voter registration process. Each citizen files dozens of federal and state documents each year, and there is no good rationale behind an entirely separate voter registration process. I argue that registering to vote should be built to the paying of income taxes, either at the federal or state level.

To encourage the most underrepresented age group to participate, voter registration should also be automatic upon registering for Selective Service (To be fair, this particular process would have to be opened up to all 18-year-olds, not just able-bodied men, as it now is). To encourage the participation of our newest citizens, voter registration should be automatic upon naturalization of immigrants. These measures would ensure that over 95 percent of Americans over the age of 18 would be registered to vote by the next Presidential election.

Greater Congressional representation -- The upper limit on the number of Representatives is currently 435. This is an arbitrary and anti-democratic boundary. As the population of the United States increases, each member of Congress represents more citizens, and the affect of individual citizens decreases. I propose the removal of this limit, and instead of a limit on the number of representatives, a limit of 100,000 on the number of citizens that a particular member of the House can represent.

This would raise the number of members of the House to about 2,500, a larger yet still manageable number. With population growth in the U.S. slowing, it is unlikely that this number will climb any higher than 3,500.

Furthermore, the practice of district gerrymandering should be halted. Every Congressional district in the entire nation should be redrawn by an independent agency, with the stipulation that no point in any district shall be further than 60 miles from any other point. Also, the new districts should, wherever possible, be comprised of simple geometric shapes, to avoid the intentional inclusion of regions that are separate from the majority of the district, yet have the same political leanings.

Along with increased representation in the House, I propose the addition of one senator per state, so that one senator from each state is up for reelection every two years.

Imagine the effect of these changes on our political system. The resources of the two major parties would be spread thin, and smaller Congressional districts would give independent and third party candidates viable chances to win House seats. Such reforms would break up the stronghold that the Democrats and the Republicans have on our national politics.

Changes in the Presidential Election Format -- Presidential elections in general, and the most recent one in particular, suffer from an enormous lag time between their initiation and their conclusion. Voters make up their minds early, and today's scientific polls can predict the winner far in advance, decreasing the incentive for any particular citizen to vote.

In the Nov. 11 issue of Newsweek, Tom Brokaw set forth a plan to increase voter interest in the Presidential election. Here I present a slightly modified version of his plan:

First, the state primaries would be delayed until June of the election year in question. On every weekend in June, one-quarter of the states would hold their respective primaries. Party primaries would then take place no later than the end of July.

In October, any candidate with over 10 percent of the vote in national polls would be invited to join a series of debates. These debates would take place on each Sunday in October.

On election eve, each candidate would receive one half hour of time on each of the major networks and cable stations. The candidates would not be able to refer to their opponents, and would have to address a specific issue.

Election day would be moved to the first weekend in November, and polls would be open for 24 hours, and concurrently in all time zones (i.e. from 6 p.m. Saturday to 6 p.m. Sunday in the Eastern time zone; from 3 p.m. Saturday to 3 p.m. Sunday in the Pacific time zone).

These reforms would heighten the interest and awareness of the average American citizen.

Next week: Leveling the financial playing field

Faculty Senate given feedback

Daria Warnock
The BG News

Sexual harassment and declining enrollment were the main topics of discussion during a meeting Tuesday between the Faculty Senate Executive Committee and University provost.

The joint conference was among several planned throughout the academic year to serve as a forum for the exchange of opinions and ideas related to the goals of the University. It allows for the Senate to gain administrative feedback on their agenda.

The meeting mainly focused on the progress on sexual harassment and anti-discrimination policies and student recruitment and retention.

Provost Charles Middleton explained to SEC the importance in raising the enrollment number before jobs are lost as a result of the decrease.

"That is what's going to happen if we don't turn this in the right direction," he said. "We're hustling like crazy, but we're going to have to take some chances."

Middleton said the full effect of plans implemented to increase enrollment will not be seen until three enrollment cycles are completed.

"It's going to be October of 1999 before we see if we have made it," Middleton said. "Or if we know anything about enrollment."

Janet Morrison, graduate student senate president, said the University should use all of its tools in the recruitment process, including students.

"I don't think students have been utilized," Morrison said. "Use us, we're here to help."

Middleton said enrollment is a long-standing issue which would definitely be discussed further. He said many ideas have been suggested and the University is working on implementing those ideas.

