Enrollment Up At DMACC

Des Moines Area Community College credit student enrollment increased 9.9% this fall term compared to 1985.

This year 8,663 students have enrolled in credit classes at one of the four DMACC campuses. Ankeny Campus increased 6.75% with 6,520 students; Urban Campus grew by 11.80% with 1,118; Boone grew by 16.47% with 700 students; and the new Carroll Campus grew 87.88% with a total of 325 students.

This is the first year that students attending courses at Carroll have had their own building.

Of all the students at the college, 55% go part-time, 45% full-time.

Valerie Cole, coordinator of student records/enrollment services, said no particular age groups accounted for the increase, but there was growth at all levels. She added there was a major increase in evening courses.

DMACC offers credit classes in career education, career option, and college parallel programs.

French Chefs Present Meal for Boone Campus Foundation

by JUSTINE SHRIVER

Five French natives, including two chefs, were in Boone Saturday, Oct. 18, after presstime, to present a seven-course gourmet meal for the DMACC - Boone Campus Foundation.

Dinner was prepared and served at the Boone Country Club at 6:30 p.m. The hors d'oeuvres featured Iowa products.

All proceeds from the meal will go to the student scholarship fund for Boone Campus Students. The cost of tickets was $30 per person.

While the five were in Boone, they toured the Boone High School, Fareway Distribution Center, Archway Cookies, the King Farm, and the Boone and Scenic Valley Railroad.

Dinners will also be held in Ankeny Oct. 23 and Carroll Oct. 27.

The five are from St. Etienne, Des Moines' sister city in France. St. Etienne has existed since the 11th century and is located in the valley of the Furan River. It is France's ninth largest city.

One of the chefs is trained in the traditional style of French cuisine and the other is considered an expert in the le nouvelle French cuisine. The wife of one chef will accompany them. The other two guests will be the secretary general of the Association of Hotels and Restaurants at the Chamber of Commerce of St. Etienne. He will be accompanied by his wife who is a teacher of restaurant management.

Besides the dinners, the chefs will present seminars at many locations in central Iowa, including DMACC - Ankeny Campus.

The group was brought to Iowa by DMACC and several Iowa-owned companies.

Book Sale Goes Well

by JUSTINE SHRIVER

This year's Boone Campus library book sale went well, according to Louise Payton, head librarian.

Payton estimates there were between 200-225 books sold, netting $85, or twice as much as last year's sale. The money will be used to purchase new materials.

The sale included both hard and paperback books and encyclopedias. Free magazines proved to be a draw for the sale. Personnel from the Ames Retarded Adult Center obtained boxes of the magazines to be used for various activities.

"Overall I was very pleased with this year's sale," Payton said.

Runaway Train

"Runaway Train" is such a fast-paced, exciting movie that you quickly forget that it is a movie. Jon Voight and Eric Roberts have combined for one of the most potent screen adventures in some time.

The setting is Alaskan State Prison, and Manny (Voight) is the toughest of tough prisoners, having been literally isolated in his own cell for two years under orders from the evil prison warden Ranken. Manny is finally released from isolation, and he quickly befriends a con (Roberts), whom he uses to escape from the prison. There is one particularly graphic fight scene where another prisoner, apparently to gain recognition, tries to kill Manny, and it is then that you begin to feel the pent up rage that Manny possesses.

Manny befriends Roberts, who also happens to work in the laundry. They devise a plan to get Manny out of the prison. Roberts persuades Manny to let him come along, and together they begin a trek across the rugged Alaskan wilderness. Finally, they happen upon a train depot, and Manny spots an old train engine. This, he decides, will be their ticket out of the harsh elements. Unfortunately, they come to discover that this particular train has no engineer, no brakes and is gaining speed.

At this point "Runaway Train" really begins to work as a non-stop thriller. I won't give away anymore of the plot, except to say that the evil warden begins a chase, as track controllers desperately try to stop the runaway train.

Voight was nominated for best actor and Roberts for best supporting actor, and after seeing their performances, you'll wonder why they didn't win, especially Voight. We are normally used to seeing him in more constrained roles, and this performance is so unlike these other characters that at first you can hardly believe this is the same Voight who starred in "Deliverance" and "The Champ."

Voight plays Manny with such raw anger and conviction that from his opening appearance, you are totally convinced Manny is real. Roberts, as the sometimes bumbling con, is perfect in his supporting role. We sympathize with him while still laughing at his naive nature. Rebecca De Mornay plays a good supporting role. It is especially refreshing to see Mornay break from her normally sexual character roles to play a more demanding role.

"Runaway Train" is a fast-paced, heart-pounding movie experience that is riveting cinema. Don't miss this one at your local video store.

"9½ Weeks"

"9½ Weeks" might be called a "love" story in the eyes of Bob Guccione, but perhaps "obsession" story might be a better term. "9½ Weeks" is the story of a man and a woman, totally obsessed with each other sexually and their exploitation of their inner desires and fantasies.

Kim Basinger plays a clothes designer in New York City who leads a normal life. Mickey Rourke plays a rich stockbroker who apparently gets off on finding and manipulating women for his own sexual fantasies. Basinger and Rourke meet by chance, and they immediately feel an energy between them. Thus begins a journey into many sexual arenas, some normal, most not, from food to whips to public sex, exploring their fantasies. Many sexual taboos are approached on the screen, and we tend to get into some of their activities. However, Basinger begins to have trouble concentrating on her job, and Rourke becomes more demanding as he pushes her into more bizarre situations. As Rourke finally admits that he loves her, she cannot accept him on those terms and leaves him.

This movie is hot! There is really no other way to put it. If you enjoy scenes of raw sexual energy, it's a perfect movie. Basinger shows more skin than in any of her other roles. Unfortunately, her character is one dimensional. This is, in part, because the story line demands it, but I was a little discouraged that we did not get a meatier character. Rourke is good. His character is believable, even though we begin to hate him. The main part of this movie, though, are the screen images. Diffused lighting, close-ups, and uncomfortable settings give the movie a texture that is both interesting to watch, while at the same time disturbing.

