EDITOR'S WELCOME

Dear Readers,

It is my pleasure to present the second issue of Volume 6 of the Legislation & Policy Brief. This issue of the Brief, heavily focused on criminal law, includes three articles that we hope you will find interesting and thought provoking.

One article discusses the issues of on-campus sexual assault at colleges and examines current and proposed law on the issue, suggesting ways Congress could act to make college campuses safer. Another discusses criminal entrapment and the politics of expulsion from the U.S. Senate. Finally, our last article discusses Congressional delegation of rulemaking authority to agencies developing criminal sanctions.

Further discussion of current policy issues can be found on our blog at legislationandpolicy.com.

I would like to thank the Editorial Board and the Staff of the Brief for their hard work and commitment in putting together this issue. I would also like to wish the incoming Editorial Board luck in the coming academic year.

Finally, the Brief is seeking submissions for its upcoming issues. Information on submissions can be found at digitalcommons.wcl.american.edu/lpb/.

It has been my honor and pleasure to serve as Editor-in-Chief of this Brief. My gratitude goes to the entire Editorial Board, and to the Brief's Executive Editor, Terry Colberg, in particular, for his assistance and dedication to the Brief. My thanks to all of the Editorial Board members.

Best regards,