"That is what's going to happen if we don't turn this in the right direction. We're hustling like crazy, but we're going to have to take some chances."

Charles Middleton
provost

"We're full of ideas right now," Middleton said.

In other business, SEC and the provost discussed sexual harassment and anti-discrimination policies.

Middleton told the committee the level of awareness of the policies needs to be increased among the University community. He suggested the policy be short and to the point, with no tolerance.

"All of us should be concerned. People need to have the level of awareness increased," Middleton said. "Our tolerance level of this is zero."

A task force, led by Suzanne Crawford, dean of continuing education, has been formed to study the policy and increase its awareness.

Morrison said the committee has been charged with a difficult task. She told SEC that students needed to be informed of the policies instituted by the University.

"The issues are complex," Morrison said. "It has been very difficult to come up with what we need to do."

Middleton said he wants the policy to be clear and immediately accessible to the University community.

Petitioners want Findlay to clean up roadside properties

The Associated Press

FINDLAY, Ohio -- Three properties along Interstate 75 on the city's southwest side should be cleaned up because they are eyesores and present the wrong image to passing motorists, some residents said.

Mayor John Stozich said he recently received a petition with 88 names claiming the three properties are ruining the city's image.

In a letter, the residents said some Canadians traveling the highway "truly believe that Findlay is a dirty, junk-filled town and very undesirable to visit," Stozich said.

Stozich said Tuesday that he is taking the residents' concerns seriously, but questions some of their claims.

'Reverend Slim' breaks laws to help poor

Mitch Weiss
The Associated Press

TOLEDO -- Some say the Rev. Slim Lake is a food stamp Robin Hood who's putting his freedom on the line to help the poor.

But others believe the rail-thin street preacher, who admits he buys food stamps illegally to feed the downtrodden congregation he ministers to every Sunday in an inner-city park, is a crook who should pay for breaking the law.

The 40-year-old "Rev. Slim," as his followers call him, has been charged with food stamp trafficking. If convicted, he could serve 15 to 40 years in jail.

The prospect doesn't daunt the ex-con who has been arrested more than 30 times. The founder of God's Church of the Streets is a man with a mission.

"You know, I've been buying food stamps to feed my congregation since I started my ministry," he said.

"How can you put somebody in jail for feeding the hungry? If that's a crime, then put me in jail."

He admits he buys food stamps on the street at discount rates and exchanges them for food to feed his congregation, which consists of the poor, the homeless, recovering alcoholics and drug addicts.

For almost seven years, the former drug dealer, addict and street hustler has been preaching the Word and feeding the hungry at the all-day outdoor services he holds every Sunday in Gunckel Park.

One recent Sunday, Lake watched proudly as followers erected a canvas tent and lighted grills, set up folding chairs and made ready for the day's services.

"I'm going to beat this," Lake said smiling, showing off two gold front teeth.

Then he paused, feeling some doubt.

"I don't know what's going to happen. Everything is in God's hands," he said.

"No way Rev. Slim! They're not going to put you in jail," shouted his girlfriend, Melinda Scott, 24.

Not everyone thinks Lake is a godsend.

To many people, including some residents of the housing project across the street from the park, the man born Charles Lake is bad news.

"I just don't trust him," said Charles Robinson, 52. "I don't know what it is. He brings in a bad group of people. Bad group."

Prosecutors and police won't comment about the food stamp case. A trial date was pending.

Lake claims he was set up. He says an undercover police officer offered to sell him $500 worth of food stamps for $300. The offer was too good to refuse and he was arrested.

He has been in and out of jail since 1978, when he accidentally shot a friend in the head. The friend survived, but Lake served six months for negligent assault and carrying a concealed weapon.

From 1978 to 1989, Lake sold drugs -- getting hooked on crack in the process -- and stolen goods.

One night, while living at his sister's house, Lake says he got a message from God: establish God's Church of the Streets.

Lake, a Baptist, began visiting homeless shelters, offering $3 to the homeless to join the church he attended near the park.

They came. But after a few weeks, he said, the church told him to stop bringing them because "they were not the right kind of people." He refused, and one Sunday, security guards turned them away.

That's when Lake decided to give up crack and preach at the park.