"American Anthem"

As Dog of the Month, "American Anthem" fulfills two important criteria I require for any movie to receive my "seal of disapproval." First, this movie is so acutely boring and ponderously slow that using the "fast forward" button on my VCR provided the needed editing the movie deserved. Second, I became so angry about halfway through this trash-laden drivel that I contemplated heaving television, VCR, and "American Anthem" into the night and out of my room. However, I restrained myself. Video stores normally frown on destroyed machines, no matter how poor the quality of movie.

"American Anthem" stars Mitch Gaylord; you remember Mitch from the 1984 Olympics. In this movie, he plays Steve Tevere, a steel mill worker who was once a great football player and gymnast (we figure this out from many flashback scenes in black and white of Mitch running the football and swinging on the high bar). Steve apparently doesn't have much of a life as he hangs out around the gym a lot, watching other gymnasts. It is here that he spots Julie Lloyd (Janet Jones), a much ballyhooed gymnast who is competing for a spot on the USA team that will compete in the world championships. Julie and Steve hit it off right away much to their delight and our dismay, and we see them frolicking in many scenes.

Meanwhile, Steve has decided to take a shot at the men's team. However, his parents don't like his career move, and Mom (played by Michelle Phillips) tries to talk him out of it, while Dad just screams and yells and throws little Stevie around.

As championship time draws near, the tension mounts. Steve trains intensely, parents complain intensely, and Steve and Julie have intense sex along the way. Of course the ending is predictable, with Julie and Steve winning big, and father and son coming to terms.

"American Anthem" was directed by Albert Magnoli, the same cinematic genius who brought us such a forgettable film as "Purple Rain." We can only hope that his work on this film will force him to reconsider his vocation. Mitch Gaylord, here in his acting debut, marches through this film as if made of wax. Yes, I know it is his first film, and perhaps I should be more forgiving. It's just that his ineptitude at displaying even the most basic human emotions is so poor that he gives meaning to the word banality. The director of this film apparently thought that giving Gaylord a cigarette and an opening 20 minutes of no dialogue would produce a kind of James Dean with back flips. Instead, we get a cardboard caricature that is as ridiculous as unbelievable.

Let us pray that Mitch returns to the gym after his rousing debut. Janet Jones has the inenviable role of playing love interest to Gaylord while still maintaining her integrity as a gymnast. Jones here is more window dressing than anything. Along with a dismal supporting cast which, for the most part, appeared to be gymnasts turned into actors, the directing and screenplay must also take blame for this mess. Even the gymnastics scenes, of which there are surprisingly few, are low energy and uninspired.

Avoid "American Anthem" at all costs.

The Play's The Thing

by JON WRIGHT

The Boone Campus Theater Productions will present "Something to Hide," a three-act play Oct. 24-25.

I was fortunate enough to be cast as "Howard," who is best described as Dick Dastardly without the compassion. Other cast members include Michelle Turner as Julie, Diane Alston as Karen, Jon Vachris as Inspector Davies, Shannon Soder as Mr. Purdie, Bernice Kitt as Stella, and Sheri Klemmer as Mrs. Cunningham.

For "Something to Hide," we rehearsed Monday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons from 3 to 5 p.m. for several weeks.

Other time slots are designated for set construction, normally held on Sunday nights. With a small cast like this one, it is a little easier to work around conflicts. Still we often rehearse without all required actors for a particular scene. This means that either Tami Porter, student director, or Cathy Veale, sound technician, will read.

There is always a lot of, shall we say, interesting dialogue that takes place during rehearsal, and I don't mean actual lines from the play. An example of such dialogue might go something like this: "Okay, now move downstage. No, dear, that's upstage." (This is Kay Mueller, director, barking out directions.)

"Now, is upstage, upstage to me or to the audience?" (Pick your actor.)

"Figure it out, man. Downstage is down towards the back of the stage, upstage is up towards the front of the stage." (Some well-intentioned bystander.)

"No, downstage is down towards the audience, upstage is up and away from the front of the stage, like the stage used to be slanted, you got it?" (Someone obviously reaching deep down into their vast knowledge of theater history for the proper answer.)

"Right."

"So what about theater in the round?" (This person is commonly known as the protagonist.)

Rehearsals rarely run this smoothly.

Wake Up, It's Election Day

by JON WRIGHT

Election time is nearly upon us.

I just thought I might remind you, in case you had forgotten. Yes, Tuesday, Nov. 4 is that all-important day when you and I as responsible citizens cast our votes for the people we feel can best carry out the responsibilities of government.

This year is not particularly interesting, being an off-year for the presidential elections, although you may have been confused on this point since at least a handful of hopefuls are already stomping our state to test the winds of public opinion. Most candidates have either officially announced their candidacy, unofficially announced their candidacy, or have officially announced that they are not running while unofficially running, so as to gain support before they officially announce they are running.

If all of this sounds, well, confusing, don't worry; it's supposed to. Unfortunately, I'm beginning to understand all of this, which is scary enough to have me using a night light by my bed.

Actually, what I said earlier about an uninteresting election year isn't really true. There is Sen. Grassley fighting off challenger Roehrick, as well as many other positions that are being hotly contested. But that is just about it.

Except for the race for governor.

Incumbent Terry Branstad versus the challenger Lowell Junkins.

Don't get the idea that I feel a certain apathy towards the upcoming gubernatorial race. I prefer to call it a deep-seated, all-encompassing feeling of total relaxation, not unlike the feeling induced by a local anesthetic. Oh, I suppose I shouldn't be so negative.

It's just that I don't really believe Mr. Junkins when he says that this election "is about one thing - the future of Iowa." If that's the case, then cancel my phone service and book me on the first flight out of here. Yes, the state is ranked 51st economically. Yes, people are moving out of here like the place was on fire. Yes, we're in big trouble. And no, I don't believe the selections before us for governor will make any real difference.

The farm economy is horrible, it's getting worse, and until we have something to sell other than soybeans, barrows, and gilts, the problems will continue to mount. Be it Branstad, Junkins, or Hayden Frye, I don't believe these folks can turn things around.

