THE LIBRARY OF CHRISTIAN ROSELIOUS AND ALFRED PHILLIPS

*Mitchell Franklin

Through Christian Roselius the influence of the nineteenth century German Historical School of Law was asserted in Louisiana. He thus differs from the giants of the earlier years of the nineteenth century — Edward Livingston and Moreau Lislet — who had been involved in the legal aspect of the history of the eighteenth century French Enlightenment. Whereas it had been the historic responsibility of Livingston and Moreau Lislet to formulate codes and projets of codes, it became the task of Roselius in Louisiana to defend these Romanist codes from the impact of Anglo-American common law. In the struggle to save the Roman law in Louisiana Roselius realized that the civil code in vigor would have to be reorganized scientifically. Hence, with the view of strengthening the position of the civil code, he devoted himself to the technical accomplishments of the German Historical School of Law at a time when the thought of the latter was not really known in the United States. Unfortunately, the death of Roselius virtually ended this scientific movement.

The library of Christian Roselius and of his partner, Alfred Phillips, was offered for sale at auction by C. E. Girardey, in New Orleans, beginning on March 1, 1876. The printed catalogue¹ of 58 pages said that the library of "six thousand richly bound volumes" had been "accumulated during a Brilliant and Distinguished Practice of nearly forty years." Although the library was described as comprising "all the accepted authorities on International, Roman, Spanish, French and English laws," probably the materials relating to the legal thought of the German Historical School should be most noticed. Perhaps Roselius himself indicated this in his Introductory Lecture of November 13, 1854, at the University of Louisiana, when he said: "The German legal literature has been enriched, during the last half century, by some of the greatest productions on the modern Civil Law, to be met with in any language. Savigny, Hugo, Glück, and others, have conferred imperishable glory on their language and country, by their works on the Roman law."² In addition to the writings of these legal theorists, the work of Edward Gans also appears in this library. Gans, who was an Hegelian jurist, had collided with the reactionary political role of the German Historical School of Law; and he ultimately influenced Roselius, who supported the European revolutions of 1848 and who gained world attention during the American Civil War by condemning the secession of Louisiana and the South.³

The titles listed in Girardey's catalogue have been reproduced without any effort to correct the numerous errors to be found therein.