Some inner-city residents admire Lake. They say he helps them when they are in trouble, takes them to supermarkets to buy groceries and is always around when they need to talk.

"He's just like a brother and good friend," said Willie Valliant, 37, of Toledo, a recovering alcoholic and drug addict.

Cecelia Carter, who had struggled with alcoholism for 20 years, joined Lake's flock in 1994.

"You know what? Since that day I haven't had the desire, nor the taste for a drink," she said.

The services are part revival, part picnic. Children play football and baseball in the park, while adults prepare food and talk.

Food is served from noon until 3 p.m. Then Lake preaches for an hour from a makeshift stage inside the tent. Then more food is served -- barbecue ribs, chicken, ham sandwiches. On any given Sunday, between 150 and 300 people eat and hear Lake preach.

Food is a way to reach people, Lake believes. At one time, he served alcohol to get people to come. He no longer does that.

Mason and Ribeau said the changes in policy will not be significant, since the leadership is not expected to change.

"I think they're closely enough aligned philosophically that it's not going to make a major difference in how business is done, but you do have to become acquainted with the new players," Ribeau said. "By the end of the next semester we should have had introductions to all of the new people."

At the request of Mason,

Ribeau said he plans to be in Columbus every other week next semester to make the University's needs known.

Mason said the president's efforts are crucial to the University.

"I think that it's important that the people who make the de-

Ribeau said the administration is going to attempt to bring more

"We're going to continue to bring people to campus," Ribeau said. "What we want to do is try and bring people to campus who are influential in the political arena to meet with our administration, our faculty and our students."

Passenger indicted for pipe bomb threat

The Associated Press

DAYTON, Ohio -- A federal grand jury on Tuesday indicted a passenger in connection with a bomb scare that forced the emergency landing of a jetliner last month.

Richard A. Josephson, 37, of Elsmere, Del., was indicted on one count of communicating information aboard an aircraft he knew to be false and under circumstances in which the information might reasonably be believed.

The indictment accused Josephson of falsely communicating that he had pipe bombs on his carry-on baggage.

Defense attorney John Rion said he plans to ask for dismissal of the charges.

"We think they made some mistakes in the indictment," said Rion.

Rion said any remarks his client may have made occurred while the airliner was on the ground and that the law refers to airliners in flight.

Josephson was accused of saying he had pipe bombs in his carry-on bag after he boarded USAir Flight 17 in Philadelphia on Oct. 13. The plane, which had been bound for Los Angeles, carried 109 passengers and crew members.

The aircraft made an emergency landing at Dayton International Airport. Eight people were slightly injured during the evacuation. No explosives were found.

Josephson said he had been joking about the pipe bombs.

Auto thief shot by trooper

The Associated Press

LEBANON, Ohio -- A man driving a car stolen in Kentucky was shot and wounded by a State Highway Patrol trooper following a chase Tuesday, the patrol said.

Stephen Michael Wharf, 22, of Carroll, was shot when he pointed a rifle at Trooper Matthew Evans, the patrol said.

Wharf was shot once in the head and was in good condition at the University of Cincinnati Medical Center.

Patrol spokesman Sgt. John Born said Wharf would be taken to the Warren County jail when he was released by the hospital.

The car Wharf was driving was reported to have left a suburban Cincinnati filling station without paying for gasoline. About 2 a.m., Evans spotted the car on Interstate 71 and tried to stop it, the patrol said.

Evans pursued the 1997 Isuzu, which Born said had been stolen from a dealer in Louisville, at speeds up to 100 mph.

Penalty fulfilled by state senator

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS -- A judge ruled Tuesday that state Sen. Gene Watts complied with the penalty imposed for an ethics violation.

Franklin County Common Pleas Judge John Bessey said the Galloway Republican did not violate the terms of his sentence for his involvement in the Statehouse honoraria scandal.

Bessey earlier this year fined Watts $250 and ordered him to perform 40 hours of classroom instruction in ethics of public officials. Watts pleaded no contest on Feb. 2 to a charge of failure to file a statement, a fourth-degree misdemeanor, for accepting a $500 check in 1993 for an event he did not attend.

Democrat Mary Jo Kilroy, who unsuccessfully challenged Watts in last week's election, had complained that Watts was teaching outside his district, which covers the western halves of Franklin and Pickaway counties, on subjects other than ethics.