I have a radical idea. If the candidates for governor are as impotent as I claim they are, then let's boycott the election. I mean, if people stop going to 7-Eleven just because they don't like Playboy magazine, why shouldn't we make a similar statement about our elected officials. Of course, some folks will point to the normally low voter turnout as enough of a boycott, but what I'm proposing is even more radical. Just imagine, with 98% of the returns in, Junkins upsets Branstad, 200 votes to 180. Or maybe it's Branstad by a landslide, 400 to 15. Either way, the point is made.

So after all of this, if you still have enough interest to vote in November's election, give it a lot of thought, consider carefully what each candidate has to offer, then vote for Branstad. You'll be saving the state a lot of money. Just think of all of those DOT maps and official government stationery that will have to be changed if Lowell Junkins is elected governor. Of course, I suppose with a felt tip pen, you could make a "T" into an "L," then maybe round off the "e" to look like an "..." forget it; it's too much trouble.

Something else to think about. If Lowell Junkins wins, that means we have a former governor in our midst and who knows, with the presidential election still a few years away...

I've got my night light handy.

New Software In Learning Center

There is an array of new computer software to assist Boone Campus students in several subject areas at the Learning Center, according to Sunny Powers.

"We have new software for the computer in many subjects including English grammar, punctuation, spelling, sentence combining, speed reading, reading comprehension, metric conversion by units, math anxiety, test-taking anxiety, chemistry, algebra drill and practice, fractions and decimals, The Print Shop (for making signs), the Bank-Street Writer (a word processor), a program for determining readability level, Spanish grammar, a test generator, and various other teacher utility programs," Powers said.

The newest English program is one that would be most profitably used by ESL students; it includes count nouns, prepositions, definite and indefinite articles, pronouns, etc., she added.

"Students are welcome to use our facilities anytime we are open. You can just drop in for help in a subject; you may arrange for a regular time each week to get help; or you may arrange for a student tutor," Powers said.

An added service this year is that the Learning Center has two ladies holding help sessions on a regular basis each week. Beth Huffman is the chemistry tutor and Ann McCullough is the Accounting I tutor.

Students should sign up each Friday for the available times the following week so tutors can plan their week accordingly.

If you have any questions, just drop by the Learning Center.

Ways to Wellness

Editor's Note: The Bear Facts will be running an article pertaining to health each month, as compiled by a member of the Boone Campus nursing department. This month's column deals with the importance of water to the body.

by CYNTHIA CORY
Boone Campus Holistic Health Nurse

Water.

Our body's most essential nutrient.

Cultivate a taste for pure tap water and you won't regret it!

Our body is 90% water; our brain 75%. We rely upon water to digest food, circulate nutrients, cool our bodies and eliminate waste products. All those functions are inefficient or impossible without adequate water.

Water may be the most under-utilized avenue to health we have. I believe most people don't drink enough plain water. Plain water is not cola, coffee, milk, tea or juice; it is tap water.

Personally, I feel drinking adequate water clarifies my thinking, improves my vision and increases my capacity for physical work.

Would you like to experience those benefits, too?

Two to three liters a day should do it. Consider the humidity, the temperature, your speed of metabolism (high metabolism makes more water), and your ability to sweat, and tabulate the level of water replacement you need.

Experts say distributing one's intake between 7 and 8 a.m., noon and 1 p.m., and 5 and 6 p.m. will best meet your body's demand for the essential nutrient, water.

Have a drink; it's on the house!

Where Your Activity Fees Go

by DIANA SMITH

Each year, the Boone Campus Student Action Board, in conjunction with its budget committee, proposes a budget for the activity fees collected for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1986.

The projected income for the 1986-87 year is $14,630.

Each full-time student pays an activity fee of $14.25 per semester. Each part-time student pays a fee of $3.80 each semester.

For the 1986-87 academic year, the projected income that will make up the budget is as follows:

- 460 full-time students at $14.25 each semester: $13,110.
- 200 part-time students at $3.80 each semester: $1,520.
- Total: $14,630.

Should enrollment figures not reach or exceed the projected level, income will be proportionately lower or higher, and the budget will reflect the same.

Various campus clubs and organizations receiving activity money are as follows:

Campus Recreation/Intramural/Sports Campus Center		$ 1,243.55
Clubs:
Nursing Student United	438.90
Phi Beta Lambda	438.90
Recreation Club	438.90
Roteract	219.45
Athletics	6,876.10
Student Action Board	2,779.70
Cheerleader/Drill Team	438.90
Bear Facts	731.50
Drama	731.50
Phi Theta Kappa/Honors Society	73.15
Contingency Fund	146.30
Choir	73.15
Total	$14,630.00

The athletics account, receiving $6,876, is approximately 47% of the total funds available through activity fees. The money is divided between men's and women's softball, baseball and basketball to help cover costs of transportation, meals, lodging, uniforms, equipment and officials. Insurance, advertising, scholarships, recruitment, rent, and postage are also taken out of the funds. The Boone Campus athletic department involves around 100 students annually.

Budgeted funds for campus recreation, intramural sports and the campus center are available for purchase or replacement of supplies and equipment for recreational events.

Dollars allotted for clubs serve as a "starter" and are intended for organizations to promote total student body oriented activities. Additional funds are available to encourage those activities. Clubs are further encouraged to represent the college in respective state and national organizations when possible.

Funds remaining in the various accounts at the end of the year are carried over for the next year for the benefit of the entire student body at Boone Campus.

Ankeny Campus SAB Seeks Entries For Creative Writing Contest

Boone Campus students may submit works for the DMACC creative writing contest through Monday, Dec. 8, according to Rich Chapman, coordinator, Ankeny Campus.

The chief sponsor of the contest is the Ankeny Campus Student Action Board. Louise Austin, Ankeny Campus student, is helping coordinate the event.

"We hope that all students, including those returning as well as those graduating or transferring, will feel welcome to enter their work," Chapman said.

The guidelines are as follows:

- Eligibility: Any DMACC student enrolled fall 1986 may participate. Entrants are limited to one prize.