Watts has said Bessey never specified that the classes had to be taught inside his district but had indicated a preference that he do so. He said Bessey gave him permission to teach outside the district after his attorney told the judge Watts was having trouble finding available classroom space.

He also said he discussed other topics at students' request only after he finished discussing ethics.

City council urges investigation rush

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS -- Mayor Greg LaShutka said the City Council's pressure to complete an investigation of police Chief James Jackson by December will not affect the investigation.

"The mayor understands there's an anxiety factor," Gary Parks, a spokesman for LaShutka, said Tuesday. "But he wants to remind citizens that quality takes time and the investigation has to follow its own course."

City Council members set the deadline at a meeting Monday.

Council President John P. Kennedy said he's been assured by Safety Director Thomas Rice that "the investigation is moving as fast as possible."

However, Councilwoman Les Wright said she will look into how the council might speed it up.

"This whole community has been the victim of one action," she said. "Our silence has been too loud to continue."

A Delta Airlines jet remains mired in mud and snow off the end of a runway at Cleveland Hopkins Airport Tuesday morning.

Airport opens again after snowy closing

Ken Berger
The Associated Press

CLEVELAND -- Cleveland Hopkins International Airport resumed operations Tuesday after being closed for about 10 hours after the second plane in two days skidded off a snowy runway.

No one was injured in either accident, and city officials said the runways are considered safe. All runways became available at 1 p.m., officials said.

Bill Cunningham, director of port control for Cleveland, said the Federal Aviation Administration is investigating both accidents and will have a report on what caused them. He said that before each of the two planes landed there, other pilots had reported braking conditions were fair. Runways also had been tested for friction.

"We always take extra precautions," Cunningham said. "While we are concerned that the patrons using this airport make their scheduled flights, the way this airport is operated is always to make sure the runways are safe and the airport is secure."

Stephen Sheehan, Cleveland's commissioner for port control, said the planes went off different runways. He said no problems were anticipated Tuesday night.

"We feel confident what we've been doing is right and we're sticking with that," Sheehan said.

Delta Airlines Flight 256 from Atlanta, an MD-88 carrying 127 passengers and five crew members, slipped off the north end of a snow-covered runway as it landed at about 9:30 p.m. Monday.

Similar conditions existed Sunday night, when American Airlines Flight 544 carrying 121 people -- 115 passengers and six crew members -- from Burbank, Calif., slid off another of the airports three runways. The MD-80 had made a stop in Dallas.

Airport crews have been working 24 hours a day to keep the runways clear since the storms began Saturday, Cunningham said.

He said the airport would remain open as long as the runways were determined to be safe.

The Delta plane was not damaged when it slid into mud, Delta spokesman Bobby Harper said Tuesday.

"It was a smooth landing, but the slippery runway and possibly a gust of wind combined to cause the plane to slide off into the mud," he said.

Bill Berry, another Delta spokesman, said the plane was pulled out of the mud and into a hangar at midday.

"We are checking it out to see if there was any damage, but so far there is no indication of any."

Dennis Jones, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board in Parsippany, N.J., said the NTSB was aware of the two cases, but was not required to investigate since no serious injury or significant damage was involved.

"We've become more of a business and more of a provider of space, and even though the programming still exists with UAO and other programming organizations on campus, the Union doesn't participate in that process as much as it needs to," Crooks said. "I think that's where I am right now in my career. I'm going through a process that is helping me understand how the University Union can better serve the needs of the students."

Toledo tabbed as MAC women's hoops favorite

Bowling Green selected as fifth

TOLEDO -- Sara Puthoff took her place among the elite last night at the Mid-American Conference Women's Basketball Preview. Bowling Green's junior guard was named to the preseason All-MAC team, while the Falcons were picked to finish fifth overall.

"I know that we are capable of making a run at the championship," Bowling Green head coach Jaci Clark said.

Puthoff will be at the center of attention for Clark's squad, as she will be part of a three-guard rotation including juniors Bridget Andrews and Brooke Belcher. Throw in last year's MAC rebounding leader, junior forward Charlotta Jones, and senior center Michelle Terry, and the Falcons should be able to play with any team in the MAC.

"It's a very competitive conference," Clark said.

Toledo and Kent State, both fresh off a trip to the NCAA tournament, were the consensus favorites for the top two places in the preseason media poll. The Rockets and Golden Flashes garnered all but one of the first place votes in the TOLEDO -- When the women's basketball team opens MAC play Jan. 4 against Central Michigan, it will be a homecoming for Central coach Fran Voll.

Voll, the new head coach for the Chippewas, is the winningest women's basketball coach in Bowling Green history. While he coached the BG women's basketball team from 1984-91, they won three MAC titles and four MAC Tournament championships.

"I'm going to be back in a place where I have very fond memories and a lot of success," Voll said of his return to BG.

Both he and Jaci Clark, the BG women's basketball coach, downplay the significance of the game.

"I think it's another game for the media," Clark said. "We're going to prepare for the game against Central Michigan like we prepare for every other game."

Voll said the team may realize the significance of the game as his first game back at BG as well as the first conference game, but he will not give any special attention to the game because it is against

Academian Burch a leader on and off the soccer field

Jim Tocco
The BG News

It's 5 minutes until 4 p.m. on a cold, windy Bowling Green Wednesday. You might not expect to find the Bowling Green soccer team, outside in sweat-shirts, enthusiastically joking around before practice.

From the mass of players congregated on the south end of the field, Joe Burch springs up and runs around the field to the other side. The other players follow. It's time for practice to begin.

Burch, an Academic All-American, is the consummate picture of a collegiate athlete. Through year-round soccer practices, the business purchasing and production major has managed to maintain a 3.72 GPA, making the Dean's List five of his six semesters here.

He's pretty good on the field too. Good enough to have made the top six all-time Bowling Green leaders in both goals and points. Good enough to be named all-MAC, all-Ohio, and all-Mideast each of the last two years. And respected enough by his teammates to have been named a team tri-captain.

Burch has accumulated 28 goals in his career, and he and Steve Klein rank highly among the all-time leaders. When asked about his accomplishments, Burch remains modest.

"We know where we are, but the most important thing to us is that we're winning games."

And winning games is something that Burch knows all about. Since his freshman year in 1993, he has led the team to a 44-19-4 record, playing in all those games and starting all but one.

One of the reasons Burch came to Bowling Green was Rob Martella, a BG standout who attended high school at Turpin High in Cincinnati, where Burch went.

"I never got to play on a team with him," said Burch. "But I thought that he was the greatest player. He was an important part when I was younger. I wanted to play like Rob someday."

Game of soccer is misunderstood by Americans

G. Michael Graham
The BG News

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of stories leading up to the Mid-American Conference Soccer Tournament to be held at BG's Cochrane Field beginning Friday. In tomorrow's edition, current coach Mel Mahler will be featured, as will former BGSU coach Mickey Cochrane.

Soccer is the most popular sport in nearly every country in the world -- except the United States.

Offensive fanatics who watched the World Cup soccer championships hosted by the U.S. in the summer of 1994 probably thought the game was boring because there were not too many high-scoring games.

But low-scoring is just the point of soccer, as members of the BGSU team explained.

"At the beginning of the season, we always make sure we're solid defensively," Bowling Green tri-captain Joe Burch said on the team's defense. "Once you're solid from a defensive standpoint and you prevent the other team from scoring, you just play ball the way you know how and eventually the goals are going to come."

Bowling Green hosts the third-annual Mid-American Conference Tournament this weekend. Action gets underway Friday with first-round action, while the Falcons -- the No. 1 seed and pre-tournament favorite -- kick off Saturday at noon against an as-yet undetermined opponent.

Defense, as always, will be a key ingredient in any BG success. Falcon senior trip-captain Steve Klein offered his view on the issue of team defense.

"I think a lot of people in the United States are looking for high-scoring games," Klein said. "So when they see a 1-0 or 2-1 game, they think it's a little boring because there are not many goals."

"Teams that play good defense generate offense from their defense just by frustrating their opponents. Everyone on the field can play offense so it helps to play good defense."

BG head coach Mel Mahler noted that good individual defense leads to good team defense.

"If you do that, then you keep the ball out of your net and you have a chance to win ballgames," Mahler said. "In a lot of cases, you may only score one or two goals so it's important to play solid defense."

Unlike a couple years ago, some people have begun to understand this concept.