- Awards: $250 tuition scholarship for fall 1987 and cash awards including $100 for best story and $50 for runner-up; $100 for best poem and $50 for runner-up.

- Publication: Award-winning manuscripts and those receiving honorable mention may be published in Expressions.

- Judging: Judges from DMACC will evaluate the manuscripts and award the prizes. Entries will be judged anonymously, for each contestant's work will be number-coded during the evaluation process. Please keep copies of your work. We do not return entries.

- Manuscript Standards: Participants must submit at least three (3) original manuscripts, and may submit up to five (5).

Although no thematic guidelines must be followed, manuscripts must take the form of poetry, narrative, or personal essay. The purpose of the multiple manuscript requirement is to select the best writers, not just the best pieces of writing. For those writers most interested in publication, the shorter the work, especially fiction, the more likely its publication.

Manuscripts must be typed and accompanied by a (single) cover sheet including the titles of the pieces, author's name, college program, home address, and a signed statement as follows: "The following pieces of writing are solely my own work. I am currently a student at DMACC. (If you're interested in the scholarship, add that you plan to be enrolled fall 1987.) I do not object to the publication of my writing if it is properly acknowledged."

Title each work but leave your name off since each will receive your entrant number to insure your anonymity.

Entrants should send their work to: DMACC Creative Writing Contest, c/o R.W. Chapman, Contest Coordinator, Public and Human Services Department, Bldg. 2/Ankeny Campus, 2006 S. Ankeny Blvd., Ankeny, IA 50021.

Boone Campus Students Comment on Changes in Past 10 Years

In a recent Composition II class, students were asked by instructor Dr. Beatrice Clupper to write about major changes occurring during the past 10 years. The group started with 25 of the biggest changes and pared that amount down to 12.

Here are some of the responses:

Donna Nissen: Organ transplants have become the miracle treatment of modern medicine. For years, doctors and scientists have struggled to perfect the surgical techniques, refined the donor-recipient matching, and created anti-rejection drugs for organ transplants. Their work has now borne fruit. Transplant units are being set up in hospitals all over the country making the miracle treatment widely available.

Tom Williams: In the early 1970s, nuclear power was to be the savior of man's energy crisis. Construction was started on numerous plants around the world. Nuclear energy could be used to generate cheap and clean electricity. But as plants started to come on line, the low cost energy was practically nonexistent. Due to high construction costs and stringent as well as expensive safety measures, companies passed the cost on to the consumer. Then there was the matter of disposing of the waste products produced by the fission process. These materials had extremely high radioactivity and great care had to be exercised in the storage of these wastes. Add to this the accidents at Three-Mile Island and in the USSR and people suddenly became afraid of nuclear power and the contamination that could occur from a reactor meltdown. As a result of all these aspects, construction stopped on new plants and older ones were shut down for safety inspections. Has the savior turned into a satan? Only the future will tell the whole story.

Tonya Pettrone: The Chinese people are falling over each other in the scramble to adopt Western ways. More than 50 million Chinese are learning English, and many more are wearing Western clothes. Among the young, the rage is disco dancing, fast foods and motorcycles. In the speed of China's transformation to adopt Western ways, they have gained an understanding of and closer ties to the West.

Natasha Ciniglio: In the last 10 years there has been a change toward improving health and physical appearance by exercising. Special centers for physical fitness have been created throughout the U.S. in which aerobics are taught. The main purpose of these centers is to create good health and exercise habits. In addition to these special centers, experts have created TV programs which facilitate exercising at home. One feature of TV aerobics is that no membership fee is paid.

Robert H. Recker: Americans are finally waking up to the fact that staying healthy can and will help you live a longer life. This is evident in the ads we view on television promoting aerobics, proper exercise, and eating healthier foods. There is also an increasing number of total fitness spas that specialize in putting individuals on their own personal workout schedules and diets. Be healthy or be gone!

Judi Butterfield: We no longer need to worry about rushing to the bank on time to cash a check with the banking advancement of instant access money machines. These machines are conveniently accessible to us at shopping malls and grocery stores across the country. The tip of our finger and a plastic card provide us with the power to cash a check, deposit or withdraw money, transfer funds, make a payment, and even overdraw our checking account without writing a check at midnight. No more block-long driveup teller lines or sticky suckers for the kids. It's 24-hour banking convenience at our fingertips!

Clupper Presents Literature Paper

Dr. Beatrice Clupper presented a paper, "Should Introductory Literature Courses Be Interdisciplinary?" at the Literature Across the Disciplines: The Roles of Literature in the Community College conference held at the City Colleges of Chicago Oct. 17-18.

The conference was the second annual national literature conference exploring the role of literature in the 1980s college curricula.

Broadcasts Begin

The Student Action Board (SAB) will be gathering information for Boone Campus broadcasts to be aired on Boone radio station KZBA-FM beginning in November.

Various news items pertaining to Boone Campus will be phoned into the radio station and broadcast live Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday each week.

Lynn Lawson, recently elected to SAB, will begin as commentator for the programs.

Eventually the broadcasts will be given each weekday morning. Details are still being worked out on the project.

Health Program

The Boone Campus fitness testing class is offering a six week health awareness program which began Tuesday, Oct. 2 from 7:30 - 8:30 p.m. in the gym.

The class tests blood pressure, body composition, cardiovascular endurance and flexibility. An exercise and education program will then be suggested, with individuals being retested at the last meeting, Tuesday, Dec. 2.

Forms are available from Bill Alley, instructor, or those in the class.

Participants should dress for exercise.

1986-87 Student Action Board

Members of the recently elected Boone Campus Student Action Board are, in front from left: Dan Coder and Sabra Borich. In back: Robin Richards, Lynn Lawson and Dee Harvey. The SAB determines how activity fees are spent and conducts projects throughout the year as the Boone Campus student government. Coder is president.

Treasures and Treats

The Boone Campus Rec Club sold tins filled with popcorn and other unique food items and various gift items from a holiday boutique brochure during the past few weeks in order to raise money to go to conventions this school year.

Get Into Shape At

by ROB KAHLER

Aerobic classes sponsored by campus recreation began Tuesday, Oct. 14 at Boone Campus.