"To a certain degree, what we had is a generation of soccer players who had grown up with the game since their youth days," Mahler said. "As they're becoming young adults in their twenties and thirties, they understand the game a bit better than 5-10 years ago when people didn't really play the game as children. What we had were parents taking their young kids to soccer matches and learning the game through their kids."

"When there's not a whole lot of scoring going on and not knowing and understanding the game, they got bored with

Runners end up season respectably

Jason McMahon

Sid Sink enjoys proving the prognosticators wrong. Last year, his Bowling Green men's cross country team scooped at a preseason poll and won the Mid-American Conference. But lightning didn't strike twice.

Sink's team had been picked to finish sixth each of the last two seasons by the MAC coaches. While the Falcons were able to surpass the predictions last year, they weren't this year. Bowling Green fell right into that sixth-place position at last week's MAC Championships in Muncie, Ind. But Sink was far from disappointed.

"Actually, it was pretty good," Sink said. The Falcon men travel to the District meet this Saturday in Champaign, Ill.

"We couldn't have asked for a whole lot more," Sink continued. "We really took a lot of positives, even though sixth place is not a goal we usually have."

Usual or not, that was the Falcons' goal going in. Bowling Green had also set their sights on Kent State and were able to defeat the team that had beaten them twice already this season. But the MAC meet brings out something special in the Falcons.

"This is the second year in a row that we've had our best team race at the MAC meet, which is exactly where you want it," Sink said. "This is a tradition that we plan to continue."

Sink was especially pleased with the performances of four of his top five runners: junior Rob Bowman (22nd), sophomore Dan Flaute (27th), junior co-captain Craig Nieset (35th), and freshman Kreg Hatfield (45th). Junior Jim Weckesser, who had been BG's top runner lately, fell victim to a stomach cramp and struggled mightily en route to a media balloting.

"It's an honor to be picked number one," said Toledo head coach Mark Ehlen. "I don't mean to sound arrogant, but it's really no surprise. At the same time, I know that we were picked first last year, and we didn't finish first."

The Rockets boast of two players named to preseason All-MAC in senior forwards Angela Drake and Mimi Olson. Both were named first-team All-MAC a year ago. Along with last year's MAC Freshman of the Year, guard Kim Knuth, they hope to build upon last year's success, which included a MAC tournament championship.

Kent State the '95-96 regular season MAC championship, but head coach Bob Lindsay doesn't necessarily agree with those that think his team will breeze through the MAC.

"I'm being dead honest, I don't know how good we are," he said.

Clark

"We've got a lot of question marks."

Kent is using last year's trip to the NCAA tournament as a motivator this season.

"That's just something that's driving us this year," Templin said.

Miami, picked third, returns its entire starting line-up, including senior guard and preseason All-MAC Jennifer Wenclewicz. Ohio University, picked fourth, is bolstered by the arrival of two Ohio State transfers, including 6-4 center Amy Turner. Her presence has Bobcat coach Marsha Reall excited.

"It seems like most of our players are finesse, so I'm glad to get a power player," Reall said.

Central Michigan, with former BG coach Fran Voll in his first year on the bench for the Chipewas, was tabbed sixth. Akron was seventh, followed by Western Michigan and Ball State. Eastern Michigan, with six freshmen, snatched the dubious honor of being selected dead last in the poll. But that has not gotten the Eagles or head coach Paulette Stein down.

"They can do it," she said. "My freshmen are talking NCAA tournament. God bless them. You gotta love them."

the Falcons. He said the game will belong to the players, not to him.

"I'm not playing the game," Voll said. "I can assure you I won't score a point that night. Our season's not going to center around BG. It's not going to center around that one night."

But Voll refuses to call it "just another game."

He left his job at BG last spring as the associate athletic director for development to take the coaching job at Central. He said a variety of factors led him to Central.

"I had thought about going back to coaching for quite some time. I'm familiar with the MAC. I thought that CMU was the best there was, and I was fortunate enough that they wanted me. It was the right fit for Fran Voll."

Central was ranked sixth in the pre-season poll, something that Voll appreciates.

"I thought it was very complimentary to our program," Voll said.

"We've got a bunch of girls who want to play," Voll said.

Voll compiled a 144-60 record at BG between 1984 and 1991. In his seven years as coach, his teams finished first three times, and second or third twice. He was named MAC Coach of the Year twice, in 1987 and 1989.

Martella (1989-92) is BG's all-time leader in points.

Burch also came here for the strength of the program.

"I looked at Xavier," he says, "And I was kind of thinking I wanted to go somewhere where I would have the opportunity to get to the NCAA tournament and advance to the far rounds."

Well, it's Burch's senior year, and BG has advanced past the first round in the NCAA tournament (1995). This year he wants it badly.

"It's been a goal for me my whole life to play on a top division one soccer program, and each year that I've been here we've just gotten better and better. It would just be a lifelong dream to get to the Final Four."

Burch's goals and assists production is down this year from previous years, but coach Mel Mahler explained why.

"Joe usually has to take on one or two of [the opponents'] best players on him," he said. "And this year's numbers do not adequately reflect what he means to this team. If he's being double-teamed, that will open up someone else."

Burch, who plans on attempting to continue playing after college, still takes a realistic attitude about his career.

"I think I might play for a couple of years before I get on with my career," he said.

In the meantime, Burch is focusing on the present.

"We want to get to the Final Four," he said. "We're not going to settle for anything less than that."

48th-place finish.

"I'm sorry Jimmy had a bad race," Sink said. "I really thought he had a shot at All-MAC [top 12]. It wasn't the fact that he wasn't mentally ready, because he was."

"They were all mentally ready, they were all excited. I think it really helped our program. They all realized now that they are doing things right. We're progressing."

Those words echoed the sentiments of many of Sink's comments: improvement and progression. After an oftentimes frustrating season, he was very happy to see his team pull together at the right time. And the fact that his team is exceptionally young - his top eight consists of three juniors, one sophomore and four freshmen - just keeps him brimming with optimism for next season.

"We don't just have four to five guys who show that they can help in the future, we got 10 to 12," he said. "I also feel that everybody in this program believes in what we are doing."

The men's coach wanted to defer all of the attention to the MAC champion women's team, a program he used to be in charge of himself. But make no mistake about it, he plans to take his half of the team to the same level real soon.

"I just want it to be known that our program is heading back in that direction again in the very near future," he said.

it. Now, we have adults who have grown up with the game and understand the beauty of the match, of possessing the ball and knocking it around and a 1-0 game can be a very good game. So we're getting better, but we're still leaps and bounds away."

Burch encourages people to come out and see the games in order to obtain better knowledge of the game.

"People who say that soccer isn't a very exciting game haven't gone to watch the game enough," Burch said. "You should come to see the game. There's lots of chances on goal. We have some real exciting matches coming up also."

"Before you rule it out, you have to give it a chance. There's been some real exciting games this year. If you give it a chance, you can catch on."

Klein agrees.

"I think most people that come out and watch it once or twice start to see some good athleticism out here and that it's pretty exciting," Klein said.

Mahler talked about the fans' appreciation and support for the game today.

"I think it's getting better and better," Mahler said. "When I look at adult leagues, there's adults playing the game who have never played as a child because they enjoy playing it and they see the fun in it. People are starting to give it more of a chance, which is great. I know since I've been here 11 years that our crowds are getting better. But more importantly, they're getting more knowledgeable."

Slugger Belle rejects wealthy offer from Indians

Associated Press

CLEVELAND -- The Cleveland Indians have made a rich offer to free agent slugger Albert Belle. If they want to keep him, it looks like they will have to make an even richer one.

"We're in the game. I guess that's the safest way to put it," Cleveland General Manager John Hart said. "We're not close, but I think we've sent the right message to Albert that we want him."

The Indians reportedly have offered Belle $8.5 million a year for four or five years, whichever the slugger prefers.

That's more than the five-year, $38 million offer that Belle rejected in spring training. Negotiations stalled during the season, and Belle became a free agent on Oct. 28.

On Tuesday, Belle's agent, Arn Tellem, denied the report but said Belle probably will visit the Florida Marlins next week, possibly on Monday.

"We're just waiting for the Belle to ring Friday," Tellem said, referring to the first day free agents can discuss money with other teams.

Hart assured Tellem that this was not the final offer. It has been widely reported that Belle is seeking a contract that would pay him $10 million a year and make him baseball's highest-paid player.

Hart said he is working on a contingency plan in case Belle does not re-sign with the Indians.