The class was formed at the request of the Phi Beta Lambda (PBL) business club.

Campus recreation organizer, Larry Hughes, said, "The PBL decided on a time they wanted the class to meet. The aerobics was arranged around the schedules of PBL members, but sessions are open to everyone."

The class will meet Tuesday and Thursday from 1:30 to 2:15 p.m. in the gymnasium, concluding Thursday, Nov. 6.

Hughes said that the aerobic program may be extended, depending on its popularity.

Hughes, who is also the men's basketball coach, said, "Aerobics were also part of the basketball team's conditioning program earlier in the semester. There weren't just basketball players working out, but also other students and teachers."

The aerobic sessions will be instructed by staff members of The Body Shoppe by Janet, located in Boone. The Body Shoppe also conducted aerobic conditioning for the men's and women's basketball teams.

Hughes hopes everybody who wants to participate will become involved.

For more information, contact Hughes in the physical education office.

B-Ball Practice Continues

by ROB KAHLER

The DMACC - Boone Campus men's and women's basketball teams continue practicing for their season opener Monday, Nov. 17 at Marshalltown.

The men's team, which has been practicing since Oct. 13, should be more exciting to watch this season, according to Larry Hughes, head coach.

"We'll be a lot more fun to watch this season because we'll play more as a team. Last year we didn't play as a team; there was too much individualism," Hughes said.

The Lady Bears have been practicing since Oct. 6 for a tough 1986-87 season.

Last year's 5-18 record was predominantly due to the team's lack of height, according to Dick Criner, head coach.

"This should not be as big of a problem as last year, as we have three players nearly 6' tall. This should help the squad enormously," he said.

Both teams will continue working hard for the remainder of the pre-season, enroute to the season openers.

College Students and Cocaine

Nearly one-third of college students try cocaine by the time they are graduated, but the use of marijuana and other illegal drugs significantly dropped during the last five years, a new federally-sponsored national survey states.

Although the "drug epidemic of the 1960s and 1970s" has ebbed, "cocaine seems to have taken on a life of its own," said University of Michigan's Lloyd Johnson, one of the directors of an annual drug survey of young Americans conducted for the Government's National Institute on Drug Abuse.

This is the first survey to release follow-up results on drug use trends after high school. The results came from an annual sample of approximately 1,100 students, 19 to 22 years of age, enrolled in two and four-year colleges across the country.

According to the authors, marijuana use declined dramatically since 1980, while cocaine gained a "surprising and unsettling" foothold among college students. They found that about one in six college students surveyed last year had used cocaine in the previous year, while one in 14 had used it the previous month. These are percentages which have remained consistent within the past five years.

However, by the time students finished their senior year of college, about 30% said they had tried cocaine at some time. Unlike other illicit drug use, experimentation with cocaine grew substantially each year after high school.

(If a recent Newsweek cover story is correct, though, cocaine use will increase. The reason? The newer, less expensive but purer form of cocaine known as crack. The magazine says that in major cities nationwide, calls to the national cocaine hotline [1-800-COCAINE] pertaining to crack now account for 30 to 90% of all calls. In many of those cities, there were no calls related to crack as recently as last fall.)

Although marijuana is still more widely used than cocaine, its use among college students dropped from 51.2% in 1980 to 41.7% for last year.

Johnson explains that, for drugs, the fads run their courses among today's young people "who grew up in a world filled with drugs." He continued, "Cocaine is the latest fad. Hopefully there will be a natural correction about it as well."

The authors also extrapolate from the survey that the perceived availability and risks have a role in cocaine's popularity. They state that "roughly half" of college students think it would be easy to obtain cocaine.

Colleges Told 'Get Tough on Drugs'

William J. Bennett, U.S. Secretary of Education, called the nation's college presidents on the carpet, telling them to clean up their drug-ridden campuses. He then told them how to accomplish the task.

In a speech delivered to the Heritage Foundation, Bennett said that college presidents should write to students, "Welcome back for your studies in September; but no drugs on campus. None. Period. This policy will be enforced -- by deans and administrators and advisors and resident advisors and faculty -- strictly but fairly."

In addition, the secretary said that obtaining the authority from Congress to withhold federal funds from institutions that do not pledge themselves to get rid of drugs would be welcomed by him.

"Colleges and universities have a basic responsibility to care for the moral and, indeed, the physical well-being of their charges. Parents do not expect colleges to be neutral between decent morality and decadence."

Furthermore, he said, "Everyone knows we have this drug problem. I am tired of hearing spokesmen after spokesmen say, 'We have a terrible problem here but it's everywhere; the problem on our campus is no worse than it is on anyone else's campus.'"

Bennett said that a drug-free campus is attainable, and he pointed to the United States military academies and The Citadel, a quasi-military, public school in South Carolina, as places with "zero tolerance." He also applauded the efforts and new policies pertaining to drugs at Boston University and several small, liberal arts colleges.

Expanding upon the idea of a drug-free campus, Bennett stated, "You can use first the moral authority of the university itself. Second, you use the individuals who are there to explain to students what is expected of them. Third, if necessary, you use the campus police. Finally, if absolutely necessary, you use the city police and the state police."

"Some people might worry that tough drug policies will keep some students from coming back to campus," he said. "I would say that would be great."

Taylor Brings Experience To Boone Campus

by JUSTINE SHRIVER

This month's featured teacher is Robert Taylor, who brings a wealth of teaching experience to DMACC - Boone Campus. He teaches five different courses including general, abnormal and developmental psychology, human relations and adjustment, and human sexuality.

After Taylor graduated from high school in LeMars, Iowa, he enrolled at the Nebraska State Teachers College for two years, went into the service for two years, and returned to college for another two years. Taylor landed a teaching job at a high school in West Point, Nebr., where he taught world history and English and directed plays for three years.

Taylor obtained his master's degree and taught at Cheyenne, Wyo., for 14 years. While there, he began teaching psychology and attended the University of Colorado where he received a PhD in psychology.

In 1980, he tried unsuccessfully to get a teaching job in California. He decided to go back east to teach at a Tennessee Community College for two years and then taught at a four-year college for one year in Hastings, Nebr.

In 1984 he came to Boone with this being his third year of teaching at DMACC. Taylor said he likes the community and plans to teach here until retirement.

What's Hot? What's Not?

In a recent Composition I class, students were asked by instructor Dr. Beatrice Clupper to write about what's hot and what's not in the fall of 1986, through the eyes of college undergrads.

Here are some of the responses:

What's Hot

Bann Zori: Dark sunglasses are popular nowadays. They come in different shapes, materials, sizes, frames and colors. Teenagers and college students wear them mostly everywhere and at anytime. Students who wear them want to attract attention. They are hot now because of the popular sports players who wear them. That's a little of what makes the dark sunglasses the fashion of the 1980s!

Mike Olson: The 1986 Iroc Z-28 is one of the hottest cars sold in car lots across the U.S. Not one car sold today will compete with the Iroc's good looks and performance qualities. Many car enthusiasts dream of sitting behind the wheel of an Iroc Z-28. The cost may shock you, but its sleek design makes it one of the hottest cars sold today!

Chris Malinoski: The hairstyles of young college men have changed considerably from the years gone by. Today, most long hairstyles are not considered an "in" item. Many young men are now going back to the short look mainly because women these days prefer short hair. Who knows? Maybe women will once again change the hairstyles of men, since men are so eager to please women.

Billie Jo Crouse: There are many things that are considered "hot" in clothing styles today. For many years blue jeans have been the "in" thing and still are. Men and women wear them because they are comfortable and longwearing. They have been popular for so long, it seems as though they will never go out of style.

Tammy Vinchattle: Today at DMACC - Boone Campus you would find many students dressed casually. The latest styles of baggy blouses and sweaters can be seen lining the halls. These garments hang below the waist and appear in bright and cheerful colors. Many of the men are dressed in the latest casual sports clothing. Other men may be seen wearing nice pants that are worn with suspenders of a bright color. Bright and baggy clothing is "what's hot" at the DMACC campus.

Rob Cornelis: Business courses are fairly hot in central Iowa, with Boone DMACC, ISU, U of I and Drake University all having full classes. In some cases, there are waiting lists to get into business classes. One of the hottest courses would probably have to be accounting.

What's Not

Rose A. Patten: Hairstyles, like many other things, run in fads. Fads do not always hit regional areas with the same amount of power. For instance, one does not see Mohawks, rat-tails, shaved heads, heads with long hair on one side and no hair on the other, or fluorescent colored hair on Boone Campus like one may see on a campus on the West Coast. Also not in style, are hairstyles that are cut to be feathered but not groomed, long, stringy hair, hair with no body, and uncombed hair.

Gayla Thompson: Many things that once were hot in the past are not hot in 1986. One example of what is not hot is bell-bottom jeans. Back in the 1970s everyone had a pair, at least those that were cool. Today, a pair of jeans does not have enough material to cover a woman's ankle, much less form a large bell. Unfortunately, items that once were hot just become old-fashioned.

Roseann Walker: Friendship pins are a thing of the past. This was a hot item back in 1983. Remember the colored beads on a safety pin? You could wear it pinned to your tennis shoes, sweater, shirt collar, and some even put them through their pierced ears. It was probably one of the most inexpensive fads to come along. One thing I like about fads is they tend to be so creatively simple, in which case we oftentimes say to ourselves, "Why didn't I think of that?"

Janet Hjortsvang: Most students look forward to the end of each semester. The one thing they dread though is the semester tests they have to take at the end of each semester. These tests require a lot of studying. Many hours are spent huddled over books and notes that were taken throughout the semester. Some take very little time out to sleep. Most students are anxious to find out what grade they received on their tests because the grade usually plays a big part in figuring their final semester grade.

She Writes of Experience at U of I During Turmoil of the 1960s

by DEB MILLER

(Editor's Note: From time to time, The Bear Facts will run articles written by Boone Campus students for various classes. The following was written for Carla Godfrey's composition class. The assignment was to write a personal experience essay, vividly describing something unusual the author has seen or done while at the same time holding some value for its audience.)

Since colleges and universities are "institutions of higher learning," it seemed appropriate to me that political expression was an integral part of life at the University of Iowa in the late 1960s and early 1970s. The exchange of ideas through intellectual debate is vital to the growth of students as complex thinkers and problem solvers.

With this belief firmly entrenched, I listened to various individuals on campus berating the U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia. The war in Viet Nam directly affected me and many of my classmates. Draft numbers and classifications were compared as regularly as football scores and test grades.

Many of the speakers were invited by the University, further supporting my belief that public debate of government policy was necessary to develop the minds of future leaders. Others were zealots who used the roofs of cars for stages or tables in bars for podiums. I listened to brilliant political scientists explain both sides of the issue with tremendous fairness and insight. I listened to others who can only be described as ill-informed fanatics.

For weeks I listened and watched, and soon I noticed tremendous changes. The crowds, at first small groups of curious students, grew notably larger. The campus was bombarded daily with anti-war rallies, while auditoriums were filled to standing-room only. As the crowds grew, so did the fervor of reaction to the speakers. The polite applause for government officials trying to explain or justify U.S. policy disappeared. Many officials were either unable to finish their presentations or were prevented from speaking by disruptive, rude dissenters. Anti-war rallies were even louder and more emotional. Many people waved signs and shouted the slogan of the day.

I felt this atmosphere exemplified freedom of speech and democracy in action.

I was wrong.

One morning the fire alarm in my dorm rang at 4 a.m., though there was obviously no fire. Over 1,500 girls standing on the street in "pajamas" was quite a sight, so we viewed the experience as just another college adventure. The alarms rang again the next two nights in every dorm on campus. The resident halls advisors organized groups of students to take shifts guarding the fire alarms, since the nightly disturbances had become annoying instead of fun.

University officials believed that the nightly alarms were not just irritating pranks, but deliberate attempts by certain factions to disrupt the normal routine of the University. However, I wasn't convinced.