"We might have to build a club without Albert," Hart said.

Tellem, who represented NBA star Reggie Miller in lengthy contract negotiations with the Indiana Pacers, predicted Belle would be signed by Thanksgiving.

"I don't think it's to anyone's benefit to drag this out," Tellem said.

Belle was the top player in baseball the last two seasons, according to statistical rankings by the Elias Sports Bureau. In 1995, he became the first player to hit 50 homers and 50 doubles in a season. Last year, Belle hit .311 with 48 homers and 148 RBIs.

From 1991-96, Belle led the majors with 234 homers. Barry Bonds was second with 217.

Belle's production has never been a problem. His behavior has. Belle has been suspended five times in his six-year big league career for various infractions, including berating a TV reporter at the 1995 World Series and using excessive force in knocking over Milwaukee Brewers second baseman Fernando Vina in a game marred by brawls.

The Indians have some other potentially big bills coming due soon. All-Star center fielder Kenny Lofton is playing out his option in 1997, and third baseman Jim Thome is signed through '97 with a club option for '98.

Free agent reliever Eric Plunk has reportedly rejected a two-year, $2 million offer.

Hentgen wins Cy Young

Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK -- Pat Hentgen of the Toronto Blue Jays became the first player from a Canadian team to win the Cy Young Award, edging Andy Pettitte of the New York Yankees on Tuesday.

In matching the second-closest vote in the history of the American League Cy Young Award, Hentgen, 20-10 with a 3.22 ERA, received 16 first-place votes, nine seconds and three thirds for 110 points.

Pettitte, 21-8 with a 3.87 ERA, got 11 firsts, 16 seconds and one third for 104 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Yankees reliever Mariano

Rivera earned the other first-place vote and finished third with 18 points.

Charles Nagy of Cleveland was fourth with 12 points, followed by Mike Mussina of Baltimore with five. Alex Fernandez and Roberto Hernandez of the White Sox were tied for sixth with one point along with Ken Hill of Texas.

The closest vote came in 1969, when Mike Cuellar and Denny McLain tied. In 1972, Gaylord Perry beat Wilbur Wood 64-58.

Hentgen, who turns 28 Wednesday, led the major leagues in complete games (10) and innings pitched (265 2-3) and was second in ERA behind teammate Juan Guzman (2.93).

Rose Bowl ticket, package prices set

Associated Press

COLUMBUS -- Ohio State fans are dialing for information on ticket prices, tour packages and transportation expenses in the event the Buckeyes go to the Rose Bowl for the first time in 12 years.

Arizona State, the Pac-10 Conference champion, will be playing Ohio State in the bowl game as long as the Buckeyes win one of their two remaining regular-season games against Indiana and Michigan.

"There's a tremendous interest," Ron Hopper, senior vice president of the Ohio State Alumni Association said Tuesday. "We can't erase the messages off voice mail quick enough. The phones haven't stopped ringing. I'd say there's a peeking interest."

Hopper said 86,000 brochures will be mailed to members if the Buckeyes defeat Indiana Saturday. He said there are about 4,000 to 5,000 packages available ranging from $395 to $1,615. The least expensive package offers hotel accommodations for two nights, tickets and food, but transportation is not included.

More expensive packages include roundtrip airfare, ground transportation, tickets, souvenirs, dinner and dancing, Hopper said.

Travel agents in Ohio were deluged with calls Monday from Buckeye fans certain that they'll need a ticket to Pasadena, Calif. Their Rose Bowl packages start at about $1,500 per person.

"If anyone calls for anything else, I'm shocked," said Debbie Harr, manager of Sandel Travel. She estimated the agency received 100 calls on Monday for Rose Bowl packages.

Some brokers in Arizona said tickets would go no lower than $400 apiece as Arizona State fans excitedly emerge from a 10-year bowl drought. Others surmised the opposite, noting Arizona State doesn't have as strong a football tradition as other schools.

"At this point, it's just guesswork," said Danny Sharaby, owner of Tickets Unlimited Inc. of Phoenix. "Everyone gets on the bandwagon while they're winning, but if their record is diminished, people say, 'I'll just watch it on TV.'"

Sharaby, who was selling tickets for $325 and up, said he was busy with people both buying and selling tickets.