Early the next evening, from the open window in my room, I could hear the noise of a crowd. I assumed it was just another panty raid, so I paid little attention to the growing rumble. Moments later my resident advisor began frantically knocking on doors, pleading with us not to go outside. It was not boys on a panty raid nearing the dorm, but a regiment of uncontrollable anti-war protesters.

From the safety of my window I saw masses of people milling in the courtyard below. Campus security guards, ill-trained and ill-equipped for crowd control, were attempting to keep the throng away from my dorm. Quickly, city policemen and highway patrolmen came to reinforce the barricade set up by the beleaguered campus security men. Slowly and deliberately the swarm moved on to the next dorm, attempting to recruit more dissenters to its ranks.

I was astonished and frightened. I could still hear the crowd from my window, although by now it was several blocks away. Their plan had worked, and their numbers had grown. Sirens soon drowned out the shouting in the distance. It was impossible to study; I didn't even try. I frantically tuned my radio to the local station, and as I suspected, news of the riot, no other word was now appropriate, quickly filled the air. I was soon joined by others who were anxiously searching for more information.

Telephones began ringing as horrified parents miles away sought reassurances that their children were safe. The town was surrounded by highway patrolmen, and no one could get within 10 miles of the city without proper authorization. Leaving our dorm was forbidden.

We were under siege.

I sat in awe and disbelief listening to one report after another describing the tragedy.

Part of the mob had crashed through barricades and marched onto Interstate 80, backing up traffic for miles. Others turned to the downtown businesses, breaking windows and randomly destroying property.

But nothing I had heard on the radio the night before could have prepared me for what I saw the next morning. Garbage and broken glass from shop windows covered the sidewalks. Business owners with sad faces slowly shook their heads and went back inside their stores to prepare damage estimates. Highway patrolmen stood rigidly on every corner, while others sat in cars watching and waiting. The farther I walked and the more senseless destruction I saw, the more angry I became. I wanted to scream. How did any of this help their cause? What did they hope to accomplish? Why did they punish innocent merchants?

I escaped to the peace and solitude of my room to absorb everything I had seen, heard and learned. Through all the confusion, one thing was clear. My anti-war sentiments were still intact, but nothing could justify the irresponsible, senseless destruction. I still believed that the freedom to oppose government policy and speak out in favor of reform is vital to our country. But I learned that freedom of speech, and all the rights it encompasses, brings with it a tremendous responsibility.

Thus, while attending the University, I acquired an understanding of chemistry, biology, human relations, and quantitative analysis. These technical skills are valuable. However, their impact cannot equal the power of the lessons I learned living through the "decade of social unrest" and "the era of civil disobedience."

That was the real education.

Deb Miller is a 33-year-old mother of two sons. She is pursuing a degree, although she has not decided on a major. She and her husband farm in rural Ogden.

Winterizing Your Car Includes Tire Care

Inspecting tires for tread depth and wear should be a part of winterizing a vehicle. Worn tires make for hazardous driving on slippery surfaces.

AAA Iowa recommends that tire pressure be checked at least weekly. Cold temperatures reduce tire pressure and driving on underinflated tires reduces fuel economy. Underinflation also causes tires to fail because of too much sidewall flexing, which in turn causes a buildup of tire heat.

Contrary to the beliefs of many drivers, lowering tire pressure does not increase traction. In fact, it acts in the reverse by decreasing vehicle control. Tire pressures must be kept at the recommended levels at all times.

This is the season for the spare tire to be in good condition and fully inflated. It may be needed some cold winter's day.

Hal Lyness spoke about the development of Boone Campus at the 20th anniversary celebration.

Anniversary Speakers

Boone Campus Dean Kriss Philips was one of several speakers at the DMACC 20th anniversary celebration "Best of Boone County" picnic on campus in September.

Clair Abbott spoke to a good size audience at the DMACC 20th anniversary celebration.

These DMACC-Boone Campus students are ready to chow down as they go through the food line during the anniversary picnic in September. Dean Kriss Philips was very pleased with the community support shown throughout the day.

Fall Fling Followup

by CATHY VEALE

Boone Campus celebrated its 20th year as a part of the Iowa Community College system Friday, Sept. 26.

Dean Kriss Philips said, "With the involvement of a number of community people during our birthday celebration, it has become apparent to me that Boone Campus is no longer the best kept secret in town."

"A vast number of community people publicly acknowledge they are friends of the Boone Campus. I feel very strongly it is imperative the Boone Campus family continues to reach out and involve the surrounding community in our curricular, co-curricular, and extra-curricular activities," he added.

The day was packed with many activities starting at 7 a.m. with a breakfast co-sponsored by the Boone Lions Club. Students, faculty and community members all enjoyed a delicious breakfast of pancakes with sausages and orange juice in the Boone Campus gym.

During the day many activities were underway. Though few people showed up at some activities, those that participated commented they had a fun time.

That afternoon, Hal Lyness, Margarete Hartley and Claire Abbot (former dean) spoke about the history of the campus. Following that was a "Best of Boone County" picnic. Many people enjoyed eating barbecued meat sandwiches and other dishes.

Later in the evening a dance was held at the Elks Club in Boone. Everybody had a great time dancing to Reflections and socializing.

The 20th anniversary fall fling was very successful and a great way to celebrate!

Proceeds will be used for scholarships.

This Is Alcohol Awareness Week

The third annual national collegiate alcohol awareness week, as sponsored by the Will Rogers Institute of White Plains, N.Y., is Monday, Oct. 20 through Friday, Oct. 25.

To be responsible, the institute believes students need to know facts, not myths about alcohol.

Here are some common sense college survival tips which may help save lives during the school year:

- Don't drive after your next tailgate party or happy hour, whether you've had beer, wine or spirits. One American dies in an alcohol-related traffic accident every 35 minutes. Better walk an extra mile or spend the night at a friend's than risk taking lives on the road.

- Eat something - never drink on an empty stomach. Eat before you go to a party; eat while you're there. Solid food like cheese can slow down the alcohol absorption rate. If you're throwing a party, serve lots of munchies and plenty of mixers.

- Don't be pushed into drinking more than you can handle and don't pressure your friends to keep up with you. Everyone has an individual tolerance. Let your friends pace themselves.

- Keep a watchful eye. Cocktails should contain no more than 1 1/4 ozs. of spirits, wine is commonly no more than a 5 oz. serving and a typical serving of beer is 12 ozs. If you're mixing your own drink, use a shot glass to measure your liquor.

- Know yourself - and your mood. If you rarely drink, chugging a few beers will affect you faster than it would affect someone who is accustomed to drinking. Your mood can also influence the way you react to a drink. If you're depressed over a test, drinking will depress you further.

Just as there are helpful tips to remember, there are also some common and dangerous myths about alcohol that should be dispelled.

Myth No. 1: You can pace yourself by switching from liquor to beer or wine. Wrong. You consume the same amount of alcohol - and can get just as drunk - from the most common servings of beer, wine and liquor.

Myth No. 2: Coffee can sober you up if you're drunk. Wrong again. Coffee may wake you up, but it won't sober you up. If you drink one too many and then have a cup of coffee and drive, you are just a wide-awake drunk behind the wheel. Also, taking a cold shower won't do the trick either. That's only going to make you a wet drunk.

Deli Counter Offers Homemade Food For Boone Campus Students

by CATHY VEALE

It's noon, you are hungry, and you want more than a Three Musketeers bar!

Where can you eat? The fast food places cost so much and on a college student's budget, you can't go out for breakfast or lunch too often!

Where do you go? One place in Boone where you can get good food at good prices is called the Deli Counter. And you don't have to drive or bike to get there. It's in the Boone Campus lounge!

Lee Strain and her two helpers, Carole Schumann and Michelle Groty, make delicious, wholesome breakfasts and lunches at economical prices.

For breakfast you can have anything from a bagel to juice and coffee.

For lunch you can always expect to smell hot homemade soup on the burner or the aroma of pizza or hamburgers.

Strain is the director of the program and Schumann and Groty are from the work-study program. Schumann is in the recreational leadership program and Groty is in the executive secretary program.

The Deli is open from 7:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. It began in September of 1985. Prior to that, Bill Alley's recreational leadership program operated a snack bar.

So go ahead . . . try out the food at Boone Campus' own Deli Counter. You'll be glad you did!

The party begins.

I can drive when I drink.

2 drinks later.

I can drive when I drink

After 4 drinks.

I can drive when I drink.

After 5 drinks.

I can drive when I drink

7 drinks in all.

I can't even handle a pen.

The more you drink, the more coordination you lose. That's a fact, plain and simple.

It's also a fact that 12 ounces of beer, 5 ounces of wine and 1 1/4 ounces of spirits all have the same alcohol content. And consumed in excess, all can affect you. Still, people drink too much and then go out and expect to handle a car.

When you drink too much, you can't handle a car. You can't even handle a pen.

Rotaract Begins 1986-87 Year

The Boone Campus Rotaract Club had its annual fall potluck picnic at noon Saturday, Oct. 11 at McHose Park shelter house.

Members shared a good meal and had a chance to renew old friendships and meet new people.

Lee McNair, club sponsor, E.E. Andrews and Vern Condon of the Boone Rotary Club welcomed club members back for another year of service and friendship.

George Ann Matney-Cleveland, club president, expressed optimism about the prospects for another successful Rotaract year.

The Rotaract Club is a service organization for college men and women that carries out projects to help people on campus and in the community.

For example, last year Rotaract conducted a food drive for the needy, visited residents of the Boone County Care Facility, conducted a campus cleanup, and provided "Jugs of Joy" to brighten the lives of some special people, including shut-ins.

A meeting will be held in late October to elect officers and plan the 1986-87 year.

If you are interested in Rotaract, see Theresa or Mark Funnell, Judi Butterfield, George Ann Matney-Cleveland, or Lee McNair. Watch for signs announcing the next meeting.

Parking Rules Enforced

All Boone Campus students, employees and campus guests should take note that all areas designated as "no parking" in the fire lanes will be stringently enforced.

All vehicles parked in the areas clearly marked "fire lane" are subject to being towed away at the owner's expense at anytime, day or night, according to Dean Kriss Philips.

Discover Your Career

Boone Campus students have the opportunity to discover career information about themselves with the help of a new career guidance system called Discover, located in the library. Above, Dan Coder is using the Discover software set up on an IBM PC-XT computer system with color monitor and letter quality printer. The comprehensive program is designed to help the user make vocational decisions by providing detailed career information, self assessment inventories and information about life transitions, job seeking skills and educational plans. Students may inquire about Discover in the library.

Nursing Students Earn Plaque at Convention

Approximately 69 nursing students and faculty from Boone Campus recently attended the first convention of the Organization for the Advancement of Associate Degree Nursing, September 25, 1986 at the Howard Johnson Hotel in Des Moines.

Over 600 nurses, educators, students, and interested lay people attended this first convention.

Boone nursing students and faculty are proud to promote this professional organization as active members. DMACC was awarded a traveling plaque for the highest number of student members participating in the convention.

Dr. Ted Tilton, provost of Central Campus of College of DuPage in Glen Ellyn, Illinois was the keynote speaker. Tilton is a nationally recognized leader in support of the associate degree nursing-RN concept.

The Organization for the Advancement of Associate Degree Nursing is a rapidly growing national organization whose members believe that this high quality of the nurses produced through the associate degree nursing program offered by community colleges and technical institutions throughout the country should be recognized. The organization's mission is to retain the RN title and scopes of practice for associate degree nursing graduates.

Registered nurses holding the associate degree in nursing are prepared as accountable nursing care providers and have demonstrated this accountability since the advent of associate degree nursing programs over 30 years ago. Currently over 50% of registered nurse graduates are from associate degree nursing programs. ADN graduates have consistently had a higher average passing score and have a higher percentage rate of passing, than BSN nurses on the same licensure tests throughout the nation.

The Organization for the Advancement of Associate Degree Nursing has chartered membership in 31 states. The organization will closely monitor legislation activities and licensure issues throughout the U.S.
